27 reasoning cannot go; yet it always feels impatient to get into the 28 region of the Infinite beyond. This world, this universe which our 29 senses feel, or our mind thinks, is but one atom, so to say, of the 30 Infinite, projected on to the plane of consciousness; and within that 31 narrow limit, defined by the network of consciousness, works our 32 reason, and not beyond. Therefore, there must be some other 33 instrument to take us beyond, and that instrument is called 34 inspiration. So instinct, reason, and inspiration are the three 35 instruments of knowledge. Instinct belongs to animals, reason to 36 man, and inspiration to God-men. But in all human beings are to be 37 found, in a more or less developed condition, the germs of all these 38 three instruments of knowledge. To have these mental instruments 39 evolved, the germs must be there. And this must also be 40 remembered that one instrument is a development of the other, and 41 therefore does not contradict it. It is reason that develops into 42 inspiration, and therefore inspiration does not contradict reason, 43 but fulfils it. Things which reason cannot get at are brought to light 44 by inspiration; and they do not contradict reason. The old man does 45 not contradict the child, but fulfils the child. Therefore you must 46 always bear in mind that the great danger lies in mistaking the 47 lower form of instrument to be the higher. Many times instinct is 48 presented before the world as inspiration, and then come all the 49 spurious claims for the gift of prophecy. A fool or a semi-lunatic 50 thinks that the confusion going on in his brain is inspiration, and he 51 wants men to follow him. The most contradictory irrational 52 nonsense that has been preached in the world is simply the 53 instinctive jargon of confused lunatic brains trying to pass for the 1 language of inspiration.

2 The first test of true teaching must be, that the teaching 3 should not contradict reason. And you may see that such is the 4 basis of all these Yogas. We take the Raja-Yoga, the psychological 5 Yoga, the psychological way to union. It is a vast subject, and I can 6 only point out to you now the central idea of this Yoga. We have but 7 one method of acquiring knowledge. From the lowest man to the 8 highest Yogi, all have to use the same method; and that method is 9 what is called concentration. The chemist who works in his 10 laboratory concentrates all the powers of his mind, brings them into 11 one focus, and throws them on the elements; and the elements 12 stand analysed, and thus his knowledge comes. The astronomer has 13 also concentrated the powers of his mind and brought them into 14 one focus; and he throws them on to objects through his telescope; 15 and stars and systems roll forward and give up their secrets to him.
16 So it is in every case--with the professor in his chair, the student 17 with his book--with every man who is working to know. You are 18 hearing me, and if my words interest you, your mind will become 19 concentrated on them; and then suppose a clock strikes, you will 20 not hear it, on account of this concentration; and the more you are 21 able to concentrate your mind, the better you will understand me; 22 and the more I concentrate my love and powers, the better I shall 23 be able to give expression to what I want to convey to you. The 24 more this power of concentration, the more knowledge is acquired, 25 because this is the one and only method of acquiring knowledge.
26 Even the lowest shoeblick, if he gives more concentration, will 27 black shoes better; the cook with concentration will cook a meal all 28 the better. In making money, or in worshipping God, or in doing 29 anything, the stronger the power of concentration, the better will 30 that thing be done. This is the one call, the one knock, which opens 31 the gates of nature, and lets out floods of light. This, the power of 32 concentration, is the only key to the treasure-house of knowledge.
33 The system of Raja-Yoga deals almost exclusively with this. In the 34 present state of our body we are so much distracted, and the mind 35 is frittering away its energies upon a hundred sorts of things. As 36 soon as I try to calm my thoughts and concentrate my mind upon 37 any one object of knowledge, thousands of undesired impulses rush 38 into the brain, thousands of thoughts rush into the mind and disturb 39 it. How to check it and bring the mind under control is the whole 40 subject of study in Raja-Yoga.

41 Now take Karma-Yoga, the attainment of God through work. It 42 is evident that in society there are many persons who seem to be 43 born for some sort of activity or other, whose minds cannot be 44 concentrated on the plane of thought alone, and who have but one 45 idea, concretised in work, visible and tangible. There must be a 46 science for this kind of life too. Each one of us is engaged in some 47 work, but the majority of us fritter away the greater portion of our 48 energies, because we do not know the secret of work. Karma-Yoga 49 explains this secret and teaches where and how to work, how to 50 employ to the greatest advantage the largest part of our energies in 51 the work that is before us. But with this secret we must take into 52 consideration the great objection against work, namely that it

1 causes pain. All misery and pain come from attachment. I want to 2 do work, I want to do good to a human being; and it is ninety to one
3 that that human being whom I have helped will prove ungrateful
4 and go against me; and the result to me is pain. Such things deter 5 mankind from working; and it spoils a good portion of the work and 6 energy of mankind, this fear of pain and misery. Karma-Yoga
7 teaches us how to work for work's sake, unattached, without caring 8 who is helped, and what for. The Karma-Yogi works because it is his 9 nature, because he feels that it is good for him to do so, and he has 10 no object beyond that. His position in this world is that of a giver, 11 and he never cares to receive anything. He knows that he is giving, 12 and does not ask for anything in return and, therefore, he eludes 13 the grasp of misery. The grasp of pain, whenever it comes, is the 14 result of the reaction of "attachment".

15 There is then the Bhakti-Yoga for the man of emotional 16 nature, the lover. He wants to love God, he relies upon and uses all 17 sorts of rituals, flowers, incense, beautiful buildings, forms and all 18 such things. Do you mean to say they are wrong? One fact I must 19 tell you. It is good for you to remember, in this country especially, 20 that the world's great spiritual giants have all been produced only 21 by those religious sects which have been in possession of very rich 22 mythology and ritual. All sects that have attempted to worship God 23 without any form or ceremony have crushed without mercy 24 everything that is beautiful and sublime in religion. Their religion is 25 a fanaticism at best, a dry thing. The history of the world is a 26 standing witness to this fact. Therefore do not decry these rituals 27 and mythologies. Let people have them; let those who so desire 28 have them. Do not exhibit that unworthy derisive smile, and say, 29 "They are fools; let them have it." Not so; the greatest men I have 30 seen in my life, the most wonderfully developed in spirituality, have 31 all come through the discipline of these rituals. I do not hold myself 32 worthy to sit at their feet, and for me to criticise them ! How do I 33 know how these ideas act upon the human mind, which of them I 34 am to accept and which to reject? We are apt to criticise everything 35 in the world without sufficient warrant. Let people have all the 36 mythology they want, with its beautiful inspirations; for you must 37 always bear in mind that emotional natures do not care for abstract 38 definitions of truth. God to them is something tangible, the only 39 thing that is real; they feel, hear, and see Him, and love Him. Let 40 them have their God. Your rationalist seems to them to be like the 41 fool who, when he saw a beautiful statue, wanted to break it to find 42 out of what material it was made. Bhakti-Yoga teaches them how to 43 love, without any ulterior motives, loving God and loving the good 44 because it is good to do so, not for going to heaven, nor to get 45 children, wealth, or anything else. It teaches them that love itself is 46 the highest recompense of love--that God Himself is love. It teaches 47 them to pay all kinds of tribute to God as the Creator, the 48 Omnipresent, Omniscient, Almighty Ruler, the Father and the 49 Mother. The highest phrase that can express Him, the highest idea 50 that the human mind can conceive of Him, is that He is the God of 51 Love. Wherever there is love, it is He. "Wherever there is any love, 52 it is He, the Lord is present there." Where the husband kisses the 53 wife, He is there in the kiss; where the mother kisses the child, He

1 is there in the kiss; where friends clasp hands, He, the Lord, is 2 present as the God of Love. When a great man loves and wishes to 3 help mankind, He is there giving freely His bounty out of His love to 4 mankind. Wherever the heart expands, He is there manifested. This 5 is what the Bhakti-Yoga teaches.

6 We lastly come to the Jnana-Yogi, the philosopher, the thinker, 7 he who wants to go beyond the visible. He is the man who is not 8 satisfied with the little things of this world. His idea is to go beyond 9 the daily routine of eating, drinking, and so on; not even the 10 teaching of thousands of books will satisfy him. Not even all the 11 sciences will satisfy him; at best, they only bring this little world 12 before him. What else will give satisfaction? Not even myriads of 13 systems of worlds will satisfy him; they are to him but a drop in the 14 ocean of existence. His soul wants to go beyond all that into the 15 very heart of being, by seeing Reality as It is; by realising It, by 16 being It, by becoming one with that Universal Being. That is the 17 philosopher. To say that God is the Father or the Mother, the 18 Creator of this universe, its Protector and Guide, is to him quite 19 inadequate to express Him. To him, God is the life of his life, the 20 soul of his soul. God is his own Self. Nothing else remains which is 21 other than God. All the mortal parts of him become pounded by 22 weighty strokes of philosophy and are brushed away. What at last 23 truly remains is God Himself.

24 Upon the same tree there are two birds, one on the top, the 25 other below. The one on the top is calm, silent, and majestic, 26 immersed in his own glory; the one on the lower branches, eating 27 sweet and bitter fruits by turns, hopping from branch to branch, is 28 becoming happy and miserable by turns. After a time the lower bird 29 eats an exceptionally bitter fruit and gets disgusted and looks up 30 and sees the other bird, that wondrous one of golden plumage, who 31 eats neither sweet nor bitter fruit, who is neither happy nor 32 miserable, but calm, Self-centered, and sees nothing beyond his 33 Self. The lower bird longs for this condition but soon forgets it, and 34 again begins to eat the fruits. In a little while, he eats another 35 exceptionally bitter fruit, which makes him feel miserable, and he 36 again looks up, and tries to get nearer to the upper bird. Once more 37 he forgets and after a time he looks up, and so on he goes again 38 and again, until he comes very near to the beautiful bird and sees 39 the reflection of light from his plumage playing around his own 40 body, and he feels a change and seems to melt away; still nearer he 41 comes, and everything about him melts away, and at last he 42 understands this wonderful change. The lower bird was, as it were, 43 only the substantial-looking shadow, the reflection of the higher; he 44 himself was in essence the upper bird all the time. This eating of 45 fruits, sweet and bitter, this lower, little bird, weeping and happy by 46 turns, was a vain chimera, a dream: all along, the real bird was 47 there above, calm and silent, glorious and majestic, beyond grief, 48 beyond sorrow. The upper bird is God, the Lord of this universe; 49 and the lower bird is the human soul, eating the sweet and bitter 50 fruits of this world. Now and then comes a heavy blow to the soul.
51 For a time, he stops the eating and goes towards the unknown God, 52 and a flood of light comes. He thinks that this world is a vain show.

1 Yet again the senses drag him down, and he begins as before to eat
2 the sweet and bitter fruits of the world. Again an exceptionally hard 3 blow comes. His heart becomes open again to divine light; thus 4 gradually he approaches God, and as he gets nearer and nearer, he 5 finds his old self melting away. When he has come near enough, he 6 sees that he is no other than God, and he exclaims, "He whom I 7 have described to you as the Life of this universe, as present in the 8 atom, and in suns and moons--He is the basis of our own life, the 9 Soul of our soul. Nay, thou art That." That is what this Jnana-Yoga 10 teaches. It tells man that he is essentially divine. It shows to 11 mankind the real unity of being, and that each one of us is the Lord 12 God Himself, manifested on earth. All of us, from the lowest worm 13 that crawls under our feet to the highest beings to whom we look 14 up with wonder and awe--all are manifestations of the same Lord.

15 Lastly, it is imperative that all these various Yogas should be 16 carried out in practice; mere theories about them will not do any 17 good. First we have to hear about them, then we have to think 18 about them. We have to reason the thoughts out, impress them on 19 our minds, and we have to meditate on them, realise them, until at 20 last they become our whole life. No longer will religion remain a 21 bundle of ideas or theories, nor an intellectual assent; it will enter 22 into our very self. By means of intellectual assent we may today 23 subscribe to many foolish things and change our minds altogether 24 tomorrow. But true religion never changes. Religion is realisation; 25 not talk, nor doctrine, nor theories, however beautiful they may be.
26 It is being and becoming, not hearing or acknowledging; it is the 27 whole soul becoming changed into what it believes. That is religion.

THE OPEN SECRET

Whichever way we turn in trying to understand things in their reality, if we analyse far enough, we find that at last we come to a peculiar state of things, seemingly a contradiction: something which our reason cannot grasp and yet is a fact. We take up something--we know it is finite; but as soon as we begin to analyse it, it leads us beyond our reason, and we never find an end to all its qualities, its possibilities, its powers, its relations. It has become infinite. Take even a common flower, that is finite enough; but who is there that can say he knows all about the flower? There is no possibility of anyone's getting to the end of the knowledge about that one flower. The flower has become infinite--the flower which was finite to begin with. Take a grain of sand. Analyse it. We start with the assumption that it is finite, and at last we find that it is not, it is infinite; all the same, we have looked upon it as finite. The flower is similarly treated as a finite something.

So with all our thoughts and experiences, physical and mental. We begin, we may think, on a small scale, and grasp them as little things; but very soon they elude our knowledge and plunge into the abyss of the infinite. And the greatest and the first thing perceived is ourselves. We are also in the same dilemma about existence. We exist. We see we are finite beings. We live and die. Our horizon is narrow. We are here, limited, confronted by the universe all around. Nature can crush us out of existence in a moment. Our little bodies are just held together, ready to go to pieces at a moment's notice. We know that. In the region of action how powerless we are! Our will is being thwarted at every turn. So many things we want to do, and how few we can do! There is no limit to our willing. We can will everything, want everything, we can desire to go to the dogstar. But how few of our desires can be accomplished! The body will not allow it. Well, nature is against the accomplishment of our will. We are weak. What is true of the flower, of the grain of sand, of the physical world, and of every thought, is a hundredfold more true of ourselves. We are also in the same dilemma of existence, being finite and infinite at the same time. We are like waves in the ocean; the wave is the ocean and yet not the ocean. There is not any part of the wave of which you cannot say, "It is the ocean." The name "ocean" applies to the wave and equally to every other part of the ocean, and yet it is separate from the ocean. So in this infinite ocean of existence we are like wavelets. At the same time, when we want really to grasp ourselves, we cannot--we have become the infinite.

We seem to be walking in dreams. Dreams are all right in a dream-mind; but as soon as you want to grasp one of them, it is gone. Why? Not that it was false, but because it is beyond the power of reason, the power of the intellect to comprehend it. Everything in this life is so vast that the intellect is nothing in comparison with it. It refuses to be bound by the laws of the intellect! It laughs at the bondage the intellect wants to spread around it. And a thousandfold more so is this the case with the human soul. "We ourselves"--this is the greatest mystery of the

1 universe.

2 How wonderful it all is! Look at the human eye. How easily it 3 can be destroyed, and yet the biggest suns exist only because your 4 eyes see them. The world exists because your eyes certify that it
5 exists. Think of that mystery! These poor little eyes! A strong light, 6 or a pin, can destroy them. Yet the most powerful engines of 7 destruction, the most powerful cataclysms, the most wonderful of 8 existences, million of suns and stars and moons and earth--all 9 depend for their existence upon, and have to be certified by, these 10 two little things! They say, "Nature, you exist", and we believe 11 nature exists. So with all our senses.

12 What is this? Where is weakness? Who is strong? What is 13 great and what is small? What is high and what is low in this 14 marvellous interdependence of existence where the smallest atom 15 is necessary for the existence of the whole? Who is great and who is 16 small? It is past finding out! And why? Because none is great and 17 none is small. All things are interpenetrated by that infinite ocean; 18 their reality is that infinite; and whatever there is on the surface is 19 but that infinite. The tree is infinite; so is everything that you see or 20 feel--every grain of sand, every thought, every soul, everything that 21 exists, is infinite. Infinite is finite and finite infinite. This is our 22 existence.

23 Now, that may be all true, but all this feeling after the Infinite 24 is at present mostly unconscious. It is not that we have forgotten 25 that infinite nature of ours: none can ever do that. Who can ever 26 think that he can be annihilated? Who can think that he will die?
27 None can. All our relation to the Infinite works in us unconsciously.
28 In a manner, therefore, we forget our real being, and hence all this 29 misery comes.

30 In practical daily life we are hurt by small things; we are 31 enslaved by little beings. Misery comes because we think we are 32 finite--we are little beings. And yet, how difficult it is to believe that 33 we are infinite beings! In the midst of all this misery and trouble, 34 when a little thing may throw me off my balance, it must be my care 35 to believe that I am infinite. And the fact is that we are, and that 36 consciously or unconsciously we are all searching after that 37 something which is infinite; we are always seeking for something 38 that is free.

39 There was never a human race which did not have a religion 40 and worship some sort of God or gods. Whether the God or gods 41 existed or not is no question; but what is the analysis of this 42 psychological phenomenon? Why is all the world trying to find, or 43 seeking for, a God? Why? Because in spite of all this bondage, in 44 spite of nature and this tremendous energy of law grinding us 45 down, never allowing us to turn to any side--wherever we go, 46 whatever we want to do, we are thwarted by this law, which is 47 everywhere--in spite of all this, the human soul never forgets its 48 freedom and is ever seeking it. The search for freedom is the 49 search of all religions; whether they know it or not, whether they 50 can formulate it well or ill, the idea is there. Even the lowest man, 51 the most ignorant, seeks for something which has power over

1 nature's laws. He wants to see a demon, a ghost, a god--somebody 2 who can subdue nature, for whom nature is not almighty, for whom 3 there is no law. "Oh, for somebody who can break the law!" That is 4 the cry coming from the human heart. We are always seeking for 5 someone who breaks the law. The rushing engine speeds along the 6 railway track; the little worm crawls out of its way. We at once say, 7 "The engine is dead matter, a machine; and the worm is alive," 8 because the worm attempted to break the law. The engine, with all 9 its power and might, can never break the law. It is made to go in 10 any direction man wants, and it cannot do otherwise; but the worm, 11 small and little though it was, attempted to break the law and avoid 12 the danger. It tried to assert itself against law, assert its freedom; 13 and there was the sign of the future God in it.

14 Everywhere we see this assertion of freedom, this freedom of 15 the soul. It is reflected in every religion in the shape of God or gods; 16 but it is all external yet--for those who only see the gods outside.
17 Man decided that he was nothing. He was afraid that he could 18 never be free; so he went to seek for someone outside of nature 19 who was free. Then he thought that there were many and many 20 such free beings, and gradually he merged them all into one God of 21 gods and Lord of lords. Even that did not satisfy him. He came a 22 little closer to truth, a little nearer; and then gradually found that 23 whatever he was, he was in some way connected with the God of 24 gods and Lord of lords; that he, though he thought himself bound 25 and low and weak, was somehow connected with that God of gods.
26 Then visions came to him; thought arose and knowledge advanced.
27 And he began to come nearer and nearer to that God, and at last 28 found out that God and all the gods, this whole psychological 29 phenomenon connected with the search for an all-powerful free 30 soul, was but a reflection of his own idea of himself. And then at last 31 he discovered that it was not only true that "God made man after 32 His own image", but that it was also true that man made God after 33 his own image. That brought out the idea of divine freedom. The 34 Divine Being was always within, the nearest of the near. Him we 35 had ever been seeking outside, and at last found that He is in the 36 heart of our hearts. You may know the story of the man who 37 mistook his own heartbeat for somebody knocking at the door, and 38 went to the door and opened it, but found nobody there, so he went 39 back. Again he seemed to hear a knocking at the door, but nobody 40 was there. Then he understood that it was his own heartbeat, and 41 he had misinterpreted it as a knocking at the door. Similarly, man 42 after his search finds out that this infinite freedom that he was 43 placing in imagination all the time in the nature outside is the 44 internal subject, the eternal Soul of souls; this Reality, he himself.

45 Thus at last he comes to recognise this marvellous duality of 46 existence: the subject, infinite and finite in one--the Infinite Being is 47 also the same finite soul. The Infinite is caught, as it were, in the 48 meshes of the intellect and apparently manifests as finite beings, 49 but the reality remains unchanged.

50 This is, therefore, true knowledge; that the Soul of our souls, 51 the Reality that is within us, is That which is unchangeable, eternal, 52 ever-blessed, ever-free. This is the only solid ground for us to stand

1 upon.

2 This, then, is the end of all death, the advent of all 3 immortality, the end of all misery. And he who sees that One among 4 the many, that One unchangeable in the universe of change, he who 5 sees Him as the Soul of his soul, unto him belongs eternal peace-- 6 unto none else.

7 And in the midst of the depths of misery and degradation, the 8 Soul sends a ray of light, and man wakes up and finds that what is 9 really his, he can never lose. No, we can never lose what is really 10 ours. Who can lose his being? Who can lose his very existence? If I 11 am good, it is the existence first, and then that becomes coloured 12 with the quality of goodness. If I am evil, it is the existence first, 13 and that becomes coloured with the quality of badness. That 14 existence is first, last and always; it is never lost, but ever present.

15 Therefore, there is hope for all. None can die; none can be 16 degraded for ever. Life is but a playground, however gross the play 17 may be. However we may receive blows, and however knocked 18 about we may be, the Soul is there and is never injured. We are that 19 Infinite.

20 Thus sang a Vedantin, "I never had fear nor doubt. Death 21 never came to me. I never had father or mother: for I was never 22 born. Where are my foes?--for I am All. I am the Existence and 23 Knowledge and Bliss Absolute. I am It. I am It. Anger and lust and 24 jealousy, evil thoughts and all these things, never came to me; for I 25 am the Existence, the Knowledge, the Bliss Absolute. I am It. I am 26 It."

27 That is the remedy for all disease, the nectar that cures 28 death. Here we are in this world, and our nature rebels against it.
29 But let us repeat, "I am It; I am It. I have no fear, nor doubt, nor 30 death. I have no sex, nor creed, nor colour. What creed can I have?
31 What sect is there to which I should belong? What sect can hold 32 me? I am in every sect!"

33 However much the body rebels, however much the mind 34 rebels, in the midst of the uttermost darkness, in the midst of 35 agonising tortures, in the uttermost despair, repeat this, once, 36 twice, thrice, ever more. Light comes gently, slowly, but surely it 37 comes.

38 Many times I have been in the jaws of death, starving, 39 footsore, and weary; for days and days I had had no food, and often 40 could walk no farther; I would sink down under a tree, and life 41 would seem ebbing away. I could not speak, I could scarcely think, 42 but at last the mind reverted to the idea: "I have no fear nor death; 43 I never hunger nor thirst. I am It! I am It! The whole of nature 44 cannot crush me; it is my servant. Assert thy strength, thou Lord of 45 lords and God of gods! Regain thy lost empire! Arise and walk and 46 stop not!" And I would rise up, reinvigorated, and here am I, living, 47 today. Thus, whenever darkness comes, assert the reality and 48 everything adverse must vanish. For, after all, it is but a dream.
49 Mountain-high though the difficulties appear, terrible and gloomy 50 though all things seem, they are but Maya. Fear not--it is banished.

1 Crush it, and it vanishes. Stamp upon it, and it dies. Be not afraid.
2 Think not how many times you fail. Never mind. Time is infinite. Go
3 forward; assert yourself again and again, and light must come. You 4 may pray to everyone that was ever born, but who will come to help 5 you? And what of the way of death from which none knows escape?
6 Help thyself out by thyself. None else can help thee, friend. For 7 thou alone art thy greatest enemy, thou alone art thy greatest 8 friend. Get hold of the Self, then. Stand up. Don't be afraid. In the 9 midst of all miseries and all weakness, let the Self come out, faint 10 and imperceptible though it be at first. You will gain courage, and at 11 last like a lion you will roar out, "I am It! I am It!" "I am neither a 12 man, nor a woman, nor a god, nor a demon; no, nor any of the 13 animals, plants, or trees. I am neither poor nor rich, neither learned 14 nor ignorant. All these things are very little compared with what I 15 am: for I am It! I am It! Behold the sun and the moon and the stars:
16 I am the light that is shining in them! I am the beauty of the fire! I 17 am the power in the universe! For, I am It! I am It!"

18 "Whoever thinks that I am little makes a mistake, for the Self 19 is all that exists. The sun exists because I declare it does, the world 20 exists because I declare it does. Without me they cannot remain, for 21 I am Existence, Knowledge, and Bliss Absolute--ever happy, ever 22 pure, ever beautiful. Behold, the sun is the cause of our vision, but 23 is not itself ever affected by any defect in the eyes of any one; even 24 so I am. I am working through all organs, working through 25 everything, but never does the good and evil of work attach to me.
26 For me there is no law, nor Karma. I own the laws of Karma. I ever 27 was and ever am."

28 "My real pleasure was never in earthly things--in husband, 29 wife, children, and other things. For I am like the infinite blue sky: 30 clouds of many colours pass over it and play for a second; they 31 move off, and there is the same unchangeable blue. Happiness and 32 misery, good and evil, may envelop me for a moment, veiling the 33 Self; but I am still there. They pass away because they are 34 changeable. I shine, because I am unchangeable. If misery comes, I 35 know it is finite, therefore it must die. If evil comes, I know it is 36 finite, it must go. I alone am infinite and untouched by anything. For 37 I am the Infinite, that Eternal, Changeless Self."--So sings one of 38 our poets.

39 Let us drink of this cup, this cup that leads to everything that 40 is immortal, everything that is unchangeable.

41 Fear not. Believe not that we are evil, that we are finite, that 42 we can ever die. It is not true.

43 "This is to be heard of, then to be thought upon, and then to 44 be meditated upon." When the hands work, the mind should repeat, 45 "I am It. I am It." Think of it, dream of it, until it becomes bone of 46 your bones and flesh of your flesh, until all the hideous dreams of 47 littleness, of weakness, of misery, and of evil, have entirely 48 vanished, and no more then can the Truth be hidden from you even 49 for a moment.

1 I shall tell you a story from the Vedas tonight. The Vedas are 2 the sacred scriptures of the Hindus and are a vast collection of 3 literature, of which the last part is called the Vedanta, meaning the 4 end of the Vedas. It deals with the theories contained in them, and 5 more especially the philosophy with which we are concerned. It is 6 written in archaic Sanskrit, and you must remember it was written 7 thousands of years ago. There was a certain man who wanted to 8 make a big sacrifice. In the religion of the Hindus, sacrifice plays a 9 great part. There are various sorts of sacrifices. They make altars 10 and pour oblations into the fire, and repeat various hymns and so 11 forth; and at the end of the sacrifice they make a gift to the 12 Brahmins and the poor. Each sacrifice has its peculiar gift. There 13 was one sacrifice, where everything a man possessed had to be 14 given up. Now this man, though rich, was miserly, and at the same 15 time wanted to get a great name for having done this most difficult 16 sacrifice. And when he did this sacrifice, instead of giving up 17 everything he had, he gave away only his blind, lame, and old cows 18 that would never more give milk. But he had a son called 19 Nachiketas, a bright young boy, who, observing the poor gifts made 20 by his father, and pondering on the demerit that was sure to accrue 21 to him thereby, resolved to make amends for them by making a gift 22 of himself. So he went to his father and said, "And to whom will you 23 give me?" The father did not answer the boy, and the boy asked a 24 second and a third time, when the father got vexed and said, "Thee 25 I give unto Yama, thee I give unto Death." And the boy went straight 26 to the kingdom of Yama. Yama was not at home, so he waited there.
27 After three days Yama came and said to him, "O Brahmin, thou art 28 my guest, and thou hast been here for three days without any food.
29 I salute thee, and in order to repay thee for this trouble, I will grant 30 thee three boons." Then the boy asked the first boon, "May my 31 father's anger against me get calmed down," and the second boon 32 was that he wanted to know about a certain sacrifice. And then 33 came the third boon. "When a man dies, the question arises: What 34 becomes of him? Some people say he ceases to exist. Others say 35 that he exists. Please tell me what the answer is. This is the third 36 boon that I want." Then Death answered, "The gods in ancient times 37 tried to unravel the mystery; this mystery is so fine that it is hard to 38 know. Ask for some other boon: do not ask this one. Ask for a long 39 life of a hundred years. Ask for cattle and horses, ask for great 40 kingdoms. Do not press me to answer this. Whatever man desires 41 for his enjoyment, ask all that and I will fulfil it, but do not want to 42 know this secret." "No, sir," said the boy, "man is not to be satisfied 43 with wealth; if wealth were wanted, we should get it, if we have 44 only seen you. We shall also live so long as you rule. What decaying 45 mortal, living in the world below and possessed of knowledge, 46 having gained the company of the undecaying and the immortal, 47 will delight in long life, knowing the nature of the pleasure 48 produced by song and sport? Therefore, tell me this secret about 49 the great hereafter, I do not want anything else; that is what 50 Nachiketas wants, the mystery of death." Then the God of death 51 was pleased. We have been saying in the last two or three lectures 52 that this Jnana prepares the mind. So you see here that the first 53 preparation is that a man must desire nothing else but the truth,

1 and truth for truth's sake. See how this boy rejected all these gifts
2 which Death offered him; possessions, property, wealth, long life, 3 and everything he was ready to sacrifice for this one idea, 4 knowledge only, the truth. Thus alone can truth come. The God of 5 death became pleased. "Here are two ways," he said, "one of 6 enjoyment, the other of blessedness. These two in various ways 7 draw mankind. He becomes a sage who, of these two, takes up that 8 which leads to blessedness, and he degenerates who takes up the 9 road to enjoyment. I praise you, Nachiketas; you have not asked for 10 desire. In various ways I tempted you towards the path of 11 enjoyment; you resisted them all, you have known that knowledge is 12 much higher than a life of enjoyment.

1 "You have understood that the man who lives in ignorance 2 and enjoys, is not different from the brute beast. Yet there are many 3 who, though steeped in ignorance, in the pride of their hearts, think 4 that they are great sages and go round and round in many crooked 5 ways, like the blind led by the blind. This truth, Nachiketas, never 6 shines in the heart of those who are like ignorant children, deluded 7 by a few lumps of earth. They do not understand this world, nor the 8 other world. They deny this and the other one, and thus again and 9 again come under my control. Many have not even the opportunity 10 to hear about it; and many, though hearing, cannot know it, because 11 the teacher must be wonderful; so must he be wonderful too unto 12 whom the knowledge is carried. If the speaker is a man who is not 13 highly advanced, then even a hundred times heard, and a hundred 14 times taught, the truth never illumines the soul. Do not disturb your 15 mind by vain arguments, Nachiketas; this truth only becomes 16 effulgent in the heart which has been made pure. He who cannot be 17 seen without the greatest difficulty, He who is hidden, He who has 18 entered the cave of the heart of hearts--the Ancient One--cannot be 19 seen with the external eyes; seeing Him with the eyes of the soul, 20 one gives up both pleasure and pain. He who knows this secret 21 gives up all his vain desires, and attains this superfine perception, 22 and thus becomes ever blessed. Nachiketas, that is the way to 23 blessedness. He is beyond all virtue, beyond all vice, beyond all 24 duties, beyond all non-duties, beyond all existence, beyond all that 25 is to be; he who know this, alone knows. He whom all the Vedas 26 seek, to see whom men undergo all sorts of asceticism, I will tell 27 you His name: It is Om. This eternal Om is the Brahman, this is the 28 immortal One; he who knows the secret of this--whatever he desires 29 is his. This Self of man, Nachiketas, about which you seek to know, 30 is never born, and never dies. Without beginning, ever existing, this 31 ancient One is not destroyed, when the body is destroyed. If the 32 slayer thinks that he can slay, and if the slain man thinks he is slain, 33 both are mistaken, for neither can the Self kill, nor can It be killed.
34 Infinitely smaller than the smallest particle, infinitely greater than 35 the greatest existence, the Lord of all lives in the cave of the heart 36 of very being. He who has become sinless sees Him in all His glory, 37 through the mercy of the same Lord. (We find that the mercy of God 38 is one of the causes of God-realisation.) Sitting He goes far, lying 39 He goes everywhere; who else but men of purified and subtle 40 understanding are qualified to know the God in whom all conflicting 41 attributes meet? Without body, yet living in the body, untouched, yet 42 seemingly in contact, omnipresent--knowing the Atman to be such, 43 the sage gives up all misery. This Atman is not be attained by the 44 study of the Vedas, nor by the highest intellect, nor by much 45 learning. Whom the Atman seeks, he gets the Atman; unto him He 46 discloses His glory. He who is continuously doing evil deeds, he 47 whose mind is not calm, he who cannot meditate, he who is always 48 disturbed and fickle--he cannot understand and realise this Atman 49 who has entered the cave of the heart. This body, O Nachiketas, is 50 the chariot, the organs of the senses are the horses, the mind is the 51 reins, the intellect is the charioteer, and the soul is the rider in the 52 chariot. When the soul joins himself with the charioteer, Buddhi or 53 intellect, and then through it with the mind, the reins, and through

1 it again with the organs, the horses, he is said to be the enjoyer; he 2 perceives, he works, he acts. He whose mind is not under control, 3 and who has no discrimination, his senses are not controllable like 4 vicious horses in the hands of a driver. But he who has 5 discrimination, whose mind is controlled, his organs are always 6 controllable like good horses in the hands of a driver. He who has 7 discrimination, whose mind is always in the way to understand 8 truth, who is always pure--he receives that truth, attaining which 9 there is no rebirth. This, O Nachiketas, is very difficult, the way is 10 long, and it is hard to attain. It is only those who have attained the 11 finest perception that can see it, that can understand it. Yet do not 12 be frightened. Awake, be up and doing. Do not stop till you have 13 reached the goal. For the sages say that the task is very difficult, 14 like walking on the edge of a razor. He who is beyond the senses, 15 beyond all touch, beyond all form, beyond all taste, the 16 Unchangeable, the Infinite, beyond even intelligence, the 17 Indestructible--knowing Him alone, we are safe from the jaws of 18 death."

19 So far, we see that Yama describes the goal that is to be 20 attained. The first idea that we get is that birth, death, misery, and 21 the various tossings about to which we are subject in the world can 22 only be overcome by knowing that which is real. What is real? That 23 which never changes, the Self of man, the Self behind the universe.
24 Then, again, it is said that it is very difficult to know Him. Knowing 25 does not mean simply intellectual assent, it means realisation.
26 Again and again we have read that this Self is to be seen, to be 27 perceived. We cannot see it with the eyes; the perception for it has 28 to become superfine. It is a gross perception by which the walls and 29 books are perceived, but the perception to discern the truth has to 30 be made very fine, and that is the whole secret of this knowledge.
31 Then Yama says that one must be very pure. That is the way to 32 making the perception superfine; and then he goes on to tell us 33 other ways. That self-existent One is far removed from the organs.
34 The organs or instruments see outwards, but the self-existing One, 35 the Self, is seen inwards. You must remember the qualification that 36 is required: the desire to know this Self by turning the eyes 37 inwards. All these beautiful things that we see in nature are very 38 good, but that is not the way to see God. We must learn how to turn 39 the eyes inwards. The eagerness of the eyes to see outwards should 40 be restricted. When you walk in a busy street, it is difficult to hear 41 the man speak with whom you are walking, because of the noise of 42 the passing carriages. He cannot hear you because there is so much 43 noise. The mind is going outwards, and you cannot hear the man 44 who is next to you. In the same way, this world around us is making 45 such a noise that it draws the mind outwards. How can we see the 46 Self? This going outwards must be stopped. That is what is meant 47 by turning the eyes inwards, and then alone the glory of the Lord 48 within will be seen.

49 What is this Self? We have seen that It is even beyond the 50 intellect. We learn from the same Upanishad that this Self is eternal 51 and omnipresent, that you and I and all of us are omnipresent 52 beings, and that the Self is changeless. Now this omnipresent Being

1 can be only one. There cannot be two beings who are equally 2 omnipresent--how could that be? There cannot be two beings who 3 are infinite, and the result is, there is really only one Self, and you, 4 I, and the whole universe are but one, appearing as many. "As the 5 one fire entering into the world manifests itself in various ways, 6 even so that one Self, the Self of all, manifest Itself in every form."
7 But the question is: If this Self is perfect and pure, and the One 8 Being of the universe, what becomes of It when It goes into the 9 impure body, the wicked body, the good body, and so on? How can It 10 remain perfect? "This one sun is the cause of vision in every eye, 11 yet it is not touched by the defects in the eyes of any." If a man has 12 jaundice he sees everything as yellow; the cause of his vision is the 13 sun, but his seeing everything as yellow does not touch the sun.
14 Even so this One Being, though the Self of every one, is not touched 15 by the purities or impurities outside. "In this world where 16 everything is evanescent, he who knows Him who never changes, in 17 this world of insentientcy, he who knows the one sentient Being, in 18 this world of many, he who know this One and sees Him in his own 19 soul, unto him belongs eternal bliss, to none else, to none else.
20 There the sun shines not, nor the stars, nor the lightning flashes, 21 what to speak of fire? He shining, everything shines; through His 22 light everything becomes effulgent. When all the desires that 23 trouble the heart cease, then the mortal becomes immortal, and 24 here one attains Brahman. When all the crookedness of the heart 25 disappears, when all its knots are cut asunder, then alone the 26 mortal becomes immortal. This is the way. May this study bless us; 27 may it maintain us; may it give us strength, may it become energy 28 in us; may we not hate each other; peace unto all!"

29 This is the line of thought that you will find in the Vedanta 30 philosophy. We see first that here is a thought entirely different 31 from what you see anywhere else in the world. In the oldest parts of 32 the Vedas the search was the same as in other books, the search 33 was outside. In some of the old, old books, the question was raised, 34 "What was in the beginning? When there was neither aught nor 35 naught, when darkness was covering darkness, who created all 36 this?" So the search began. And they began to talk about the 37 angels, the Devas, and all sorts of things, and later on we find that 38 they gave it up as hopeless.

1 In their day the search was outside and they could find 2 nothing; but in later days, as we read in the Vedas, they had to look 3 inside for the self-existent One. This is the one fundamental idea in 4 the Vedas, that our search in the stars, the nebulae, the Milky Way, 5 in the whole of this external universe leads to nothing, never solves 6 the problem of life and death. The wonderful mechanism inside had 7 to be analysed, and it revealed to them the secret of the universe;
8 nor star or sun could do it. Man had to anatomise; not the body, 9 but the soul of man. In that soul they found the answer. What was 10 the answer they found? That behind the body, behind even the 11 mind, there is the self-existent One. He dies not, nor is He born.
12 The self-existent One is omnipresent, because He has no form. That 13 which has no form or shape, that which is not limited by space or 14 time, cannot live in a certain place. How can it? It is everywhere, 15 omnipresent, equally present through all of us.

16 What is the soul of man? There was one party who held that 17 there is a Being, God, and an infinite number of souls besides, who 18 are eternally separate from God in essence, and form, and 19 everything. This is dualism. This is the old, old crude idea. The 20 answer given by another party was that the soul was a part of the 21 infinite Divine Existence. Just as this body is a little world by itself, 22 and behind it is the mind or thought, and behind that is the 23 individual soul, similarly, the whole world is a body, and behind that 24 is the universal mind, and behind that is the universal Soul. Just as 25 this body is a portion of the universal body, so this mind is a portion 26 of the universal mind, and the soul of man a portion of the universal 27 Soul. This is what is called the Vishishtadvaita, qualified monism.
28 Now, we know that the universal Soul is infinite. How can infinity 29 have parts? How can it be broken up, divided? It may be very poetic 30 to say that I am a spark of the Infinite, but it is absurd to the 31 thinking mind. What is meant by dividing Infinity? Is it something 32 material that you can part or separate it into pieces? Infinite can 33 never be divided. If that were possible, it would be no more Infinite.
34 What is the conclusion then? The answer is, that Soul which is the 35 universal is you; you are not a part but the whole of It. You are the 36 whole of God. Then what are all these varieties? We find so many 37 millions of individual souls. What are they? If the sun reflects upon 38 millions of globules of water, in each globule is the form, the perfect 39 image of the sun; but they are only images, and the real sun is only 40 one. So this apparent soul that is in every one of us is only the 41 image of God, nothing beyond that. The real Being who is behind, is 42 that one God. We are all one there. As Self, there is only one in the 43 universe. It is in me and you, and is only one; and that one Self has 44 been reflected in all these various bodies as various different 45 selves. But we do not know this; we think we are separate from 46 each other and separate from Him. And so long as we think this, 47 misery will be in the world. This is hallucination.

48 Then the other great source of misery is fear. Why does one 49 man injure another? Because he fears he will not have enough
50 enjoyment. One man fears that, perhaps, he will not have enough 51 money, and that fear cause him to injure others and rob them. How 52 can there be fear if there is only one existence? If a thunderbolt

1 falls on my head, it was I who was the thunderbolt, because I am
2 the only existence. If a plague comes, it is I; if a tiger comes, it is I.
3 If death comes, it is I. I am both death and life. We see that fear 4 comes with the idea that there are two in the universe. We have 5 always heard it preached, "Love one another". What for? That 6 doctrine was preached, but the explanation is here. Why should I 7 love every one? Because they and I are one. Why should I love my 8 brother? Because he and I are one. There is this oneness; this 9 solidarity of the whole universe. From the lowest worm that crawls 10 under our feet to the highest beings that ever lived--all have various 11 bodies, but are the one Soul. Through all mouths, you eat; through 12 all hands, you work; through all eyes, you see. You enjoy health in 13 millions of bodies, you are suffering from disease in millions of 14 bodies. When this idea comes, and we realise it, see it, feel it, then 15 will misery cease, and fear with it. How can I die? There is nothing 16 beyond me. Fear ceases, and then alone comes perfect happiness 17 and perfect love. That universal sympathy, universal love, universal 18 bliss, that never changes, raises man above everything. It has no 19 reactions and no misery can touch it; but this little eating and 20 drinking of the world always brings a reaction. The whole cause of 21 it is this dualism, the idea that I am separate from the universe, 22 separate from God. But as soon as we have realised that "I am He, I 23 am the Self of the universe, I am eternally blessed, eternally free"-- 24 then will come real love, fear will vanish, and all misery cease.

YAJNAVALKYA AND MAITREYI

1 We say, "That day is indeed a bad day on which you do not 2 hear the name of the Lord, but a cloudy day is not a bad day at all."
3 Yajnavalkya was a great sage. You know, the Shastras in India 4 enjoin that every man should give up the world when he becomes 5 old. So Yajnavalkya said to his wife, "My beloved, here is all my 6 money, and my possessions, and I am going away." She replied, "Sir, 7 if I had this whole earth full of wealth, would that give me 8 immortality?" Yajnavalkya said, "No, it will not. You will be rich, and 9 that will be all, but wealth cannot give us immortality." She replied, 10 "What shall I do to gain that through which I shall become 11 immortal? If you know, tell me." Yajnavalkya replied, "You have been 12 always my beloved; you are more beloved now by this question.
13 Come, take your seat, and I will tell you; and when you have heard, 14 meditate upon it." He said, "It is not for the sake of the husband 15 that the wife loves the husband, but for the sake of the Atman that 16 she loves the husband, because she loves the Self. None loves the 17 wife for the sake of the wife; but it is because one loves the Self 18 that one loves the wife. None loves the children for the children; 19 but because one loves the Self, therefore one loves the children.
20 None loves wealth on account of the wealth; but because one loves 21 the Self, therefore one loves wealth. None loves the Brahmin for the 22 sake of the Brahmin; but because one loves the Self, one loves the 23 Brahmin. So, none loves the Kshatriya for the sake of the Kshatriya, 24 but because one loves the Self. Neither does any one love the world 25 on account of the world, but because one loves the Self. None, 26 similarly, loves the gods on account of the gods, but because one 27 loves the Self. None loves a thing for that thing's sake; but it is for 28 the Self that one loves it. This Self, therefore, is to be heard, 29 reasoned about, and meditated upon. O my Maitreyi, when that Self 30 has been heard, when that Self has been seen, when that Self has 31 been realised, then, all this becomes known." What do we get then?
32 Before us we find a curious philosophy. The statement has been 33 made that every love is selfishness in the lowest sense of the word:
34 because I love myself, therefore I love another; it cannot be. There 35 have been philosophers in modern times who have said that self is 36 the only motive power in the world. That is true, and yet it is wrong.
37 But this self is but the shadow of that real Self which is behind. It 38 appears wrong and evil because it is small. That infinite love for the 39 Self, which is the universe, appears to be evil, appears to be small, 40 because it appears through a small part. Even when the wife loves 41 the husband, whether she knows it or not, she loves the husband 42 for that Self. It is selfishness as it is manifested in the world, but 43 that selfishness is really but a small part of that Self-ness.
44 Whenever one loves, one has to love in and through the Self. This 45 Self has to be known. What is the difference? Those that love the 46 Self without knowing what It is, their love is selfishness. Those that 47 love, knowing what that Self is, their love is free; they are sages.
48 "Him the Brahmin gives up who sees the Brahmin anywhere else
49 but in the Self. Him the Kshatriya gives up who sees the Kshatriya 50 anywhere else but in the Self. The world gives him up who sees this 51 world anywhere but in that Atman. The gods give him up who loves 52 the gods knowing them to be anywhere else but in the Atman.
53 Everything goes away from him who knows everything as

1 something else except the Atman. These Brahmins, these 2 Kshatriyas, this world, these gods, whatever exists, everything is 3 that Atman." Thus he explains what he means by love.

4 Every time we particularise an object, we differentiate it from 5 the Self. I am trying to love a woman; as soon as that woman is 6 particularised, she is separated from the Atman, and my love for 7 her will not be eternal, but will end in grief. But as soon as I see 8 that woman as the Atman, that love becomes perfect, and will never 9 suffer. So with everything; as soon as you are attached to anything 10 in the universe, detaching it from the universe as a whole, from the 11 Atman, there comes a reaction. With everything that we love 12 outside the Self, grief and misery will be the result. If we enjoy 13 everything in the Self, and as the Self, no misery or reaction will 14 come. This is perfect bliss. How to come to this ideal? Yajnavalkya 15 goes on to tell us the process by which to reach that state. The 16 universe is infinite: how can we take every particular thing and look 17 at it as the Atman, without knowing the Atman? "As with a drum 18 when we are at a distance we cannot catch the sound, we cannot 19 conquer the sound; but as soon as we come to the drum and put our 20 hand on it, the sound is conquered. When the conch-shell is being 21 blown, we cannot catch or conquer the sound, until we come near 22 and get hold of the shell, and then it is conquered. When the Vina is 23 being played, when we have come to the Vina, we get to the centre 24 whence the sound is proceeding. As when some one is burning 25 damp fuel, smoke and sparks of various kinds come, even so, from 26 this great One has been breathed out knowledge; everything has 27 come out of Him. He breathed out, as it were, all knowledge. As to 28 all water, the one goal is the ocean; as to all touch, the skin is the 29 one centre; as of all smell, the nose is the one centre; as to all taste, 30 the tongue is the one goal; as of all form, the eyes are the one goal; 31 as of all sounds, the ears are the one goal; as of all thought, the 32 mind is the one goal; as of all knowledge, the heart is the one goal; 33 as of all work, the hands are the one goal; as a morsel of salt put 34 into the sea-water melts away, and we cannot take it back, even so, 35 Maitreyi, is this Universal Being eternally infinite; all knowledge is 36 in Him. The whole universe rises from Him, and again goes down 37 into Him. No more is there any knowledge, dying or death." We get 38 the idea that we have all come just like sparks from Him, and when 39 you know Him, then you go back and become one with Him again.
40 We are the Universal.

41 Maitreyi became frightened, just as everywhere people 42 become frightened. Said she, "Sir, here is exactly where you have 43 thrown a delusion over me. You have frightened me by saying there 44 will be no more gods; all individuality will be lost. There will be no 45 one to recognise, no one to love, no one to hate. What will become 46 of us?" "Maitreyi, I do not mean to puzzle you, or rather let it rest 47 here. You may be frightened. Where there are two, one sees 48 another, one hears another, one welcomes another, one thinks of 49 another, one knows another. But when the whole has become that 50 Atman, who is seen by whom, who is to be heard by whom, who is 51 to be welcomed by whom, who is to be known by whom?" That one 52 idea was taken up by Schopenhauer and echoed in his philosophy.

1 Through whom we know this universe, through what to know Him?
2 How to know the knower? By what means can we know the 3 knower? How can that be? Because in and through that we know 4 everything. By what means can we know Him? By no means, for He 5 is that means.

6 So far the idea is that it is all One Infinite Being. That is the 7 real individuality, when there is no more division, and no more 8 parts; these little ideas are very low, illusive. But yet in and through 9 every spark of the individuality is shining that Infinite. Everything is 10 a manifestation of the Atman. How to reach that? First you make 11 the statement, just as Yajnavalkya himself tells us: "This Atman is 12 first to be heard of." So he stated the case; then he argued it out, 13 and the last demonstration was how to know That, through which 14 all knowledge is possible. Then, last, it is to be meditated upon. He 15 takes the contrast, the microcosm and the macrocosm, and shows 16 how they are rolling on in particular lines, and how it is all 17 beautiful. "This earth is so blissful, so helpful to every being; and all 18 beings are so helpful to this earth: all these are manifestations of 19 that Self-effulgent One, the Atman." All that is bliss, even in the 20 lowest sense, is but the reflection of Him. All that is good is His 21 reflection, and when that reflection is a shadow it is called evil.
22 There are no two Gods. When He is less manifested, it is called 23 darkness, evil; and when He is more manifested, it is called light.
24 That is all. Good and evil are only a question of degree: more 25 manifested or less manifested. Just take the example of our own 26 lives. How many things we see in our childhood which we think to 27 be good, but which really are evil, and how many things seem to be 28 evil which are good! How the ideas change! How an idea goes up 29 and up! What we thought very good at one time we do not think so 30 good now. So good and evil are but superstitions, and do not exist.
31 The difference is only in degree. It is all a manifestation of that 32 Atman; He is being manifested in everything; only, when the 33 manifestation is very thick we call it evil; and when it is very thin, 34 we call it good. It is the best, when all covering goes away. So 35 everything that is in the universe is to be meditated upon in that 36 sense alone, that we can see it as all good, because it is the best.
37 There is evil and there is good; and the apex, the centre, is the 38 Reality. He is neither evil nor good; He is the best. The best can be 39 only one, the good can be many and the evil many. There will be 40 degrees of variation between the good and the evil, but the best is 41 only one, and that best, when seen through thin coverings, we call 42 different sorts of good, and when through thick covers, we call evil.
43 Good and evil are different forms of superstition. They have gone 44 through all sorts of dualistic delusion and all sorts of ideas, and the 45 words have sunk into the hearts of human beings, terrorising men 46 and women and living there as terrible tyrants. They make us 47 become tigers. All the hatred with which we hate others is caused 48 by these foolish ideas which we have imbibed since our childhood-- 49 good and evil. Our judgment of humanity becomes entirely false; we 50 make this beautiful earth a hell; but as soon as we can give up good 51 and evil, it becomes a heaven.

52 "This earth is blissful ('sweet' is the literal translation) to all

1 beings and all beings are sweet to this earth; they all help each 2 other. And all the sweetness is the Atman, that effulgent, immortal 3 One who is inside this earth." Whose is this sweetness? How can 4 there be any sweetness but He? That one sweetness is manifesting 5 itself in various ways. Wherever there is any love, any sweetness in 6 any human being, either in a saint or a sinner, either in an angel or 7 a murderer, either in the body, mind, or the senses, it is He.
8 Physical enjoyments are but He, mental enjoyments are but He, 9 spiritual enjoyments are but He. How can there be anything but 10 He? How can there be twenty thousand gods and devils fighting 11 with each other? Childish dreams! Whatever is the lowest physical 12 enjoyment is He, and the highest spiritual enjoyment is He. There is 13 no sweetness but He. Thus says Yajnavalkya. When you come to 14 that state and look upon all things with the same eye, when you see 15 even in the drunkard's pleasure in drink only that sweetness, then 16 you have got the truth, and then alone you will know what 17 happiness means, what peace means, what love means; and so long 18 as you make these vain distinctions, silly, childish, foolish 19 superstitions, all sorts of misery will come. But that immortal One, 20 the effulgent One, He is inside the earth, it is all His sweetness, and 21 the same sweetness is in the body. This body is the earth, as it 22 were, and inside all the powers of the body, all the enjoyments of 23 the body, is He; the eyes see, the skin touches; what are all these 24 enjoyments? That Self-effulgent One who is in the body, He is the 25 Atman. This world, so sweet to all beings, and every being so sweet 26 to it, is but the Self-effulgent; the Immortal is the bliss in that world.
27 In us also, He is that bliss. He is the Brahman. "This air is so sweet 28 to all beings, and all beings are so sweet to it. But He who is that 29 Self-effulgent Immortal Being in the air--is also in this body. He is 30 expressing Himself as the life of all beings. This sun is so sweet to 31 all beings. All beings are so sweet to this sun. He who is the Self-32 effulgent Being in the sun, we reflect Him as the smaller light. What 33 can be there but His reflection? He is in the body, and it is His 34 reflection which makes us see the light. This moon is so sweet to 35 all, and every one is so sweet to the moon, but that Self-effulgent 36 and Immortal One who is the soul of that moon, He is in us 37 expressing Himself as mind. This lightning is so beautiful, every one 38 is so sweet to the lightning, but the Self-effulgent and Immortal One 39 is the soul of this lightning, and is also in us, because all is that 40 Brahman. The Atman, the Self, is the king of all beings." These 41 ideas are very helpful to men; they are for meditation. For instance, 42 meditate on the earth; think of the earth and at the same time know 43 that we have That which is in the earth, that both are the same.
44 Identify the body with the earth, and identify the soul with the Soul 45 behind. Identify the air with the soul that is in the air and that is in 46 me. They are all one, manifested in different forms. To realise this 47 unity is the end and aim of all meditation, and this is what 48 Yajnavalkya was trying to explain to Maitreyi.

SOUL, NATURE, AND GOD

1 According to the Vedanta philosophy, man consists of three 2 substances, so to say. The outermost is the body, the gross form of 3 man, in which are the instruments of sensation, such as the eyes, 4 nose, ears, and so forth. This eye is not the organ of vision; it is only 5 the instrument. Behind that is the organ. So, the ears are not the 6 organs of hearing; they are the instruments, and behind them is the 7 organ, or what, in modern physiology, is called the centre. The 8 organs are called Indriyas in Sanskrit. If the centre which governs 9 the eyes be destroyed, the eyes will not see; so with all our senses.
10 The organs, again, cannot sense anything by themselves, until there 11 be something else attached to them. That something is the mind.
12 Many times you have observed that you were deeply engaged in a 13 certain thought, and the clock struck and you did not hear it. Why?
14 The ear was there; vibrations entered it and were carried into the 15 brain, yet you did not hear, because the mind was not joined to the 16 organ. The impressions of external objects are carried to the 17 organs, and when the mind is attached to them, it takes the 18 impressions and gives them, as it were, a colouring, which is called 19 egoism, "I". Take the case of a mosquito biting me on the finger 20 when I am engaged in some work. I do not feel it, because my mind 21 is joined to something else. Later, when my mind is joined to the 22 impression conveyed to the Indriyas, a reaction comes. With this 23 reaction I become conscious of the mosquito. So even the mind 24 joined itself to the organs is not sufficient; there must come the 25 reaction in the form of will. This faculty from which the reaction 26 comes, the faculty of knowledge or intellect, is called "Buddhi".
27 First, there must be the external instrument, next the organ, next 28 the mind must join itself to the organ, then must come the reaction 29 of the intellect, and when all these things are complete, there 30 immediately flashes the idea, "I and the external object" and there 31 is a perception, a concept, knowledge. The external organ, which is 32 only the instrument, is in the body, and behind that is the internal 33 organ which is finer; then there is the mind, then the intellectual 34 faculty, then egoism, which says, "I"--I see, I hear, and so forth. The 35 whole process is carried on by certain forces; you may call them 36 vital forces; in Sanskrit they are called Prana. This gross part of 37 man, this body, in which are the external instruments, is called in 38 Sanskrit, Sthula Sharira, the gross body; behind it comes the series, 39 beginning with the organs, the mind, the intellect, the egoism.
40 These and the vital forces form a compound which is called the fine 41 body, the Sukshma Sharira. These forces are composed of very fine 42 elements, so fine that no amount of injury to this body can destroy 43 them; they survive all the shocks given to this body. The gross body 44 we see is composed of gross material, and as such it is always being 45 renewed and changing continuously. But the internal organs, the 46 mind, the intellect, and the egoism are composed of the finest 47 material, so fine that they will endure for aeons and aeons. They are 48 so fine that they cannot be resisted by anything; they can get 49 through any obstruction. The gross body is non-intelligent, so is the 50 fine, being composed of fine matter. Although one part is called 51 mind, another the intellect, and the third egoism, yet we see at a 52 glance that no one of them can be the "Knower". None of them can 53 be the perceiver, the witness, the one for whom action is made, and

1 who is the seer of the action. All these movements in the mind, or 2 the faculty of intellection, or egoism, must be for some one else.
3 These being composed of fine matter cannot be self-effulgent. Their 4 luminosity cannot be in themselves. This manifestation of the table, 5 for instance, cannot be due to any material thing. Therefore there 6 must be some one behind them all, who is the real manifestor, the 7 real seer, the real enjoyer and He in Sanskrit is called the Atman, 8 the Soul of man, the real Self of man. He it is who really sees 9 things. The external instruments and the organs catch the 10 impressions and convey them to the mind, and the mind to the 11 intellect, and the intellect reflects them as on a mirror, and back of 12 it is the Soul that looks on them and gives His orders and His 13 directions. He is the ruler of all these instruments, the master in 14 the house, the enthroned king in the body. The faculty of egoism, 15 the faculty of intellection, the faculty of cognition, the organs, the 16 instruments, the body, all of them obey His commands. It is He who 17 is manifesting all of these. This is the Atman of man. Similarly, we 18 can see that what is in a small part of the universe must also be in 19 the whole universe. If conformity is the law of the universe, every 20 part of the universe must have been built on the same plan as the 21 whole. So we naturally think that behind the gross material form 22 which we call this universe of ours, there must be universe of finer 23 matter, which we call thought, and behind that there must be a 24 Soul, which makes all this thought possible, which commands, 25 which is the enthroned king of this universe. That soul which is 26 behind each mind and each body is called Pratyagatman, the 27 individual Atman, and that Soul which is behind the universe as its 28 guide, ruler, and governor, is God.

1 The next thing to consider is whence all these things come.
2 The answer is: What is meant by coming? If it means that 3 something can be produced out of nothing, it is impossible. All this 4 creation, manifestation, cannot be produced out of zero. Nothing 5 can be produced without a cause, and the effect is but the cause 6 reproduced. Here is a glass. Suppose we break it to pieces and 7 pulverise it, and by means of chemicals almost annihilate it. Will it 8 go back to zero? Certainly not. The form will break, but the 9 particles of which it is made will be there; they will go beyond our 10 senses, but they remain, and it is quite possible that out of these 11 materials another glass may be made. If this is true in one case, it 12 will be so in every case. Something cannot be made out of nothing.
13 Nor can something be made to go back to nothing. It may become 14 finer and finer, and then again grosser and grosser. The raindrop is 15 drawn from the ocean in the form of vapour, and drifts away 16 through the air to the mountains; there it changes again into water 17 and flows back through hundreds of miles down to the mother 18 ocean. The seed produces the tree. The tree dies, leaving only the 19 seed. Again it comes up as another tree, which again ends in the 20 seed, and so on. Look at a bird, how from the egg it springs, 21 becomes a beautiful bird, lives its life and then dies, leaving only 22 other eggs, containing germs of future birds. So with the animals; 23 so with men. Everything begins, as it were, from certain seeds, 24 certain rudiments, certain fine forms, and becomes grosser and 25 grosser as it develops; and then again it goes back to that fine form 26 and subsides. The whole universe is going on in this way. There 27 comes a time when this whole universe melts down and becomes 28 finer and at last disappears entirely, as it were, but remains as 29 superfine matter. We know through modern science and astronomy 30 that this earth is cooling down, and in course of time it will become 31 very cold, and then it will break to pieces and become finer and 32 finer until it becomes ether once more. Yet the particles will all 33 remain to form the material out of which another earth will be 34 projected. Again that will disappear, and another will come out. So 35 this universe will go back to its causes, and again its materials will 36 come together and take form, like the wave that goes down, rises 37 again, and takes shape. The acts of going back to causes and 38 coming out again, taking form, are called in Sanskrit Sankocha and 39 Vikasha, which mean shrinking and expanding. The whole universe, 40 as it were, shrinks, and then it expands again. To use the more 41 accepted words of modern science, they are involved and evolved.
42 You hear about evolution, how all forms grow from lower ones, 43 slowly growing up and up. This is very true, but each evolution 44 presupposes an involution. We know that the sum total of energy 45 that is displayed in the universe is the same at all times, and that 46 matter is indestructible. By no means can you take away one 47 particle of matter. You cannot take away a foot-pound of energy or 48 add one. The sum total is the same always. Only the manifestation 49 varies, being involved and evolved. So this cycle is the evolution out 50 of the involution of the previous cycle, and this cycle will again be 51 involved, getting finer and finer, and out of that will come the next 52 cycle. The whole universe is going on in this fashion. Thus we find 53 that there is no creation in the sense that something is created out

1 of nothing. To use a better word, there is manifestation, and God is 2 the manifester of the universe. The universe, as it were, is being 3 breathed out of Him, and again it shrinks into Him, and again He 4 throws it out. A most beautiful simile is given in the Vedas--"That 5 eternal One breathes out this universe and breathes it in." Just as 6 we can breathe out a little particle of dust and breathe it in again.
7 That is all very good, but the question may be asked: How was it at 8 the first cycle? The answer is: What is the meaning of a first cycle?
9 There was none. If you can give a beginning to time, the whole 10 concept of time will be destroyed. Try to think of a limit where time 11 began, you have to think of time beyond that limit. Try to think 12 where space begins, you will have to think of space beyond that.
13 Time and space are infinite, and therefore have neither beginning 14 nor end. This is a better idea than that God created the universe in 15 five minutes and then went to sleep, and since then has been 16 sleeping.

17 On the other hand, this idea will give us God as the Eternal 18 Creator. Here is a series of waves rising and falling, and God is 19 directing this eternal process. As the universe is without beginning 20 and without end, so is God. We see that it must necessarily be so, 21 because if we say there was a time when there was no creation, 22 either in a gross or a fine form, then there was no God, because 23 God is known to us as Sakshi, the Witness of the universe. When 24 the universe did not exist, neither did He. One concept follows the 25 other. The idea of the cause we get from the idea of the effect, and 26 if there is no effect, there will be no cause. It naturally follows that 27 as the universe is eternal, God is eternal.

28 The soul must also be eternal. Why? In the first place we see 29 that the soul is not matter. It is neither a gross body, nor a fine body, 30 which we call mind or thought. It is neither a physical body, nor 31 what in Christianity is called a spiritual body. It is the gross body 32 and the spiritual body that are liable to change. The gross body is 33 liable to change almost every minute and dies, but the spiritual 34 body endures through long periods, until one becomes free, when it 35 also falls away. When a man becomes free, the spiritual body 36 disperses. The gross body disintegrates every time a man dies. The 37 soul not being made of any particles must be indestructible. What 38 do we mean by destruction? Destruction is disintegration of the 39 materials out of which anything is composed. If this glass is broken 40 into pieces, the materials will disintegrate, and that will be the 41 destruction of the glass. Disintegration of particles is what we mean 42 by destruction. It naturally follows that nothing that is not 43 composed of particles can be destroyed, can ever be disintegrated.
44 The soul is not composed of any materials. It is unity indivisible.
45 Therefore it must be indestructible. For the same reasons it must 46 also be without any beginning. So the soul is without any beginning 47 and end.

48 We have three entities. Here is nature which is infinite, but 49 changeful. The whole of nature is without beginning and end, but 50 within it are multifarious changes. It is like a river that runs down 51 to the sea for thousands of years. It is the same river always, but it 52 is changing every minute, the particles of water are changing their

1 position constantly. Then there is God, unchangeable, the ruler; and 2 there is the soul unchangeable as God, eternal but under the ruler.
3 One is the master, the other the servant, and the third one is 4 nature.

5 God being the cause of the projection, the continuance, and 6 the dissolution of the universe, the cause must be present to 7 produce the effect. Not only so, the cause becomes the effect. Glass 8 is produced out of certain materials and certain forces used by the 9 manufacturer. In the glass there are those forces plus the materials.
10 The forces used have become the force of adhesion, and if that 11 force goes, the glass will fall to pieces; the materials also are 12 undoubtedly in the glass. Only their form is changed. The cause has 13 become the effect. Wherever you see an effect you can always 14 analyse it into a cause, the cause manifests itself as the effect. It 15 follows, if God is the cause of the universe, and the universe is the 16 effect, that God has become the universe. If souls are the effect, 17 and God the cause, God has become the souls. Each soul, therefore, 18 is a part of God. "As from a mass of fire an infinite number of sparks 19 fly, even so from the Eternal One all this universe of souls has come 20 out."

21 We have seen that there is the eternal God, and there is 22 eternal nature. And there is also an infinite number of eternal souls.
23 This is the first stage in religion, it is called dualism, the stage when 24 man sees himself and God eternally separate, when God is a 25 separate entity by Himself and man is a separate entity by himself 26 and nature is a separate entity by itself. This is dualism, which 27 holds that the subject and the object are opposed to each other in 28 everything. When man looks at nature, he is the subject and nature 29 the object. He sees the dualism between subject and object. When 30 he looks at God, he sees God as the object and himself as the 31 subject. They are entirely separate. This is the dualism between 32 man and God. This is generally the first view of religion.

33 Then comes another view which I have just shown to you.
34 Man begins to find out that if God is the cause of the universe and 35 the universe the effect, God Himself must have become the 36 universe and the souls, and he is but a particle of which God is the 37 whole. We are but little beings, sparks of that mass of fire, and the 38 whole universe is a manifestation of God Himself. This is the next 39 step. In Sanskrit, it is called Vishishtadvaita. Just as I have this body 40 and this body covers the soul, and the soul is in and through this 41 body, so this whole universe of infinite souls and nature forms, as it 42 were, the body of God. When the period of involution comes, the 43 universe becomes finer and finer, yet remains the body of God.
44 When the gross manifestation comes, then also the universe 45 remains the body of God. Just as the human soul is the soul of the 46 human body and mind, so God is the Soul of our souls. All of you 47 have heard this expression in every religion, "Soul of our souls".
48 That is what is meant by it. He, as it were, resides in them, guides 49 them, is the ruler of them all. In the first view, that of dualism, each 50 one of us is an individual, eternally separate from God and nature.
51 In the second view, we are individuals, but not separate from God.
52 We are like little particles floating in one mass, and that mass is

1 God. We are individuals but one in God. We are all in Him. We are 2 all parts of Him, and therefore we are One. And yet between man 3 and man, man and God, there is a strict individuality, separate and 4 yet not separate.

5 Then comes a still finer question. The question is: Can infinity 6 have parts? What is meant by parts of infinity? If you reason it out, 7 you will find that it is impossible. Infinity cannot be divided, it 8 always remains infinite. If it could be divided, each part would be 9 infinite. And there cannot be two infinities. Suppose there were, one 10 would limit the other, and both would be finite. Infinity can only be 11 one, undivided. Thus the conclusion will be reached that the infinite 12 is one and not many, and that one Infinite Soul is reflecting itself 13 through thousands and thousands of mirrors, appearing as so many 14 different souls. It is the same Infinite Soul, which is the background 15 of the universe, that we call God. The same Infinite Soul also is the 16 background of the human mind which we call the human soul.

COSMOLOGY

There are two worlds, the microcosm, and the macrocosm, the internal and the external. We get truth from both of these by means of experience. The truth gathered from internal experience is psychology, metaphysics, and religion; from external experience, the physical sciences. Now a perfect truth should be in harmony with experiences in both these worlds. The microcosm must bear testimony to the macrocosm, and the macrocosm to the microcosm; physical truth must have its counterpart in the internal world, and the internal world must have its verification outside. Yet, as a rule, we find that many of these truths are in conflict. At one period of the world's history, the internals become supreme, and they begin to fight the externals. At the present time the externals, the physicists, have become supreme, and they have put down many claims of psychologists and metaphysicians. So far as my knowledge goes, I find that the real, essential parts of psychology are in perfect accord with the essential parts of modern physical knowledge. It is not given to one individual to be great in every respect; it is not given to one race or nation to be equally strong in the research of all fields of knowledge. The modern European nations are very strong in their research of external physical knowledge, but they are not so strong in their study of the inner nature of man. On the other hand, the Orientals have not been very strong in their researches of the external physical world, but very strong in their researches of the internal. Therefore we find that Oriental physics and other sciences are not in accordance with Occidental Science; nor is Occidental psychology in harmony with Oriental psychology. The Oriental physicists have been routed by Occidental scientists. At the same time, each claims to rest on truth; and as we stated before, real truth in any field of knowledge will not contradict itself; the truths internal are in harmony with the truths external.

We all know the theories of the cosmos according to the modern astronomers and physicists; and at the same time we all know how woefully they undermine the theology of Europe, how these scientific discoveries that are made act as a bomb thrown at its stronghold; and we know how theologians have in all times attempted to put down these researches.

1 I want here to go over the psychological ideas of the Orientals 2 about cosmology and all that pertains to it, and you will find how 3 wonderfully they are in accordance with the latest discoveries of 4 modern science; and where there is disharmony, you will find that it 5 is modern science which lacks and not they. We all use the word 6 nature. The old Sankhya philosophers called it by two different 7 names, Prakriti, which is very much the same as the word nature, 8 and the more scientific name, Avyakta, undifferentiated, from which 9 everything proceeds, such as atoms, molecules, and forces, mind, 10 thought, intelligence. It is startling to find that the philosophers and 11 metaphysicians of India stated ages ago that mind is material. What 12 are our present materialists trying to do, but to show that mind is 13 as much a product of nature as the body? And so is thought, and, 14 we shall find by and by, intelligence also: all issue from that nature 15 which is called Avyakta, the undifferentiated. The Sankhyas define 16 it as the equilibrium of three forces, one of which is called Sattva, 17 another Rajas, and the third Tamas. Tamas, the lowest force, is that 18 of attraction; a little higher is Rajas, that of repulsion; and the 19 highest is the balance of these two, Sattva; so that when these two 20 forces, attraction and repulsion, are held in perfect control by the 21 Sattva there is no creation, no movement in the world. As soon as 22 this equilibrium is lost, the balance is disturbed, and one of these 23 forces gets stronger than the other, motion sets in, and creation 24 begins. This state of things goes on cyclically, periodically. That is to 25 say, there is a period of disturbance of the balance, when forces 26 begin to combine and recombine, and things project outwards. At 27 the same time, everything has a tendency to go back to the primal 28 state of equilibrium, and the time comes when that total 29 annihilation of all manifestation is reached. Again, after a period, 30 the whole thing is disturbed, projected outwards, and again it 31 slowly goes down--like waves. All motion, everything in this 32 universe, can be likened to waves undergoing successive rise and 33 fall. Some of these philosophers hold that the whole universe quiets 34 down for a period. Others hold that this quieting down applies only 35 to systems; that is to say, that while our system here, this solar 36 system, will quiet down and go back into the undifferentiated state, 37 millions of other systems will go the other way, and will project 38 outwards. I should favor the second opinion, that this quieting down 39 is not simultaneous over the whole of the universe, and that in 40 different parts different things go on. But the principle remains the 41 same, that all we see--that is, nature herself--is progressing in 42 successive rises and falls. The one stage, falling down, going back 43 to balance, the perfect equilibrium, is called Pralaya, the end of a 44 cycle. The projection and the Pralaya of the universe have been 45 compared by theistical writers in India to the outbreathing and 46 inbreathing of God; God, as it were, breathes out the universe, and 47 it comes into Him again. When it quiets down, what becomes of the 48 universe? It exists, only in finer forms, in the form of cause, as it is 49 called in the Sankhya philosophy. It does not get rid of causation, 50 time, and space; they are there, only it comes to very fine and 51 minute forms. Supposing that this whole universe begins to shrink, 52 till every one of us becomes just a little molecule, we should not feel 53 the change at all, because everything relating to us would be

1 shrinking at the same time. The whole thing goes down, and again 2 projects out, the cause brings out the effect, and so it goes on.

3 What we call matter in modern times was called by the 4 ancient psychologists Bhutas, the external elements. There is one 5 element which, according to them, is eternal; every other element 6 is produced out of this one. It is called Akasha. It is somewhat 7 similar to the idea of ether of the moderns, though not exactly 8 similar. Along with this element, there is the primal energy called 9 Prana. Prana and Akasha combine and recombine and form the 10 elements out of them. Then at the end of the Kalpa everything 11 subsides, and goes back to Akasha and Prana. There is in the Rig-12 Veda, the oldest human writing in existence, a beautiful passage 13 describing creation, and it is most poetical--"When there was 14 neither aught nor naught, when darkness was rolling over 15 darkness, what existed?" and the answer is given, "It then existed 16 without vibration". This Prana existed then, but there was no 17 motion in it; Anidavatam means "existed without vibration".
18 Vibration had stopped. Then when the Kalpa begins, after an 19 immense interval, the Anidavatam (unvibrating atom) commences 20 to vibrate, and blow after blow is given by Prana to Akasha. The 21 atoms become condensed, and as they are condensed different 22 elements are formed. We generally find these things very curiously 23 translated; people do not go to the philosophers or the 24 commentators for their translation, and have not the brains to 25 understand them themselves. A silly man reads three letters of 26 Sanskrit and translates a whole book. They translate the elements 27 as air, fire, and so on; if they would go to the commentators, they 28 would find they do not mean air or anything of that sort.

1 The Akasha, acted upon by the repeated blows of Prana,
2 produces Vayu or vibrations. This Vayu vibrates, and the vibrations 3 growing more and more rapid result in friction giving rise to heat, 4 Tejas. Then this heat ends in liquefaction, Apah. Then that liquid
5 becomes solid. We had ether, and motion, then came heat, then it 6 became liquefied, and then it condensed into gross matter; and it 7 goes back in exactly the reverse way. The solid will be liquefied and 8 will then be converted into a mass of heat, and that will slowly get 9 back into motion; that motion will stop, and this Kalpa will be 10 destroyed. Then, again it will come back and again dissolve into 11 ether. Prana cannot work alone without the help of Akasha. All that 12 we know in the form of motion, vibration, or thought is a 13 modification of the Prana, and everything that we know in the 14 shape of matter, either as form or as resistance, is a modification of 15 the Akasha. The Prana cannot live alone, or act without a medium; 16 when it is pure Prana, it has the Akasha itself to live in, and when it 17 changes into forces of nature, say gravitation, or centrifugal force, 18 it must have matter. You have never seen force without matter or 19 matter without force; what we call force and matter are simply the 20 gross manifestations of these same things, which, when superfine, 21 are called Prana and Akasha. Prana you can call in English life, the 22 vital force; but you must not restrict it to the life of man; at the 23 same time you must not identify it with Spirit, Atman. So this goes 24 on. Creation cannot have either a beginning or an end; it is an 25 eternal on-going.

26 We shall state another position of these old psychologists, 27 which is that all gross things are the results of fine ones. Everything 28 that is gross is composed of fine things, which they call the 29 Tanmatras, the fine particles. I smell a flower. To smell, something 30 must come in contact with my nose; the flower is there, but I do not 31 see it move towards me. That which comes from the flower and in 32 contact with my nose is called the Tanmatra, fine molecules of that 33 flower. So with heat, light and everything. These Tanmatras can 34 again be subdivided into atoms. Different philosophers have 35 different theories, and we know these are only theories. It is 36 sufficient for our purpose to know that everything gross is 37 composed of things that are very, very fine. We first get the gross 38 elements which we feel externally, and then come the fine elements 39 with which the nose, eyes, and ears come in contact. Ether waves 40 touch my eyes; I cannot see them, yet I know they must come in 41 contact with my eyes before I can see light.

42 Here are the eyes, but the eyes do not see. Take away the 43 brain centre; the eyes will still be there, as also the picture of the 44 outside world complete on the retinae; yet the eyes will not see. So 45 the eyes are only a secondary instrument, not the organ of vision.
46 The organ of vision is the nerve-centre in the brain. Likewise the 47 nose is an instrument, and there is an organ behind it. The senses 48 are simply the external instruments. It may be said that these 49 different organs, Indriyas, as they are called in Sanskrit, are the 50 real seats of perception.

51 It is necessary for the mind to be joined to an organ to 52 perceive. It is a common experience that we do not hear the clock

1 strike when we happen to be buried in study. Why? The ear was 2 there, the sound was carried through it to the brain; yet it was not 3 heard, because the mind did not attach itself to the organ of 4 hearing.

5 There is a different organ for each different instrument. For, if 6 one served for all, we should find that when the mind joined itself to 7 it, all the senses would be equally active. But it is not so, as we have 8 seen from the instance of the clock. If there was only one organ for 9 all the instruments, the mind would see and hear at the same time, 10 would see and hear and smell at the same time, and it would be 11 impossible for it not to do all these at one and the same time.
12 Therefore it is necessary that there should be a separate organ for 13 each sense. This has been borne out by modern physiology. It is 14 certainly possible for us to hear and see at the same time, but that 15 is because the mind attaches itself partially to the two centres.

16 What are the organs made of? We see that the instruments-- 17 eyes, nose, and ears--are made of gross materials. The organs are 18 also made of matter. Just as the body is composed of gross 19 materials, and manufactures Prana into different gross forces, so 20 the organs are composed of the fine elements, Akasha, Vayu, Tejas, 21 etc., and manufacture Prana into the finer forces of perception. The 22 organs, the Prana functions, the mind and the Buddhi combined, 23 are called the finer body of man--the Linga or Sukshma Sharira. The 24 Linga Sharira has a real form because everything material must 25 have a form.

26 The mind is called the Manas, the Chitta in Vritti or vibrating, 27 the unsettled state. If you throw a stone in a lake, first there will be 28 vibration, and then resistance. For a moment the water will vibrate 29 and then it will react on the stone. So when any impression comes 30 on the Chitta, it first vibrates a little. That is called the Manas. The 31 mind carries the impression farther in, and presents it to the 32 determinative faculty, Buddhi, which reacts. Behind Buddhi is 33 Ahamkara, egoism, the self-consciousness which says, "I am".
34 Behind Ahamkara is Mahat, intelligence, the highest form of 35 nature's existence. Each one is the effect of the succeeding one. In 36 the case of the lake, every blow that comes to it is from the external 37 world, while in the case of the mind, the blow may come either from 38 the external or the internal world. Behind the intelligence is the 39 Self of man, the Purusha, the Atman, the pure, the perfect, who 40 alone is the seer, and for whom is all this change.

41 Man looks on all these changes; he himself is never impure; 42 but through what the Vedantists call Adhyasa, by reflection, by 43 implication, he seems to be impure. It is like the appearance of a 44 crystal when a red or a blue flower is brought before it: the colour 45 is reflected on it, but the crystal itself is pure. We shall take it for 46 granted that there are many selves, and each self is pure and 47 perfect; various kinds of gross and fine matter superimpose 48 themselves on the self and make it multicoloured. Why does nature 49 do all this? Nature is undergoing all these changes for the 50 development of the soul; all this creation is for the benefit of the 51 soul, so that it may be free. This immense book which we call the 52 universe is stretched out before man so that he may read: and he

1 discovers eventually that he is an omniscient and omnipotent being.
2 I must here tell you that some of our best psychologists do not 3 believe in God in the sense in which you believe in Him. The father 4 of our psychology, Kapila, denies the existence of God. His idea is 5 that a Personal God is quite unnecessary; nature itself is sufficient 6 to work out the whole of creation. What is called the Design Theory, 7 he knocked on the head, and said that a more childish theory was 8 never advanced. But he admits a peculiar kind of God. He says we 9 are all struggling to get free; and when we become free, we can, as 10 it were, melt away into nature, only to come out at the beginning of 11 the next cycle and be its ruler. We come out omniscient and 12 omnipotent beings. In that sense we can be called Gods: you and I 13 and the humblest beings can be Gods in different cycles. He says 14 such a God will be temporal; but an eternal God, eternally 15 omnipotent and ruler of the universe, cannot be. If there was such a 16 God, there would be this difficulty: He must be either a bound spirit 17 or a free one. A God who is perfectly free would not create; there is 18 no necessity for it. If He were bound, He would not create, because 19 He could not: He would be powerless. In either case, there cannot 20 be any omniscient or omnipotent eternal ruler. In our scriptures, 21 wherever the word God is mentioned, he says, it means those 22 human beings who have become free.

23 Kapila does not believe in the unity of all souls. His analysis, 24 so far as it goes, is simply marvellous. He is the father of Indian 25 thinkers; Buddhism and other systems are the outcome of his 26 thought.

27 According to his psychology, all souls can regain their 28 freedom and their natural rights, which are omnipotence and 29 omniscience. But the question arises: Where is this bondage?
30 Kapila says it is without beginning. But if it is without beginning, it 31 must be without end, and we shall never be free. He says that 32 though bondage is without beginning, it is not of that constant 33 uniform character as the soul is. In other words, nature (the cause 34 of bondage) is without beginning and end, but not in the same 35 sense as soul, because nature has no individuality; it is like a river 36 which gets a fresh body of water every moment; the sum total of 37 these bodies of water is the river, but the river is not a constant 38 quantity. Everything in nature is constantly changing, but the soul 39 never changes; so, as nature is always changing, it is possible for 40 the soul to come out of its bondage.

41 The whole of the universe is built upon the same plan as a 42 part of it. So, just as I have a mind, there is a cosmic mind. As in the 43 individual, so in the universal. There is the universal gross body; 44 behind that, a universal fine body; behind that, a universal mind; 45 behind that, a universal egoism, or consciousness; and behind that, 46 a universal intelligence. And all this is in nature, the manifestation 47 of nature, not outside of it.

48 We have gross bodies from our parents, as also our 49 consciousness. Strict heredity says my body is a part of my parents' 50 bodies, the material of my consciousness and egoism is a part of my 51 parents'. We can add to the little portion inherited from our parents 52 by drawing upon the universal consciousness. There is an infinite

1 store-house of intelligence out of which we draw what we require; 2 there is an infinite storehouse of mental force in the universe out of 3 which we are drawing eternally; but the seed must come from the 4 parents. Our theory is heredity coupled with reincarnation. By the 5 law of heredity, the reincarnating soul receives from parents the 6 material out of which to manufacture a man.

7 Some of the European philosophers have asserted that this 8 world exists because I exist; and if I do not exist, the world will not 9 exist. Sometimes it is stated thus: If all people in the world were to 10 die, and there were no more human beings, and no animals with 11 powers of perception and intelligence, all these manifestations 12 would disappear. But these European philosophers do not know the 13 psychology of it, although they know the principle; modern 14 philosophy has got only a glimpse of it. This becomes easy of 15 understanding when looked at from the Sankhya point of view.
16 According to Sankhya, it is impossible for anything to be, which has 17 not as its material some portion of my mind. I do not know this table 18 as it is. An impression from it comes to the eyes, then to the 19 Indriya, and then to the mind; and the mind reacts, and that 20 reaction is what I call the table. It is just the same as throwing a 21 stone in a lake; the lake throws a wave towards the stone; this wave 22 is what we know. What is external nobody knows; when I try to 23 know it, it has to become that material which I furnish. I, with my 24 own mind, have furnished the material for my eyes. There is 25 something which is outside, which is only the occasion, the 26 suggestion, and upon that suggestion I project my mind; and it 27 takes the form that I see. How do we all see the same things?
28 Because we all have similar parts of the cosmic mind. Those who 29 have like minds will see like things, and those who have not will not 30 see alike.

A STUDY OF THE SANKHYA PHILOSOPHY

Prakriti is called by the Sankhya philosophers indiscrete, and defined as the perfect balance of the materials in it; and it naturally follows that in perfect balance there cannot be any motion. In the primal state before any manifestation, when there was no motion but perfect balance, this Prakriti was indestructible, because decomposition or death comes from instability or change. Again, according to the Sankhya, atoms are not the primal state. This universe does not come out of atoms: they may be the secondary or the tertiary state. The primordial material may form into atoms and become grosser and bigger things; and as far as modern investigations go, they rather point towards the same conclusion. For instance, in the modern theory of ether, if you say ether is atomic, it will not solve anything. To make it clearer, say that air is composed of atoms, and we know that ether is everywhere, interpenetrating, omnipresent, and that these air atoms are floating, as it were, in ether. If ether again be composed of atoms, there will still be spaces between every two atoms of ether. What fills up these? If you suppose that there is another ether still finer which does this, there will again be other spaces between the atoms of that finer ether which require filling up, and so it will be regressus ad infinitum, what the Sankhya philosophers call the "cause leading to nothing". So the atomic theory cannot be final. According to Sankhya, nature is omnipresent, one omnipresent mass of nature, in which are the causes of everything that exists. What is meant by cause? Cause is the fine state of the manifested state; the unmanifested state of that which becomes manifested. What do you mean by destruction? It is reverting to the cause. If you have a piece of pottery and give it a blow, it is destroyed. What is meant by that is that the effects go back to their own nature, the materials out of which the pottery was created go back into their original state. Beyond this idea of destruction, any idea such as annihilation is on the face of it absurd. According to modern physical science, it can be demonstrated that all destruction means that which Kapila said ages ago--simply reverting to the cause. Going back to the finer form is all that is meant by destruction. You know how it can be demonstrated in a laboratory that matter is indestructible. At this present stage of our knowledge, if any man stands up and says that matter or this soul becomes annihilated, he is only making himself ridiculous; it is only uneducated, silly people who would advance such a proposition; and it is curious that modern knowledge coincides with what those old philosophers taught. It must be so, and that is the proof of truth. They proceeded in their inquiry taking up mind as the basis; they analysed the mental part of this universe and came to certain conclusions, which we, analysing the physical part, must come to, for they both must lead to the same centre.

You must remember that the first manifestation of this Prakriti in the cosmos is what the Sankhya calls "Mahat". We may

1 call it intelligence--the great principle, its literal meaning. The first 2 change in Prakriti is this intelligence; I would not translate it by 3 self-consciousness, because that would be wrong. Consciousness is 4 only a part of this intelligence. Mahat is universal. It covers all the 5 grounds of sub-consciousness, consciousness, and super-6 consciousness; so any one state of consciousness, as applied to this 7 Mahat, would not be sufficient. In nature, for instance, you note 8 certain changes going on before your eyes which you see and 9 understand, but there are other changes, so much finer, that no 10 human perception can catch them.

1 They are from the same cause, the same Mahat is making
2 these changes. Out of Mahat comes universal egoism. These are all 3 substance. There is no difference between matter and mind, except 4 in degree. The substance is the same in finer or grosser form; one 5 changes into the other, and this exactly coincides with the 6 conclusions of modern physiological research. By believing in the 7 teaching that the mind is not separate from the brain, you will be 8 saved from much fighting and struggling. Egoism again changes 9 into two varieties. In one variety it changes into the organs. Organs 10 are of two kinds, organs of sensation and organs of reaction. They 11 are not the eyes or the ears, but back of those are what you call 12 brain-centres, and nerve-centres, and so on. This egoism, this 13 matter or substance, becomes changed, and out of this material are 14 manufactured these centres. Of the same substance is 15 manufactured the other variety, the Tanmantras, fine particles of 16 matter, which strike our organs of perception and bring about 17 sensations. You cannot perceive them but only know they are there.
18 Out of the Tanmatras is manufactured the gross matter-earth, 19 water, and all the things that we see and feel. I want to impress this 20 on your mind. It is very hard to grasp it, because in Western 21 countries the ideas are so queer about mind and matter. It is hard 22 to get those impressions out of our brains. I myself had a 23 tremendous difficulty, being educated in Western philosophy in my 24 boyhood. These are all cosmic things. Think of this universal 25 extension of matter, unbroken, one substance, undifferentiated, 26 which is the first state of everything, and which begins to change in 27 the same way as milk becomes curd. This first change is called 28 Mahat. The substance Mahat changes into the grosser matter 29 called egoism. The third change is manifested as universal sense-30 organs, and universal fine particles, and these last again combine 31 and become this gross universe which with eyes, nose, and ears, we 32 see, smell and hear. This is the cosmic plan according to the 33 Sankhya, and what is in the cosmos must also be micro-cosmic.
34 Take an individual man. He has first a part of undifferentiated 35 nature in him, and that material nature in him becomes changed 36 into this Mahat, a small particle of this universal intelligence, and 37 this particle of universal intelligence in him becomes changed into 38 egoism, and then into sense-organs and the fine particles of matter 39 which combine and manufacture his body. I want this to be clear, 40 because it is the stepping-stone to Sankhya, and it is absolutely 41 necessary for you to understand it, because this is the basis of the 42 philosophy of the whole world. There is no philosophy in the world 43 that is not indebted to Kapila. Pythagoras came to India and studied 44 this philosophy, and that was the beginning of the philosophy of the 45 Greeks. Later, it formed the Alexandrian school, and still later, the 46 Gnostic. It became divided into two; one part went to Europe and 47 Alexandria, and the other remained in India; and out of this, the 48 system of Vyasa was developed. The Sankhya philosophy of Kapila 49 was the first rational system that the world ever saw. Every 50 metaphysician in the world must pay homage to him. I want to 51 impress on your mind that we are bound to listen to him as the 52 great father of philosophy. This wonderful man, the most ancient of 53 philosophers, is mentioned even in the Shruti: "O Lord, Thou who 1 produced the sage Kapila in the beginning." How wonderful his 2 perceptions were, and if there is any proof required of the 3 extraordinary power of the perception of Yogis, such men are the 4 proof. They had no microscopes or telescopes. Yet how fine their 5 perception was, how perfect and wonderful their analysis of things!

6 I will here point out the difference between Schopenhauer 7 and the Indian philosophy. Schopenhauer says that desire, or will, is 8 the cause of everything. It is the will to exist that makes us 9 manifest, but we deny this.

10 The will is identical with the motor nerves. When I see an 11 object there is no will; when its sensations are carried to the brain, 12 there comes the reaction, which says "Do this", or "Do not do this", 13 and this state of the ego-substance is what is called will. There 14 cannot be a single particle of will which is not a reaction. So many 15 things precede will. It is only a manufactured something out of the 16 ego, and the ego is a manufacture of something still higher--the 17 intelligence--and that again is a modification of the indiscrete 18 nature. That was the Buddhistic idea, that whatever we see is the 19 will. It is psychologically entirely wrong, because will can only be 20 identified with the motor nerves. If you take out the motor nerves, a 21 man has no will whatever. This fact, as is perhaps well known to 22 you, has been found out after a long series of experiments made 23 with the lower animals.

24 We will take up this question. It is very important to 25 understand this question of Mahat in man, the great principle, the 26 intelligence. This intelligence itself is modified into what we call 27 egoism, and this intelligence is the cause of all the powers in the 28 body. It covers the whole ground, sub-consciousness, 29 consciousness, and super-consciousness. What are these three 30 states? The sub-conscious state we find in animals, which we call 31 instinct. This is almost infallible, but very limited. Instinct rarely 32 fails. An animal almost instinctively knows a poisonous herb from 33 an edible one, but its instinct is very limited. As soon as something 34 new comes, it is blind. It works like a machine. Then comes a higher 35 state of knowledge which is fallible and makes mistakes often, but 36 has a larger scope, although it is slow, and this you call reason. It is 37 much larger than instinct, but instinct is surer than reason. There 38 are more chances of mistakes in reasoning than in instinct. There is 39 a still higher state of the mind, the super-conscious, which belongs 40 only to Yogis, to men who have cultivated it. This is infallible and 41 much more unlimited in its scope than reason. This is the highest 42 state. So we must remember, this Mahat is the real cause of all that 43 is here, that which manifests itself in various ways, covers the 44 whole ground of sub-conscious, conscious, and super-conscious, the 45 three states in which knowledge exists.

46 Now comes a delicate question which is being always asked.
47 If a perfect God created the universe, why is there imperfection in 48 it? What we call the universe is what we see, and that is only this 49 little plane of consciousness and reason; beyond that we do not see 50 at all. Now the very question is an impossible one. If I take only a 51 small portion out of a mass of something and look at it, it seems to 52 be inharmonious. Naturally. The universe is inharmonious because 1 we make it so. How? What is reason? What is knowledge?

2 Knowledge is finding the association about things. You go into the 3 street and see a man and say, I know this is a man; because you
4 remember the impressions on your mind, the marks on the Chitta.
5 You have seen many men, and each one has made an impression on 6 your mind; and as you see this man, you refer this to your store and 7 see many similar pictures there; and when you see them, you are 8 satisfied, and you put this new one with the rest. When a new 9 impression comes and it has associations in your mind, you are 10 satisfied; and this state of association is called knowledge.
11 Knowledge is, therefore, pigeon-holing one experience with the 12 already existing fund of experience, and this is one of the great 13 proofs of the fact that you cannot have any knowledge until you 14 have already a fund in existence. If you are without experience, as 15 some European philosophers think, and that your mind is a tabula 16 rasa to begin with, you cannot get any knowledge, because the 17 very fact of knowledge is the recognition of the new by means of 18 associations already existing in the mind. There must be a store at 19 hand to which to refer a new impression. Suppose a child is born 20 into this world without such a fund, it would be impossible for him 21 ever to get any knowledge. Therefore, the child must have been 22 previously in a state in which he had a fund, and so knowledge is 23 eternally increasing. Show me a way of getting round this 24 argument. It is a mathematical fact. Some Western schools of 25 philosophy also hold that there cannot be knowledge without a fund 26 of past knowledge. They have framed the idea that the child is born 27 with knowledge. These Western philosophers say that the 28 impressions with which the child comes into the world are not due 29 to the child's past, but to the experiences of his forefathers: it is 30 only hereditary transmission. Soon they will find out that this idea is 31 all wrong; some German philosophers are now giving hard blows to 32 these heredity ideas. Heredity is very good, but incomplete, it only 33 explains the physical side. How do you explain the environments 34 influencing us? Many causes produce one effect. Environment is 35 one of the modifying effects. We make our own environment; as our 36 past is, so we find the present environment. A drunken man 37 naturally gravitates to the lowest slums of the city.

38 You understand what is meant by knowledge. Knowledge is 39 pigeon-holing a new impression with old ones, recognising a new 40 impression. What is meant by recognition? Finding associations 41 with similar impressions that one already has. Nothing further is 42 meant by knowledge. If that is the case, if knowledge means finding 43 the associations, then it must be that to know anything we have to 44 see the whole series of its similars. Is it not so? Suppose you take a 45 pebble; to find the association, you have to see the whole series of 46 pebbles similar to it. But with our perception of the universe as a 47 whole we cannot do that, because in the pigeon-hole of our mind 48 there is only one single record of the perception, we have no other 49 perception of the same nature or class, we cannot compare it with 50 any other. We cannot refer it to its associations. This bit of the 51 universe, cut off by our consciousness, is a startling new thing, 52 because we have not been able to find its associations. Therefore, 53 we are struggling with it, and thinking it horrible, wicked, and bad;

1 we may sometimes think it is good, but we always think it is 2 imperfect. It is only when we find its associations that the universe 3 can be known. We shall recognise it when we go beyond the 4 universe and consciousness, and then the universe will stand 5 explained. Until we can do that, all the knocking of our heads 6 against a wall will never explain the universe, because knowledge is 7 the finding of similars, and this conscious plane only gives us one 8 single perception of it. So with our idea of God. All that we see of 9 God is only a part, just as we see only one portion of the universe, 10 and all the rest is beyond human cognition. "I, the universal; so 11 great am I that even this universe is but a part of Me." That is why 12 we see God as imperfect, and do not understand Him. The only way 13 to understand Him and the universe is to go beyond reason, beyond 14 consciousness. "When thou goest beyond the heard and the 15 hearing, the thought and the thinking, then alone wilt thou come to 16 Truth." "Go thou beyond the scriptures, because they teach only up 17 to nature, up to the three qualities." When we go beyond them, we 18 find the harmony, and not before.

19 The microcosm and the macrocosm are built on exactly the 20 same plan, and in the microcosm we know only one part, the middle 21 part. We know neither the sub-conscious, nor the super-conscious.
22 We know the conscious only. If a man stands up and says, "I am a 23 sinner", he makes an untrue statement because he does not know 24 himself. He is the most ignorant of men; of himself he knows only 25 one part, because his knowledge covers only a part of the ground 26 he is on. So with this universe, it is possible to know only a part of it 27 with the reason, not the whole of it; for the sub-conscious, the 28 conscious and the super-conscious, the individual Mahat and the 29 universal Mahat, and all the subsequent modifications, constitute 30 the universe.

31 What makes nature (Prakriti) change? We see so far that 32 everything, all Prakriti, is Jada, insentient. It is all compound and 33 insentient. Wherever there is law, it is proof that the region of its 34 play is insentient. Mind, intelligence, will, and everything else is 35 insentient. But they are all reflecting the sentiency, the "Chit" of 36 some being who is beyond all this, whom the Sankhya philosophers 37 call "Purusha". The Purusha is the unwitting cause of all the 38 changes in the universe. That is to say, this Purusha, taking Him in 39 the universal sense, is the God of the universe. It is said that the 40 will of the Lord created the universe. It is very good as a common 41 expression, but we see it cannot be true. How could it be will? Will 42 is the third or fourth manifestation in nature. Many things exist 43 before it, and what created them ? Will is a compound, and 44 everything that is a compound is a product of nature. Will, 45 therefore, could not create nature. So, to say that the will of the 46 Lord created the universe is meaningless. Our will only covers a 47 little portion of self-consciousness and moves our brain. It is not will 48 that is working your body or that is working the universe. This body 49 is being moved by a power of which will is only a manifestation in 50 one part. Likewise in the universe there is will, but that is only one 51 part of the universe. The whole of the universe is not guided by will; 52 that is why we cannot explain it by the will theory. Suppose I take it

1 for granted that it is will moving the body, then, when I find I cannot 2 work it at will, I begin to fret and fume. It is my fault, because I had 3 no right to take the will theory for granted. In the same way, if I 4 take the universe and think it is will that moves it and find things 5 which do not coincide, it is my fault. So the Purusha is not will; 6 neither can it be intelligence, because intelligence itself is a 7 compound. There cannot be any intelligence without some sort of 8 matter corresponding to the brain. Wherever there is intelligence, 9 there must be something akin to that matter which we call brain 10 which becomes lumped together into a particular form and serves 11 the purpose of the brain. Wherever there is intelligence, there must 12 be that matter in some form or other. But intelligence itself is a 13 compound. What then is this Purusha? It is neither intelligence nor 14 will, but it is the cause of all these. It is its presence that sets them 15 all going and combining. It does not mix with nature; it is not 16 intelligence, or Mahat; but the Self, the pure, is Purusha. "I am the 17 witness, and through my witnessing, nature is producing all that is 18 sentient and all that is insentient."

19 What is this sentiency in nature? We find intelligence is this 20 sentiency which is called Chit. The basis of sentiency is in the 21 Purusha, it is the nature of Purusha. It is that which cannot be 22 explained but which is the cause of all that we call knowledge.
23 Purusha is not consciousness, because consciousness is a 24 compound; but whatever is light and good in consciousness belongs 25 to Purusha. Purusha is not conscious, but whatever is light in 26 intelligence belongs to Purusha. Sentiency is in the Purusha, but 27 the Purusha is not intelligent, not knowing. The Chit in the Purusha 28 plus Prakriti is what we see around us. Whatever is pleasure and 29 happiness and light in the universe belongs to Purusha; but it is a 30 compound, because it is Purusha plus Prakriti. "Wherever there is 31 any happiness, wherever there is any bliss, there is a spark of that 32 immortality which is God." "Purusha is the great attraction of the 33 universe, yet it attracts the whole universe." You see a man going 34 after gold, because behind it is a spark of the Purusha though 35 mixed up with a good deal of dirt. When a man loves his children or 36 a woman her husband, what is the attracting power? A spark of 37 Purusha behind them. It is there, only mixed up with "dirt". Nothing 38 else can attract. "In this world of insentiency the Purusha alone is 39 sentient." This is the Purusha of the Sankhya. As such, it 40 necessarily follows that the Purusha must be omnipresent. That 41 which is not omnipresent must be limited. All limitations are 42 caused; that which is caused must have a beginning and end. If the 43 Purusha is limited, it will die, will not be free, will not be final, but 44 must have some cause. Therefore it is omnipresent. According to 45 Kapila, there are many Purushas; not one, but an infinite number of 46 them. You and I have each of us one, and so has everyone else; an 47 infinite number of circles, each one infinite, running through this 48 universe. The Purusha is neither mind nor matter, the reflex from it 49 is all that we know. We are sure if it is omnipresent it has neither 50 death nor birth. Nature is casting her shadow upon it, the shadow 51 of birth and death, but it is by its nature pure. So far we have found 52 the philosophy of the Sankhya wonderful.

1 Next we shall take up the proofs against it. So far the analysis
2 is perfect, the psychology incontrovertible. We find by the division 3 of the senses into organs and instruments that they are not simple, 4 but compound; by dividing egoism into sense and matter, we find 5 that this is also material and that Mahat is also a state of matter, 6 and finally we find the Purusha. So far there is no objection. But if 7 we ask the Sankhya the question, "Who created nature?"--the 8 Sankhya says that the Purusha and the Prakriti are uncreate and 9 omnipresent, and that of this Purusha there is an infinite number.
10 We shall have to controvert these propositions, and find a better 11 solution, and by so doing we shall come to Advaitism. Our first 12 objection is, how can there be these two infinities? Then our 13 argument will be that the Sankhya is not a perfect generalisation, 14 and that we have not found in it a perfect solution. And then we 15 shall see how the Vedantists grope out of all these difficulties and 16 reach a perfect solution, and yet all the glory really belongs to the 17 Sankhya. It is very easy to give a finishing touch to a building when 18 it is constructed.

SANKHYA AND VEDANTA

I shall give you a resume of the Sankhya philosophy, through which we have been going. We, in this lecture, want to find where its defects are, and where Vedanta comes in and supplements it. You must remember that according to Sankhya philosophy, nature is the cause of all these manifestations which we call thought, intellect, reason, love, hatred, touch, taste, and matter. Everything is from nature. This nature consists of three sorts of elements, called Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas. These are not qualities, but elements, the materials out of which the whole universe is evolved. In the beginning of a cycle these remain in equilibrium; and when creation comes, they begin to combine and recombine and manifest as the universe. The first manifestation is what the Sankhya calls the Mahat or Intelligence, and out of that comes consciousness. According to Sankhya, this is an element (Tattva). And out of consciousness are evolved Manas or mind, the organs of the senses, and the Tanmatras (particles of sound, touch, etc.). All the fine particles are evolved from consciousness, and out of these fine particles come the gross elements which we call matter. The Tanmatras cannot be perceived; but when they become gross particles, we can feel and sense them.

1 The Chitta, in its threefold function of intelligence, 2 consciousness, and mind, works and manufactures the forces called 3 Prana. You must at once get rid of the idea that Prana is breath.
4 Breath is one effect of Prana. By Prana are meant the nervous 5 forces governing and moving the whole body, which also manifest
6 themselves as thought. The foremost and most obvious
7 manifestation of Prana is the breathing motion. Prana acts upon air, 8 and not air upon it. Controlling the breathing motion is pranayama.
9 Pranayama is practised to get mastery over this motion; the end is 10 not merely to control the breath or to make the lungs strong. That 11 is Delsarte, not Pranayama. These Pranas are the vital forces which 12 manipulate the whole body, while they in their turn are manipulated 13 by other organs in the body, which are called mind or internal 14 organs. So far so good. The psychology is very clear and most 15 precise; and yet it is the oldest rational thought in the world!
16 Wherever there is any philosophy or rational thought, it owes 17 something or other to Kapila. Pythagoras learnt it in India, and 18 taught it in Greece. Later on Plato got an inkling of it; and still later 19 the Gnostics carried the thought to Alexandria, and from there it 20 came to Europe. So wherever there is any attempt at psychology or 21 philosophy, the great father of it is this man, Kapila. So far we see 22 that his philosophy is wonderful; but we shall have to differ with 23 him on some points, as we go on. We find that the basic principle on 24 which Kapila works, is evolution. He makes one thing evolve out of 25 another, because his very definition of causation is "the cause 26 reproduced in another form," and because the whole universe, so 27 far as we see it, is progressive and evolving. We see clay; in another 28 form, we call it a pitcher. Clay was the cause and the pitcher the 29 effect. Beyond this we cannot have any idea of causation. Thus this 30 whole universe is evolved out of a material, out of Prakriti or 31 nature. Therefore, the universe cannot be essentially different from 32 its cause. According to Kapila, from undifferentiated nature to 33 thought or intellect, not one of them is what he calls the "Enjoyer" 34 or "Enlightener". Just as is a lump of clay, so is a lump of mind. By 35 itself the mind has no light; but we see it reasons. Therefore there 36 must be some one behind it, whose light is percolating through 37 Mahat and consciousness, and subsequent modifications, and this is 38 what Kapila calls the Purusha, the Self of the Vedantin. According 39 to Kapila, the Purusha is a simple entity, not a compound; he is 40 immaterial, the only one who is immaterial, and all these various 41 manifestations are material. I see a black-board. First, the external 42 instruments will bring that sensation to the nerve centre, to the 43 Indriya according to Kapila; from the centre it will go to the mind 44 and make an impression; the mind will present it to the Buddhi, but 45 Buddhi cannot act; the action comes, as it were, from the Purusha 46 behind. These, so to speak, are all his servants, bringing the 47 sensations to him, and he, as it were, gives the orders, reacts, is the 48 enjoyer, the perceiver, the real One, the King on his throne, the Self 49 of man, who is immaterial. Because he is immaterial, it necessarily 50 follows that he must be infinite, he cannot have any limitation 51 whatever. Each one of the Purushas is omnipresent; each one of us 52 is omnipresent, but we can act only through the Linga Sharira, the 53 fine body. The mind, the self-consciousness, the organs, the vital

1 forces compose the fine body or sheath, what in Christian 2 philosophy is called the spiritual body of man. It is this body that 3 gets salvation, or punishment, or heaven, that incarnates and 4 reincarnates, because we see from the very beginning that the 5 going and the coming of the Purusha or soul are impossible. Motion 6 means going or coming, and what goes or comes from one place to 7 another cannot be omnipresent. Thus far we see from Kapila's 8 psychology that the soul is infinite, and that the soul is the only 9 thing which is not composed of nature. He is the only one that is 10 outside of nature, but he has got bound by nature, apparently.
11 Nature is around him, and he has identified himself with it. He 12 thinks, "I am the Linga Sharira", "I am the gross matter, the gross 13 body", and as such he enjoys pleasure and pain, but they do not 14 really belong to him, they belong to the Linga Sharira or the fine 15 body.

16 The meditative state is called always the highest state by the 17 Yogi, when it is neither a passive nor an active state; in it you 18 approach nearest to the Purusha. The soul has neither pleasure nor 19 pain; it is the witness of everything, the eternal witness of all work, 20 but it takes no fruits from any work. As the sun is the cause of sight 21 of every eye, but is not itself affected by any defects in the eye or as 22 when a crystal has red or blue flowers placed before it, the crystal 23 looks red or blue, and yet it is neither; so, the soul is neither passive 24 nor active, it is beyond both. The nearest way of expressing this 25 state of the soul is that it is meditation. This is Sankhya philosophy.

26 Next, Sankhya says, that the manifestation of nature is for the 27 soul; all combinations are for some third person. The combinations 28 which you call nature, these constant changes are going on for the 29 enjoyment of the soul, for its liberation, that it may gain all this 30 experience from the lowest to the highest. When it has gained it, 31 the soul finds it was never in nature, that it was entirely separate, 32 that it is indestructible, that it cannot go and come; that going to 33 heaven and being born again were in nature, and not in the soul.
34 Thus the soul becomes free. All nature is working for the enjoyment 35 and experience of the soul. It is getting this experience in order to 36 reach the goal, and that goal is freedom. But the souls are many 37 according to the Sankhya philosophy. There is an infinite number of 38 souls. The other conclusion of Kapila is that there is no God as the 39 Creator of the universe. Nature is quite sufficient by itself to 40 account for everything. God is not necessary, says the Sankhya.

41 The Vedanta says that the Soul is in its nature Existence 42 absolute, Knowledge absolute, Bliss absolute. But these are not 43 qualities of the Soul; they are one, not three, the essence of the 44 Soul; and it agrees with the Sankhya in thinking that intelligence 45 belongs to nature, inasmuch as it comes through nature. The 46 Vedanta also shows that what is called intelligence is a compound.

47 For instance, let us examine our perceptions. I see a black-48 board. How does the knowledge come? What the German 49 philosophers call "the thing-in-itself" of the black-board is unknown, 50 I can never know it. Let us call it x. The black-board x acts on my 51 mind, and the mind reacts. The mind is like a lake. Throw a stone in 52 a lake and a reactionary wave comes towards the stone; this wave

1 is not like the stone at all, it is a wave. The black-board x is like a 2 stone which strikes the mind and the mind throws up a wave
3 towards it, and this wave is what we call the black-board. I see you.
4 You as reality are unknown and unknowable. You are x and you act 5 upon my mind, and the mind throws a wave in the direction from 6 which the impact comes, and that wave is what I call Mr. or Mrs.
7 So-and-so. There are two elements in the perception, one coming 8 from outside and the other from inside, and the combination of 9 these two, x + mind, is our external universe. All knowledge is by 10 reaction. In the case of a whale it has been determined by 11 calculation how long after its tail is struck, its mind reacts and the 12 whale feels the pain. Similar is the case with internal perception.
13 The real self within me is also unknown and unknowable. Let us call 14 it y. When I know myself as so-and-so, it is y + the mind. That y 15 strikes a blow on the mind. So our whole world is x + mind 16 (external), and y + mind (internal), x and y standing for the thing-in-17 itself behind the external and the internal worlds respectively.

18 According to Vedanta, the three fundamental factors of 19 consciousness are, I exist, I know, and I am blessed. The idea that I 20 have no want, that I am restful, peaceful, that nothing can disturb 21 me, which comes from time to time, is the central fact of our being, 22 the basic principle of our life; and when it becomes limited, and 23 becomes a compound, it manifests itself as existence phenomenal, 24 knowledge phenomenal, and love. Every man exists, and every man 25 must know, and every man is mad for love. He cannot help loving.
26 Through all existence, from the lowest to the highest, all must love.
27 The y, the internal thing-in-itself, which, combining with mind, 28 manufactures existence, knowledge, and love, is called by the 29 Vedantists, Existence absolute, Knowledge absolute, Bliss absolute.
30 That real existence is limitless, unmixed, uncombined, knows no 31 change, is the free soul; when it gets mixed up, muddled up, as it 32 were, with the mind, it becomes what we call individual existence.
33 It is plant life, animal life, human life, just as universal space is cut 34 off in a room, in a jar, and so on. And that real knowledge is not 35 what we know, not intuition, nor reason, nor instinct. When that 36 degenerates and is confused, we call it intuition; when it 37 degenerates more, we call it reason; and when it degenerates still 38 more, we call it instinct. That knowledge itself is Vijnana, neither 39 intuition, nor reason nor instinct. The nearest expression for it is 40 all-knowingness. There is no limit to it, no combination in it. That 41 bliss, when it gets clouded over, we call love, attraction for gross 42 bodies or fine bodies, or for ideas. This is only a distorted 43 manifestation of that blessedness. Absolute Existence, absolute 44 Knowledge, and absolute Blessedness are not qualities of the soul, 45 but the essence; there is no difference between them and the soul.
46 And the three are one; we see the one thing in three different 47 aspects. They are beyond all relative knowledge. That eternal 48 knowledge of the Self percolating through the brain of man 49 becomes his intuition, reason, and so on. Its manifestation varies 50 according to the medium through which it shines. As soul, there is 51 no difference between man and the lowest animal, only the latter's 52 brain is less developed and the manifestation through it which we 53 call instinct is very dull. In a man the brain is much finer, so the 1 manifestation is much clearer, and in the highest man it becomes 2 entirely clear. So with existence; the existence which we know, the 3 limited sphere of existence, is simply a reflection of that real 4 existence which is the nature of the soul. So with bliss; that which 5 we call love or attraction is but the reflection of the external 6 blessedness of the Self. With manifestation comes limitation, but 7 the unmanifested, the essential nature of the soul, is unlimited; to 8 that blessedness there is no limit. But in love there is limitation. I 9 love you one day, I hate you the next. My love increases one day and 10 decreases the next, because it is only a manifestation.

11 The first point we will contend with Kapila is his idea of God.
12 Just as the series of modifications of Prakriti, beginning with the 13 individual intellect and ending with the individual body, require a 14 Purusha behind, as the ruler and governor, so, in the Cosmos, the 15 universal intellect, the universal egoism, the universal mind, all 16 universal fine and gross materials, must have a ruler and governor.
17 How will the cosmic series become complete without the universal 18 Purusha behind them all as the ruler and governor? If you deny a 19 universal Purusha behind the cosmic series, we deny your Purusha 20 behind the individual series. If it be true that behind the series of 21 graded, evolved individual manifestations, there stands One that is 22 beyond them all, the Purusha who is not composed of matter, the 23 very same logic will apply to the case of universal manifestations.
24 This Universal Self which is beyond the universal modifications of 25 Prakriti is what is called Ishwara, the Supreme Ruler, God.

26 Now comes the more important point of difference. Can there 27 be more than one Purusha? The Purusha, we have seen, is 28 omnipresent and infinite. The omnipresent, the infinite, cannot be 29 two. If there are two infinities A and B, the infinity A would limit the 30 infinity B, because the infinity B is not the infinity A, and the infinity 31 A is not the infinity B. Difference in identity means exclusion, and 32 exclusion means limitation. Therefore, A and B, limiting each other, 33 cease to be infinities. Hence, there can be but one infinity, that is, 34 one Purusha.

35 Now we will take up our x and y and show they are one. We 36 have shown how what we call the external world is x + mind, and 37 the internal world y + mind; x and y are both quantities unknown 38 and unknowable. All difference is due to time, space, and causation.
39 These are the constituent elements of the mind. No mentality is 40 possible without them. You can never think without time, you can 41 never imagine anything without space, and you can never have 42 anything without causation. These are the forms of the mind. Take 43 them away, and the mind itself does not exist. All difference is, 44 therefore, due to the mind. According to Vedanta, it is the mind, its 45 forms, that have limited x and y apparently and made them appear 46 as external and internal worlds. But x and y, being both beyond the 47 mind, are without difference and hence one. We cannot attribute 48 any quality to them, because qualities are born of the mind. That 49 which is qualityless must be one; x is without qualities, it only takes 50 qualities of the mind; so does y; therefore these x and y are one.
51 The whole universe is one. There is only one Self in the universe, 52 only One Existence, and that One Existence, when it passes through

1 the forms of time, space, and causation, is called by different 2 names, Buddhi, fine matter, gross matter, all mental and physical 3 forms. Everything in the universe is that One, appearing in various 4 forms. When a little part of it comes, as it were, into this network of 5 time, space, and causation, it takes forms; take off the network, and 6 it is all one. Therefore in Advaita philosophy, the whole universe is 7 all one in the Self which is called Brahman. That Self when it
8 appears behind the universe is called God. The same Self when it 9 appears behind this little universe, the body, is the soul. This very 10 soul, therefore, is the Self in man. There is only one Purusha, the 11 Brahman of the Vedanta ; God and man, analysed, are one in It. The 12 universe is you yourself, the unbroken you; you are throughout the 13 universe. "In all hands you work, through all mouths you eat, 14 through all nostrils you breathe, through all minds you think." The 15 whole universe is you; the universe is your body; you are the 16 universe both formed and unformed. You are the soul of the 17 universe and its body also. You are God, you are the angels, you are 18 man, you are animals, you are the plants, you are the minerals, you 19 are everything; the manifestation of everything is you. Whatever 20 exists is you. You are the Infinite. The Infinite cannot be divided. It 21 can have no parts, for each part would be infinite, and then the part 22 would be identical with the whole, which is absurd. Therefore the 23 idea that you are Mr. So-and-so can never be true; it is a day-dream.
24 Know this and be free. This is the Advaita conclusion. "I am neither 25 the body, nor the organs, nor am I the mind; I am Existence, 26 Knowledge, and Bliss absolute; I am He." This is true knowledge; 27 all reason and intellect, and everything else is ignorance. Where is 28 knowledge for me, for I am knowledge itself! Where is life for me, 29 for I am life itself! I am sure I live, for I am life, the One Being, and 30 nothing exists except through me, and in me, and as me. I am 31 manifested through the elements, but I am the free One. Who seeks 32 freedom? Nobody. If you think that you are bound, you remain 33 bound; you make your own bondage. If you know that you are free, 34 you are free this moment. This is knowledge, knowledge of 35 freedom. Freedom is the goal of all nature.

THE GOAL

(Delivered in San Francisco, March 27, 1900)

We find that man, as it were, is always surrounded by something greater than himself, and he is trying to grasp the meaning of this. Man will ever [seek] the highest ideal. He knows that it exists and that religion is the search after the highest ideal. At first all his searches were in the external plane--placed in heaven, in different places--just according to [his grasp] of the total nature of man.

[Later,] man began to look at himself a little closer and began to find out that the real "me" was not the "me" that he stands for ordinarily. As he appears to the senses is not the same as he really is. He began to [search] inside himself, and found out that...the same ideal he [had placed] outside of himself is all the time within; what he was worshipping outside was his own real inner nature. The difference between dualism and monism is that when the ideal is put outside [of oneself], it is dualism. When God is [sought] within, it is monism.

First, the old question of why and wherefore....How is it that man became limited? How did the Infinite become finite, the pure become impure? In the first place, you must never forget that this question can never be answered [by] any dualistic hypothesis.

Why did God create the impure universe? Why is man so miserable, made by a perfect, infinite, merciful Father? Why this heaven and earth, looking at which we get our conception of law? Nobody can imagine anything that he has not seen.

All the tortures we feel in this life, we put in another place and that is our hell....

Why did the infinite God make this world? [The dualist says:] Just as the potter makes pots. God the potter; we the pots....In more philosophical language the question is: How is it taken for granted that the real nature of man is pure, perfect, and infinite? This is the one difficulty found in any system of monism. Everything else is clean and clear. This question cannot be answered. The monists say the question itself is a contradiction.

Take the system of dualism--the question is asked why God created the world. This is contradictory. Why? Because--what is the idea of God? He is a being who cannot be acted upon by anything outside.

You and I are not free. I am thirsty. There is something called thirst, over which I have no control, [which] forces me to drink water. Every action of my body and even every thought of my mind is forced out of me. I have got to do it. That is why I am bound....I am forced to do this, to have this, and so on....And what is meant by why and wherefore? [Being subject to external forces.] Why do you drink water? Because thirst forces you. You are a slave. You never do anything of your own will because you are forced to do everything. Your only motive for action is some force....

1 The earth, by itself, would never move unless something 2 forced it. Why does the light burn? It does not burn unless 3 somebody comes and strikes a match. Throughout nature, 4 everything is bound. Slavery, slavery! To be in harmony with nature 5 is [slavery]. What is there in being the slave of nature and living in 6 a golden cage? The greatest law and order is in the [knowledge that 7 man is essentially free and divine]. Now we see that the question 8 why and wherefore can only be asked [in ignorance]. I can only be 9 forced to do something through something else.

10 [You say] God is free. Again you ask the question why God 11 creates the world. You contradict yourself. The meaning of God is 12 entirely free will. The question put in logical language is this: What 13 forced Him, who can never be forced by anybody, to create the 14 world? You say in the same question, What forced Him? The 15 question is nonsense. He is infinite by His very nature; He is free.
16 We shall answer questions when you can ask them in logical 17 language. Reason will tell you that there is only one Reality, nothing 18 else. Wherever dualism has risen, monism came to a head and 19 drove it out.

20 There is only one difficulty in understanding this. Religion is a 21 common-sense, everyday thing. The man in the street knows it if 22 you put it in his language and not [if it is put] in a philosopher's 23 language. It is a common thing in human nature to [project itself].
24 Think of your feeling with the child. [You identify yourself with it.
25 Then] you have two bodies. [Similarly] you can feel through your 26 husband's mind. Where can you stop? You can feel in infinite bodies.

27 Nature is conquered by man every day. As a race, man is 28 manifesting his power. Try in imagination to put a limit to this 29 power in man. You admit that man as a race has infinite power, has 30 [an] infinite body. The only question is what you are. Are you the 31 race or one [individual]? The moment you isolate yourself, 32 everything hurts you. The moment you expand and feel for others, 33 you gain help. The selfish man is the most miserable in the world.
34 The happiest is the man who is not at all selfish. He has become the 35 whole creation, the whole race, and God [is] within him.... So in 36 dualism--Christian, Hindu, and all religions--the code of ethics ...is:
37 Do not be selfish....Be unselfish. Do things for others! Expand!...

38 The ignorant can be made to understand [this] very easily, 39 and the learned can be made to understand still more easily. But 40 the man who has just got a speck of learning, him God himself 41 cannot make understand.[The truth is,] you are not separate [from 42 this universe]; [just as your Spirit] is [not] separate from the rest of 43 you. If [not] so, you could not see anything, could not feel anything.
44 Our bodies are simply little whirlpools in the ocean of matter. Life is 45 taking a turn and passing on, in another form....The sun, the moon, 46 the stars, you and I are mere whirlpools. Why did I select [a 47 particular mind as mine? It is] simply a mental whirlpool in the 48 ocean of mind.

49 How else is it possible that my vibration reaches you just 50 now? If you throw a stone in the lake, it raises a vibration and [that 51 stirs] the water into vibration. I throw my mind into the state of 1 bliss and the tendency is to raise the same bliss in your mind. How 2 often in your mind or heart [you have thought something] and 3 without [verbal] communication, [others have got your thought]?

4 Everywhere we are one...That is what we never understand. The 5 whole [universe] is composed of time, space, and causation. And 6 God [appears as this universe]...When did nature begin? When you 7 [forgot your true nature and] became [bound by time, space, and 8 causation].

9 This is the [rotating] circle of your bodies and yet that is your 10 infinite nature....That is certainly nature --time, space, and 11 causation. That is all that is meant by nature. Time began when you 12 began to think. Space began when you got the body; otherwise 13 there cannot be any space. Causation began when you became 14 limited. We have to have some sort of answer. There is the answer.
15 [Our limitation] is play. Just for the fun of it. Nothing binds you; 16 nothing forces [you. You were] never bound. We are all acting our 17 parts in this [play] of our own invention.

18 But let us bring another question about individuality. Some 19 people are so afraid of losing their individuality. Wouldn't it be 20 better for the pig to lose his pig-individuality if he can become God?
21 Yes. But the poor pig does not think so at the time. Which state is 22 my individuality? When I was a baby sprawling on the floor trying to 23 swallow my thumb? Was that the individuality I should be sorry to 24 lose? Fifty years hence I shall look upon this present state and 25 laugh, just as I [now] look upon the baby state. Which of these 26 individualities shall I keep?...

27 We are to understand what is meant by this individuality....
28 [There are two opposite tendencies:] one is the protection of the 29 individuality, the other is the intense desire to sacrifice the 30 individuality...The mother sacrifices all her own will for the needy 31 baby...When she carries the baby in her arms, the call of 32 individuality, or self-preservation is no more heard. She will eat the 33 worse food, but her children will have the best. So for all the people 34 we love we are ready to die.

35 [On the one hand] we are struggling hard to keep up this 36 individuality; on the other hand, trying to kill it. With what result?
37 Tom Brown may struggle hard. He is [fighting] for his individuality.
38 Tom dies and there is not a ripple anywhere upon the surface of the 39 earth. There was a Jew born nineteen hundred years ago, and he 40 never moved a finger to keep his individuality...Think of that! That 41 Jew never struggled to protect his individuality. That is why he 42 became the greatest in the world. This is what the world does not 43 know.

44 In time we are to be individuals. But in what sense? What is 45 the individuality of man? Not Tom Brown, but God in man. That is 46 the [true] individuality. The more man has approached that, the 47 more he has given up his false individuality. The more he tries to 48 collect and gain everything [for himself], the less he is an 49 individual. the less he has thought of [himself], the more he has 50 sacrificed all individuality during his lifetime,...the more he is an 51 individual. This is one secret the world does not understand....

1 We must first understand what is meant by individuality. It is 2 attaining the ideal. You are man now, [or] you are woman. You will 3 change all the time. Can you stop? Do you want to keep your minds 4 as they are now--the angers, hatreds, jealousies, quarrels, all the 5 thousand and one things in the mind? Do you mean to say that you
6 will keep them?...You cannot stop anywhere ...until perfect conquest 7 has been achieved, until you are pure and you are perfect.

8 You have no more anger when you are all love, bliss, infinite 9 existence....Which of your bodies will you keep? You cannot stop 10 anywhere until you come to life that never ends. Infinite life! You 11 stop there. You have a little knowledge now and are always trying 12 to get more. Where will you stop? Nowhere, until you become one 13 with life itself...

14 Many want pleasure [as] the goal. For that pleasure they seek 15 only the senses. On the higher planes much pleasure is to be 16 sought. Then on spiritual planes. Then in himself--God within him.
17 The man whose pleasure is outside of [himself] becomes unhappy 18 when that outside thing goes. You cannot depend for this pleasure 19 upon anything in this universe. If all my pleasures are in myself, I 20 must have pleasure there all the time because I can never lose my 21 Self...Mother, father, child, wife, body, wealth--everything I can lose 22 except my self...bliss in the Self. All desire is contained in the 23 Self....This is individuality which never changes, and this is 24 perfect. ...And how to get it? They find what the great souls of this 25 world--all great men and women--found [through sustained 26 discrimination]....What of these dualistic theories of twenty gods, 27 thirty gods? It does not matter. They all had the one truth, that this 28 false individuality must go....So this ego--the less there is of it, the 29 nearer I am to that which I really am: the universal body. The less I 30 think of my own individual mind, the nearer I am to that universal 31 mind. The less I think of my own soul, the nearer I am to the 32 universal soul.

33 We live in one body. We have some pain, some pleasure. Just 34 for this little pleasure we have by living in this body, we are ready 35 to kill everything in the universe to preserve ourselves. If we had 36 two bodies, would not that be much better? So on and on to bliss. I 37 am in everybody. Through all hands I work; through all feet I walk. I 38 speak through every mouth; I live in every body. Infinite my bodies, 39 infinite my minds. I lived in Jesus of Nazareth, in Buddha, in 40 Mohammed--in all the great and good of the past, of the present. I 41 am going to live in all that [may] come afterwards. Is that theory?
42 [No, it is the truth.]

43 If you can realise this, how infinitely more pleasurable that 44 will be. What an ecstasy of joy! Which one body is so great that we 45 need here anything [of] the body?...After living in all the bodies of 46 others, enjoying all the bodies there are in this world, what 47 becomes of us? [We become one with the Infinite. And] that is the 48 goal. That is the only way. One [man] says, "If I know the truth, I 49 shall be melted away like butter." I wish people would be, but they 50 are too tough to be melted so quickly!

51 What are we to do to be free? Free you are already....How 1 could the free ever be bound? It is a lie. [You were] never bound.

2 How could the unlimited ever be limited by anything? Infinite 3 divided by infinite, added to infinite, multiplied by infinite [remains] 4 infinite. You are infinite; God is infinite. You are all infinite. There 5 cannot be two existences, only one. The Infinite can never be made 6 finite. You are never bound. That is all....You are free already. You 7 have reached the goal--all there is to reach. Never allow the mind to 8 think that you have not reached the goal....

9 Whatever we [think] that we become. If you think you are 10 poor sinners you hypnotise yourselves: "I am a miserable, crawling 11 worm." Those who believe in hell are in hell when they die; those 12 who say that they will go to heaven [go to heaven].

13 It is all play...[You may say,] "We have to do something; let us 14 do good." [But] who cares for good and evil? Play! God Almighty 15 plays. That is all....You are the almighty God playing. If you want to 16 play on the side and take the part of a beggar, you are not [to blame 17 someone else for making that choice]. You enjoy being the beggar.
18 You know your real nature [to be divine]. You are the king and play 19 you are a beggar....It is all fun. Know it and play. That is all there is 20 to it. Then practise it. The whole universe is a vast play. All is good 21 because all is fun. This star comes and crashes with our earth, and 22 we are all dead. [That too is fun.] You only think fun the little things 23 that delight your senses!...

24 [We are told that there is] one good god here, and one bad 25 god there always on the watch to grab me the moment I make a 26 mistake....When I was a child I was told by someone that God 27 watches everything. I went to bed and looked up and expected the 28 ceiling of the room to open. [Nothing happened.] Nobody is 29 watching us except ourselves. No Lord except our [own Self]; no 30 nature but what we feel. Habit is second nature; it is first nature 31 also. It is all there is of nature.

32 I repeat [something] two or three times; it becomes my 33 nature. Do not be miserable! Do not repent! What is done is done. If 34 you burn yourself, [take the consequences].

35 ...Be sensible. We make mistakes; what of that? That is all in 36 fun. They go so crazy over their past sins, moaning and weeping 37 and all that. Do not repent! After having done work, do not think of 38 it. Go on! Stop not! Don't look back! What will you gain by looking 39 back? You lose nothing, gain nothing. You are not going to be 40 melted like butter. Heavens and hells and incarnations--all 41 nonsense!

42 Who is born and who dies? You are having fun, playing with 43 worlds and all that. You keep this body as long as you like. If you do 44 not like it, do not have it. The Infinite is the real; the finite is the 45 play. You are the infinite body and the finite body in one. Know it!
46 But knowledge will not make any difference; the play will go 47 on....Two words--soul and body--have been joined. [Partial] 48 knowledge is the cause. Know that you are always free. The fire of 49 knowledge burns down all the [impurities and limitations]. I am that 50 Infinite....

1 You are as free as you were in the beginning, are now, and 2 always will be. He who knows that he is free is free; he who knows 3 that he is bound is bound.

4 What becomes of God and worship and all that? They have 5 their place. I have divided myself into God and me; I become the 6 worshipped and I worship myself. Why not? God is I. Why not 7 worship my Self? The universal God--He is also my Self. It is all fun.
8 There is no other purpose.

9 What is the end and aim of life? None, because I [know that I
10 am the Infinite]. If you are beggars, you can have aims. I have no 11 aims, no want, no purpose. I come to your country, and lecture --just 12 for fun. No other meaning. What meaning can be there? Only slaves 13 do actions for somebody else. You do actions for nobody else. When 14 it suits you, you worship. You can join the Christians, the 15 Mohammedans, the Chinese, the Japanese. You can worship all the 16 gods that ever were and are ever going to be....

17 I am in the sun, the moon, and the stars. I am with God and I
18 am in all the gods. I worship my Self.

19 There is another side to it. I have kept it in reserve. I am the 20 man that is going to be hanged. I am all the wicked. I am getting 21 punished in hells. That [also] is fun. This is the goal of philosophy 22 [to know that I am the Infinite]. Aims, motives, purposes, and duties 23 live in the background....

24 This truth is first to be listened to, then to be thought about.
25 Reason, argue it out by all manner of means. The enlightened know 26 no more than that. Know it for certain that you are in everything.
27 That is why you should not hurt anybody, because in hurting them 28 you hurt yourself....[Lastly,] this is to be meditated upon. Think upon 29 it. Can you realise there will come a time when everything will 30 crumble in the dust and you will stand alone? That moment of 31 ecstatic joy will never leave you. You will actually find that you are 32 without bodies. You never had bodies.

33 I am One, alone, through all eternity. Whom shall I fear? It is 34 all my Self. This is continuously to be meditated upon. Through that 35 comes realisation. It is through realisation that you become a 36 [blessings] to others....

37 "Thy face shines like [that of] one who has known God." That 38 is the goal. This is not to be preached as I am doing. "Under a tree I 39 saw a teacher, a boy of sixteen; the disciple was an old man of 40 eighty. The teacher was teaching in silence, and the doubts of the 41 disciple vanished." And who speaks? Who lights a candle to see the 42 sun? When the truth [dawns], no witness is necessary. You know 43 it....That is what you are going to do:...realise it. First think of it.
44 Reason it out. Satisfy your curiosity. Then [think] of nothing else. I 45 wish we never read anything. Lord help us all! Just see what [a 46 learned] man becomes.

47 "This is said, and that is said...."

48 "What do you say, my friend?"

49 "I say nothing." [He quotes] everybody else's thought; but he

1 thinks nothing. If this is education, what is lunacy? Look at all the 2 men who wrote!...These modern writers, not two sentences their 3 own! All quotations....

4 There is not much value in books, and in [second-hand]
5 religion there is no value whatsoever. It is like eating. Your religion
6 would not satisfy me. Jesus saw God and Buddha saw God. If you 7 have not seen God, you are no better than the atheist. Only he is 8 quiet, and you talk much and disturb the world with your talk.
9 Books and bibles and scriptures are of no use. I met an old man 10 when I was a boy; [he did not study any scripture, but he 11 transmitted the truth of God by a touch].

12 Silence ye teachers of the world. Silence ye books. Lord, Thou 13 alone speak and Thy servant listeneth....If truth is not there, what is 14 the use of this life? We all think we will catch it, but we do not. Most 15 of us catch only dust. God is not there. If no God, what is the use of 16 life? Is there any resting-place in the universe? [It is up to us to find 17 it]; only we do not [search for it intensely. We are] like a little piece 18 of straw carried on in the current.

19 If there is this truth, if there is God, it must be within us....[I 20 must be able to say,] " I have seen Him with my eyes," Otherwise I 21 have no religion. Beliefs, doctrines, sermons do not make religion.
22 It is realisation, perception of God [which alone is religion]. What is 23 the glory of all these men whom the world worships? God was no 24 more a doctrine [for them. Did they believe] because their 25 grandfather believed it? No. It was the realisation of the Infinite, 26 higher than their own bodies, minds, and everything. This world is 27 real inasmuch as it contains a little bit [of] the reflection of that 28 God. We love the good man because in his face shines the reflection 29 a little more. We must catch it ourselves. There is no other way.

30 That is the goal. Struggle for it! Have your own Bible. Have 31 your own Christ. Otherwise you are not religious. Do not talk 32 religion. Men talk and talk. "Some of them, steeped in darkness, in 33 the pride of their hearts think that they have the light. And not only 34 [that], they offer to take others upon their shoulders and both fall 35 into the pit."...

36 No church ever saved by itself. It is good to be born in a 37 temple, but woe unto the person who dies in a temple or church.
38 Out of it!...It was a good beginning, but leave it! It was the 39 childhood place..but let it be!...Go to God directly. No theories, no 40 doctrines. Then alone will all doubts vanish. Then alone will all 41 crookedness be made straight....

42 In the midst of the manifold, he who sees that One; in the 43 midst of this infinite death, he who sees that one life; in the midst of 44 the manifold, he who sees that which never changes in his own 45 soul--unto him belongs eternal peace.

7 DIVINITY OF MAN

8 (Ada Record, February 28, 1894)

9 The lecture on the Divinity of Man by Swami Vive Kananda, 10 the Hindu monk, drew a packed house at the Opera last Friday 11 evening [February 22].

12 He stated that the fundamental basis of all religions was 13 belief in the soul which is the real man, and something beyond both 14 mind and matter, and proceeded to demonstrate the proposition.
15 The existence of things material are dependent on something else.
16 The mind is mortal because changeable. Death is simply a change.

17 The soul uses the mind as an instrument and through it 18 affects the body. The soul should be made conscious of its powers.
19 The nature of man is pure and holy but it becomes clouded. In our 20 religion every soul is trying to regain its own nature. The mass of 21 our people believe in the individuality of the soul. We are forbidden 22 to preach that ours is the only true religion. Continuing the speaker 23 said: "I am a spirit and not matter. The religion of the West hopes to 24 again live with their body. Ours teaches there can not be such a 25 state. We say freedom of the soul instead of salvation." The lecture 26 proper lasted but 30 minutes but the president of the lecture 27 committee had announced that at the close of the lecture the 28 speaker would answer any questions propounded him. He gave that 29 opportunity and liberal use was made of the privilege. They came 30 from preachers and professors, physicians and philosophers, from 31 citizens and students, from saints and sinners, some were written 32 but dozens arose in their seats and propounded their questions 33 directly. The speaker responded to all--mark the word, please--in an 34 affable manner and in several instances turned the laugh on the 35 inquirer. They kept up the fusillade for nearly an hour; when the 36 speaker begged to be excused from further labor there yet 37 remained a large pile of unanswered questions. He was an artful 38 dodger on many of the questions. From his answers we glean the 39 following additional statements in regard to the Hindu belief and 40 teachings: They believe in the incarnation of man. One of their 41 teachings is to the effect that their God Krishna was born of a virgin 42 about 5000 years ago in the North of India. The story is very similar 43 to the Biblical history of Christ, only their God was accidentally 44 killed. They believe in evolution and the transmigration of souls: i.e.
45 our souls once inhabited some other living thing, a bird, fish or 46 animal, and on our death will go into some other organism. In reply 47 to the inquiry where these souls were before they came into this 48 world he said they were in other worlds. The soul is the permanent 49 basis of all existence. There was no time when there was no God, 50 therefore no time when there was no creation. Buddhists [sic] do

1 not believe in a personal god; I am no Buddhist. Mohammed is not 2 worshipped in the same sense as Christ. Mohammed believes in 3 Christ but denies he is God. The earth was peopled by evolution and 4 not special selection [creation]. God is the creator and nature the 5 created. We do not have prayer save for the children and then only 6 to improve the mind. Punishment for sin is comparatively 7 immediate. Our actions are not of the soul and can therefore be 8 impure. It is our spirit that becomes perfect and holy. There is no 9 resting place for the soul. It has no material qualities. Man assumes 10 the perfect state when he realizes he is a spirit. Religion is the 11 manifestation of the soul nature. The deeper they see is what 12 makes one holier than another. Worship is feeling the holiness of 13 God. Our religion does not believe in missions and teaches that man 14 should love God for love's sake and his neighbor in spite of himself.
15 The people of the West struggle too hard; repose is a factor of 16 civilization. We do not lay our infirmities to God. There is a tendency 17 toward a union of religions.

18 19 SWAMI VIVEKANANDA ON INDIA

20 (Bay City Daily Tribune, March 21, 1894)

21 Bay City had a distinguished visitor yesterday in the person of 22 Swami Vive Kananda, the much talked of Hindoo monk. He arrived 23 at noon from Detroit where he has been the guest of Senator 24 Palmer and proceeded immediately to the Fraser house. There he 25 was seen by a reporter for The Tribune.

26 Kananda spoke entertainingly of his country and his 27 impressions of this country. He came to America via the Pacific and 28 will return via the Atlantic. "This is a great land," he said, "but I 29 wouldn't like to live here. Americans think too much of money. They 30 give it preference over everything else. Your people have much to 31 learn. When your nation is as old as ours you will be wiser. I like 32 Chicago very much and Detroit is a nice place."

33 Asked how long he intended remaining in America, he 34 replied: "I do not know. I am trying to see most of your country. I go 35 east next and will spend some time at Boston and New York. I have 36 visited Boston but not to stay. When I have seen America I shall go 37 to Europe. I am very anxious to visit Europe. I have never been 38 there."

39 Concerning himself the easterner said he was 30 years old.
40 He was born at Calcutta and educated at a college in that city. His 41 profession calls him to all parts of the country, and he is at all times 42 the guest of the nation. "India has a population of 285,000,000," he 43 said. "Of these about 65,000,000 are Mohammedans and most of 44 the others Hindoos. There are only about 600,000 Christians in the 45 country, and of these at least 250,000 are Catholics. Our people do 46 not, as a rule, embrace Christianity; they are satisfied with their 47 own religion. Some go into Christianity for mercenary motives.
48 They are free to do as they wish. We say let everybody have his own 49 faith. We are a cunning nation. We do not believe in bloodshed.
50 There are wicked men in our country and they are in the majority,

1 same as in your country. It is unreasonable to expect people to be 2 angels."

3 Vive Kananda will lecture in Saginaw to-night.

4 5 LECTURE LAST NIGHT 6

7 The lower floor of the opera house was comfortably filled 8 when the lecture began last evening. Promptly at 8:15 o'clock 9 Swami Vive Kananda made his appearance on the stage, dressed in 10 his beautiful oriental costume. He was introduced in a few words by 11 Dr. C. T. Newkirk.

12 The first part of the discourse consisted of an explanation of 13 the different religions of India and of the theory of transmigration 14 of souls. In connection with the latter, the speaker said it was on the 15 same basis as the theory of conservation was to the scientist. This 16 latter theory, he said, was first produced by a philosopher of his 17 country. They did not believe in a creation. A creation implied 18 making something out of nothing. That was impossible. There was 19 no beginning of creation, just as there was no beginning of time.
20 God and creation are as two lines--without end, without beginning, 21 without [?] parallel. Their theory of creation is, "It is, was, and is to 22 be." They think all punishment is but re-action. If we put our hand 23 in the fire it is burned. That is the re-action of the action. The future 24 condition of life is determined by the present condition. They do not 25 believe God punishes. "You, in this land," said the speaker, "praise 26 the man who does not get angry and denounce the man who does 27 become angry. And yet thousands of people throughout this country 28 are every day accusing God of being angry. Everybody denounces 29 Nero, who sat and played on his instrument while Rome was 30 burning, and yet thousands of your people are accusing God of 31 doing the same today."

32 The Hindoos have no theory of redemption in their religion.
33 Christ is only to show the way. Every man and woman is a divine 34 being, but covered as though by a screen, which their religion is 35 trying to remove. The removal of that Christians call salvation, they, 36 freedom. God is the creator, preserver, and destroyer of the 37 universe.

38 The speaker then sought to vindicate the religions of his 39 country. He said it had been proven that the entire system of the 40 Roman Catholic Church had been taken from the books of 41 Buddhism. The people of the west should learn one thing from 42 India--toleration.

43 Among other subjects which he held up and overhauled were:
44 The Christian missionaries, the zeal of the Presbyterian church and 45 its non-toleration, the dollar-worshipping in this country, and the 46 priests. The latter he said were in the business for the dollars there 47 were in it, and wanted to know how long they would stay in the 48 church if they had to depend on getting their pay from God. After 49 speaking briefly on the Caste system in India, our civilization in the 1 south, our general knowledge of the mind, and various other topics 2 the speaker concluded his remarks.

3 4 RELIGIOUS HARMONY

5 (Saginaw Evening News, March 22, 1894)

6
7 Swami Vive Kananda, the much talked of Hindoo monk, spoke 8 to a small but deeply interested audience last evening at the 9 academy of music on "The Harmony of Religions". He was dressed 10 in oriental costume and received an extremely cordial reception.
11 Hon. Rowland Connor gracefully introduced the speaker, who 12 devoted the first portion of his lecture to an explanation of the 13 different religions of India and of the theory of transmigration of 14 souls. The first invaders of India, the Aryans, did not try to 15 exterminate the population of India as the Christians have done 16 when they went into a new land, but the endeavour was made to 17 elevate persons of brutish habits. The Hindoo is disgusted with 18 those people of his own country who do not bathe and who eat dead 19 animals. The Northern people of India have not tried to force their 20 customs on the southern, but the latter gradually adopted many 21 ways of the former class. In southernmost portions of India there 22 are a few persons who are Christians and who have been so for 23 thousands [?] of years. The Spaniards came to Ceylon with 24 Christianity. The Spaniards thought that their God commanded 25 them to kill and murder and to tear down heathen temples.

26 If there were not different religions no one religion would 27 survive. The Christian needs his selfish religion. The Hindoo needs 28 his own creed. Those which were founded on a book still stand.
29 Why could not the Christian convert the Jew? Why could they not 30 make the Persians Christians? Why not so with the Mohammedans?
31 Why cannot any impression be made upon China or Japan? The 32 Buddhists, the first missionary religion, have double the number of 33 converts of any other religion and they did not use the sword. The 34 Mohammedans used the most force, and they number the least of 35 the three great missionary religions. The Mohammedans have had 36 their day. Every day you read of Christian nations acquiring land by 37 bloodshed. What missionaries preach against this? Why should the 38 most bloodthirsty nations exalt an alleged religion which is not the 39 religion of Christ? The Jews and the Arabs were the fathers of 40 Christianity, and how have they been persecuted by the Christians!
41 The Christians have been weighed in the balance in India and found 42 wanting.

43 The speaker did not wish to be unkind, but he wanted to show 44 Christians how they looked in other eyes. The Missionaries who 45 preach the burning pit are regarded with horror. The 46 Mohammedans rolled wave after wave over India, waving the 47 sword, and today where are they? The farthest that all religions can 48 see is the existence of a spiritual entity. So no religion can teach 49 beyond this point. In every religion there is the essential truth and 50 non-essential casket in which this jewel lies. The believing in the 1 Jewish book or the Hindoo book is non-essential. Circumstances 2 change, the receptacle is different; but the central truth remains.

3 The essentials being the same, the educated people of every 4 community retain the essentials. The shell of the oyster is not 5 attractive, but the pearls are within. Before a small fraction of the 6 world is converted Christianity will be divided into many creeds.
7 That is the law of nature. Why take a single instrument from the 8 great religious orchestras of the earth? Let the grand symphony go 9 on. Be pure, urged the speaker, give up superstition and see the 10 wonderful harmony of nature. Superstition gets the better of 11 religion. All the religions are good since the essentials are the 12 same. Each man should have the perfect exercise of his 13 individuality but these individualities form a perfect whole. This 14 marvellous condition is already in existence. Each creed has had 15 something to add to the wonderful structure.

16 The speaker sought throughout to vindicate the religions of 17 his country and said that it had been proven that the entire system 18 of the Roman Catholic Church had been taken from the books of 19 Buddhism. He dilated at some length on the high code of morality 20 and purity of life that the ethics of Buddha taught but allowed that 21 as far as the belief in the personality of God was concerned, 22 agnosticism prevailed, the main thing being to follow out Buddha's 23 precepts which were, "Be good, be moral, be perfect."

24
25 FROM FAR OFF INDIA

26 (Saginaw Courier-Herald, March 22, 1894)

27
28 Seated in the lobby of the Hotel Vincent yesterday evening 29 was a strong and regular featured man of fine presence, whose 30 swarthy skin made more pronounced the pearly whiteness of his 31 even teeth. Under a broad and high forehead his eyes betoken
32 intelligence. This gentleman was Swami Vive Kananda, the Hindoo
33 preacher. Mr. Kananda's conversation is in pure and grammatically 34 constructed English sentences, to which his slightly foreign accent 35 lends piquancy. Readers of the Detroit papers are aware that Mr.
36 Kananda has lectured in that city a number of times and aroused 37 the animosity of some on account of his strictures upon Christians.
38 The Courier-Herald representative had a few moments' 39 conversation with the learned Buddhist [?] just before he left for 40 the Academy, where he was to lecture. Mr. Kananda said in 41 conversation that he was surprised at the lapses from the paths of 42 rectitude which were so common among Christians, but that there 43 was good and bad to be found among members of all religious 44 bodies. One statement he made was decidedly un-American. Upon 45 being asked if he had been investigating our institutions, he replied:
46 "No, I am a preacher only." This displayed both a want of curiosity 47 and narrowness, which seemed foreign to one who appeared to be 48 so well versed upon religious topics as did the Buddhist [?]
49 preacher.

50 From the hotel to the Academy was but a step and at 8

1 o'clock Rowland Connor introduced to a small audience the 2 lecturer, who was dressed in a long orange colored robe, fastened 3 by a red sash, and who wore a turban of windings of what appeared 4 to be a narrow shawl.

5 The lecturer stated at the opening that he had not come as a 6 missionary, and that it was not the part of a Buddhist to convert 7 others from their faiths and beliefs. He said that the subject of his 8 address would be, "The Harmony of Religions". Mr. Kananda said 9 that many ancient religions had been founded, and were dead and 10 gone.

11 He said that the Buddhists [Hindus] comprise two-thirds of 12 the race, and that the other third comprised those of all other 13 believers. He said that the Buddhists have no place of future 14 torment for men. In that they differ from the Christians, who will 15 forgive a man for five minutes in this world and condemn him to 16 everlasting punishment in the next. Buddha was the first to teach 17 the universal brotherhood of man. It is a cardinal principle of the 18 Buddhist faith today. The Christian preaches it, but does not 19 practice its own teachings.

20 He instanced the condition of the Negro in the South, who is 21 not allowed in hotels nor to ride in the same cars with white men, 22 and is a being to whom no decent man will speak. He said that he 23 had been in the South, and spoke from his knowledge and 24 observation.

25 AN EVENING WITH OUR HINDU COUSINS

26 (Northampton Daily Herald, April 16, 1894)

28
29 For Swami Vive Kananda proved conclusively that all our 30 neighbors across the water, even the remotest, are our close 31 cousins differing only a trifle in color, language, customs and 32 religion, the silver-tongued Hindu monk prefacing his address in 33 city hall Saturday evening [April 14] by an historic sketch of the 34 origin of his own and all other leading nations of the earth which 35 demonstrated the truth that race-kinship is more of a simple fact 36 than many know or always care to admit.

37 The informal address that followed regarding some of the 38 customs of the Hindu people was more of the nature of a pleasant 39 parlor talk, expressed with the easy freedom of the conversational 40 adept, and to those of his hearers possessing a natural and 41 cultivated interest in the subject both the man and his thought were 42 intensely interesting for more reasons than can be given here. But 43 to others the speaker was disappointing in not covering a larger 44 scope in his word-pictures, the address, although extremely lengthy 45 for the American lecture-platform, referring to very few of the 46 "customs and manners" of the peculiar people considered, and of 47 whose personal, civil, home, social and religious life much more 48 would have been gladly heard from this one of the finest 49 representatives of this oldest of races, which the average student of 1 human nature should find pre-eminently interesting but really 2 knows the least about.

3 The allusions to the life of the Hindu began with a picture of 4 the birth of the Hindu boy, his introduction to educational training, 5 his marriage, slight reference to the home life but not what was 6 expected, the speaker diverging frequently to make comparative 7 comments on the customs and ideas of his own and English-8 speaking races, socially, morally and religiously, the inference in all 9 cases being clearly in favor of his own, although most courteously, 10 kindly and gracefully expressed. Some of his auditors who are 11 tolerably well posted as to social and family conditions among the 12 Hindoos of all classes would have liked to have asked the speaker a 13 challenging question or two on a good many of the points he 14 touched upon. For instance, when he so eloquently and beautifully 15 portrayed the Hindu idea of womanhood as the divine motherhood 16 ideal, to be forever revered, even worshipped with a devotion of 17 loyalty such as the most woman-respecting unselfish and truest of 18 American sons, husbands and fathers cannot even conceive of, one 19 would have liked to know what the reply would have been to the 20 query as to how far this beautiful theory is exemplified in practice 21 in the majority of Hindu homes, which hold wives, mothers, 22 daughters and sisters.

23 The rebuke to the greed for gain, the national vice of luxury-24 seeking, self-seeking, the "dollar-caste" sentiment which taints the 25 dominant white European and American races to their mortal 26 danger, morally and civilly, was only too just and superbly well-put, 27 the slow, soft, quiet, unimpassioned musical voice embodying its 28 thought with all the power and fire of the most vehement physical 29 utterance, and went straight to the mark like the "Thou art the 30 man" of the prophet. But when this learned Hindu nobleman by 31 birth, nature and culture attempts to prove--as he repeatedly did in 32 his frequent and apparently half-unconscious digressions from the 33 special point under consideration--that the distinctively self-centred, 34 self-cultivating, pre-eminently self-soulsaving, negative and passive, 35 not to say selfishly indolent religion of his race has proven itself 36 superior in its usefulness to the world to the vitally aggressive, self-37 forgetful, do-good unto-others-first-last-and-always, go-ye-into-all-38 the-world and work religion which we call Christianity, in whose 39 name nine tenths of all the really practical moral, spiritual and 40 philanthropic work of the world has been and is being done, 41 whatever sad and gross mistakes have been made by its unwise 42 zealots, he attempts a large contract.

43 But to see and hear Swami Vive Kananda is an opportunity 44 which no intelligent fair-minded American ought to miss if one 45 cares to see a shining light of the very finest product of the mental, 46 moral and spiritual culture of a race which reckons its age by 47 thousands where we count ours by hundreds and is richly worth the 48 study of every mind.

49 Sunday afternoon [April 15] the distinguished Hindu spoke to 50 the students of Smith college at the vesper service, the Fatherhood 51 of God and the Brotherhood of man being, virtually, his theme, and 52 that the address made a deep impression is evinced by the report of 1 every auditor, the broadest liberality of true religious sentiment and 2 precept characterizing the whole trend of thought.

3 4 THE MANNERS AND CUSTOMS OF INDIA

5 (Boston Herald, May 15, 1894)

6
7 Association Hall was crowded with ladies yesterday, to hear 8 Swami Vivekananda, the Brahmin Monk talk about "The Religion of 9 India" [actually "The Manners and Customs of India"], for the 10 benefit of the ward 16 day nursery [actually, Tyler-street Day 11 Nursery]. The Brahmin monk has become a fad in Boston, as he 12 was in Chicago last year, and his earnest, honest, cultured manner 13 has won many friends for him.

14 The Hindoo nation is not given to marriage, he said, not 15 because we are women haters, but because our religion teaches us 16 to worship women. The Hindoo is taught to see in every woman his 17 mother, and no man wants to marry his mother. God is mother to us.
18 We don't care anything about God in heaven; it is mother to us. We 19 consider marriage a low vulgar state, and if a man does marry, it is 20 because he needs a helpmate for religion.

21 You say we ill-treat our women. What nation in the world has 22 not ill-treated its women? In Europe or America a man can marry a 23 woman for money, and, after capturing her dollars, can kick her out.
24 In India, on the contrary, when a woman marries for money, her 25 children are considered slaves, according to our teaching, and 26 when a rich man marries, his money passes into the hands of his 27 wife, so that he would be scarcely likely to turn the keeper of his 28 money out of doors.

29 You say we are heathens, we are uneducated, uncultivated, 30 but we laugh in our sleeves at your want of refinement in telling us 31 such things. With us, quality and birth make caste, not money. No 32 amount of money can do anything for you in India. In caste the 33 poorest is as good as the richest, and that is one of the most 34 beautiful things about it.

35 Money has made warfare in the world, and caused Christians 36 to trample on each other's necks. Jealousy, hatred and 37 avariciousness are born of money-getters. Here it is all work, hustle 38 and bustle. Caste saves a man from all this. It makes it possible for 39 a man to live with less money, and it brings work to all. The man of 40 caste has time to think of his soul, and that is what we want in the 41 society of India.

42 The Brahmin is born to worship God, and the higher his caste, 43 the greater his social restrictions are. Caste has kept us alive as a 44 nation, and while it has many defects, it has many more 45 advantages.

46 Mr. Vivekananda described the universities and colleges of 47 India, both ancient and modern, notably the one at Benares, that 48 has 20,000 students and professors.

1 When you judge my religion, he continued, you take it that 2 yours is perfect and mine wrong; and when you criticise the society
3 of India you suppose it to be uncultured just so far as it does not 4 conform to your standard. That is nonsense.

5 In reference to the matter of education, the speaker said that 6 the educated men of India become professors, while the less 7 educated become priests.

8 9 THE RELIGIONS OF INDIA

10 (Boston Herald, May 17, 1894)

11
12 The Brahmin monk, Swami Vivekananda, lectured yesterday 13 afternoon in Association Hall on "The Religions of India", in aid of 14 the Ward 16 Day Nursery. There was a large attendance.

15 The speaker first gave an account of the Mahommedans, who 16 formed, he said, one-fifth of the population. They believed in both 17 Old and New Testaments, but Jesus Christ they regarded only as a 18 prophet. They had no church organization, though there was 19 reading of the Koran.

20 The Parsees, another race, called their sacred book the Zend-21 Avesta, and believed in two warring deities, Armuzd the good and 22 Ahriman the evil. They believed that finally the good would triumph 23 over the evil. Their moral code was summed up in the words: "Good 24 thought, good words, good deeds."

25 The Hindus proper looked up to the Vedas as their religious 26 scripture. They held each individual to the customs of caste, but 27 gave him full liberty to think for himself in religious matters. A part 28 of their method was to seek out some holy man or prophet in order 29 to take advantage of the spiritual current that flowed through him.

30 The Hindus had three different schools of religion--the 31 dualistic, the qualified monistic and the monistic--and these three 32 were regarded as stages through which each individual naturally 33 passed in the course of his religious development.

34 All three believed in God, but the dualistic school believed 35 that God and man were separate entities, while the monistic 36 declared that there was only one existence in the universe, this 37 unitary existence being neither God nor soul, but something 38 beyond.

39 The lecturer quoted from the Vedas to show the character of 40 the Hindu religion, and declared that, to find God, one must search 41 one's own heart.

42 Religion did not consist of pamphlets or books; it consisted of 43 looking into the human heart, and finding there the truths of God 44 and immortality. "Whomsoever I like," said the Vedas, "him I create 45 a prophet," and to be a prophet was all there was of religion.

46 The speaker brought his lecture to a close by giving an 47 account of the Jains, who show remarkable kindness to dumb

1 animals, and whose moral law is summed up in the words: "Not to 2 injure others is the highest good."

3 4 SECTS AND DOCTRINES IN INDIA

5 (Harvard Crimson, May 17, 1894)

6
7 Swami Vivekananda, the Hindoo monk, gave an address last 8 evening in Sever Hall under the auspices of the Harvard Religious 9 Union. The address was very interesting, the clear and eloquent 10 voice of the speaker, and his low, earnest delivery making his words 11 singularly impressive.

12 There are various sects and doctrines in India, said
13 Vivekananda, some of which accept the theory of a personal God, 14 and others which believe that God and the universe are one; but 15 whatever sect the Hindoo belongs to he does not say that his is the 16 only right belief, and that all others must be wrong. He believes 17 that there are many ways of coming to God; that a man who is truly 18 religious rises above the petty quarrels of sects or creed. In India if 19 a man believes that he is a spirit, a soul, and not a body, then he is 20 said to have religion and not till then.

21 To become a monk in India it is necessary to lose all thought 22 of the body; to look upon other human beings as souls. So monks 23 can never marry. Two vows are taken when a man becomes a monk, 24 poverty and chastity. He is not allowed to receive or possess any 25 money whatever. The first ceremony to be performed on joining the 26 order is to be burnt in effigy, which supposed to destroy once for all 27 the old body, name and caste. The man then receives a new name, 28 and is allowed to go forth and preach or travel, but must take no 29 money for what he does.

30 31 LESS DOCTRINE AND MORE BREAD

32 (Baltimore American, October 15, 1894)

33
34 The Lyceum Theater was crowded last night at the first of a 35 series of meetings by the Vrooman Brothers. The subject discussed 36 was "Dynamic Religion".

37 Swami Vivekananda, the high priest [?] from India, was the 38 last speaker. He spoke briefly, and was listened to with marked 39 attention. His English and his mode of delivery were excellent.
40 There is a foreign accent to his syllables, but not enough to prevent 41 him from being plainly understood. He was dressed in the costume 42 of his native country, which was decidedly picturesque. He said he 43 could speak but briefly after the oratory that had preceded him, but 44 he could add his endorsement to all that had been said. He had 45 travelled a great deal, and preached to all kinds of people. He had 46 found that the particular kind of doctrine preached made little 47 difference. What is wanted is practical sort of work. If such ideas 48 could not be carried out, he would lose his faith in humanity. The 1 cry all over the world is "less doctrine and more bread". He thought

2 the sending of missionaries to India all right; he had no objections 3 to offer, but he thought it would be better to send fewer men and 4 more money. So far as India was concerned, she had religious 5 doctrine to spare. Living up to the doctrines was needed more than 6 more doctrines. The people of India, as well as the people all over 7 the world, had been taught to pray, but prayer with the lips was not 8 enough; people should pray with their hearts. "A few people in the 9 world," he said, "really try to do good. Others look on and applaud, 10 and think that they themselves have done great good. Life is love, 11 and when a man ceases to do good to others, he is dead spiritually."

12 On Sunday evening next Swami Vivekananda will make the 13 address of the evening at the Lyceum.

14
15 (Sun, October 15, 1894)
16

17 Vivekananda sat on the stage last night with imperturbable
18 stolidity until it came his turn to speak. Then his manner changed 19 and he spoke with force and feeling. He followed the Vrooman 20 brothers and said there was little to add to what had been said save 21 his testimony as a "man from the Antipodes".

22 "We have doctrines enough," he continued. "What we want 23 now is practical work as presented in these speeches. When asked 24 about the missionaries sent to India I reply all right. But we want 25 money more and men less. India has bushels full of doctrines and to 26 spare. What is wanted is the means to carry them out.

27 "Prayer may be done in different ways. Prayer with the hands 28 is yet higher than prayer with the lips and is more saving.

29 "All religions teach us to do good for our brothers. Doing 30 good is nothing extraordinary--it is the only way to live. Everything 31 in nature tends to expansion for life and contraction for death. It is 32 the same in religion. Do good by helping others without ulterior 33 motives. The moment this ceases contraction and death follow."

34 35 THE RELIGION OF BUDDHA

36 (Morning Herald, October 22, 1894)
37

38 An audience which filled the Lyceum Theatre [Baltimore] 39 from pit to dome assembled last night at the second of the series of 40 meetings held by the Vrooman Brothers in the interest of "Dynamic 41 Religion". Fully 3,000 persons were present. Addresses were made 42 by the Rev. Hiram Vrooman, Rev. Walter Vrooman and Rev. Swarri 43 Vivekananda, the Brahmin High Priest now visiting this city. The 44 speakers of the evening were seated on the stage, the Rev.
45 Vivekananda being an object of particular interest to all. He wore a 46 yellow turban and a red robe tied in at the waste [sic] with a sash of 47 the same color, which added to the Oriental cast of his features and 48 invested him with a peculiar interest. His personality seemed to be

1 the feature of the evening. His address was delivered in an easy, 2 unembarrassed manner, his diction being perfect and his accent 3 similar to that of a cultured member of the Latin race familiar with 4 the English language. He said in part:

5
6 THE HIGH PRIEST SPEAKS
7

8 "Buddha began to found the religion of India 600 years before 9 the birth of Christ. He found the religion of India at that time 10 mainly engaged in eternal discussions upon the nature of the 11 human soul. There was no remedy according to the ideas then 12 prevailing for the cure of religious ills but sacrifices of animals, 13 sacrificial altars and similar methods.

14 "In the midst of this system a priest [?] was born who was a 15 member of one of the leading families who was the founder of 16 Buddhism. His was, in the first place, not the founding of a new 17 religion, but a movement of reformation. He believed in the good of 18 all. His religion, as formulated by him, consisted of the discovery of 19 three things: First, 'There is an evil'; second, 'What is the cause of 20 this evil?' This he ascribed to the desires of men to be superior to 21 others, an evil that could be cured by unselfishness. Third, 'This evil 22 is curable by becoming unselfish'. Force, he concluded, could not 23 cure it; dirt cannot wash dirt; hate cannot cure hate.

24 "This was the basis of his religion. So long as society tries to 25 cure human selfishness by laws and institutions whose aim is to 26 force others to do good to their neighbors, nothing can be done.
27 The remedy is not to place trick against trick and force against 28 force. The only remedy is in making unselfish men and women. You 29 may enact laws to cure present evils, but they will be of no avail.

30 "Buddha found in India too much talking about God and His 31 essence and too little work. He always insisted upon this 32 fundamental truth, that we are to be pure and holy, and that we are 33 to help others to be holy also. He believed that man must go to 34 work and help others; find his soul in others; find his life in others.
35 He believed that in the conjunction of doing good to others is the 36 only good we do ourselves. [sic] He believed that there was always 37 in the world too much theory and too little practice. A dozen 38 Buddhas in India at the present time would do good, and one 39 Buddha in this country would also be beneficial.

40 "When there is too much doctrine, too much belief in my 41 father's religion, too much rational superstition, a change is 42 needed. Such doctrine produces evil, and a reformation is 43 necessary."

44 At the conclusion of Mr. Vivekananda's address there was a 45 hearty burst of applause.

46
47 (Baltimore American, October 22, 1894)
48

1 The Lyceum Theater was crowded to the doors last night at 2 the second meeting of the series conducted by the Vrooman
3 brothers on "Dynamic Religion". Swami Vivekananda, of India, 4 made the principal address. He spoke on the Buddhist religion, and 5 told of the evils which existed among the people of India, at the 6 time of the birth of Buddha. The social inequalities in India, he said, 7 were at that period a thousand times greater than anywhere else in 8 the world. "Six hundred years before Christ," he continued, "the 9 priesthood of India exercised great influence over the minds of the 10 people, and between the upper and nether millstone of 11 intellectuality and learning the people were ground. Buddhism, 12 which is the religion of more than two-thirds of the human family, 13 was not founded as an entirely new religion, but rather as a 14 reformation which carried off the corruption of the times. Buddha 15 seems to have been the only prophet who did everything for others 16 and absolutely nothing for himself. He gave up his home and all the 17 enjoyments of life to spend his days in search of the medicine for 18 the terrible disease of human misery. In an age when men and 19 priests were discussing the essence of the deity, he discovered what 20 people had overlooked, that misery existed. The cause of evil is our 21 desire to be superior to others and our selfishness. The moment 22 that the world becomes unselfish all evil will vanish. So long as 23 society tries to cure evil by laws and institutions, evil will not be 24 cured. The world has tried this method ineffectually for thousands 25 of years. Force against force never cures, and the only cure for evil 26 is unselfishness. We need to teach people to obey the laws rather 27 than to make more laws.

28 Buddhism was the first missionary religion of the world but it 29 was one of the teachings of Buddhism not to antagonize any other 30 religion. Sects weaken their power for good by making war on each 31 other."

32 33 ALL RELIGIONS ARE GOOD

34 (Washington Post, October 29, 1894)

35
36 Mr. Kananda spoke yesterday at the People's Church on the 37 invitation of Dr. Kent, pastor of the church. His talk in the morning 38 was a regular sermon, dealing entirely with the spiritual side of 39 religion, and presenting the, to orthodox sects, rather original 40 proposition that there is good in the foundation of every religion, 41 that all religions, like languages, are descended from a common 42 stock, and that each is good in its corporal and spiritual aspects so 43 long as it is kept free from dogma and fossilism. The address in the 44 afternoon was more in the form of a lecture on the Aryan race, and 45 traced the descent of the various allied nationalities by their 46 language, religion and customs from the common Sanskrit stock.

47 After the meeting, to a Post reporter Mr. Kananda said: "I 48 claim no affiliation with any religious sect, but occupy the position 49 of an observer, and so far as I may, of a teacher to mankind. All 50 religion to me is good. About the higher mysteries of life and

1 existence I can do no more than speculate, as others do.
2 Reincarnation seems to me to be the nearest to a logical 3 explanation for many things with which we are confronted in the 4 realm of religion. But I do not advance it as a doctrine. It is no more 5 than a theory at best, and is not susceptible of proof except by 6 personal experience, and that proof is good only for the man who 7 has it. Your experience is nothing to me, nor mine to you. I am not a 8 believer in miracles--they are repugnant to me in matters of 9 religion. You might bring the world tumbling down about my ears, 10 but that would be no proof to me that there was a God, or that you 11 worked by his agency, if there was one.

12 13 HE BELIEVES IT BLINDLY

15 "I must, however, believe in a past and a hereafter as 16 necessary to the existence of the present. And if we go on from 17 here, we must go in other forms, and so comes my belief in 18 reincarnation. But I can prove nothing, and any one is welcome to 19 deprive me of the theory of reincarnation provided they will show 20 me something better to replace it. Only up to the present I have 21 found nothing that offers so satisfactory an explanation to me."

22 Mr. Kananda is a native of Calcutta, and a graduate of the 23 government university there. He speaks English like a native, 24 having received his university training in that tongue. He has had 25 good opportunity to observe the contact between the native and the 26 English, and it would disappoint a foreign missionary worker to 27 hear him speak in very unconcerned style of the attempts to convert 28 the natives. In this connection he was asked what effect the 29 Western teaching was having on the thought of the Orient.

30 "Of course," he said, "no thought of any sort can come into a 31 country without having its effect, but the effect of Christian 32 teaching on Oriental thought is, if it exists, so small as to be 33 imperceptible. The Western doctrines have made about as much 34 impression there as have the Eastern doctrines here, perhaps not 35 so much. That is, among the higher thinkers of the country. The 36 effect of the missionary work among the masses is imperceptible.
37 When converts are made they of course drop at once out of the 38 native sects, but the mass of the population is so great that the 39 converts of the missionaries have very little effect that can be 40 seen."

41 42 THE YOGIS ARE JUGGLERS

43
44 When asked whether he knew anything of the alleged 45 miraculous performances of the yogis and adepts Mr. Kananda 46 replied that he was not interested in miracles, and that while there 47 were of course a great many clever jugglers in the country, their 48 performances were tricks. Mr. Kananda said that he had seen the 49 mango trick but once, and then by a fakir on a small scale. He held

1 the same view about the alleged attainments of the lamas. "There is 2 a great lack of trained, scientific, and unprejudiced observers in all 3 accounts of these phenomena," said he, "so that it is hard to select 4 the false from the true."

6 THE HINDU VIEW OF LIFE

7 (Brooklyn Times, December 31, 1894)

8
9 The Brooklyn Ethical Association, at the Pouch Gallery last 10 night, tendered a reception to Swami Vivekananda.... Previous to 11 the reception the distinguished visitor delivered a remarkably 12 interesting lecture on "The Religions of India". Among other things 13 he said:

14 "The Hindoo's view of life is that we are here to learn; the 15 whole happiness of life is to learn; the human soul is here to love 16 learning and get experience. I am able to read my Bible better by 17 your Bible, and you will learn to read your Bible the better by my 18 Bible. If there is but one religion to be true, all the rest must be 19 true. The same truth has manifested itself in different forms, and 20 the forms are according to the different circumstances of the 21 physical or mental nature of the different nations.

22 "If matter and its transformation answer for all that we have,
23 there is no necessity for supposing the existence of a soul. But it 24 can [not] be proven that thought has been evolved out of matter. We 25 can not deny that bodies inherit certain tendencies, but those 26 tendencies only mean the physical configuration through which a 27 peculiar mind alone can act in a peculiar way. These peculiar 28 tendencies in that soul have been caused by past actions. A soul 29 with a certain tendency will take birth in a body which is the fittest 30 instrument for the display of that tendency, by the laws of affinity.
31 And this is in perfect accord with science, for science wants to 32 explain everything by habit, and habit is got through repetitions. So 33 these repetitions are also necessary to explain the natural habits of 34 a new-born soul. They were not got in this present life; therefore, 35 they must have come down from past lives.

36 "All religions are so many stages. Each one of them 37 represents the stage through which the human soul passes to 38 realize God. Therefore, not one of them should be neglected. None 39 of the stages are dangerous or bad. They are good. Just as a child 40 becomes a young man, and a young man becomes an old man, so 41 they are travelling from truth to truth; they become dangerous only 42 when they become rigid, and will not move further--when he ceases 43 to grow. If the child refuses to become an old man, then he is 44 diseased, but if they steadily grow, each step will lead them onward 45 until they reach the whole truth. Therefore, we believe in both a 46 personal and impersonal God, and at the same time we believe in 47 all the religions that were, all the religions that are, and all the 48 religions that will be in the world. We also believe we ought not 49 only tolerate these religions, but to accept them.

1 "In the material physical world, expansion is life, and 2 contraction is death. Whatever ceases to expand ceases to live.
3 Translating this in the moral world we have: If one would expand, 4 he must love, and when he ceases to love he dies. It is your nature; 5 you must, because that is the only law of life. Therefore, we must 6 love God for love's sake, so we must do our duty for duty's sake; we 7 must work for work's sake without looking for any reward--know 8 that you are purer and more perfect, know that this is the real 9 temple of God."

10
11 (Brooklyn Daily Eagle, December 31, 1894)
12

1 After referring to the views of the Mohammedans, the 2 Buddhists and other religious schools of India, the speaker said that 3 the Hindoos received their religion through the revelations of the 4 Vedas, who teach that creation is without beginning or end. They 5 teach that man is a spirit living in a body. The body will die, but the 6 man will not. The spirit will go on living. The soul was not created 7 from nothing for creation means a combination and that means a 8 certain future dissolution. If then the soul was created it must die.
9 Therefore, it was not created. He might be asked how it is that we 10 do not remember anything of our past lives. This could be easily 11 explained. Consciousness is the name only of the surface of the 12 mental ocean, and within its depths are stored up all our 13 experiences. The desire was to find out something that was stable.
14 The mind, the body, all nature, in fact, is changing. This question of 15 finding something that was infinite had long been discussed. One 16 school of which the modern Buddhists are the representatives, 17 teach that everything that could not be solved by the five senses 18 was nonexistent. That every object is dependent upon all others, 19 that it is a delusion that man is an independent entity. The idealists, 20 on the other hand, claim that each individual is an independent 21 body. The true solution of this problem is that nature is a mixture of 22 dependence and independence, of reality and idealism. There is a 23 dependence which is proved by the fact that the movements of our 24 bodies are controlled by our minds, and our minds are controlled by 25 the spirit within us, which Christians call the soul. Death is but a 26 change. Those who have passed beyond and are occupying high 27 positions there are but the same as those who remain here, and 28 those who are occupying lower positions there are the same as 29 others here. Every human being is a perfect being. If we sit down in 30 the dark and lament that it is so dark it will profit us nothing, but if 31 we procure matches and strike a light, the darkness goes out 32 immediately. So, if we sit down and lament that our bodies are 33 imperfect, that our souls are imperfect, we are not profited. When 34 we call in the light of reason, then this darkness of doubt will 35 disappear. The object of life is to learn. Christians can learn from 36 the Hindus, and the Hindus from Christians. He could read his 37 Bible better after reading ours. "Tell your children," he said, "that 38 religion is a positive something, and not a negative something. It is 39 not the teachings of men, but a growth, a development of 40 something higher within our nature that seeks outlet. Every child 41 born into the world is born with a certain accumulated experience.
42 The idea of independence which possesses us shows there is 43 something in us besides mind and body. The body and mind are 44 dependent. The soul that animates us is an independent factor that 45 creates this wish for freedom. If we are not free how can we hope 46 to make the world good or perfect? We hold that we are makers of 47 ourselves, that what we have we make ourselves. We have made it 48 and we can unmake it. We believe in God, the Father of us all, the 49 Creator and Preserver of His children, omnipresent and 50 omnipotent. We believe in a personal God, as you do, but we go 51 further. We believe that we are He. We believe in all the religions 52 that have gone before, in all that now exist and in all that are to 53 come. The Hindu bows down to the all religion [sic] for in this world

1 the idea is addition, not subtraction. We would make up a bouquet
2 of all beautiful colors for God, the Creator, who is a personal God.
3 We must love God for love's sake, we must do our duty to Him for 4 duty's sake, and must work for Him for work's sake and must 5 worship Him for worship's sake.

6 "Books are good but they are only maps. Reading a book by 7 direction of a man I read that so many inches of rain fell during the 8 year. Then he told me to take the book and squeeze it between my 9 hands. I did so and not a drop of water came from it. It was the idea 10 only that the book conveyed. So we can get good from books, from 11 the temple, from the church, from anything, so long as it leads us 12 onward and upward. Sacrifices, genuflections, rumblings and 13 mutterings are not religion. They are all good if they help us to 14 come to a perception of the perfection which we shall realize when 15 we come face to face with Christ. These are words or instructions 16 to us by which we may profit. Columbus, when he discovered this 17 continent, went back and told his countrymen that he had found the 18 new world. They would not believe him, or some would not, and he 19 told them to go and search for themselves. So with us, we read 20 these truths and come in and find the truths for ourselves and then 21 we have a belief which no one can take from us."

22 After the lecture an opportunity was given those present to 23 question the speaker on any point on which they wished to have his 24 views. Many of them availed themselves of this offer.

25 IDEALS OF WOMANHOOD

26 (Brooklyn Standard Union, January 21, 1895)

27
28
29 Swami Vivekananda, after being presented to the audience by 30 Dr. Janes, president of the Ethical Association, said in part:

31 "The product of the slums of any nation cannot be the 32 criterion of our judgment of that nation. One may collect the rotten, 33 worm-eaten apples under every apple tree in the world, and write a 34 book about each of them, and still know nothing of the beauty and 35 possibilities of the apple tree. Only in the highest and best can we 36 judge a nation--the fallen are a race by themselves. Thus it is not 37 only proper, but just and right, to judge a custom by its best, by its 38 ideal.

39 "The ideal of womanhood centres in the Arian race of India, 40 the most ancient in the world's history. In that race, men and 41 women were priests, 'sabatinini [saha-dharmini],' or co-religionists, 42 as the Vedas call them. There every family had its hearth or altar, 43 on which, at the time of the wedding, the marriage fire was kindled, 44 which was kept alive, until either spouse died, when the funeral pile 45 was lighted from its spark. There man and wife together offered 46 their sacrifices, and this idea was carried so far that a man could 47 not even pray alone, because it was held that he was only half a 48 being, for that reason no unmarried man could become a priest.
49 The same held true in ancient Rome and Greece.

1 "But with the advent of a distinct and separate priest-class, 2 the co-priesthood of the woman in all these nations steps back.
3 First it was the Assyrian race, coming of Semitic blood, which 4 proclaimed the doctrine that girls have no voice, and no right, even 5 when married. The Persians drank deep of this Babylonian idea, 6 and by them it was carried to Rome and to Greece, and everywhere 7 woman degenerated.

8 "Another cause was instrumental in bringing this about--the 9 change in the system of marriage. The earliest system was a 10 matriarchal one; that is, one in which the mother was the centre, 11 and in which the girls acceded to her station. This led to the curious 12 system of the Polianders [polyandrous], where five or six brothers 13 often married one wife. Even the Vedas contain a trace of it in the 14 provision, that when a man died without leaving any children, his 15 widow was permitted to live with another man, until she became a 16 mother; but the children she bore did not belong to their father, but 17 to her dead husband. In later years the widow was allowed to marry 18 again, which the modern idea forbids her to do.

19 "But side by side with these excrescences a very intense idea 20 of personal purity sprang up in the nation. On every page the Vedas 21 preach personal purity. The laws in this respect were extremely 22 strict. Every boy and girl was sent to the university, where they 23 studied until their twentieth or thirtieth year; there the least 24 impurity was punished almost cruelly. This idea of personal purity 25 has imprinted itself deeply into the very heart of the race, 26 amounting almost to a mania. The most conspicuous example of it is 27 to be found in the capture of Chito [Chitor] by the Mohammedans.
28 The men defended the town against tremendous odds; and when 29 the women saw that defeat was inevitable they lit a monstrous fire 30 on the market place, and when the enemy broke down the gates 31 74,500 women jumped on the huge funeral pile and perished in the 32 flames. This noble example has been handed down in India to the 33 present time, when every letter bears the words '74,500,' which 34 means that any one who unlawfully reads the letter, thereby 35 becomes guilty of a crime similar to the one which drove those 36 noble women of Chito to their death.

37 "The next period is that of the monks; it came with the advent 38 of Buddhism, which taught that only the monks could reach the 39 'nirvana', something similar to the Christian heaven. The result was 40 that all India became one huge monastery; there was but one 41 object, one battle--to remain pure. All the blame was cast onto 42 women, and even the proverbs warned against them. 'What is the 43 gate to hell?' was one of them, to which the answer was: 'Woman'.
44 Another read: 'What is the chain which binds us all to dust?
45 Woman'. Another one: 'Who is the blindest of the blind? He who is 46 deceived by woman.'

47 "The same idea is to be found in the cloisters of the West. The 48 development of all monasticism always meant the degeneration of 49 women.

50 "But eventually another idea of womanhood arose. In the 51 West it found its ideal in the wife, in India in the mother. But do not

1 think that the priests were altogether responsible for this change. I 2 know they always lay claim to everything in the world and I say this, 3 although I am myself a priest. I'll bend my knees to every prophet in 4 every religion and clime, but candor compels me to say, that here in 5 the West the development of women was brought about by men like 6 John Stuart Mill and the revolutionary French philosophers.
7 Religion has done something, no doubt, but not all. Why, in Asia
8 Minor, Christian bishops to this day keep a harem!

9 "The Christian ideal is that which is found in the Anglo-Saxon 10 race. The Mohammedan woman differs vastly from her western 11 sisters in so far as her social and intellectual development is not so 12 pronounced. But do not, on that account, think that the 13 Mohammedan woman is unhappy, because it is not so. In India
14 woman has enjoyed property rights since thousands of years. Here 15 a man may disinherit his wife, in India the whole estate of the 16 deceased husband must go to the wife, personal property 17 absolutely, real property for life.

18 "In India the mother is the centre of the family and our 19 highest ideal. She is to us the representative of God, as God is the 20 mother of the Universe. It was a female sage who first found the 21 unity of God, and laid down this doctrine in one of the first hymns of 22 the Vedas. Our God is both personal and absolute, the absolute is 23 male, the personal, female. And thus it comes that we now say: 'The 24 first manifestation of God is the hand that rocks the cradle.' He is of 25 the 'arian' race, who is born through prayer, and he is a nonarian, 26 who is born through sensuality.

27 "The doctrine of prenatal influence is now slowly being 28 recognized, and science as well as religion calls out: 'Keep yourself 29 holy, and pure.' So deeply has this been recognized in India, that 30 there we even speak of adultery in marriage, except when marriage 31 is consummated in prayer. And I and every good Hindoo believe, 32 that my mother was pure and holy, and hence I owe her everything 33 that I am. That is the secret of the race--chastity."

34 35 TRUE BUDDHISM

36 (Brooklyn Standard Union, February 4, 1895)

37
38 Swami Vivekananda, being presented by Dr. Janes, the 39 president of the Ethical Association, under whose auspices these 40 lectures are given, said in part: "The Hindoo occupies a unique 41 position towards Buddhism. Like Christ, who antagonized the Jews, 42 Buddha antagonized the prevailing religion of India; but while 43 Christ was rejected by his countrymen, Buddha was accepted as 44 God Incarnate. He denounced the priestcraft at the very doors of 45 their temples, yet to-day he is worshipped by them.

1 "Not, however, the creed which bears his name. What Buddha
2 taught, the Hindoo believes, but what the Buddhists teach, we do
3 not accept. For the teachings of the Great Master, spread out 4 broadcast over the land, came back in tradition, colored by the 5 channels through which they passed.

6 "In order to understand Buddhism fully we must go back to 7 the mother religion from which it came. The books of Veda have two 8 parts; the first, Cura makanda [Karma Kanda], contains the 9 sacrificial portion, while the second part, the Vedanta, denounces 10 sacrifices, teaching charity and love, but not death. Each sect took 11 up what portion it liked. The charvaka, or materialist, basing his 12 doctrine on the first part, believed that all was matter and that 13 there is neither a heaven nor a hell, neither a soul nor a God. The 14 second sect, the Gains [Jains], were very moral atheists, who, while 15 rejecting the idea of a God, believed that there is a soul, striving for 16 more perfect development. These two sects were called the 17 heretics. A third sect was called orthodox, because it accepted the 18 Vedas, although it denied the existence of a personal God, believing 19 that everything sprang from the atom or nature.

20 "Thus the intellectual world was divided before Buddha came.
21 But for a correct understanding of his religion, it is also necessary 22 to speak of the caste then existing. The Vedas teach that he who 23 knows God is a Brahma [Brahmin]; he who protects his fellows is a 24 Chocta [Kshatriya], while he who gains his livelihood in trade is a 25 Visha [Vaishya]. These different social diversions [divisions] 26 developed or degenerated into iron-bound casts [castes], and an 27 organized and crystallized priestcraft stood upon the neck of the 28 nation. At this time Buddha was born, and his religion is therefore 29 the culmination of an attempt at a religious and a social 30 reformation.

31 "The air was full of the din of discussion; 20,000 blind priests 32 were trying to lead 20,000,000 [?] blind men, fighting amongst 33 themselves. What was more needed at that time than for a Buddha 34 to preach? 'Stop quarreling, throw your books aside, be perfect!' 35 Buddha never fought true castes, for they are nothing but the 36 congregation of those of a particular natural tendency, and they are 37 always valuable. But Buddha fought the degenerated castes with 38 their hereditary privileges, and spoke to the Brahmins: 'True 39 Brahmins are not greedy, nor criminal nor angry--are you such? If 40 not, do not mimic the genuine, real men. Caste is a state, not an 41 iron-bound class, and every one who knows and loves God is a true 42 Brahmin.' And with regard to the sacrifices, he said: 'Where do the 43 Vedas say that sacrifices make us pure? They may please, perhaps, 44 the angels, but they make us no better. Hence, let off these 45 mummeries--love God and strive to be perfect.'

46 "In later years these doctrines of Buddha were forgotten.
47 Going to lands yet unprepared for the reception of these noble 48 truths, they came back tainted with the foibles of these nations.
49 Thus the Nihilists arose--a sect whose doctrine it was that the 50 whole universe, God and soul, had no basis, but that everything is 51 continually changing. They believed in nothing but the enjoyment of 52 the moment, which eventually resulted in the most revolting orgies.

1 That, however, is not the doctrine of Buddha, but a horrible
2 degeneration of it, and honor to the Hindoo nation, who stood up 3 and drove it out.

4 "Every one of Buddha's teachings is founded in the Vedantas.
5 He was one of those monks who wanted to bring out the truths,
6 hidden in those books and in the forest monasteries. I do not 7 believe that the world is ready for them even now; it still wants 8 those lower religions, which teach of a personal God. Because of 9 this, the original Buddhism could not hold the popular mind, until it 10 took up the modifications, which were reflected back from Thibet 11 and the Tartars. Original Buddhism was not at all nihilistic. It was 12 but an attempt to combat caste and priestcraft; it was the first in 13 the world to stand as champion of the dumb animals, the first to 14 break down the caste, standing between man and man."

15 Swami Vivekananda concluded his lecture with the 16 presentation of a few pictures from the life of Buddha, the "great 17 one, who never thought a thought and never performed a deed 18 except for the good of others; who had the greatest intellect and 19 heart, taking in all mankind and all the animals, all embracing, 20 ready to give up his life for the highest angels as well as for the 21 lowest worm." He first showed how Buddha, for the purpose of 22 saving a herd of sheep, intended for a king's sacrifice, had thrown 23 himself upon the altar, and thus accomplished his purpose. He next 24 pictured how the great prophet had parted from his wife and baby 25 at the cry of suffering mankind, and how, lastly, after his teachings 26 had been universally accepted in India, he accepted the invitation 27 of a despised Pariah, who dined him on swine's flesh, from the 28 effects of which he died.

30 INDIA'S GIFT TO THE WORLD

31 (Brooklyn Standard Union, February 27, 1895)

33 Swami Vivekananda, the Hindoo monk, delivered a lecture 34 Monday night under the auspices of the Brooklyn Ethical 35 Association before a fairly large audience at the hall of the Long 36 Island Historical Society, corner Pierrepont and Clinton streets. His 37 subject was "India's Gift to the World".

38 He spoke of the wondrous beauties of his native land, "where 39 stood the earliest cradle of ethics, arts, sciences, and literature, and 40 the integrity of whose sons and the virtue of whose daughters have 41 been sung by all travelers." Then the lecturer showed in rapid 42 details, what India has given to the world.

1 "In religion," he said, "she has exerted a great influence on 2 Christianity, as the very teachings of Christ would [could] be traced 3 back to those of Buddha." He showed by quotations from the works
4 of European and American scientists the many points of similarity 5 between Buddha and Christ. The latter's birth, his seclusion from 6 the world, the number of his apostles, and the very ethics of his 7 teachings are the same as those of Buddha, living many hundred 8 years before him.

9 "Is it mere chance," the lecturer asked, "or was Buddha's 10 religion but the foreshadowing of that of Christ? The majority of 11 your thinkers seem to be satisfied in the latter explanation, but 12 there are some bold enough to say that Christianity is the direct 13 offspring of Buddhism just as the earliest heresy in the Christian 14 religion--the Monecian [Manichaeian] heresy--is now universally 15 regarded as the teaching of a sect of Buddhists. But there is more 16 evidence that Christianity is founded in Buddhism. We find it in 17 recently discovered inscriptions from the reign of Emperor Oshoka 18 [Asoka] of India, about 300 B.C., who made treaties with all the 19 Grecian kings, and whose missionaries discriminated 20 [disseminated?] in those very parts, where, centuries after, 21 Christianity flourished, the principles of the Buddhistic religion.
22 Thus it is explained, why you have our doctrine of trinity, of 23 incarnation of God, and of our ethics, and why the service in our 24 temples is so much alike to that in your present Catholic churches, 25 from the mass to the chant and benediction. Buddhism had all these 26 long before you. Now use your own judgment on these premises-- 27 we Hindoos stand ready to be convinced that yours is the earlier 28 religion, although we had ours some three hundred years before 29 yours was even thought of.

30 "The same holds good with respect to sciences. India has 31 given to antiquity the earliest scientific physicians, and, according 32 to Sir William Hunter, she has even contributed to modern medical 33 science by the discovery of various chemicals and by teaching you 34 how to reform misshapen ears and noses. Even more it has done in 35 mathematics, for algebra, geometry, astronomy, and the triumph of 36 modern science--mixed mathematics--were all invented in India, just 37 so much as the ten numerals, the very cornerstone of all present 38 civilization, were discovered in India, and are in reality, Sanskrit 39 words.

40 "In philosophy we are even now head and shoulders above 41 any other nation, as Schopenhauer, the great German philosopher, 42 has confessed. In music India gave to the world her system of 43 notation, with the seven cardinal notes and the diatonic scale, all of 44 which we enjoyed as early as 350 B.C., while it came to Europe only 45 in the eleventh century. In philology, our Sanskrit language is now 46 universally acknowledged to be the foundation of all European 47 languages, which, in fact, are nothing but jargonized Sanskrit.

48 "In literature, our epics and poems and dramas rank as high 49 as those of any language; our 'Shaguntala' [Shakuntala] was 50 summarized by Germany's greatest poet, as 'heaven and earth 51 united'. India has given to the world the fables of Aesop, which 52 were copied by Aesop from an old Sanskrit book; it has given the

1 Arabian Nights, yes, even the story of Cinderella and the Bean 2 Stalks. In manufacture, India was the first to make cotton and 3 purple [dye], it was proficient in all works of jewelry, and the very 4 word 'sugar', as well as the article itself, is the product of India.
5 Lastly she has invented the game of chess and the cards and the 6 dice. So great, in fact, was the superiority of India in every respect, 7 that it drew to her borders the hungry cohorts of Europe, and 8 thereby indirectly brought about the discovery of America.

9 "And now, what has the world given to India in return for all 10 that? Nothing but nullification [vilification] and curse and contempt.
11 The world waded in her children's life-blood, it reduced India to 12 poverty and her sons and daughters to slavery, and now it adds 13 insult to injury by preaching to her a religion which can only thrive 14 on the destruction of every other religion. But India is not afraid. It 15 does not beg for mercy at the hands of any nation. Our only fault is 16 that we cannot fight to conquer; but we trust in the eternity of 17 truth. India's message to the world is first of all, her blessing; she is 18 returning good for the evil which is done her, and thus she puts into 19 execution this noble idea, which had its origin in India. Lastly, 20 India's message is, that calm goodness, patience and gentleness
21 will ultimately triumph. For where are the Greeks, the one-time 22 masters of the earth? They are gone. Where are the Romans, at the 23 tramp of whose cohorts the world trembled? Passed away. Where 24 are the Arabs, who in fifty years had carried their banners from the 25 Atlantic to the Pacific? and where are the Spaniards, the cruel 26 murderers of millions of men? Both races are nearly extinct; but 27 thanks to the morality of her children, the kinder race will never 28 perish, and she will yet see the hour of her triumph."

29 At the close of the lecture, which was warmly applauded, 30 Swami Vivekananda answered a number of questions in regard to 31 the customs of India. He denied positively the truth of the 32 statement published in yesterday's [February 25] Standard Union, 33 to the effect that widows are ill-treated in India. The law guarantees 34 her not only her own property, before marriage, but also all she 35 received from her husband, at whose death, if there be no direct 36 heirs, the property goes to her. Widows seldom marry in India, 37 because of the scarcity of men. He also stated that the self-38 sacrifices of wives at the death of their husbands as well as the 39 fanatical self-destruction under the wheels of the Juggernaut, have 40 wholly stopped, and referred his hearers for proof to Sir William 41 Hunter's "History of the Indian Empire".

42 43 CHILD WIDOWS OF INDIA

44 (Daily Eagle, February 27, 1895)

45 46 Swami Vivekananda, the Hindu monk, lectured in Historical 47 hall Monday night under the auspices of the Brooklyn Ethical 48 association, on "India's Gift to the World". There were about two 49 hundred and fifty people in the hall when the Swami stepped on the 50 platform. Much interest was manifested on account of the denial by

1 Mrs. James McKeen, president of the Brooklyn Ramabai circle, 2 which is interested in Christian work in India, of the statement 3 attributed to the lecture that the child widows of India were not 4 protected [ill-treated]. In no part of his lecture was reference made 5 to this denial, but after he had concluded, one of the audience 6 asked the lecturer what explanation he had to make to the 7 statement. Swami Vivekananda said that it was untrue that child
8 widows were abused or ill treated in any way. He added:

9 "It is a fact that some Hindus marry very young. Others marry 10 when they have attained a fair age and some do not marry at all.
11 My grandfather was married when quite a child. My father when he 12 was 14 years old and I am 30 years old and am not yet married.
13 When a husband dies all his possessions go to his widow. If a widow 14 is poor she is the same as poor widows in any other country. Old 15 men sometimes marry children, but if the husband was wealthy it 16 was all the better for the widow the sooner he died. I have traveled 17 all over India, but failed to see a case of the ill treatment 18 mentioned. At one time there were religious fanatics, widows, who 19 threw themselves into a fire and were consumed by the flames at 20 the death of their husbands. The Hindus did not believe in this, but 21 did not prevent it, and it was not until the British obtained control 22 of India that it was finally prohibited. These women were 23 considered saints and in many instances monuments were erected 24 to their memory."

25 26 27 SOME CUSTOMS OF THE HINDUS

28 (Brooklyn Standard Union, April 8, 1895)
29

30 A special meeting of the Brooklyn Ethical Association, with an 31 address by Swami Vivekananda, the Hindu monk, as the main 32 feature, was held at the Pouch Gallery, on Clinton avenue, last 33 night. "Some customs of the Hindus; what they mean, and how they 34 are misinterpreted," was the subject treated. A large throng of 35 people filled the spacious gallery.

36 Dressed in his Oriental costume, his eyes bright, and a flush 37 mantling his face, Swami Vivekananda started to tell of his people, 38 of his country, and its customs. He desired only that justice be 39 shown to him and to his. In the beginning of his discourse he said 40 he would give a general idea of India. He said it was not a country 41 but a continent; that erroneous ideas had been promulgated by 42 travellers who had never seen the country. He said that there were 43 nine separate languages spoken and over 100 different dialects. He 44 spoke severely of those who wrote about his country, and said their 45 brains were addled by superstition, and that they had an idea that 46 everyone outside of the pale of their own religion was a horrible 47 blackguard. One of the customs that had often been misinterpreted 48 was the brushing of the teeth by the Hindus. They never put hair or 49 skin in their mouths, but use a plant. "Hence a man wrote," said the 50 speaker, "that the Hindus get up early in the morning and swallow a

1 plant." He said the [custom of widows throwing themselves under 2 the] car of juggernaut did not exist, never had, and that no one 3 knew how such a story started.

4 Swami Vivekananda's talk on caste was most comprehensive 5 and interesting. He said it was not a granted [graded] system of 6 classes, but that each caste thought itself to be superior to all the 7 others. He said it was a trade guild and not a religious institution.
8 He said that it had been in existence from time immemorial, and 9 explained how at first only certain rights were hereditary, but how 10 afterward the ties were bound closer, and intermarriage and eating 11 and drinking were restricted to each caste.

12 The speaker told of the effect that the mere presence of a 13 Christian or Mohammedan would have on a Hindu household. He 14 said that it was veritable pollution for a white man to step into a 15 Hindu's presence, and that after receiving one outside of his 16 religion, the Hindu always took a bath.

17 The Hindu monk abused [?] the order of the Pariahs roundly, 18 saying they did all the menial work, ate carrion and were the 19 scavengers. He also said that the people who wrote books on India 20 came only into contact with these people, and not with genuine 21 Hindus. He described the trial of one who broke the rules of caste, 22 and said that the only punishment inflicted was the refusal of the 23 particular caste to intermarry or drink or eat with him or his 24 children. All other ideas were erroneous.

25 In explaining the defects of caste, the speaker said that in 26 preventing competition it produced stagnation, and completely 27 blocked the progress of the people. He said that in taking away 28 brutality it stopped social improvements. In checking competition it 29 increased population. In its favor, he said, were the facts that it was 30 the only ideal of equality and fraternity. That money had nothing to 31 do with social standing in the caste. All were equal. He said that the 32 fault of all the great reformers was that they thought caste was due 33 only to religious representation, instead of ascribing it to the right 34 source, namely, the curious social conditions. He spoke very bitterly 35 of the attempts of the English and Mohammedans to civilize the 36 country by the bayonet and fire and sword. He said that to abolish 37 caste one must change the social conditions completely and destroy 38 the entire economic system of the country. Better, he said, that the 39 waves of the [Bay of] Bengal flow and drown all rather than this.
40 English civilization was composed of the three "B's"--Bible, bayonet, 41 and brandy. "That is civilization, and it has been carried to such an 42 extent that the average income of a Hindu is 50 cents a month.
43 Russia is outside, saying, 'Let's civilize a little,' and England goes on 44 and on."

45 The monk grew excited as he walked up and down, talking 46 rapidly about the way the Hindus had been treated. He scored the 47 foreign educated Hindus, and described their return to their native 48 land, "full of champagne and new ideas". He said that child-
49 marriage was bad, because the West said so, and that the mother-50 in-law could torture her daughter-in-law with impunity, as the son 51 could not interfere. He said that the foreigners took every 1 opportunity to abuse the heathen, because they had so many evils

2 of their own that they wanted to cover them up. He said that each 3 nation must work out its own salvation, and that no one else could 4 solve its problems.

5 In speaking of India's benefactors he asked whether America
6 had ever heard of David Herr [Hare], who established the first 7 college for women, and who had devoted so much of his life to 8 education.

9 The speaker gave a number of Indian proverbs that were not 10 at all complimentary to the English. In closing he made an earnest 11 appeal for his land. He said:

12 "It matters not as long as India is true to herself and to her 13 religion. But a blow has been struck at her heart by this awful 14 godless West when she sends hypocrisy and atheism into her midst.
15 Instead of sending bushels of abuses, carloads of vituperation and 16 shiploads of condemnations, let an endless stream of love go forth.
17 Let us all be men!"

UNITY, THE GOAL OF RELIGION

(Delivered in New York, 1896)

This universe of ours, the universe of the senses, the rational, the intellectual, is bounded on both sides by the illimitable, the unknowable, the ever unknown. Herein is the search, herein are the inquiries, here are the facts; from this comes the light which is known to the world as religion. Essentially, however, religion belongs to the supersensuous and not to the sense plane. It is beyond all reasoning and is not on the plane of intellect. It is a vision, an inspiration, a plunge into the unknown and unknowable, making the unknowable more than the known, for it can never be "known". This search has been in human mind, as I believe, from the very beginning of humanity. There cannot have been human reasoning and intellect in any period of the world's history without this struggle, this search beyond. In our little universe, this human mind, we see a thought arise. Whence it arises we do not know; and when it disappears, where it goes, we know not either. The macrocosm and the microcosm are, as it were, in the same groove, passing through the same stages, vibrating in the same key.

I shall try to bring before you the Hindu theory that religions do not come from without, but from within. It is my belief that religious thought is in man's very constitution, so much so that it is impossible for him to give up religion until he can give up his mind and body, until he can give up thought and life. As long as a man thinks, this struggle must go on, and so long man must have some form of religion. Thus we see various forms of religion in the world. It is a bewildering study; but it is not, as many of us think, a vain speculation. Amidst this chaos there is harmony, throughout these discordant sounds there is a note of concord; and he who is prepared to listen to it will catch the tone.

The great question of all questions at the present time is this: Taking for granted that the known and the knowable are bounded on both sides by the unknowable and the infinitely unknown, why struggle for that infinite unknown? Why shall we not be content with the known? Why shall we not rest satisfied with eating, drinking, and doing a little good to society? This idea is in the air. From the most learned professor to the prattling baby, we are told that to do good to the world is all of religion, and that it is useless to trouble ourselves about questions of the beyond. So much is this case that it has become a truism.

But fortunately we must inquire into the beyond. This present, this expressed, is only one part of that unexpressed. The sense universe is, as it were, only one portion, one bit of that infinite spiritual universe projected into the plane of sense consciousness. How can this little bit of projection be explained, be understood, without knowing that which is beyond? It is said of Socrates that one day while lecturing at Athens, he met a Brahmin who had travelled into Greece, and Socrates told the Brahmin that

1 the greatest study for mankind is man. The Brahmin sharply
2 retorted: "How can you know man until you know God?" This God, 3 this eternally Unknowable, or Absolute, or Infinite, or without 4 name--you may call Him by what name you like--is the rationale, the 5 only explanation, the raison d'être of that which is known and 6 knowable, this present life. Take anything before you, the most 7 material thing--take one of the most material sciences, as chemistry 8 or physics, astronomy or biology--study it, push the study forward 9 and forward, and the gross forms will begin to melt and become 10 finer and finer, until they come to a point where you are bound to 11 make a tremendous leap from these material things into the 12 immaterial. The gross melts into the fine, physics into metaphysics, 13 in every department of knowledge.

14 Thus man finds himself driven to a study of the beyond. Life 15 will be a desert, human life will be vain, if we cannot know the 16 beyond. It is very well to say: Be contented with the things of the 17 present. The cows and the dogs are, and so are all animals; and that 18 is what makes them animals. So if man rests content with the 19 present and gives up all search into the beyond, mankind will have 20 to go back to the animal plane again. It is religion, the inquiry into 21 the beyond, that makes the difference between man and animal.
22 Well has it been said that man is the only animal that naturally looks 23 upwards; every other animal naturally looks down. That looking 24 upward and going upward and seeking perfection are what is called 25 salvation; and the sooner a man begins to go higher, the sooner he 26 raises himself towards this idea of truth as salvation. It does not 27 consist in the amount of money in your pocket, or the dress you 28 wear, or the house you live in, but in the wealth of spiritual thought 29 in your brain. That is what makes for human progress, that is the 30 source of all material and intellectual progress, the motive power 31 behind, the enthusiasm that pushes mankind forward.

32 Religion does not live on bread, does not dwell in a house.
33 Again and again you hear this objection advanced: "What good can 34 religion do? Can it take away the poverty of the poor?" Supposing it 35 cannot, would that prove the untruth of religion? Suppose a baby 36 stands up among you when you are trying to demonstrate an 37 astronomical theorem, and says, "Does it bring gingerbread?" "No, 38 it does not", you answer. "Then", says the baby, "it is useless." 39 Babies judge the whole universe from their own standpoint, that of 40 producing gingerbread, and so do the babies of the world. We must 41 not judge of higher things from a low standpoint. Everything must 42 be judged by its own standard and the infinite must be judged by 43 the standard of infinity. Religion permeates the whole of man's life, 44 not only the present, but the past, present, and future. It is, 45 therefore, the eternal relation between the eternal soul and the 46 eternal God. Is it logical to measure its value by its action upon five 47 minutes of human life? Certainly not. These are all negative 48 arguments.

49 Now comes the question: Can religion really accomplish
50 anything? It can. It brings to man eternal life. It has made man 51 what he is, and will make of this human animal a god. That is what 52 religion can do. Take religion from human society and what will 1 remain? Nothing but a forest of brutes. Sense-happiness is not the 2 goal of humanity. Wisdom (Jnana) is the goal of all life. We find that 3 man enjoys his intellect more than an animal enjoys its senses; and 4 we see that man enjoys his spiritual nature even more than this 5 rational nature. So the highest wisdom must be this spiritual 6 knowledge. With this knowledge will come bliss. All these things of 7 this world are but the shadows, the manifestations in the third or 8 fourth degree of the real Knowledge and Bliss.

9 One question more: What is the goal? Nowadays it is asserted 10 that man is infinitely progressing, forward and forward, and there is 11 no goal of perfection to attain to. Ever approaching, never attaining, 12 whatever that may mean and however wonderful it may be, it is 13 absurd on the face of it. Is there any motion in a straight line? A 14 straight line infinitely projected becomes a circle, it returns to the 15 starting point. You must end where you begin; and you began in 16 God, you must go back to God. What remains? Detail work. Through 17 eternity you have to do the detail work.

18 Yet another question: Are we to discover new truths of 19 religion as we go on? Yea and nay. In the first place, we cannot 20 know anything more of religion, it has all been known. In all 21 religions of the world you will find it claimed that there is a unity
22 within us. Being one with divinity, there cannot be any further 23 progress in that sense. Knowledge means finding this unity. I see 24 you as men and women, and this is variety. It becomes scientific 25 knowledge when I group you together and call you human beings.
26 Take the science of chemistry, for instance. Chemists are seeking to 27 resolve all known substances into their original elements, and if 28 possible, to find the one element from which all these are derived.
29 The time may come when they will find one element that is the 30 source of all other elements. Reaching that, they can go further; the 31 science of chemistry will have become perfect. So it is with the 32 science of religion. If we can discover this perfect unity, there 33 cannot be any further progress.

34 The next question is: Can such a unity be found? In India the 35 attempt has been made from the earliest times to reach a science of 36 religion and philosophy, for the Hindus do not separate these as is 37 customary in Western countries. We regard religion and philosophy 38 as but two aspects of one thing which must equally be grounded in 39 reason and scientific truth.

40 The system of the Sankhya philosophy is one of the most 41 ancient in India, or in fact in the world. Its great exponent Kapila is 42 the father of all Hindu psychology; and the ancient system that he 43 taught is still the foundation of all accepted systems of philosophy 44 in India today which are known as the Darshanas. They all adopt his 45 psychology, however widely they differ in other respects.

46 The Vedanta, as the logical outcome of the Sankhya, 47 pushes its conclusion yet further. While its cosmology agrees with 48 that taught by Kapila, the Vedanta is not satisfied to end in dualism, 49 but continues its search for the final unity which is alike the goal of 50 science and religion.

THE FREE SOUL

(Delivered in New York, 1896)

The analysis of the Sankhyas stops with the duality of existence--Nature and souls. There are an infinite number of souls, which, being simple, cannot die, and must therefore be separate from Nature. Nature in itself changes and manifests all these phenomena; and the soul, according to the Sankhyas, is inactive. It is a simple by itself, and Nature works out all these phenomena for the liberation of the soul; and liberation consists in the soul discriminating that it is not Nature. At the same time we have seen that the Sankhyas were bound to admit that every soul was omnipresent. Being a simple, the soul cannot be limited, because all limitation comes either through time, space, or causation. The soul being entirely beyond these cannot have any limitation. To have limitation one must be in space, which means the body; and that which is body must be in Nature. If the soul had form, it would be identified with Nature; therefore the soul is formless, and that which is formless cannot be said to exist here, there, or anywhere. It must be omnipresent. Beyond this the Sankhya philosophy does not go.

1 The first argument of the Vedantists against this is that this 2 analysis is not a perfect one. If their Nature be absolute and the 3 soul be also absolute, there will be two absolutes, and all the 4 arguments that apply in the case of the soul to show that it is 5 omnipresent will apply in the case of Nature, and Nature too will be 6 beyond all time, space, and causation, and as the result there will 7 be no change or manifestation. Then will come the difficulty of 8 having two absolutes, which is impossible. What is the solution of 9 the Vedantist? His solution is that, just as the Sankhyas say, it 10 requires some sentient Being as the motive behind, which makes 11 the mind think and Nature work, because Nature in all its 12 modifications, from gross matter up to Mahat (Intelligence), is 13 simply insentient. Now, says the Vedantist, this sentient Being 14 which is behind the whole universe is what we call God, and 15 consequently this universe is not different from Him. It is He 16 Himself who has become this universe. He not only is the 17 instrumental cause of this universe, but also the material cause.
18 Cause is never different from effect, the effect is but the cause 19 reproduced in another form. We see that every day. So this Being is 20 the cause of Nature. All the forms and phases of Vedanta, either 21 dualistic, or qualified-monistic, or monistic, first take this position 22 that God is not only the instrumental, but also the material cause of 23 this universe, that everything which exists is He. The second step in 24 Vedanta is that these souls are also part of God, one spark of that 25 Infinite Fire. "As from a mass of fire millions of small particles fly, 26 even so from this Ancient One have come all these souls." So far so 27 good, but it does not yet satisfy. What is meant by a part of the 28 Infinite? The Infinite is indivisible; there cannot be parts of the 29 Infinite. The Absolute cannot be divided. What is meant, therefore, 30 by saying that all these sparks are from Him? The Advaitist, the 31 non-dualistic Vedantist, solves the problem by maintaining that 32 there is really no part; that each soul is really not a part of the 33 Infinite, but actually is the Infinite Brahman. There how can there 34 be so many? The sun reflected from millions of globules of water 35 appears to be millions of suns, and in each globule is a miniature 36 picture of the sun-form; so all these souls are but reflections and 37 not real. They are not the real "I" which is the God of this universe, 38 the one undivided Being of the universe. And all these little 39 different beings, men and animal etc. are but reflections, and not 40 real. They are simply illusory reflections upon Nature. There is but 41 one Infinite Being in the universe, and that Being appears as you 42 and I; but this appearance of divisions is after all a delusion. He has 43 not been divided, but only appears to be divided. This apparent 44 division is caused by looking at Him through the network of time, 45 space, and causation. When I look at God through the network of 46 time, space, and causation, I see Him as the material world. When I 47 look at Him from a little higher plane, yet through the same 48 network, I see Him as an animal, a little higher as a man, a little 49 higher as a god, but yet He is the One Infinite Being of the 50 universe, and that Being we are. I am That, and you are That. Not 51 parts of It, but the whole of It. "It is the Eternal Knower standing 52 behind the whole phenomena; He himself is the phenomena." He is 53 both the subject and the object, He is the "I" and the "You". How is

1 this? How to know the Knower? The Knower cannot know Himself; I 2 see everything but cannot see myself. The Self, the Knower, the 3 Lord of all, the real Being, is the cause of all the vision that is in the 4 universe, but it is impossible for Him to see Himself or know
5 Himself, excepting through reflection. You cannot see your own face 6 except in a mirror, and so the Self cannot see Its own nature until It 7 is reflected, and this whole universe therefore is the Self trying to 8 realise Itself. This reflection is thrown back first from the 9 protoplasm, then from plants and animals, and so on and on from 10 better and better reflectors, until the best reflector, the perfect 11 man, is reached--just as a man who, wanting to see his face, looks 12 first in a little pool of muddy water, and sees just an outline; then he 13 comes to clear water, and sees a better image; then to a piece of 14 shining metal, and sees a still better image; and at last to a looking-15 glass, and sees himself reflected as he is. Therefore the perfect 16 man is the highest reflection on that Being who is both subject and 17 object. You now find why man instinctively worships everything, and 18 how perfect men are instinctively worshipped as God in every 19 country. You may talk as you like, but it is they who are bound to be 20 worshipped. That is why men worship Incarnations, such as Christ 21 or Buddha. They are the most perfect manifestations of the eternal 22 Self. They are much higher than all the conceptions of God that you 23 or I can make. A perfect man is much higher than such conceptions.
24 In him the circle becomes complete; the subject and the object 25 become one. In him all delusions go away and in their place comes 26 the realisation that he has always been that perfect Being. How 27 came this bondage then? How was it possible for this perfect Being 28 to degenerate into the imperfect? How was it possible that the free 29 became bound? The Advaitist says, he was never bound, but was 30 always free. Various clouds of various colours come before the sky.
31 They remain there a minute and then pass away. It is the same 32 eternal blue sky stretching there forever. The sky never changes; it 33 is the cloud that is changing. So you are always perfect, eternally 34 perfect. Nothing ever changes your nature, or ever will. All these 35 ideas that I am imperfect, I am a man, or a woman, or a sinner, or I 36 am the mind, I have thought, I will think--all are hallucinations; you 37 never think, you never had a body; you never were imperfect. You 38 are the blessed Lord of this universe, the one Almighty ruler of 39 everything that is and ever will be, the one mighty ruler of these 40 suns and stars and moons and earths and planets and all the little 41 bits of our universe. It is through you that the sun shines and the 42 stars shed their lustre, and the earth becomes beautiful. It is 43 through your blessedness that they all love and are attracted to 44 each other. You are in all, and you are all. Whom to avoid, and 45 whom to take? You are the all in all. When this knowledge comes, 46 delusion immediately vanishes.

1 I was once travelling in the desert in India. I travelled for 2 over a month and always found the most beautiful landscapes
3 before me, beautiful lakes and all that. One day I was very thirsty
4 and I wanted to have a drink at one of these lakes; but when I
5 approached that lake it vanished. Immediately with a blow came 6 into my brain that idea that this was a mirage about which I read all 7 my life; and then I remembered and smiled at my folly, that for the 8 last month all the beautiful landscapes and lakes I had been seeing 9 were this mirage, but I could not distinguish them then. The next 10 morning I again began my march; there was the lake and the 11 landscape, but with it immediately came the idea, "This is a 12 mirage." Once known it has lost its power of illusion. So this illusion 13 of the universe will break one day. The whole of this will vanish, 14 melt away. This is realisation. Philosophy is no joke or talk. It has to 15 be realised; this body will vanish, this earth and everything will 16 vanish, this idea that I am the body or mind will for some time 17 vanish, or if the Karma is ended it will disappear, never to come 18 back; but if one part of the Karma remains, then as a potter's 19 wheel, after the potter has finished the pot, will sometimes go on 20 from the past momentum, so this body, when the delusion has 21 vanished altogether, will go on for some time. Again this world will 22 come, men and women and animals will come, just as the mirage 23 came the next day, but not with the same force; along with it will 24 come the idea that I know its nature now, and it will cause no
25 bondage, no more pain, nor grief, nor misery. Whenever anything 26 miserable will come, the mind will be able to say, "I know you as 27 hallucination." When a man has reached that state, he is called 28 Jivanmukta, "living-free", free even while living. The aim and end in 29 this life for the Jnana-Yogi is to become this Jivanmukta, "living-30 free." He is Jivanmukta who can live in this world without being 31 attached. He is like the lotus leaves in water, which are never 32 wetted by the water. He is the highest of human beings, nay, the 33 highest of all beings, for he has realised his identity with the 34 Absolute, he has realised that he is one with God. So long as you 35 think you have the least difference from God, fear will seize you, 36 but when you have known that you are He, that there is no 37 difference, entirely no difference, that you are He, all of Him, and 38 the whole of Him, all fear ceases. "There, who sees whom? Who 39 worships whom? Who talks to whom? Who hears whom? Where one 40 sees another, where one talks to another, where one hears another, 41 that is little. Where none sees none, where none speaks to none, 42 that is the highest, that is the great, that is the Brahman." Being 43 That, you are always That. What will become of the world then?
44 What good shall we do to the world? Such questions do not arise.
45 "What becomes of my gingerbread if I become old?" says the baby!
46 "What becomes of my marbles if I grow? So I will not grow," says 47 the boy! "What will become of my dolls if I grow old?" says the little 48 child! It is the same question in connection with this world; it has 49 no existence in the past, present, or future. If we have known the 50 Atman as It is, if we have known that there is nothing else but this 51 Atman, that everything else is but a dream, with no existence in 52 reality, then this world with its poverties, its miseries, its 53 wickedness, and its goodness will cease to disturb us. If they do not

1 exist, for whom and for what shall we take trouble? This is what the 2 Jnana-Yogis teach. Therefore, dare to be free, dare to go as far as 3 your thought leads, and dare to carry that out in your life. It is very 4 hard to come to Jnana. It is for the bravest and most daring, who 5 dare to smash all idols, not only intellectual, but in the senses. This 6 body is not I; it must go. All sorts of curious things may come out of 7 this. A man stands up and says, "I am not the body, therefore my 8 headache must be cured"; but where is the headache if not in his 9 body? Let a thousand headaches and a thousand bodies come and 10 go. What is that to me? I have neither birth nor death; father or 11 mother I never had; friends and foes I have none, because they are 12 all I. I am my own friend, and I am my own enemy. I am Existence-
13 Knowledge-Bliss Absolute. I am He, I am He. If in a thousand 14 bodies I am suffering from fever and other ills, in millions of bodies 15 I am healthy. If in a thousand bodies I am starving, in other 16 thousand bodies I am feasting. If in thousands of bodies I am 17 suffering misery, in thousands of bodies I am happy. Who shall 18 blame whom, who praise whom? Whom to seek, whom to avoid? I 19 seek none, nor avoid any, for I am all the universe. I praise myself, I 20 blame myself, I suffer for myself, I am happy at my own will, I am 21 free. This is the Jnani, the brave and daring. Let the whole universe 22 tumble down; he smiles and says it never existed, it was all a 23 hallucination. He sees the universe tumble down. Where was it!
24 Where has it gone!

25 Before going into the practical part, we will take up one more 26 intellectual question. So far the logic is tremendously rigorous. If 27 man reasons, there is no place for him to stand until he comes to 28 this, that there is but One Existence, that everything else is 29 nothing. There is no other way left for rational mankind but to take 30 this view. But how is it that what is infinite, ever perfect, ever 31 blessed, Existence-Knowledge-Bliss Absolute, has come under these 32 delusions? It is the same questions that has been asked all the 33 world over. In the vulgar form the question becomes, "How did sin 34 come into this world?" This is the most vulgar and sensuous form of 35 the question, and the other is the most philosophic form, but the 36 answer is the same. The same question has been asked in various 37 grades and fashions, but in its lower forms it finds no solution, 38 because the stories of apples and serpents and women do not give 39 the explanation. In that state, the question is childish and so is the 40 answer. But the question has assumed very high proportions now: 41 "How did this illusion come?" And the answer is as fine. The answer 42 is that we cannot expect any answer to an impossible question. The 43 very question is impossible in terms. You have no right to ask that 44 question. Why? What is perfection? That which is beyond time, 45 space and causation--that is perfect. Then you ask how the perfect 46 became imperfect. In logical language the question may be put in 47 this form: "How did that which is beyond causation become 48 caused?" You contradict yourself. You first admit it is beyond 49 causation, and then ask what causes it. This question can only be 50 asked within the limits of causation. As far as time and space and 51 causation extend, so far can this question be asked. But beyond that 52 it will be nonsense to ask it, because the question is illogical. Within 53 time, space and causation, it can never be answered, and what

1 answer may lie beyond these limits can only be known when we 2 have transcended them; therefore the wise will let this question
3 rest. When a man is ill, he devotes himself to curing his disease 4 without insisting that he must first learn how he came to have it.

5 There is another form of this question, a little lower, but more 6 practical and illustrative: what produced this delusion? Can any 7 reality produce delusion? Certainly not. We see that one delusion 8 produces another, and so on. It is delusion always that produces 9 delusion. It is disease that produces disease and not health that 10 produces disease. The wave is the same thing as the water, the 11 effect is the cause in another form. The effect is delusion, and 12 therefore the cause must be delusion. What produced this delusion?
13 Another delusion. And so on without beginning. The only question 14 that remains for you to ask is: Does not this break your monism, 15 because you get two existences in the universe, one yourself and 16 the other the delusion? The answer is: Delusion cannot be called an 17 existence. Thousands of dreams come into your life, but do not form 18 any part of your life. Dreams come and go; they have no existence.
19 To call delusion existence would be sophistry. Therefore there is 20 only one individual existence in the universe, ever free, and ever 21 blessed; and that is what you are. This is the last conclusion 22 reached by the Advaitists.

23 It may then be asked: What becomes of all these various 24 forms of worship? They will remain; they are simply groping in the 25 dark for light, and through this groping light will come. We have 26 just seen that the Self cannot see Itself. Our knowledge is within 27 the network of Maya (unreality), and beyond that is freedom. Within 28 the network, there is slavery, it is all under law; beyond that there 29 is no law. So far as the universe is concerned, existence is ruled by 30 law, and beyond that is freedom. As long as you are in the network 31 of time, space , and causation, to say you are free is nonsense, 32 because in that network all is under rigorous law, sequence and 33 consequence. Every thought that you think is caused, every feeling 34 has been caused; to say that the will is free is sheer nonsense. It is 35 only when the infinite existence comes, as it were, into this network 36 of Maya that it takes the form of will. Will is a portion of that being, 37 caught in the network of Maya, and therefore "free will" is a 38 misnomer. It means nothing--sheer nonsense. So is all this talk 39 about freedom. There is no freedom in Maya.

40 Every one is as much bound in thought, word, deed, and 41 mind, as a piece of stone or this table. That I talk to you now is as 42 rigorous in causation as that you listen to me. There is no freedom 43 until you go beyond Maya. That is the real freedom of the soul.
44 Men, however sharp and intellectual, however clearly they see the 45 force of the logic that nothing here can be free, are all compelled to 46 think they are free; they cannot help it. No work can go on until we 47 begin to say we are free. It means that the freedom we talk about is 48 the glimpse of the blue sky through the clouds and that the real 49 freedom--the blue sky itself--is behind. True freedom cannot exist in 50 the midst of this delusion, this hallucination, this nonsense of the 51 world, this universe of the senses, body, and mind. All these 52 dreams, without beginning or end, uncontrolled and uncontrollable,

1 ill-adjusted, broken , inharmonious, form our idea of this universe.
2 In a dream, when you see a giant with twenty heads chasing you,
3 and you are flying from him, you do not think it is inharmonious; 4 you think it is proper and right. So is this law. All that you call law is 5 simply chance without meaning. In this dream state, you call it law.
6 Within Maya, so far as this law of time, space, and causation exists, 7 there is no freedom; and all these various forms of worship are 8 within this Maya. The idea of God and the ideas of brute and of man 9 are within this Maya, and as such are equally hallucinations; all of 10 them are dreams. But you must take care not to argue like some 11 extraordinary men of whom we hear at the present time. They say 12 the idea of God is a delusion, but the idea of this world is true. Both 13 ideas stand or fall by the same logic. He alone has the right to be an 14 atheist who denies this world, as well as the other. The same 15 argument is for both. The same mass of delusion extends from God 16 to the lowest animal, from a blade of grass to the Creator. They 17 stand or fall by the same logic. The same person who sees falsity in 18 the idea of God ought also to see it in the idea of his own body or 19 his own mind. When God vanishes, then also vanish the body and 20 mind; and when both vanish, that which is the Real Existence 21 remains for ever. "There the eyes cannot go, nor the speech, nor the 22 mind. We cannot see, neither know it." And we now understand that 23 so far as speech and thought and knowledge and intellect go, it is 24 all within the Maya, within bondage. Beyond that is Reality. There 25 neither thought, nor mind, nor speech, can reach.

26 So far it is intellectually all right, but then comes the practice.
27 The real work is in the practice. Are any practices necessary to 28 realise this Oneness? Most decidedly. It is not that you become this 29 Brahman. You are already that. It is not that you are going to 30 become God or perfect; you are already perfect; and whenever you 31 think you are not, it is a delusion. This delusion which says that you 32 are Mr. So-and-so or Mrs. So-and-so can be gotten rid of by another 33 delusion, and that is practice. Fire will eat fire, and you can use one 34 delusion to conquer another delusion. One cloud will come and 35 brush away another cloud, and then both will go away. What are 36 these practices then? We must always bear in mind that we are not 37 going to be free, but are free already. Every idea that we are bound 38 is a delusion. Every idea that we are happy or unhappy is a 39 tremendous delusion; and another delusion will come--that we have 40 got to work and worship and struggle to be free--and this will chase 41 out the first delusion, and then both will stop.

42 The fox is considered very unholy by the Mohammedans and 43 by the Hindus. Also, if a dog touches any bit of food, it has to be 44 thrown out, it cannot be eaten by any man. In a certain 45 Mohammedan house a fox entered and took a little bit of the food 46 from the table, ate it up, and fled. The man was a poor man, and 47 had prepared a very nice feast for himself, and that feast was made 48 unholy and he could not eat it. So he went to the Mulla, a priest, 49 and said, "This has happened to me; a fox came and took a mouthful 50 out of my meal. What can be done? I had prepared a feast and 51 wanted so much to eat it, and now comes this fox and destroys the 52 whole affair." The Mulla thought for a minute and then found only

1 one solution and said, "The only way for you is to get a dog and 2 make him eat a bit out of the same plate, because dogs and foxes
3 are eternally quarrelling. The food that was left by the fox will go 4 into your stomach and that left by the dog will go there too, and 5 both will be purified." We are very much in the same predicament.
6 This is a hallucination that we are imperfect; and we take up 7 another, that we have to practice to become perfect. Then one will 8 chase the other, as we can use one thorn to extract another and 9 then throw both away. There are people for whom it is sufficient 10 knowledge to hear, "Thou art That." With a flash this universe goes 11 away and the real nature shines, but others have to struggle hard to 12 get rid of this idea of bondage.

13 The first question is: Who are fit to become Jnana-Yogis?
14 Those who are equipped with these requisites: First, renunciation 15 of all fruits of work and of all enjoyments in this life or another life.
16 If you are the creator of this universe, whatever you desire you will 17 have, because you will create it yourself. It is only a question of 18 time. Some get it immediately; with others the past Samskaras 19 (impressions) stand in the way of getting their desires. We give the 20 first place to desires of enjoyment, either in this or another life.
21 Deny that there is any life at all, because life is only another name 22 for death. Deny that you are a living being. Who cares for life? Life 23 is one of these hallucinations, and death is its counterpart. Joy is 24 one part of these hallucinations, and misery the other part, and so 25 on. What have you to do with life and death? These are all creations 26 of the mind. This is called giving up desires of enjoyment either in 27 this life or another.

28 Then comes controlling the mind, calming it so that it will not 29 break into waves and have all sorts of desires, holding the mind 30 steady, not allowing it to get into waves from external or internal 31 causes, controlling the mind perfectly, just by the power of will. The 32 Jnana-Yogi does not take any one of these physical helps or mental 33 helps: simply philosophic reasoning, knowledge, and his own will, 34 these are the instrumentalities he believes in. Next comes Titiksha, 35 forbearance, bearing all miseries without murmuring, without 36 complaining. When an injury comes, do not mind it. If a tiger comes, 37 stand there. Who flies? There are men who practice Titiksha, and 38 succeed in it. There are men who sleep on the banks of the Ganga 39 in the mid-summer sun of India, and in winter float in the waters of 40 the Ganga for a whole day; they do not care. Men sit in the snow of 41 the Himalayas, and do not care to wear any garment. What is heat?
42 What is cold? Let things come and go, what is that to me, I am not 43 the body. It is hard to believe this in these Western countries, but it 44 is better to know that it is done. Just as your people are brave to 45 jump at the mouth of a cannon, or into the midst of the battle field, 46 so our people are brave to think and act out their philosophy. They 47 give up their lives for it. "I am Existence-Knowledge-Bliss Absolute; 48 I am He, I am He." Just as the Western ideal is to keep up luxury in 49 practical life, so ours is to keep up the highest form of spirituality, 50 to demonstrate that religion is not merely frothy words, but can be 51 carried out, every bit of it, in this life. This is Titiksha, to bear 52 everything, not to complain of anything. I myself have seen men

1 who say, "I am the soul; what is the universe to me? Neither 2 pleasure nor pain, nor virtue nor vice, nor heat nor cold is anything 3 to me." That is Titiksha, not running after the enjoyments of the 4 body. What is religion? To pray, "Give me this and that"? Foolish
5 ideas of religion! Those who believe them have no true idea of God 6 and soul. My Master used to say, "The vulture rises higher and 7 higher until he becomes a speck, but his eye is always on the piece 8 of rotten carrion on the earth." After all, what is the result of your 9 ideas of religion? To cleanse the streets and have more bread and 10 clothes? Who cares for bread and clothes? Millions come and go 11 every minute. Who cares? Why cares for the joys and vicissitudes of 12 this little world? Go beyond that if you dare; go beyond law, let the 13 whole universe vanish, and stand alone. "I am Existence-Absolute, 14 Knowledge-Absolute, Bliss-Absolute; I am He, I am He."

ONE EXISTENCE APPEARING AS MANY

Vairagya or renunciation is the turning point in all the various Yogas. The Karmi (worker) renounces the fruits of his work. The Bhakta (devotee) renounces all little loves for the almighty and omnipresent love. The Yogi renounces his experiences, because his philosophy is that the whole Nature, although it is for experience of the soul, at last brings him to know that he is not in Nature, but eternally separate from Nature. The Jnani (philosopher) renounces everything, because his philosophy is that Nature never existed, neither in the past, nor present, nor will It in the future. The question of utility cannot be asked in these higher themes. It is very absurd to ask it; and even if it be asked, after a proper analysis, what do we find in this question of utility? The ideal of happiness, that which brings man more happiness, is of greater utility to him than these higher things which do not improve his material conditions or bring him such great happiness. All the sciences are for this one end, to bring happiness to humanity; and that which brings the larger amount of happiness, man takes and gives up that which brings a lesser amount of happiness. We have seen how happiness is either in the body, or in the mind, or in the Atman. With animals, and in the lowest human beings who are very much like animals, happiness is all in the body. No man can eat with the same pleasure as a famished dog or a wolf; so in the dog and the wolf the happiness is entirely in the body. In men we find a higher plane of happiness, that of thought; and in the Jnani there is the highest plane of happiness in the Self, the Atman. So to the philosopher this knowledge of the Self is of the highest utility, because it gives him the highest happiness possible. Sense-gratifications or physical things cannot be of the highest utility to him, because he does not find in them the same pleasure that he finds in knowledge itself; and after all, knowledge is the one goal and is really the highest happiness that we know. All who work in ignorance are, as it were, the draught animals of the Devas. The word Deva is here used in the sense of a wise man. All the people that work and toil and labour like machines do not really enjoy life, but it is the wise man who enjoys. A rich man buys a picture at a cost of a hundred thousand dollars perhaps, but it is the man who understand art that enjoys it; and if the rich man is without knowledge of art, it is useless to him, he is only the owner. All over the world, it is the wise man who enjoys the happiness of the world. The ignorant man never enjoys; he has to work for others unconsciously.

1 Thus far we have seen the theories of these Advaitist 2 philosophers, how there is but one Atman; there cannot be two. We 3 have seen how in the whole of this universe there is but One 4 Existence; and that One Existence when seen through the senses is 5 called the world, the world of matter. When It is seen through the 6 mind, It is called the world of thoughts and ideas; and when It is 7 seen as it is, then It is the One Infinite Being. You must bear this in 8 mind; it is not that there is a soul in man, although I had to take 9 that for granted in order to explain it at first, but that there is only 10 One Existence, and that one the Atman, the Self; and when this is 11 perceived through the senses, through sense-imageries, It is called 12 the body. When It is perceived through thought, it is called the 13 mind. When It is perceived in Its own nature, It is the Atman, the 14 One Only Existence. So it is not that there are three things in one, 15 the body and the mind and the Self, although that was a convenient 16 way of putting it in the course of explanation; but all is that Atman, 17 and that one Being is sometimes called the body, sometimes the 18 mind, and sometimes the Self, according to different vision. There is 19 but one Being which the ignorant call the world. When a man goes 20 higher in knowledge, he calls the very same Being the world of 21 thought. Again, when knowledge itself comes, all illusions vanish, 22 and man finds it is all nothing but Atman. I am that One Existence.
23 This is the last conclusion. There are neither three nor two in the 24 universe; it is all One. That One, under the illusion of Maya, is seen 25 as many, just as a rope is seen as a snake. It is the very rope that is 26 seen as a snake. There are not two things there, a rope separate 27 and a snake separate. No man sees these two things there at the 28 same time. Dualism and non-dualism are very good philosophic 29 terms, but in perfect perception we never perceive the real and the 30 false at the same time. We are all born monists, we cannot help it.
31 We always perceive the one. When we perceive the rope, we do not 32 perceive the snake at all; and when we see the snake, we do not see 33 the rope at all--it has vanished. When you see illusion, you do not 34 see reality. Suppose you see one of your friends coming at a 35 distance in the street; you know him very well but through the haze 36 and mist that is before you, you think it is another man. When you 37 see your friend as another man, you do not see your friend at all, he 38 has vanished. You are perceiving only one. Suppose your friend is 39 Mr. A.; but when you perceive Mr. A as Mr. B, you do not see Mr. A 40 at all. In each case you perceive only one. When you see yourself as 41 a body, you are body and nothing else; and that is the perception of 42 the vast majority of mankind. They may talk of soul and mind, and 43 all these things, but what they perceive is the physical form, the 44 touch, taste, vision, and so on. Again, with certain men in certain 45 states of consciousness, they perceive themselves as thought. You 46 know, of course, the story told of Sir Humphrey Davy, who was 47 making experiments before his class with laughing-gas, and 48 suddenly one of the tubes broke, and the gas escaping, he breathed 49 it in. For some moments he remained like a statue. Afterwards he 50 told his class that when he was in that state, he actually perceived 51 that the whole world is made up of ideas. The gas, for a time, made 52 him forget the consciousness of the body, and that very thing which 53 he was seeing as the body, he began to perceive as ideas. When the 1 consciousness rises still higher, when this little puny consciousness

2 is gone for ever, that which is the Reality behind shines, and we see 3 it as the One Existence-Knowledge-Bliss, the one Atman, the 4 Universal. "One that is only Knowledge itself, One that is Bliss itself, 5 beyond all compare, beyond all limit, ever free, never bound, 6 infinite as the sky, unchangeable as the sky. Such a One will 7 manifest Himself in your heart in meditation."

1 How does the Advaitist theory explain these various phases of 2 heaven and hells and these various ideas we find in all religions?
3 When a man dies, it is said that he goes to heaven or hell, goes here 4 or there, or that when a man dies he is born again in another body
5 either in heaven or in another world or somewhere. These are all 6 hallucinations. Really speaking nobody is ever born or dies. There is 7 neither heaven nor hell nor this world; all three never really 8 existed. Tell a child a lot of ghost stories, and let him go into the 9 street in the evening. There is a little stump of a tree. What does 10 the child see? A ghost, with hands stretched out, ready to grab him.
11 Suppose a man comes from the corner of the street, wanting to 12 meet his sweetheart; he sees that stump of the tree as the girl. A 13 policeman coming from the street corner sees the stump as a thief.
14 The thief sees it as a policeman. It is the same stump of a tree that 15 was seen in various ways. The stump is the reality, and the visions 16 of the stump are the projections of the various minds. There is one 17 Being, this Self; It neither comes nor goes. When a man is ignorant, 18 he wants to go to heaven or some place, and all his life he has been 19 thinking and thinking of this; and when this earth-dream vanishes, 20 he sees this world as a heaven with Devas and angels flying about, 21 and all such things. If a man all his life desires to meet his 22 forefathers, he gets them all from Adam downwards, because he 23 creates them. If a man is still more ignorant and has always been 24 frightened by fanatics with ideas of hell, with all sorts of 25 punishments, when he dies, he will see this very world as hell. All 26 that is meant by dying or being born is simply changes in the plane 27 of vision. Neither do you move, nor does that move upon which you 28 project your vision. you are the permanent, the unchangeable. How 29 can you come and go? It is impossible; you are omnipresent. The 30 sky never moves, but the clouds move over the surface of the sky, 31 and we may think that the sky itself moves, just as when you are in 32 a railway train, you think the land is moving. It is not so, but it is the 33 train which is moving. You are where you are; these dreams, these 34 various clouds move. One dream follows another without 35 connection. There is no such thing as law or connection in this 36 world, but we are thinking that there is a great deal of connection.
37 All of you have probably read Alice in Wonderland. It is the most 38 wonderful book for children that has been written in this century.
39 When I read it, I was delighted; it was always in my head to write 40 that sort of book for children. What pleased me most in it was what 41 you think most incongruous, that there is no connection there. One 42 idea comes and jumps into another, without any connection. When 43 you were children, you thought that the most wonderful connection.
44 So this man brought back his thoughts of childhood, which were 45 perfectly connected to him as a child, and composed this book for 46 children. And all these books which men write, trying to make 47 children swallow their own ideas as men, are nonsense. We too are 48 grown-up children, that is all. The world is the same unconnected 49 thing--Alice in Wonderland--with no connection whatever. When we 50 see things happen a number of times in a certain sequence, we call 51 it cause and effect, and say that the thing will happen again. When 52 this dream changes, another dream will seem quite as connected as 53 this. When we dream, the things we see all seem to be connected;

1 during the dream we never think they are incongruous; it is only 2 when we wake that we see the want of connection. When we wake 3 from this dream of the world and compare it with the Reality, it will 4 be found all incongruous nonsense, a mass of incongruity passing 5 before us, we do not know whence or whither, but we know it will 6 end; and this is called Maya, and is like masses of fleeting fleecy
7 clouds. They represent all this changing existence, and the sun
8 itself, the unchanging , is you. When you look at that unchanging 9 Existence from the outside, you call it God; and when you look at it 10 from the inside, you call it yourself. It is but one. There is no God 11 separate from you, no God higher than you, the real "you". All the 12 gods are little beings to you, all the ideas of God and Father in 13 heaven are but your own reflection. God Himself is your image.
14 "God created man after His own image." That is wrong. Man 15 creates God after his own image. That is right. Throughout the 16 universe we are creating gods after our own image. We create the 17 god and fall down at his feet and worship him; and when this dream 18 comes, we love it!

1 This is a good point to understand--that the sum and 2 substance of this lecture is that there is but One Existence, and that 3 One-Existence seen through different constitutions appears either 4 as the earth, or heaven, or hell, or gods, or ghosts, or men, or 5 demons, or world, or all these things. But among these many, "He 6 who sees that One in this ocean of death, he who sees that One Life 7 in this floating universe, who realises that One who never changes, 8 unto him belongs eternal peace; unto none else, unto none else."
9 This One Existence has to be realised. How, is the next question.
10 How is it to be realised? How is this dream to be broken, how shall 11 we wake up from this dream that we are little men and women, and 12 all such things? We are the Infinite Being of the universe and have 13 become materialised into these little beings, men and women, 14 depending upon the sweet word of one man, or the angry word of 15 another, and so forth. What a terrible dependence, what a terrible 16 slavery! I who am beyond all pleasure and pain, whose reflection is 17 the whole universe, little bits of whose life are the suns and moons 18 and stars--I am held down as a terrible slave! If you pinch my body, 19 I feel pain. If one says a kind word, I begin to rejoice. See my 20 condition--slave of the body, slave of the mind, slave of the world, 21 slave of a good word, slave of a bad word, slave of passion, slave of 22 happiness, slave of life, slave of death, slave of everything! This 23 slavery has to be broken. How? "This Atman has first to be heard, 24 then reasoned upon, and then meditated upon." This is the method 25 of the Advaita Jnani. The truth has to be heard, then reflected upon 26 and then to be constantly asserted. Think always, "I am Brahman."
27 Every other thought must be cast aside as weakening. Cast aside 28 every thought that says that you are men or women. Let body go, 29 and mind go, and gods go, and ghosts go. Let everything go but that 30 One Existence. "Where one hears another, where one sees another, 31 that is small; where one does not hear another, where one does not 32 see another, that is Infinite." That is the highest when the subject 33 and the object become one. When I am the listener and I am the 34 speaker, when I am the teacher and I am the taught, when I am the 35 creator, and I am the created--then alone fear ceases; there is not 36 another to make us afraid. There is nothing but myself, what can 37 frighten me? This is to be heard day after day. Get rid of all other 38 thoughts. Everything else must be thrown aside, and this is to be 39 repeated continually, poured through the ears until it reaches the 40 heart, until every nerve and muscle, every drop of blood tingles 41 with the idea that I am He, I am He. Even at the gate of death say, 42 "I am He." There was a man in India, a Sannyasin, who used to 43 repeat "Shivoham"--"I am Bliss Eternal"; and a tiger jumped on him, 44 one day and dragged him away and killed him; but so long as he 45 was living, the sound came, "Shivoham, Shivoham". Even at the 46 gate of death, in the greatest danger, in the thick of the battle field, 47 at the bottom of the ocean, on the tops of the highest mountains, in 48 the thickest of the forest, tell yourself, "I am He, I am He." Day and 49 night say, "I am He." It is the greatest strength; it is religion. "The 50 weak will never reach the Atman." Never say, "O Lord, I am a 51 miserable sinner." Who will help you? You are the help of the 52 universe. What in this universe can help you? Where is the man, or 53 the god, or the demon to help you? What can prevail over you? You

1 are the God of the universe; where can you seek for help? Never 2 help came from anywhere but from yourself. In your ignorance, 3 every prayer that you made and that was answered, you thought
4 was answered by some Being, but you answered the prayer
5 unknowingly. The help came from yourself, and you fondly imagined
6 that some one was sending help to you. There is no help for you 7 outside of yourself; you are the creator of the universe. Like the 8 silkworm you have built a cocoon around yourself. Who will save 9 you? Burst your own cocoon and come out as the beautiful butterfly, 10 as the free soul. Then alone you will see Truth. Ever tell yourself, "I 11 am He." These are the words that will burn up the dross that is in 12 the mind, words that will bring out the tremendous energy which is 13 within you already, the infinite power which is sleeping in your 14 heart. This is to be brought out by constantly hearing the truth and 15 nothing else. Wherever there is thought of weakness, approach not 16 the place. Avoid all weakness if you want to be a Jnani.

17 Before you begin to practice, clear your mind of all doubts.
18 Fight and reason and argue; and when you have established it in 19 your mind that this and this alone can be the truth and nothing else, 20 do not argue any more; close your mouth. Hear not argumentation, 21 neither argue yourself. What is the use of any more arguments? You 22 have satisfied yourself, you have decided the question. What 23 remains? The truth has now to be realised, therefore why waste 24 valuable time in vain arguments? The truth has now to be 25 meditated upon, and every idea that strengthens you must be taken 26 up and every thought that weakens you must be rejected. The 27 Bhakta meditates upon forms and images and all such things and 28 upon God. This is the natural process, but a slower one. The Yogi 29 meditates upon various centres in his body and manipulates powers 30 in his mind. The Jnani says, the mind does not exist, neither does 31 the body. This idea of the body and of the mind must go, must be 32 driven off; therefore it is foolish to think of them. It would be like 33 trying to cure one ailment by bringing in another. His meditation 34 therefore is the most difficult one, the negative; he denies 35 everything, and what is left is the Self. This is the most analytical 36 way. The Jnani wants to tear away the universe from the Self by the 37 sheer force of analysis. It is very easy to say, "I am a Jnani", but 38 very hard to be really one. "The way is long", it is, as it were, 39 walking on the sharp edge of a razor; yet despair not. Awake, arise, 40 and stop not until the goal is reached", says the Vedas.

41 So what is the meditation of the Jnani? He wants to rise above 42 every idea of body or mind, to drive away the idea that he is the 43 body. For instance, when I say, "I Swami", immediately the idea of 44 the body comes. What must I do then? I must give the mind a hard 45 blow and say, "No, I am not the body, I am the Self." Who cares if 46 disease comes or death in the most horrible form? I am not the 47 body. Why make the body nice? To enjoy the illusion once more? To 48 continue slavery? Let it go, I am not the body. That is the way of the 49 Jnani. The Bhakta says, "The Lord has given me this body that I 50 may safely cross the ocean of life, and I must cherish it until the 51 journey is accomplished." The Yogi says, "I must be careful of the 52 body, so that I may go steadily and finally attain liberation." The 1 Jnani feels that he cannot wait, he must reach the goal this very 2 moment. He says, "I am free through eternity, I am never bound; I

3 am the God of the universe through all eternity. Who shall make me 4 perfect? I am perfect already." When a man is perfect, he sees 5 perfection in others. When he sees imperfection, it is his own mind 6 projecting itself. How can he see imperfection if he has not got it in 7 himself? So the Jnani does not care for perfection or imperfection.
8 None exists for him. As soon as he is free, he does not see good or 9 evil. Who sees evil and good? He who has it in himself. Who sees 10 the body? He who thinks he is the body. The moment you get rid of 11 the idea that you are the body, you do not see the world at all; it 12 vanishes forever. The Jnani seeks to tear himself away from this 13 bondage of matter by the force of intellectual conviction. This is the 14 negative way--the "Neti, Neti"--"Not this, not this."

BHAKTI-YOGA

PRAYER

{Sanskrit}

"He is the Soul of the Universe; He is Immortal; His is the Rulership; He is the All-knowing, the All-pervading, the Protector of the Universe, the Eternal Ruler. None else is there efficient to govern the world eternally. He who at the beginning of creation projected Brahma (i.e. the universal consciousness), and who delivered the Vedas unto him--seeking liberation I go for refuge unto that Effulgent One, whose light turns the understanding towards the Atman."

Shvetashvatara-Upanishad, VI. 17-18.

DEFINITION OF BHAKTI

Bhakti-Yoga is a real, genuine search after the Lord, a search beginning, continuing and ending in love. One single moment of the madness of extreme love to God brings us eternal freedom. "Bhakti", says Narada in his explanation of the Bhakti-aphorisms, "is intense love to God"; "When a man gets it, he loves all, hates none; he becomes satisfied for ever"; "This love cannot be reduced to any earthly benefit", because so long as worldly desires last, that kind of love does not come; "Bhakti is greater than Karma, greater than Yoga, because these are intended for an object in view, while Bhakti is its own fruition, its own means and its own end."

Bhakti has been the one constant theme of our sages. Apart from the special writers on Bhakti, such as Shandilya or Narada, the great commentators on the Vyasa-Sutras, evidently advocates of knowledge (Jnana), have also something very suggestive to say about love. Even when the commentator is anxious to explain many, if not all, of the texts so as to make them import a sort of dry knowledge, the Sutras, in the chapter on worship especially, do not lend themselves to be easily manipulated in that fashion.

There is not really so much difference between knowledge (Jnana) and love (Bhakti) as people sometimes imagine. We shall see, as we go on, that in the end they converge and meet and end at the same point. So also is it with Raja-Yoga, which when pursued as a means to attain liberation, and not (as unfortunately it frequently becomes in the hands of charlatans and mystery-mongers) as an instrument to hoodwink the unwary, leads us also to the same goal.

The one great advantage of Bhakti is that it is the easiest and

1 most natural way to reach the great divine end in view; its great 2 disadvantage is that in its lower forms it oftentimes degenerates 3 into hideous fanaticism. The fanatical crew in Hinduism, or 4 Mohammedanism, or Christianity have always been almost 5 exclusively recruited from these worshippers on the lower planes of 6 Bhakti. That singleness of attachment (Nishtha) to a loved object, 7 without which no genuine love can grow, is very often also the 8 cause of the denunciation of everything else. All the weak and 9 undeveloped minds in every religion or country have only one way 10 of loving their own ideal, i.e. by hating every other ideal. Herein is 11 the explanation of why the same man who is so lovingly attached to 12 his own ideal of God, so devoted to his own ideal of religion, 13 becomes a howling fanatic as soon as he sees or hears anything of 14 any other ideal. This kind of love is somewhat like the canine 15 instinct of guarding the master's property from intrusion; only, the 16 instinct of the dog is better than the reason of man, for the dog 17 never mistakes its master for an enemy in whatever dress he may 18 come before it. Again, the fanatic loses all power of judgment.
19 Personal considerations are in his case of such absorbing interest 20 that to him it is no question at all what a man says--whether it is 21 right or wrong; but the one thing he is always particularly careful to 22 know is who says it. The same man who is kind, good, honest, and 23 loving to people of his own opinion, will not hesitate to do the vilest 24 deeds when they are directed against persons beyond the pale of 25 this own religious brotherhood.

26 But this danger exists only in that stage of Bhakti which is 27 called the preparatory (Gauni). When Bhakti has become ripe and 28 has passed into that form which is called the supreme (Para), no 29 more is there any fear of these hideous manifestations of 30 fanaticism; that soul which is overpowered by this higher form of 31 Bhakti is too near the God of Love to become an instrument for the 32 diffusion of hatred.

33 It is not given to all of us to be harmonious in the building up 34 of our characters in this life; yet we know that the character is of 35 the noblest type in which all these three--knowledge and love and 36 Yoga--are harmoniously fused. Three things are necessary for a bird 37 to fly--the two wings and the tail as a rudder for steering. Jnana 38 (knowledge) is the one wing, Bhakti (Love) is the other, and Yoga is 39 the tail that keeps up the balance. For those who cannot pursue all 40 these three forms of worship together in harmony and take up, 41 therefore, Bhakti alone as their way, it is necessary always to 42 remember that forms and ceremonials, though absolutely necessary 43 for the progressive soul, have no other value than taking us on to 44 that state in which we feel the most intense love to God.

45 There is a little difference in opinion between the teachers of 46 knowledge and those of love, though both admit the power of 47 Bhakti. The Jnanis hold Bhakti to be an instrument of liberation, the 48 Bhaktas look upon it both as the instrument and the thing to be 49 attained. To my mind this is a distinction without much difference.
50 In fact, Bhakti, when used as an instrument, really means a lower 51 form of worship, and the higher form becomes inseparable from the 52 lower form of realisation at a later stage. Each seems to lay a great

1 stress upon his own peculiar method of worship, forgetting that 2 with perfect love true knowledge is bound to come even unsought, 3 and that from perfect knowledge true love is inseparable.

4 Bearing this in mind let us try to understand what the great 5 Vedantic commentators have to say on the subject. In explaining the 6 Sutra Avrittirasakridupadeshat, Bhagavan Shankara says, "Thus 7 people say, 'He is devoted to the king, he is devoted to the Guru'; 8 they say this of him who follows his Guru, and does so, having that 9 following as the one in view. Similarly they say, 'The loving wife 10 meditates on her loving husband; here also a kind of eager and 11 continuous remembrance is meant." This is devotion according to 12 Shankara.

13 "Meditation again is a constant remembrance (of the thing 14 meditated upon) flowing like an unbroken stream of oil poured out 15 from one vessel to another. When this kind of remembering has 16 been attained (in relation to God) all bondages break. Thus it is 17 spoken of in the scriptures regarding constant remembering as a 18 means to liberation. This remembering again is of the same form as 19 seeing, because it is of the same meaning as in the passage, 'When 20 He who is far and near is seen, the bonds of the heart are broken, 21 all doubts vanish, and all effects of work disappear.' He who is near 22 can be seen, but he who is far can only be remembered.
23 Nevertheless the scripture says that we have to see Him who is 24 near as well as Him who is far, thereby indicating to us that the 25 above kind of remembering is as good as seeing. This 26 remembrance when exalted assumes the same form as seeing. . . .
27 Worship is constant remembering as may be seen from the 28 essential texts of scriptures. Knowing, which is the same as 29 repeated worship, has been described as constant 30 remembering. . . . Thus the memory, which has attained to the 31 height of what is as good as direct perception, is spoken of in the 32 Shruti as a means of liberation. 'This Atman is not to be reached 33 through various sciences, nor by intellect, nor by much study of the 34 Vedas. Whomsoever this Atman desires, by him is the Atman 35 attained, unto him this Atman discovers Himself.' Here, after saying 36 that mere hearing, thinking and meditating are not the means of 37 attaining this Atman, it is said, 'Whom this Atman desires, by him 38 the Atman is attained.' The extremely beloved is desired; by 39 whomsoever this Atman is extremely beloved, he becomes the most 40 beloved of the Atman. So that this beloved may attain the Atman, 41 the Lord Himself helps. For it has been said by the Lord: 'Those 42 who are constantly attached to Me and worship Me with love--I give 43 that direction to their will by which they come to Me.' Therefore it 44 is said that, to whomsoever this remembering, which is of the same 45 form as direct perception, is very dear, because it is dear to the 46 Object of such memory perception, he is desired by the Supreme 47 Atman, by him the Supreme Atman is attained. This constant 48 remembrance is denoted by the word Bhakti." So says Bhagavan 49 Ramanuja in his commentary on the Sutra Athato Brahma-jijnasa.

50 In commenting on the Sutra of Patanjali, Ishvara
51 pranidhanadva, i.e. "Or by the worship of the Supreme Lord"--Bhoja 52 says, "Pranidhana is that sort of Bhakti in which, without seeking 1 results, such as sense-enjoyments etc., all works are dedicated to 2 that Teacher of teachers." Bhagavan Vyasa also, when commenting 3 on the same, defines Pranidhana as "the form of Bhakti by which 4 the mercy of the Supreme Lord comes to the Yogi, and blesses him 5 by granting him his desires". According to Shandilya, "Bhakti is 6 intense love to God." The best definition is, however, that given by 7 the king of Bhaktas, Prahlada: {Sanskrit} "That deathless love 8 which the ignorant have for the fleeting objects of the senses--as I 9 keep meditating on Thee--may not that love slip away from the 10 heart!" Love ! For whom? For the Supreme Lord Ishvara. Love for 11 any other being, however great cannot be Bhakti; for, as Ramanuja 12 says in his Shri Bhashya, quoting an ancient Acharya, i.e. a great 13 teacher: {Sanskrit} "From Brahma to a clump of grass, all things 14 that live in the world are slaves of birth and death caused by 15 Karma; therefore they cannot be helpful as objects of meditation, 16 because they are all in ignorance and subject to change." In 17 commenting on the word Anurakti used by Shandilya, the 18 commentator Svapneshvara says that it means Anu, after, and 19 Rakti, attachment; i.e. the attachment which comes after the 20 knowledge of the nature and glory of God; else a blind attachment 21 to any one, e.g. to wife or children, would be Bhakti. We plainly see, 22 therefore, that Bhakti is a series or succession of mental efforts at 23 religious realisation beginning with ordinary worship and ending in 24 a supreme intensity of love for Ishvara.

25 26 27 THE PHILOSOPHY OF ISHVARA

28
29 Who is Ishvara? Janmadyasya yatah--"From whom is the birth, 30 continuation, and dissolution of the universe,"--He is Ishvara--"the 31 Eternal, the Pure, the Ever-Free, the Almighty, the All-knowing, the 32 All-Merciful, the Teacher of all teachers"; and above all, Sa Ishvarah 33 anirvachaniya-premasvarupah--"He the Lord is, of His own nature, 34 inexpressible Love." These certainly are the definitions of a 35 Personal God. Are there then two Gods--the "Not this, not this," the 36 Sat-chit-ananda, the Existence-Knowledge-Bliss of the philosopher, 37 and this God of Love of the Bhakta? No, it is the same Sat-chit-38 ananda who is also the God of Love, the impersonal and personal in 39 one. It has always to be understood that the Personal God 40 worshipped by the Bhakta is not separate or different from the 41 Brahman. All is Brahman, the One without a second; only the 42 Brahman, as unity or absolute, is too much of an abstraction to be 43 loved and worshipped; so the Bhakta chooses the relative aspect of 44 Brahman, that is, Ishvara, the supreme Ruler. To use a simile:
45 Brahman is as the clay or substance out of which an infinite variety 46 of articles are fashioned. As clay, they are all one; but form or 47 manifestation differentiates them. Before every one of them was 48 made, they all existed potentially in the clay, and, of course, they 49 are identical substantially; but when formed, and so long as the 50 form remains, they are separate and different; the clay-mouse can 51 never become a clay-elephant, because, as manifestations, form

1 alone makes them what they are, though as unformed clay they are 2 all one. Ishvara is the highest manifestation of the Absolute Reality, 3 or in other words, the highest possible reading of the Absolute by 4 the human mind. Creation is eternal, and so also is Ishvara.

5 In the fourth Pada of the fourth chapter of his Sutras, after 6 stating the almost infinite power and knowledge which will come to 7 the liberated soul after the attainment of Moksha, Vsaya makes the 8 remark, in an aphorism, that none, however, will get the power of 9 creating, ruling, and dissolving the universe, because that belongs 10 to God alone. In explaining the Sutra it is easy for the dualistic 11 commentators to show how it is ever impossible for a subordinate 12 soul, Jiva, to have the infinite power and total independence of God.
13 The thorough dualistic commentator Madhvacharya deals with this 14 passage in his usual summary method by quoting a verse from the 15 Varaha Purana.

16 In explaining this aphorism the commentator Ramanuja says, 17 "This doubt being raised, whether among the powers of the 18 liberated souls is included that unique power of the Supreme One, 19 that is, of creation etc. of the universe and even the Lordship of all, 20 or whether, without that, the glory of the liberated consists only in 21 the direct perception of the Supreme One, we get as an argument 22 the following: It is reasonable that the liberated get the Lordship of 23 the universe, because the scriptures say, 'He attains to extreme 24 sameness with the Supreme One and all his desires are realised.' 25 Now extreme sameness and realisation of all desires cannot be 26 attained without the unique power of the Supreme Lord, namely, 27 that of governing the universe. Therefore, to attain the realisation 28 of all desires and the extreme sameness with the Supreme, we must 29 all admit that the liberated get the power of ruling the whole 30 universe. To this we reply, that the liberated get all the powers 31 except that of ruling the universe. Ruling the universe is guiding 32 the form and the life and the desires of all the sentient and the non-33 sentient beings. The liberated ones from whom all that veils His 34 true nature has been removed, only enjoy the unobstructed
35 perception of the Brahman, but do not possess the power of ruling 36 the universe. This is proved from the scriptural text, 'From whom 37 all these things are born, by which all that are born live, unto whom 38 they, departing, return ask about it. That is Brahman.' If this quality 39 of ruling the universe be a quality common even to the liberated, 40 then this text would not apply as a definition of Brahman, defining 41 Him though His rulership of the universe. The uncommon attributes 42 alone define a thing; therefore in texts like--'My beloved boy, alone, 43 in the beginning there existed the One without a second. That saw 44 and felt, "I will give birth to many." That projected heat.'--'Brahman 45 indeed alone existed in the beginning. That One evolved. That 46 projected a blessed form, the Kshatra. All these gods are Kshatras:
47 Varuna, Soma, Rudra, Parjanya, Yama, Mrityu, Ishana.' --'Atman 48 indeed existed alone in the beginning; nothing else vibrated; He 49 thought of projecting the world; He projected the world 50 after.'--'Alone Narayana existed; neither Brahma, nor Ishana, nor 51 the Dyava-Prithivi, nor the stars, nor water, nor fire, nor Soma, nor 52 the sun. He did not take pleasure alone. He after His meditation

1 had one daughter, the ten organs, etc.'--and in others as, 'Who living 2 in the earth is separate from the earth, who living in the Atman, 3 etc.'--the Shrutis speak of the Supreme One as the subject of the 4 work of ruling the universe. . . . Nor in these descriptions of the 5 ruling of the universe is there any position for the liberated soul, by 6 which such a soul may have the ruling of the universe ascribed to 7 it."

8 In explaining the next Sutra, Ramanuja says, "If you say it is 9 not so, because there are direct texts in the Vedas in evidence to 10 the contrary, these texts refer to the glory of the liberated in the 11 spheres of the subordinate deities." This also is an easy solution of 12 the difficulty. Although the system of Ramanuja admits the unity of 13 the total, within that totality of existence there are, according to 14 him, eternal differences. Therefore, for all practical purposes, this 15 system also being dualistic, it was easy for Ramanuja to keep the 16 distinction between the personal soul and the Personal God very 17 clear.

18 We shall now try to understand what the great representative 19 of the Advaita School has to say on the point. We shall see how the 20 Advaita system maintains all the hopes and aspirations of the 21 dualist intact, and at the same time propounds its own solution of 22 the problem in consonance with the high destiny of divine humanity.
23 Those who aspire to retain their individual mind even after 24 liberation and to remain distinct will have ample opportunity of 25 realising their aspirations and enjoying the blessing of the qualified 26 Brahman. These are they who have been spoken of in the 27 Bhagavata Purana thus: "O king, such are the glorious qualities of 28 the Lord that the sages whose only pleasure is in the Self, and from 29 whom all fetters have fallen off, even they love the Omnipresent 30 with the love that is for love's sake." These are they who are spoken 31 of by the Sankhyas as getting merged in nature in this cycle, so 32 that, after attaining perfection, they may come out in the next as 33 lords of world-systems. But none of these ever becomes equal to 34 God (Ishvara). Those who attain to that state where there is neither 35 creation, nor created, nor creator, where there is neither knower, 36 nor knowable, nor knowledge, where there is neither I, nor thou, 37 nor he, where there is neither subject, nor object, nor relation, 38 "there, who is seen by whom?"--such persons have gone beyond 39 everything to "where words cannot go nor mind", gone to that 40 which the Shrutis declare as "Not this, not this"; but for those who 41 cannot, or will not reach this state, there will inevitably remain the 42 triune vision of the one undifferentiated Brahman as nature, soul, 43 and the interpenetrating sustainer of both--Ishvara. So, when 44 Prahlada forgot himself, he found neither the universe nor its 45 cause; all was to him one Infinite, undifferentiated by name and 46 form; but as soon as he remembered that he was Prahlada, there 47 was the universe before him and with it the Lord of the 48 universe--"the Repository of an infinite number of blessed 49 qualities".

50 So it was with the blessed Gopis. So long as they had lost 51 sense of their own personal identity and individuality, they were all 52 Krishnas, and when they began again to think of Him as the One to 1 be worshipped, then they were Gopis again, and immediately

2 {Sanskrit} (Bhagavata)--"Unto them appeared Krishna with a smile 3 on His lotus face, clad in yellow robes and having garlands on, the 4 embodied conqueror (in beauty) of the god of love."

5 Now to go back to our Acharya Shankara: "Those", he says, 6 "who by worshipping the qualified Brahman attain conjunction with 7 the Supreme Ruler, preserving their own mind--is their glory limited 8 or unlimited? This doubt arising, we get as an argument: Their 9 glory should be unlimited because of the scriptural texts. 'They 10 attain their own kingdom', 'To him all the gods offer worship', 'Their 11 desires are fulfilled in all the worlds'. As an answer to this, Vyasa 12 writes, 'Without the power of ruling the universe.' Barring the 13 power of creation etc. of the universe, the other powers such as 14 Anima etc. are acquired by the liberated. As to ruling the universe, 15 that belongs to the eternally perfect Ishvara. Why? Because He is 16 the subject of all the scriptural texts as regards creation etc., and 17 the liberated souls are not mentioned therein in any connection 18 whatsoever. The Supreme Lord indeed is alone engaged in ruling 19 the universe. The texts as to creation etc. all point to Him. Besides, 20 there is given the adjective 'ever-perfect'. Also the scriptures say 21 that the powers Anima etc. of the others are from the search after 22 and the worship of God. Therefore they have no place in the ruling 23 of the universe. Again, on account of their possessing their own 24 minds, it is possible that their wills may differ, and that, whilst one 25 desires creation, another may desire destruction. The only way of 26 avoiding this conflict is to make all wills subordinate to some one 27 will. Therefore the conclusion is that the wills of the liberated are 28 dependent on the will of the Supreme Ruler."

29 Bhakti, then, can be directed towards Brahman, only in His 30 personal aspect. {Sanskrit}--"The way is more difficult for those 31 whose mind is attached to the Absolute!" Bhakti has to float on 32 smoothly with the current of our nature. True it is that we cannot 33 have any idea of the Brahman which is not anthropomorphic, but is 34 it not equally true of everything we know? The greatest 35 psychologist the world has ever known, Bhagavan Kapila, 36 demonstrated ages ago that human consciousness is one of the 37 elements in the make-up of all objects of our perception and 38 conception, internal as well as eternal. Beginning with our bodies 39 and going up to Ishvara, we may see that every object of our 40 perception is this consciousness plus something else, whatever that 41 may be; and this unavoidable mixture is what we ordinarily think of 42 as reality. Indeed it is, and ever will be, all of the reality that is 43 possible for the human mind to know. Therefore to say that Ishvara 44 is unreal, because He is anthropomorphic, is sheer nonsense. It 45 sounds very much like the occidental squabble on idealism and 46 realism, which fearful-looking quarrel has for its foundation a mere 47 play on the word "real". The idea of Ishvara covers all the ground 48 ever denoted and connected by the word real, and Ishvara is as real 49 as anything else in the universe; and after all, the word real means 50 nothing more than what has now been pointed out. Such is our 51 philosophical conception of Ishvara.

1 SPIRITUAL REALISATION, THE AIM OF 2 BHAKTI-YOGA

3
4 To the Bhakta these dry details are necessary only to 5 strengthen his will; beyond that they are of no use to him. For he is 6 treading on a path which is fitted very soon to lead him beyond the 7 hazy and turbulent regions of reason, to lead him to the realm of 8 realisation. He, soon, through the mercy of the Lord, reaches a 9 plane where pedantic and powerless reason is left far behind, and 10 the mere intellectual groping through the dark gives place to the 11 daylight of direct perception. He no more reasons and believes, he 12 almost perceives. He no more argues, he senses. And is not this 13 seeing God, and feeling God, and enjoying God higher than 14 everything else? Nay, Bhaktas have not been wanting who have 15 maintained that it is higher than even Moksha--liberation. And is it 16 not also the highest utility? There are people--and a good many of 17 them too--in the world who are convinced that only that is of use 18 and utility which brings to man creature-comforts. Even religion, 19 God, eternity, soul, none of these is of any use to them, as they do 20 not bring them money or physical comfort. To such, all those things 21 which do not go to gratify the senses and appease the appetites are 22 of no utility. In every mind, utility, however, is conditioned by its 23 own peculiar wants. To men, therefore, who never rise higher than 24 eating, drinking, begetting progeny, and dying, the only gain is in 25 sense-enjoyments; and they must wait and go through many more 26 births and reincarnations to learn to feel even the faintest necessity 27 for anything higher. But those to whom the eternal interests of the 28 soul are of much higher value than the fleeting interests of this 29 mundane life, to whom the gratification of the senses is but like the 30 thoughtless play of the baby, to them God and the love of God form 31 the highest and the only utility of human existence. Thank God 32 there are some such still living in this world of too much 33 worldliness.

1 Bhakti-Yoga, as we have said, is divided into the Gauni or the 2 preparatory and the Para or the supreme forms. We shall find, as 3 we go on, how in the preparatory stage we unavoidably stand in 4 need of many concrete helps to enable us to get on; and indeed the 5 mythological and symbological parts of the religions are natural 6 growths which early environ the aspiring soul and help it Godward.
7 It is also a significant fact that spiritual giants have been produced 8 only in those systems of religion where there is an exuberant 9 growth of rich mythology and ritualism. The dry fanatical forms of 10 religion which attempt to eradicate all that is poetical, all that is 11 beautiful and sublime, all that gives a firm grasp to the infant mind 12 tottering in its Godward way--the forms which attempt to break 13 down the ridge-poles of the spiritual roof, and in their ignorant and 14 superstitious conceptions of truth try to drive away all that is life-15 giving, all that furnishes the formative material to the spiritual 16 plant growing in the human soul--such forms of religion too soon 17 find that all that is left to them is but an empty shell, a contentless 18 frame of words and sophistry with perhaps a little flavour of a kind 19 of social scavengering or the so-called spirit of reform.

20 The vast mass of those whose religion is like this, are 21 conscious or unconscious materialists--the end and aim of their 22 lives here and hereafter being enjoyment, which indeed is to them 23 the alpha and the omega of human life, and which is their 24 Ishtapurta; work like street-cleaning and scavengering, intended 25 for the material comfort of man is, according to them, the be-all and 26 end-all of human existence; and the sooner the followers of this 27 curious mixture of ignorance and fanaticism come out in their true 28 colours and join, as they well deserve to do, the ranks of the 29 atheists and materialists, the better will it be for the world. One 30 ounce of the practice of righteousness and of spiritual Self-31 realisation outweighs tons and tons of frothy talk and nonsensical 32 sentiments. Show us one, but one gigantic spiritual genius growing 33 out of all this dry dust of ignorance and fanaticism; and if you 34 cannot, close your mouths, open the windows of your hearts to the 35 clear light of truth, and sit like children at the feet of those who 36 know what they are talking about--the sages of India. Let us then 37 listen attentively to what they say.

40 THE NEED OF GURU

41
42 Every soul is destined to be perfect, and every being, in the 43 end, will attain the state of perfection. Whatever we are now is the 44 result of our acts and thoughts in the past; and whatever we shall 45 be in the future will be the result of what we think and do now. But 46 this, the shaping of our own destinies, does not preclude our 47 receiving help from outside; nay, in the vast majority of cases such 48 help is absolutely necessary. When it comes, the higher powers and 49 possibilities of the soul are quickened, spiritual life is awakened, 50 growth is animated, and man becomes holy and perfect in the end.

1 This quickening impulse cannot be derived from books. The 2 soul can only receive impulses from another soul, and from nothing 3 else. We may study books all our lives, we may become very 4 intellectual, but in the end we find that we have not developed at all 5 spiritually. It is not true that a high order of intellectual 6 development always goes hand in hand with a proportionate 7 development of the spiritual side in Man. In studying books we are 8 sometimes deluded into thinking that thereby we are being 9 spiritually helped; but if we analyse the effect of the study of books 10 on ourselves, we shall find that at the utmost it is only our intellect 11 that derives profit from such studies, and not our inner spirit. This 12 inadequacy of books to quicken spiritual growth is the reason why, 13 although almost every one of us can speak most wonderfully on 14 spiritual matters, when it comes to action and the living of a truly 15 spiritual life, we find ourselves so awfully deficient. To quicken the 16 spirit, the impulse must come from another soul.

17 The person from whose soul such impulse comes is called the 18 Guru--the teacher; and the person to whose soul the impulse is 19 conveyed is called the Shishya--the student. To convey such an 20 impulse to any soul, in the first place, the soul from which it 21 proceeds must possess the power of transmitting it, as it were to 22 another; and in the second place, the soul to which it is transmitted 23 must be fit to receive it. The seed must be a living seed, and the 24 field must be ready ploughed; and when both these conditions are 25 fulfilled, a wonderful growth of genuine religion takes place. "The 26 true preacher of religion has to be of wonderful capabilities, and 27 clever shall his hearer be"--{Sanskrit}; and when both of these are 28 really wonderful and extraordinary, then will a splendid spiritual 29 awakening result, and not otherwise. Such alone are the real 30 teachers, and such alone are also the real students, the real 31 aspirants. All others are only playing with spirituality. They have 32 just a little curiosity awakened, just a little intellectual aspiration 33 kindled in them, but are merely standing on the outward fringe of 34 the horizon of religion. There is no doubt some value even in that, 35 as it may in course of time result in the awakening of a real thirst 36 for religion; and it is a mysterious law of nature that as soon as the 37 field is ready, the seed must and does come; as soon as the soul 38 earnestly desires to have religion, the transmitter of the religious 39 force must and does appear to help that soul. When the power that 40 attracts the light of religion in the receiving soul is full and strong, 41 the power which answers to that attraction and sends in light does 42 come as a matter of course.

43 There are, however, certain great dangers in the way. There 44 is, for instance, the danger to the receiving soul of its mistaking 45 momentary emotions for real religious yearning. We may study that 46 in ourselves. Many a time in our lives, somebody dies whom we 47 loved; we receive a blow; we feel that the world is slipping between 48 our fingers; that we want something surer and higher, and that we 49 must become religious. In a few days that wave of feeling has 50 passed away, and we are left stranded just where we were before.
51 We are all of us often mistaking such impulses for real thirst after 52 religion; but as long as these momentary emotions are thus

1 mistaken, that continuous, real craving of the soul for religion will 2 not come, and we shall not find the true transmitter of spirituality 3 into our nature. So whenever we are tempted to complain of our 4 search after the truth that we desire so much, proving vain, instead 5 of so complaining, our first duty ought to be to look into our own 6 souls and find whether the craving in the heart is real. Then in the 7 vast majority of cases it would be discovered that we were not fit 8 for receiving the truth, that there was no real thirst for spirituality.

9 There are still greater dangers in regard to the transmitter, 10 the Guru. There are many who, though immersed in ignorance, yet, 11 in the pride of their hearts, fancy they know everything, and not 12 only do not stop there, but offer to take others on their shoulders; 13 and thus the blind leading the blind, both fall into the ditch.
14 {Sanskrit}--"Fools dwelling in darkness, wise in their own conceit, 15 and puffed up with vain knowledge, go round and round staggering 16 to and fro, like blind men led by the blind."--(Katha Up., I.ii. 5). The 17 world is full of these. Every one wants to be a teacher, every beggar 18 wants to make a gift of a million dollars! Just as these beggars are 19 ridiculous, so are these teachers.

22 QUALIFICATIONS OF THE ASPIRANT AND THE 23 TEACHER

24
25 How are we to know a teacher, then? The sun requires no
26 torch to make him visible, we need not light a candle in order to see 27 him. When the sun rises, we instinctively become aware of the fact, 28 and when a teacher of men comes to help us, the soul will 29 instinctively know that truth has already begun to shine upon it.
30 Truth stands on its own evidence, it does not require any other 31 testimony to prove it true, it is self-effulgent. It penetrates into the 32 innermost corners of our nature, and in its presence the whole 33 universe stands up and says, "This is truth." The teachers whose 34 wisdom and truth shine like the light of the sun are the very 35 greatest the world has known, and they are worshipped as God by 36 the major portion of mankind. But we may get help from 37 comparatively lesser ones also; only we ourselves do not possess 38 intuition enough to judge properly of the man from whom we 39 receive teaching and guidance; so there ought to be certain tests, 40 certain conditions, for the teacher to satisfy, as there are also for 41 the taught.

42 The conditions necessary for the taught are purity, a real 43 thirst after knowledge and perseverance. No impure soul can be 44 really religious. Purity in thought, speech, and act is absolutely 45 necessary for any one to be religious. As to the thirst after 46 knowledge, it is an old law that we all get whatever we want. None 47 of us can get anything other than what we fix our hearts upon. To 48 pant for religion truly is a very difficult thing, not at all so easy as 49 we generally imagine. Hearing religious talks or reading religious

1 books is no proof yet of a real want felt in the heart; there must a 2 continuous struggle, a constant fight, an unremitting grappling with 3 our lower nature, till the higher want is actually felt and the victory 4 is achieved. It is not a question of one or two days, of years, or of 5 lives; the struggle may have to go on for hundreds of life-times. The 6 success sometimes may come immediately, but we must be ready to 7 wait patiently even for what may look like an infinite length of time.
8 The student who sets out with such a spirit of perseverance will 9 surely find success and realisation at last.

10 In regard to the teacher, we must see that he knows the spirit
11 of the scriptures. The whole world reads Bibles, Vedas, and Korans; 12 but they are all only words, syntax, etymology, philology, the dry 13 bones of religion. The teacher who deals too much in words and 14 allows the mind to be carried away by the force of words lose the 15 spirit. It is the knowledge of the spirit of the scriptures alone that 16 constitutes the true religious teacher. The network of the words of 17 the scriptures is like a huge forest in which the human mind loses 18 itself and finds no way out. {Sanskrit}--"The network of words is a 19 big forest; it is the cause of a curious wandering of the mind." "The 20 various methods of joining words, the various methods of speaking 21 in beautiful language, the various methods of explaining the diction 22 of the scriptures are only for the disputations and enjoyment of the 23 learned, they do not conduce to the development of spiritual 24 perception"--{Sanskrit}. Those who employ such methods to impart 25 religion to others are only desirous to show off their learning, so 26 that the world may praise them as great scholars. You will find that 27 no one of the great teachers of the world ever went into into these 28 various explanations of the text; there is with them no attempt at 29 "text-torturing", no eternal playing upon the meaning of words and 30 their roots. Yet they nobly taught, while others who have nothing to 31 teach have taken up a word sometimes and written a three-volume 32 book on its origin, on the man who used it first, and on what the 33 man was accustomed to eat, and how long he slept, and so on.

1 Bhagavan Ramakrishna used to tell a story of some men who 2 went into a mango orchard and busied themselves in counting the 3 leaves, the twigs, and the branches, examining their colour, 4 comparing their size and noting down everything most carefully, 5 and then got up a learned discussion on each of these topics, which 6 were undoubtedly highly interesting to them. But one of them, more 7 sensible than the others, did not care for all these things, and 8 instead thereof, began to eat the mango fruit. And was he not wise?
9 So leave this counting of leaves and twigs and note-taking to others.
10 This kind of work has its proper place, but not here in the spiritual 11 domain. You never see a strong spiritual man among these "leaf-12 counters". Religion, the highest aim, the highest glory of man, does 13 not require so much labour. If you want to be a Bhakta, it is not at 14 all necessary for you to know whether Krishna was born in Mathura 15 or in Vraja, what he was doing, or just the exact date on which he 16 pronounced the teachings of the Gita. You only require to feel the 17 craving for the beautiful lessons of duty and love in the Gita. All the 18 other particulars about it and its author are for the enjoyment of 19 the learned. Let them have what they desire. Say "Shantih, Shantih" 20 to their learned controversies, and let us "eat the mangoes."

21 The second condition necessary in the teacher is--sinlessness.
22 The question is often asked, "Why should we look into the character 23 and personality of a teacher? We have only to judge of what he 24 says, and take that up." This is not right. If a man wants to teach me 25 something of dynamics, or chemistry, or any other physical science, 26 he may be anything he likes, because what the physical sciences 27 require is merely an intellectual equipment; but in the spiritual 28 sciences it is impossible from first to last that there can be any 29 spiritual light in the soul that is impure. What religion can an 30 impure man teach? The sine qua non of acquiring spiritual truth for 31 one's self or for imparting it to others is the purity of heart and 32 soul. A vision of God or a glimpse of the beyond never comes until 33 the soul is pure. Hence with the teacher of religion we must see 34 first what he is, and then what he says. He must be perfectly pure, 35 and then alone comes the value of his words, because he is only 36 then the true "transmitter". What can he transmit if he has not 37 spiritual power in himself? There must be the worthy vibration of 38 spirituality in the mind of the teacher, so that it may be 39 sympathetically conveyed to the mind of the taught. The function of 40 the teacher is indeed an affair of the transference of something, 41 and not one of mere stimulation of the existing intellectual or other 42 faculties in the taught. Something real and appreciable as an 43 influence comes from the teacher and goes to the taught. Therefore 44 the teacher must be pure.

45 The third condition is in regard to the motive. The teacher 46 must not teach with any ulterior selfish motive--for money, name, or 47 fame; his work must be simply out of love, out of pure love for 48 mankind at large. The only medium through which spiritual force 49 can be transmitted is love. Any selfish motive, such as the desire for 50 gain or for name, will immediately destroy this conveying medium.
51 God is love, and only he who has known God as love can be a 52 teacher of godliness and God to man.

1 When you see that in your teacher these conditions are all 2 fulfilled, you are safe; if they are not, it is unsafe to allow yourself to 3 be taught by him, for there is the great danger that, if he cannot 4 convey goodness to your heart, he may convey wickedness. This 5 danger must by all means be guarded against. {Sanskrit}--"He who 6 is learned in the scriptures, sinless, unpolluted by lust, and is the 7 greatest knower of the Brahman" is the real teacher.

8 From what has been said, it naturally follows that we cannot 9 be taught to love, appreciate, and assimilate religion everywhere 10 and by everybody. The "books in the running brooks, sermons in 11 stones, and good in every thing" is all very true as a poetical figure; 12 but nothing can impart to a man a single grain of truth unless he 13 has the undeveloped germs of it in himself. To whom do the stones 14 and brooks preach sermons? To the human soul, the lotus of whose 15 inner holy shrine is already quick with life. And the light which 16 causes the beautiful opening out of this lotus comes always from 17 the good and wise teacher. When the heart has thus been opened, it 18 becomes fit to receive teaching from the stones or the brooks, the 19 stars, or the sun, or the moon, or from any thing which has its 20 existence in our divine universe; but the unopened heart will see in 21 them nothing but mere stones or mere brooks. A blind man may go 22 to a museum, but he will not profit by it in any way; his eyes must 23 be opened first, and then alone he will be able to learn what the 24 things in the museum can teach.

25 This eye-opener of the aspirant after religion is the teacher.
26 With the teacher, therefore, our relationship is the same as that 27 between an ancestor and his descendant. Without faith, humility, 28 submission, and veneration in our hearts towards our religious 29 teacher, there cannot be any growth of religion in us; and it is a 30 significant fact that, where this kind of relation between the teacher 31 and the taught prevails, there alone gigantic spiritual men are 32 growing; while in those countries which have neglected to keep up 33 this kind of relation, the religious teacher has become a mere 34 lecturer, the teacher expecting his five dollars and the person 35 taught expecting his brain to be filled with the teacher's words, and 36 each going his own way after this much has been done. Under such 37 circumstances spirituality becomes almost an unknown quantity.
38 There is none to transmit it and none to have it transmitted to.
39 Religion with such people becomes business; they think they can 40 obtain it with their dollars. Would to God that religion could be 41 obtained so easily! But unfortunately it cannot be.

42 Religion, which is the highest knowledge and the highest 43 wisdom, cannot be bought, nor can it be acquired from books. You 44 may thrust your head into all corners of the world, you may explore 45 the Himalayas, the Alps, and the Caucasus, you may sound the 46 bottom of the sea and pry into every nook of Tibet and the desert of 47 Gobi, you will not find it anywhere until your heart is ready for 48 receiving it and your teacher has come. And when that divinely 49 appointed teacher comes, serve him with child-like confidence and 50 simplicity, freely open your heart to his influence, and see in him 51 God manifested. Those who come to seek the truth with such a 52 spirit of love and veneration, to them the Lord of Truth reveals the 1 most wonderful things regarding truth, goodness, and beauty.

4 INCARNATE TEACHERS AND INCARNATION

6 Wherever His name is spoken, that very place is holy. How 7 much more so is the man who speaks His name, and with what 8 veneration ought we approach that man out of whom comes to us 9 spiritual truth! Such great teachers of spiritual truth are indeed 10 very few in number in this world, but the world is never altogether 11 without them. They are always the fairest flowers of human life-- 12 {Sanskrit}--"the ocean of mercy without any motive."
13 {Sanskrit}--"Know the Guru to be Me," says Shri Krishna in the 14 Bhagavata. The moment the world is absolutely bereft of these, it 15 becomes a hideous hell and hastens on to its destruction.

16 Higher and nobler than all ordinary ones are another set of 17 teachers, the Avatars of Ishvara, in the world. They can transmit 18 spirituality with a touch, even with a mere wish. The lowest and 19 most degraded characters become in one second saints at their 20 command. They are the Teachers of all teachers, the highest 21 manifestations of God through man. We cannot see God except 22 through them. We cannot help worshipping them; and indeed they 23 are the only ones whom we are bound to worship.

24 No man can really see God except through these human 25 manifestations. If we try to see God otherwise, we make for 26 ourselves a hideous caricature of Him and believe the caricature to 27 be no worse than the original. There is a story of an ignorant man 28 who was asked to make an image of the God Shiva, and who, after 29 days of hard struggle, manufactured only the image of a monkey. So 30 whenever we try to think of God as He is in His absolute perfection, 31 we invariably meet with the most miserable failure, because as long 32 as we are men, we cannot conceive Him as anything higher than 33 man. The time will come when we shall transcend our human 34 nature and know Him as He is; but as long as we are men, we must 35 worship Him in man and as man. Talk as you may, try as you may, 36 you cannot think of God except as a man. You may deliver great 37 intellectual discourses on God and on all things under the sun, 38 become great rationalists and prove to your satisfaction that all 39 these accounts of the Avatars of God as man are nonsense. But let 40 us come for a moment to practical common sense. What is there 41 behind this kind of remarkable intellect? Zero, nothing, simply so 42 much froth. When next you hear a man delivering a great 43 intellectual lecture against this worship of the Avatars of God, get 44 hold of him and ask what his idea of God is, what he understands 45 by "omnipresence", or "omnipotence", and all similar terms, beyond 46 the spelling of the words. He really means nothing by them; he 47 cannot formulate as their meaning any idea unaffected by his own 48 human nature; he is no better off in this matter than the man in the 49 street who has not read a single book. That man in the street, 50 however, is quiet and does not disturb the peace of the world, while

1 this big talker creates disturbance and misery among mankind.
2 Religion is, after all, realisation, and we must make the sharpest 3 distinction between talk and intuitive experience. What we 4 experience in the depths of our souls is realisation. Nothing indeed 5 is so uncommon as common sense in regard to this matter.

6 By our present constitution we are limited and bound to see 7 God as man. If, for instance, the buffaloes want to worship God, 8 they will, in keeping with their own nature, see Him as a huge 9 buffalo; if a fish wants to worship God, it will have to form an idea 10 of Him as a big fish; and man has to think of Him as man. And these 11 various conceptions are not due to morbidly active imagination.
12 Man, the buffalo, and the fish all may be supposed to represent so 13 many different vessels, so to say. All these vessels go to the sea of 14 God to get filled with water, each according to its own shape and 15 capacity; in the man the water takes the shape of man, in the 16 buffalo, the shape of a buffalo, and in the fish, the shape of a fish. In 17 each of these vessels there is the same water of the sea of God.
18 When men see Him, they see Him as man, and the animals, if they 19 have any conception of God at all, must see Him as animal, each 20 according to its own ideal. So we cannot help seeing God as man, 21 and therefore, we are bound to worship Him as man. There is no 22 other way.

23 Two kinds of men do not worship God as man--the human 24 brute who has no religion, and the Paramahansa who has risen 25 beyond all the weaknesses of humanity and has transcended the 26 limits of his own human nature. To him all nature has become his 27 own Self. He alone can worship God as He is. Here, too, as in all 28 other cases, the two extremes meet. The extreme of ignorance and 29 the other extreme of knowledge--neither of these go through acts of 30 worship. The human brute does not worship because of his 31 ignorance, and the Jivanmuktas (free souls) do not worship because 32 they have realised God in themselves. Being between these two 33 poles of existence, if any one tells you that he is not going to 34 worship God as man, take kindly care of that man; he is, not to use 35 any harsher term, an irresponsible talker; his religion is for 36 unsound and empty brains.

37 God understands human failings and becomes man to do good 38 to humanity: {Sanskrit}

39 {Sanskrit}--"Whenever virtue subsides and wickedness 40 prevails, I manifest Myself. To establish virtue, to destroy evil, to 41 save the good I come from Yuga (age) to Yuga." {Sanskrit}--"Fools 42 deride Me who have assumed the human form, without knowing My 43 real nature as the Lord of the universe." Such is Shri Krishna's 44 declaration in the Gita on Incarnation. "When a huge tidal wave 45 comes," says Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna, "all the little brooks and 46 ditches become full to the brim without any effort or consciousness 47 on their own part; so when an Incarnation comes, a tidal wave of 48 spirituality breaks upon the world, and people feel spirituality 49 almost full in the air."

THE MANTRA: OM: WORD AND WISDOM

But we are now considering not these Maha-purushas, the great Incarnations, but only the Siddha-Gurus (teachers who have attained the goal); they, as a rule, have to convey the germs of spiritual wisdom to the disciple by means of words (Mantras) to be meditated upon. What are these Mantras? The whole of this universe has, according to Indian philosophy, both name and form (Nama-Rupa) as its conditions of manifestation. In the human microcosm, there cannot be a single wave in the mind-stuff (Chitta-vritti) unconditioned by name and form. If it be true that nature is built throughout on the same plan, this kind of conditioning by name and form must also be the plan of the building of the whole of the cosmos. {Sanskrit}--"As one lump of clay being known, all things of clay are known", so the knowledge of the microcosm must lead to the knowledge of the macrocosm. Now form is the outer crust, of which the name or the idea is the inner essence or kernel. The body is the form, and the mind or the Antahkarana is the name, and sound-symbols are universally associated with Nama (name) in all beings having the power of speech. In the individual man the thought-waves rising in the limited Mahat or Chitta (mind-stuff), must manifest themselves, first as words, and then as the more concrete forms.

In the universe, Brahma or Hiranyagarbha or the cosmic Mahat first manifested himself as name, and then as form, i.e. as this universe. All this expressed sensible universe is the form, behind which stands the eternal inexpressible Sphota, the manifest as Logos or Word. This eternal Sphota, the essential eternal material of all ideas or names, is the power through which the Lord creates the universe; nay, the Lord first becomes conditioned as the Sphota, and then evolves Himself out as the yet more concrete sensible universe. This Sphota has one word as its only possible symbol, and this is the (Om). And as by no possible means of analysis can we separate the word from the idea, this Om and the eternal Sphota are inseparable; and, therefore, it is out of this holiest of all holy words, the mother of all names and forms, the eternal Om, that the whole universe may be supposed to have been created. But it may be said that, although thought and word are inseparable, yet as there may be various word-symbols for the same thought, it is not necessary that this particular word Om should be the word representative of the thought, out of which the universe has become manifested. To this objection we reply that this Om is the only possible symbol which covers the whole ground, and there is none other like it. The Sphota is the material of all the words, yet it is not any definite word in its fully formed state. That is to say, if all the peculiarities which distinguish one word from another be removed, then what remains will be the Sphota; therefore this Sphota is called the Nada-Brahma, the Sound-Brahman.

Now, as every word-symbol, intended to express the inexpressible Sphota, will so particularise it that it will no longer be the Sphota, that symbol which particularises it the least and at the

1 same time most approximately expresses its nature, will be the 2 truest symbol thereof; and this is the Om, and the Om only; because 3 the three letters (A.U.M.), pronounced in combination as Om, may 4 well be the generalised symbol of all possible sounds. The letter A 5 is the least differentiated of all sounds, therefore Krishna says in 6 the Gita {Sanskrit}--"I am A among the letters". Again , all 7 articulate sounds are produced in the space within the mouth 8 beginning with the root of the tongue and ending in the lips--the 9 throat sound is A, and M is the last lip sound, and the U exactly 10 represents the rolling forward of the impulse which begins at the 11 root of the tongue till it ends in the lips. If properly pronounced, 12 this Om will represent the whole phenomenon of sound-production, 13 and no other word can do this; and this, therefore, is the fittest 14 symbol of the Sphota, which is the real meaning of the Om. And as 15 the symbol can never be separated from the thing signified, the Om 16 and the Sphota are one. And as the Sphota, being the finer side of 17 the manifested universe, is nearer to God, and is indeed that first 18 manifestation of divine wisdom, this Om is truly symbolic of God.
19 Again, just as the "One only" Brahman, the Akhanda-20 Sachchidananda, the undivided Existence-Knowledge-Bliss, can be 21 conceived by imperfect human souls only from particular 22 standpoints and associated with particular qualities, so this 23 universe, His body, has also to be thought of along the line of the 24 thinker's mind.

25 This direction of the worshipper's mind is guided by its 26 prevailing elements or Tattvas. The result is that the same God will 27 be seen in various manifestations as the possessor of various 28 predominant qualities, and the same universe will appear as full of 29 manifold forms. Even as in the case of the least differentiated and 30 the most universal symbol Om, thought and sound-symbol are seen 31 to be inseparably associated with each other, so also this law of 32 their inseparable association applies to the many differentiated 33 views of God and the universe: each of them therefore must have a 34 particular word-symbol to express it. These word-symbols, evolved 35 out of the deepest spiritual perception of sages, symbolise and 36 express, as nearly as possible, the particular view of God and the 37 universe they stand for. And as the Om represents the Akhanda, the 38 undifferentiated Brahman, the others represent the Khanda or the 39 differentiated views of the same Beings; and they are all helpful to 40 divine meditation and the acquisition of true knowledge.

43 WORSHIP OF SUBSTITUTES AND IMAGES

45 The next points to be considered are the worship of Pratikas 46 or of things more or less satisfactory as substitutes for God, and the 47 worship of Pratimas or images. What is the worship of God through 48 a Pratika? It is {Sanskrit}--"Joining the mind with devotion to that 49 which is not Brahman, taking it to be Brahman"--says Bhagavan 50 Ramanuja. "Worship the mind as Brahman, this is internal; and the 51 Akasha as Brahman, this is with regard to the Devas", says

1 Shankara. The mind is an internal Pratika, the Akasha is an external 2 one; and both have to be worshipped as substitutes of God. He 3 continues, "Similarly--'the Sun is Brahman, this is the command', 4 'He who worships Name as Brahman'--in all such passages the 5 doubt arises as to the worship of Pratikas." The word Pratika means 6 going towards; and the worshipping a Pratika is worshipping 7 something as a substitute which is, in some one or more respects, 8 like Brahman more and more, but is not Brahman. Along with the 9 Pratikas mentioned in the Shrutis there are various others to be 10 found in the Puranas and the Tantras. In this kind of Pratika-11 worship may be included all the various forms of Pitri-worship and 12 Deva-worship.

13 Now worshipping Ishvara and Him alone is Bhakti; the 14 worship of anything else--Deva, or Pitri, or any other being--cannot 15 be Bhakti. The various kinds of worship of the various Devas are all 16 to be included in ritualistic Karma, which gives to the worshipper 17 only a particular result in the form of some celestial enjoyment, but 18 can neither give rise to Bhakti nor lead to Mukti. One thing, 19 therefore, has to be carefully borne in mind. If, as it may happen in 20 some cases, the highly philosophical ideal, the supreme Brahman, is 21 dragged down by Pratika-worship to the level of the Pratika and the 22 Pratika itself is taken to be the Atman of the worshipper or his 23 Antaryamin (Inner Ruler), the worshipper gets entirely misled, as 24 no Pratika can really be the Atman of the worshipper.

25 But where Brahman Himself is the object of worship, and the 26 Pratika stands only as a substitute or a suggestion thereof, that is to 27 say, where, through the Pratika the omnipresent Brahman is 28 worshipped--the Pratika itself being idealised into the cause of all, 29 Brahman--the worship is positively beneficial; nay, it is absolutely 30 necessary for all mankind until they have all got beyond the primary 31 or preparatory state of the mind in regard to worship. When, 32 therefore, any gods or other beings are being worshipped in and for 33 themselves, such worship is only a ritualistic Karma; and as a Vidya 34 (science) it gives us only the fruit belonging to that particular 35 Vidya; but when the Devas or any other beings are looked upon as 36 Brahman and worshipped, the result obtained is the same as by the 37 worshipping of Ishvara. This explains how, in many cases, both in 38 the Shrutis and the Smritis, a god, or a sage, or some other 39 extraordinary being is taken up and lifted, as it were, out of his own 40 nature and idealised into Brahman, and is then worshipped. Says 41 the Advaitin, "Is not everything Brahman when the name and the 42 form have been removed from it?" "Is not He, the Lord, the 43 innermost Self of every one?" says the Vishishtadvaitin.
44 {Sanskrit}--"The fruition of even the worship of Adityas etc.
45 Brahman Himself bestows, because He is the Ruler of all." Says 46 Shankara in his Brahma-Sutra-Bhasya--{Sanskrit} "Here in this way 47 does Brahman become the object of worship, because He, as 48 Brahman, is superimposed on the Pratikas, just as Vishnu etc. are 49 superimposed upon images etc."

50 The same ideas apply to the worship of the Pratimas as to 51 that of the Pratikas; that is to say, if the image stands for a god or a 52 saint, the worship is not the result of Bhakti, and does not lead to 1 liberation; but if it stands for the one God, the worship thereof will 2 bring both Bhakti and Mukti. Of the principal religions of the world

3 we see Vedantism, Buddhism, and certain forms of Christianity 4 freely using images; only two religions, Mohammedanism and 5 Protestantism, refuse such help. Yet the Mohammedans use the 6 graves of their saints and martyrs almost in the place of images; 7 and the Protestants, in rejecting all concrete helps to religion, are 8 drifting away every year farther and farther from spirituality till at 9 present there is scarcely any difference between the advanced 10 Protestants and the followers of August Comte, or agnostics who 11 preach ethics alone. Again, in Christianity and Mohammedanism 12 whatever exists of image worship is made to fall under that 13 category in which the Pratika or the Pratima is worshipped in itself, 14 but not as a "help to the vision" (Drishtisaukaryam) of God; 15 therefore it is at best only of the nature of ritualistic Karmas and 16 cannot produce either Bhakti or Mukti. In this form of image-17 worship, the allegiance of the soul is given to other things than 18 Ishvara, and, therefore, such use of images, or graves, or temples, 19 or tombs, is real idolatry; it is in itself neither sinful nor wicked--it is 20 a rite--a Karma, and worshippers must and will get the fruit thereof.

23 THE CHOSEN IDEAL

The next thing to be considered is what we know as Ishta-Nishtha. One who aspires to be a Bhakta must know that "so many opinions are so many ways". He must know that all the various sects of the various religions are the various manifestations of the glory of the same Lord. "They call You by so many names; they divide You, as it were, by different names, yet in each one of these is to be found Your omnipotence. . . . You reach the worshipper through all of these, neither is there any special time so long as the soul has intense love for You. You are so easy of approach; it is my misfortune that I cannot love You." Not only this, the Bhakta must take care not to hate, nor even to criticise those radiant sons of light who are the founders of various sects; he must not even hear them spoken ill of. Very few indeed are those who are at once the possessors of an extensive sympathy and power of appreciation, as well as an intensity of love. We find, as a rule, that liberal and sympathetic sects lose the intensity of religious feeling, and in their hands, religion is apt to degenerate into a kind of politico-social club life. On the other hand, intensely narrow sectaries, whilst displaying a very commendable love of their own ideals, are seen to have acquired every particle of that love by hating every one who is not of exactly the same opinions as themselves. Would to God that this world was full of men who were as intense in their love as worldwide in their sympathies! But such are only few and far between. Yet we know that it is practicable to educate large numbers of human beings into the ideal of a wonderful blending of both the width and the intensity of love; and the way to do that is by this path of the Ishta-Nishtha or "steadfast devotion to the chosen ideal." Every sect of every religion presents only one ideal of its own to mankind, but the eternal Vedantic religion opens to mankind an infinite number of doors for ingress into the inner shrine of divinity, and places before humanity an almost inexhaustible array of ideals, there being in each of them a manifestation of the Eternal One. With the kindest solicitude, the Vedanta points out to aspiring men and women the numerous roads, hewn out of the solid rock of the realities of human life, by the glorious sons, or human manifestations, of God, in the past and in the present, and stands with outstretched arms to welcome all--to welcome even those that are yet to be--to that Home of Truth and that Ocean of Bliss, wherein the human soul, liberated from the net of Maya, may transport itself

10 e any spiritual growth. In all our Yogas this renunciation is 11 necessary. This is the stepping-stone and the real centre and the 12 real heart of all spiritual culture--renunciation. This is religion-- 13 renunciation.

14 When the human soul draws back from the things of the 15 world and tries to go into deeper things; when man, the spirit which 16 has here somehow become concretised and materialised, 17 understands that he is thereby going to be destroyed and to be 18 reduced almost into mere matter, and turns his face away from 19 matter--then begins renunciation, then begins real spiritual growth.
20 The Karma-Yogi's renunciation is in the shape of giving up all the 21 fruits of his action; he is not attached to the results of his labour; he 22 does not care for any reward here or hereafter. The Raja-Yogi 23 knows that the whole of nature is intended for the soul to acquire 24 experience, and that the result of all the experiences of the soul is 25 for it to become aware of its eternal separateness from nature. The 26 human soul has to understand and realise that it has been spirit, and 27 not matter, through eternity, and that this conjunction of it with 28 matter is and can be only for a time. The Raja-Yogi learns the lesson 29 of renunciation through his own experience of nature. The Jnana-30 Yogi has the harshest of all renunciations to go through, as he has 31 to realise from the very first that the whole of this solid-looking 32 nature is all an illusion. He has to understand that all that is any 33 kind of manifestation of power in nature belongs to the soul, and 34 not to nature. He has to know from the very start that all knowledge 35 and all experience are in the soul and not in nature; so he has at 36 once and by the sheer force of rational conviction to tear himself 37 away from all bondage to nature. He lets nature and all that 38 belongs to her go, he lets them vanish and tries to stand alone!

39 Of all renunciations, the most natural, so to say, is that of the 40 Bhakti-Yogi. Here there is no violence, nothing to give up, nothing 41 to tear off, as it were, from ourselves, nothing from which we have 42 violently to separate ourselves. The Bhakta's renunciation is easy, 43 smooth flowing, and as natural as the things around us. We see the 44 manifestation of this sort of renunciation, although more or less in 45 the form of caricatures, every day around us. A man begins to love 46 a woman; after a while he loves another, and the first woman he lets 47 go. She drops out of his mind smoothly, gently, without his feeling 48 the want of her at all. A woman loves a man; she then begins to love 49 another man, and the first one drops off from her mind quite 50 naturally. A man loves his own city, then he begins to love his 51 country, and the intense love for his little city drops off smoothly, 52 naturally. Again, a man learns to love the whole world; his love for

1 his country, his intense, fanatical patriotism drops off without 2 hurting him, without any manifestation of violence. An uncultured 3 man loves the pleasures of the sense intensely; as he becomes 4 cultured, he begins to love intellectual pleasures, and his sense-5 enjoyments become less and less. No man can enjoy a meal with 6 the same gusto or pleasure as a dog or a wolf, but those pleasures 7 which a man gets from intellectual experiences and achievements, 8 the dog can never enjoy. At first, pleasure is in association with the 9 lowest senses; but as soon as an animal reaches a higher plane of 10 existence, the lower kind of pleasures becomes less intense. In 11 human society, the nearer the man is to the animal, the stronger is 12 his pleasure in the senses; and the higher and the more cultured 13 the man is, the greater is his pleasure in intellectual and such other 14 finer pursuits. So when a man gets even higher than the plane of 15 the intellect, higher than that of mere thought, when he gets to the 16 plane of spirituality and of divine inspiration, he finds there a state 17 of bliss, compared with which all the pleasures of the senses, or 18 even of the intellect, are as nothing. When the moon shines brightly, 19 all the stars become dim; and when the sun shines, the moon 20 herself becomes dim. The renunciation necessary for the 21 attainment of Bhakti is not obtained by killing anything, but just 22 comes in as naturally as in the presence of an increasingly stronger 23 light, the less intense ones become dimmer and dimmer until they 24 vanish away completely. So this love of the pleasures of the senses 25 and of the intellect is all made dim and thrown aside and cast into 26 the shade by the love of God Himself.

27 That love of God grows and assumes a form which is called 28 Para-Bhakti or supreme devotion. Forms vanish, rituals fly away, 29 books are superseded; images, temples, churches, religions and 30 sects, countries and nationalities--all these little limitations and 31 bondages fall off by their own nature from him who knows this love 32 of God. Nothing remains to bind him or fetter his freedom. A ship, 33 all of a sudden, comes near a magnetic rock, and its iron bolts and 34 bars are all attracted and drawn out, and the planks get loosened 35 and freely float on the water. Divine grace thus loosens the binding 36 bolts and bars of the soul, and it becomes free. So in this 37 renunciation auxiliary to devotion, there is no harshness, no
38 dryness, no struggle, nor repression nor suppression. The Bhakta 39 has not to suppress any single one of his emotions, he only strives 40 to intensify them and direct them to God.

41 42 43 THE BHAKTA'S RENUNCIATION RESULTS FROM 44 LOVE 45

46 We see love everywhere in nature. Whatever in society is 47 good and great and sublime is the working out of that love; 48 whatever in society is very bad, nay diabolical, is also the ill-
49 directed working out of the same emotion of love. It is this same 50 emotion that gives us the pure and holy conjugal love between

1 husband and wife as well as the sort of love which goes to satisfy 2 the lowest forms of animal passion. The emotion is the same, but its 3 manifestation is different in different cases. It is the same feeling of 4 love, well or ill directed, that impels one man to do good and to give 5 all he has to the poor, while it makes another man cut the throats of 6 his brethren and take away all their possessions. The former loves 7 others as much as the latter loves himself. The direction of the love 8 is bad in the case of the latter, but it is right and proper in the other 9 case. The same fire that cooks a meal for us may burn a child, and it 10 is no fault of the fire if it does so; the difference lies in the way in 11 which it is used. Therefore love, the intense longing for association, 12 the strong desire on the part of two to become one--and it may be, 13 after all, of all to become merged in one--is being manifested 14 everywhere in higher or lower forms as the case may be.

15 Bhakti-Yoga is the science of higher love. It shows us how to 16 direct it; it shows us how to control it, how to manage it, how to use 17 it, how to give it a new aim, as it were, and from it obtain the 18 highest and most glorious results, that is, how to make it lead us to 19 spiritual blessedness. Bhakti-Yoga does not say, "Give up"; it only 20 says, "Love; love the Highest!"--and everything low naturally falls 21 off from him, the object of whose love is the Highest.

22 "I cannot tell anything about Thee except that Thou art my 23 love. Thou art beautiful, Oh, Thou art beautiful! Thou art beauty 24 itself." What is after all really required of us in this Yoga is that our 25 thirst after the beautiful should be directed to God. What is the 26 beauty in the human face, in the sky, in the stars, and in the moon?
27 It is only the partial apprehension of the real all-embracing Divine 28 Beauty. "He shining, everything shines. It is through His light that 29 all things shine." Take this high position of Bhakti which makes you 30 forget at once all you little personalities. Take yourself away from 31 all the world's little selfish clings. Do not look upon humanity as 32 the centre of all your human and higher interests. Stand as a 33 witness, as a student, and observe the phenomena of nature. Have 34 the feeling of personal non-attachment with regard to man, and see 35 how this mighty feeling of love is working itself out in the world.
36 Sometimes a little friction is produced, but that is only in the course 37 of the struggle to attain the higher real love. Sometimes there is a 38 little fight or a little fall; but it is all only by the way. Stand aside, 39 and freely let these frictions come. You feel the frictions only when 40 you are in the current of the world, but when you are outside of it 41 simply as a witness and as a student, you will be able to see that 42 there are millions and millions of channels in which God is 43 manifesting Himself as Love.

44 "Wherever there is any bliss, even though in the most sensual 45 of things, there is a spark of that Eternal Bliss which is the Lord 46 Himself." Even in the lowest kinds of attraction there is the germ of 47 divine love. One of the names of the Lord in Sanskrit is Hari, and 48 this means that He attracts all things to Himself. His is in fact the 49 only attraction worthy of human hearts. Who can attract a soul 50 really? Only He! Do you think dead matter can truly attract the 51 soul? It never did, and never will. When you see a man going after a 52 beautiful face, do you think that it is the handful of arranged

1 material molecules which really attract the man? Not at all. Behind 2 those material particles there must be and is the play of divine 3 influence and divine love. The ignorant man does not know it, but 4 yet, consciously or unconsciously, he is attracted by it and it alone.
5 So even the lowest forms of attraction derive their power from God 6 Himself. "None, O beloved, ever loved the husband for the 7 husband's sake; it is the Atman, the Lord who is within, for whose 8 sake the husband is loved." Loving wives may know this or they may 9 not; it is true all the same. "None, O beloved, ever loved the wife for 10 the wife's sake, but it is the Self in the wife that is loved." Similarly, 11 no one loves a child or anything else in the world except on account 12 of Him who is within. The Lord is the great magnet, and we are all 13 like iron filings; we are being constantly attracted by Him, and all of 14 us are struggling to reach Him. All this struggling of ours in this 15 world is surely not intended for selfish ends. Fools do not know 16 what they are doing: the work of their life is, after all, to approach 17 the great magnet. All the tremendous struggling and fighting in life 18 is intended to make us go to Him ultimately and be one with Him.

19 The Bhakti-Yogi, however, knows the meaning of life's 20 struggles; he understands it. He has passed through a long series of 21 these struggles and knows what they mean and earnestly desires to 22 be free from the friction thereof; he wants to avoid the clash and go 23 direct to the centre of all attraction, the great Hari. This is the 24 renunciation of the Bhakta. This mighty attraction in the direction 25 of God makes all other attractions vanish for him. This mighty 26 infinite love of God which enters his heart leaves no place for any 27 other love to live there. How can it be otherwise? Bhakti fills his 28 heart with the divine waters of the ocean of love, which is God 29 Himself; there is no place there for little loves. That is to say, the 30 Bhakta's renunciation is that Vairagya or non-attachment for all 31 things that are not God which results from Anuraga or great 32 attachment to God.

1 This is the ideal preparation for the attainment of the 2 supreme Bhakti. When this renunciation comes, the gate opens for 3 the soul to pass through and reach the lofty regions of supreme 4 devotion or Para-Bhakti. Then it is that we begin to understand 5 what Para-Bhakti is; and the man who has entered into the inner 6 shrine of the Para-Bhakti alone has the right to say that all forms 7 and symbols are useless to him as aids to religious realisation. He 8 alone has attained that supreme state of love commonly called the 9 brotherhood of man; the rest only talk. He sees no distinctions; the 10 mighty ocean of love has entered into him, and he sees not man in 11 man, but beholds his Beloved everywhere. Through every face 12 shines to him his Hari. The light in the sun or the moon is all His 13 manifestation. Wherever there is beauty or sublimity, to him it is all 14 His. Such Bhaktas are still living; the world is never without them.
15 Such, though bitten by a serpent, only say that a messenger came 16 to them from their Beloved. Such men alone have the right to talk of 17 universal brotherhood. They feel no resentment; their minds never 18 react in the form of hatred or jealousy. The external, the sensuous, 19 has vanished from them for ever. How can they be angry, when, 20 through their love, they are always able to see the Reality behind 21 the scenes?

22 23 24 THE NATURALNESS OF BHAKTI-YOGA 25 AND ITS CENTRAL SECRET 26

27 "Those who with constant attention always worship You, and 28 those who worship the Undifferentiated, the Absolute, of these who 29 are the greatest Yogis?"--Arjuna asked of Shri Krishna. The answer 30 was: "Those who concentrating their minds on Me worship Me with 31 eternal constancy and are endowed with the highest faith, they are 32 My best worshippers, they are the greatest Yogis. Those that 33 worship the Absolute, the Indescribable, the Undifferentiated, the 34 Omnipresent, the Unthinkable, the All-comprehending, the 35 Immovable, and the Eternal, by controlling the play of their organs 36 and having the conviction of sameness in regard to all things, they 37 also, being engaged in doing good to all beings, come to Me alone.
38 But to those whose minds have been devoted to the unmanifested 39 Absolute, the difficulty of the struggle along the way is much 40 greater, for it is indeed with great difficulty that the path of the 41 unmanifested Absolute is trodden by any embodied being. Those 42 who, having offered up all their work unto Me, with entire reliance 43 on Me, meditate on Me and worship Me without any attachment to 44 anything else--them, I soon lift up from the ocean of ever-recurring 45 births and deaths, as their mind is wholly attached to Me" (Gita, 46 XII).

47 Jnana-Yoga and Bhakti-Yoga are both referred to here. Both 48 may be said to have been defined in the above passage. Jnana-Yoga 49 is grand; it is high philosophy; and almost every human being 50 thinks, curiously enough, that he can surely do everything required

1 of him by philosophy; but it is really very difficult to live truly the 2 life of philosophy. We are often apt to run into great dangers in 3 trying to guide our life by philosophy. This world may be said to be 4 divided between persons of demoniacal nature who think the care-5 taking of the body to be the be-all and the end-all of existence, and 6 persons of godly nature who realise that the body is simply a means 7 to an end, an instrument intended for the culture of the soul. The 8 devil can and indeed does cite the scriptures for his own purpose; 9 and thus the way of knowledge appears to offer justification to what 10 the bad man does, as much as it offers inducements to what the 11 good man does. This is the great danger in Jnana-Yoga. But Bhakti-12 Yoga is natural, sweet, and gentle; the Bhakta does not take such 13 high flights as the Jnana-Yogi, and, therefore, he is not apt to have 14 such big falls. Until the bondages of the soul pass away, it cannot of 15 course be free, whatever may be the nature of the path that the 16 religious man takes.

17 There is a passage showing how, in the case of one of the 18 blessed Gopis, the soul-binding chains of both merit and demerit 19 were broken. "The intense pleasure in meditating on God took away 20 the binding effects of her good deeds. Then her intense misery of 21 soul in not attaining unto Him washed off all her sinful propensities; 22 and then she became free." --{Sanskrit} (Vishnu-Purana). In 23 Bhakti-Yoga the central secret is, therefore, to know that the 24 various passions and feelings and emotions in the human heart are 25 not wrong in themselves; only they have to be carefully controlled 26 and given a higher and higher direction, until they attain the very 27 highest condition of excellence. The highest direction is that which 28 takes us to God; every other direction is lower. We find that 29 pleasures and pains are very common and oft-recurring feelings in 30 our lives. When a man feels pain because he has not wealth or some 31 such worldly thing, he is giving a wrong direction to the feeling.
32 Still pain has its uses. Let a man feel pain that he has not reached 33 the Highest, that he has not reached God, and that pain will be to 34 his salvation. When you become glad that you have a handful of 35 coins, it is a wrong direction given to the faculty of joy; it should be 36 given a higher direction, it must be made to serve the Highest 37 Ideal. Pleasure in that kind of ideal must surely be our highest joy.
38 This same thing is true of all our other feelings. The Bhakta says 39 that not one of them is wrong, he gets hold of them all and points 40 them unfailingly towards God.

41 42 43 THE FORMS OF LOVE-MANIFESTATION 44

45 Here are some of the forms in which love manifests itself.
46 First there is reverence. Why do people show reverence to temples 47 and holy places? Because He is worshipped there, and His presence 48 is associated with all such places. Why do people in every country 49 pay reverence to teachers of religion? It is natural for the human 50 heart to do so, because all such teachers preach the Lord. At 51 bottom, reverence is a growth out of love; we can none of us revere

1 him whom we do not love. Then comes Priti--pleasure in God. What 2 an immense pleasure men take in the objects of the senses! They go 3 anywhere, run through any danger, to get the thing which they love, 4 the thing which their senses like. What is wanted of the Bhakta is 5 this very kind of intense love which has, however, to be directed to 6 God. Then there is the sweetest of pains, Viraha, the intense misery
7 due to the absence of the beloved. When a man feels intense misery 8 because he has not attained to God, has not known that which is the 9 only thing worthy to be known, and becomes in consequence very 10 dissatisfied and almost mad--then there is Viraha; and this state of 11 the mind makes him feel disturbed in the presence of anything 12 other than the beloved (Ekarativichikitsa). In earthly love we see 13 how often this Viraha comes. Again, when men are really and 14 intensely in love with women or women with men, they feel a kind 15 of natural annoyance in the presence of all those whom they do not 16 love. Exactly the same state of impatience in regard to things that 17 are not loved comes to the mind when Para-Bhakti holds sway over 18 it; even to talk about things other than God becomes distasteful 19 then. "Think of Him, think of Him alone, and give up all other vain 20 words"--{Sanskrit} Those who talk of Him alone, the Bhakta finds 21 to be friendly to him; while those who talk of anything else appear 22 to him to be unfriendly. A still higher stage of love is reached when 23 life itself is maintained for the sake of the one Ideal of Love, when 24 life itself is considered beautiful and worth living only on account of 25 that Love {Sanskrit}. Without it, such a life would not remain even 26 for a moment. Life is sweet, because it thinks of the Beloved.
27 Tadiyata (His-ness) comes when a man become perfect according 28 to Bhakti--when he has become blessed, when he has attained God, 29 when he has touched the feet of God, as it were. Then his whole 30 nature is purified and completely changed. All his purpose in life 31 then becomes fulfilled. Yet many such Bhaktas live on just to 32 worship Him. That is the bliss, the only pleasure in life which they 33 will not give up. "O king, such is the blessed quality of Hari that 34 even those who have become satisfied with everything, all the knots 35 of whose hearts have been cut asunder, even they love the Lord for 36 love's sake"--the Lord "Whom all the gods worship--all the lovers of 37 liberation, and all the knowers of the Brahman"--{Sanskrit} (Nri.
38 Tap. Up.). Such is the power of love. When a man has forgotten 39 himself altogether, and does not feel that anything belongs to him, 40 then he acquires the state of Tadiyata; everything is sacred to him, 41 because it belongs to the Beloved. Even in regard to earthly love, 42 the lover thinks that everything belonging to his beloved is sacred 43 and so dear to him. He loves even a piece of cloth belonging to the 44 darling of his heart. In the same way, when a person loves the Lord, 45 the whole universe becomes dear to him, because it is all His.

48 UNIVERSAL LOVE AND HOW IT LEADS TO 49 SELF-SURRENDER 50

1 How can we love the Vyashti, the particular, without first 2 loving the Samashti, the universal? God is the Samashti, the 3 generalised and the abstract universal whole; and the universe that 4 we see is the Vyashti, the particularised thing. To love the whole 5 universe is possible only by way of loving the Samashti--the 6 universal--which is, as it were, the one unity in which are to be 7 found millions and millions of smaller unities. The philosophers of 8 India do not stop at the particulars; they cast a hurried glance at 9 the particulars and immediately start to find the generalised forms 10 which will include all the particulars. The search after the universal 11 is the one search of Indian philosophy and religion. The Jnani aims 12 at the wholeness of things, at that one absolute and generalised 13 Being, knowing which he knows everything. The Bhakta wishes to 14 realise that one generalised abstract Person, in loving whom he 15 loves the whole universe. The Yogi wishes to have possession of 16 that one generalised form of power, by controlling which he 17 controls this whole universe. The Indian mind, throughout its 18 history, has been directed to this kind of singular search after the 19 universal in everything--in science, in psychology, in love, in 20 philosophy. So the conclusion to which the Bhakta comes is that, if 21 you go on merely loving one person after another, you may go on 22 loving them so for an infinite length of time, without being in the 23 least able to love the world as a whole. When, at last, the central 24 idea is, however, arrived at that the sum total of all love is God, that 25 the sum total of the aspirations of all the souls in the universe, 26 whether they be free, or bound, or struggling towards liberation, is 27 God, then alone it becomes possible for any one to put forth 28 universal love. God is the Samashti, and this visible universe is God 29 differentiated and made manifest. If we love this sum total, we love 30 everything. Loving the world and doing it good will all come easily 31 then; we have to obtain this power only by loving God first; 32 otherwise it is no joke to do good to the world. "Everything is His 33 and He is my Lover; I love Him," says the Bhakta. In this way 34 everything becomes sacred to the Bhakta, because all things are 35 His. All are His children, His body, His manifestation. How then 36 may we hurt any one? How then may we not love any one? With the 37 love of God will come, as a sure effect, the love of every one in the 38 universe. The nearer we approach God, the more do we begin to 39 see that all things are in Him. When the soul succeeds in 40 appropriating the bliss of this supreme love, it also begins to see 41 Him in everything. Our heart will thus become an eternal fountain 42 of love. And when we reach even higher states of this love, all the 43 little differences between the things of the world are entirely lost; 44 man is seen no more as man, but only as God; the animal is seen no 45 more as animal, but as God; even the tiger is no more a tiger, but a 46 manifestation of God. Thus in this intense state of Bhakti, worship 47 is offered to every one, to every life, and to every being.
48 {Sanskrit}--"Knowing that Hari, the Lord, is in every being, the 49 wise have thus to manifest unswerving love towards all beings."

50 As a result of this kind of intense all-absorbing love, comes 51 the feeling of perfect self-surrender, the conviction that nothing that 52 happens is against us, Apratikulya. Then the loving soul is able to 53 say, if pain comes, "Welcome pain." If misery comes, it will say,

1 "Welcome misery, you are also from the Beloved." If a serpent
2 comes, it will say, "Welcome serpent". If death comes, such a
3 Bhakta will welcome it with a smile. "Blessed am I that they all 4 come to me; they are all welcome." The Bhakta in this state of 5 perfect resignation, arising out of intense love to God and to all that 6 are His, ceases to distinguish between pleasure and pain in so far 7 as they affect him. He does not know what it is to complain of pain 8 or misery; and this kind of uncomplaining resignation to the will of 9 God, who is all love, is indeed a worthier acquisition than all the 10 glory of grand and heroic performances.

11 To the vast majority of mankind, the body is everything; the 12 body is all the universe to them; bodily enjoyment is their all in all.
13 This demon of the worship of the body and of the things of the body 14 has entered into us all. We may indulge in tall talk and take very 15 high flights, but we are like vultures all the same; our mind is 16 directed to the piece of carrion down below. Why should our body 17 be saved, say, from the tiger? Why may we not give it over to the 18 tiger? The tiger will thereby be pleased, and that is not altogether 19 so very far from self-sacrifice and worship. Can you reach the 20 realisation of such an idea in which all sense of self is completely 21 lost? It is a very dizzy height on the pinnacle of the religion of love, 22 and few in this world have ever climbed up to it; but until a man 23 reaches that highest point of ever-ready and ever-willing self-24 sacrifice, he cannot become a perfect Bhakta. We may all manage 25 to maintain our bodies more or less satisfactorily and for longer or 26 shorter intervals of time. Nevertheless, our bodies have to go; there 27 is no permanence about them. Blessed are they whose bodies get 28 destroyed in the service of others. "Wealth, and even life itself, the 29 sage always holds ready for the service of others. In this world, 30 there being one thing certain, viz. death, it is far better that this 31 body dies in a good cause than in a bad one." We may drag our life 32 on for fifty years or a hundred years; but after that, what is it that 33 happens? Everything that is the result of combination must get 34 dissolved and die. There must and will come a time for it to be 35 decomposed. Jesus and Buddha and Mohammed are all dead; all 36 the great Prophets and Teachers of the world are dead.

37 "In this evanescent world, where everything is falling to 38 pieces, we have to make the highest use of what time we have," 39 says the Bhakta; and really the highest use of life is to hold it at the 40 service of all beings. It is the horrible body-idea that breeds all the 41 selfishness in the world, just this one delusion that we are wholly 42 the body we own, and that we must by all possible means try our 43 very best to preserve and to please it. If you know that you are 44 positively other than your body, you have then none to fight with or 45 struggle against; you are dead to all ideas of selfishness. So the 46 Bhakta declares that we have to hold ourselves as if we are 47 altogether dead to all the things of the world; and that is indeed 48 self-surrender. Let things come as they may. This is the meaning of 49 "Thy will be done"--not going about fighting and struggling and 50 thinking all the while that God wills all our own weaknesses and 51 worldly ambitions. It may be that good comes even out of our selfish 52 struggles; that is, however, God's look-out. The perfected Bhakta's

1 idea must be never to will and work for himself. "Lord, they build 2 high temples in Your name; they make large gifts in Your name; I 3 am poor; I have nothing; so I take this body of mine and place it at 4 Your feet. Do not give me up, O Lord." Such is the prayer 5 proceeding out of the depths of the Bhakta's heart. To him who has 6 experienced it, this eternal sacrifice of the self unto the Beloved 7 Lord is higher by far than all wealth and power, than even all 8 soaring thoughts of renown and enjoyment. The peace of the 9 Bhakta's calm resignation is a peace that passeth all understanding 10 and is of incomparable value. His Apratikulya is a state of the mind 11 in which it has no interests and naturally knows nothing that is 12 opposed to it. In this state of sublime resignation everything in the 13 shape of attachment goes away completely, except that one all-14 absorbing love to Him in whom all things live and move and have 15 their being. This attachment of love to God is indeed one that does 16 not bind the soul but effectively breaks all its bondages.

17 18 19 THE HIGHER KNOWLEDGE AND 20 THE HIGHER LOVE ARE ONE TO THE TRUE LOVER

22 The Upanishads distinguish between a higher knowledge and 23 a lower knowledge; and to the Bhakta there is really no difference 24 between this higher knowledge and his higher love (Para-Bhakti).
25 The Mundaka Upanishad says: {Sanskrit}--"The knowers of the 26 Brahman declare that there are two kinds of knowledge worthy to 27 be known, namely, the Higher (Para) and the lower (Apara). Of 28 these the lower (knowledge) consists of the Rig-Veda, the Yajur-29 Veda, the Sama-Veda, the Atharva-Veda, the Shiksha (or the science 30 dealing with pronunciation and accent), the Kalpa (or the sacrificial 31 liturgy), grammar, the Nirukta (or the science dealing with 32 etymology and the meaning of words), prosody, and astronomy; and 33 the higher (knowledge) is that by which that Unchangeable is 34 known."

35 The higher knowledge is thus clearly shown to be the 36 knowledge of the Brahman; and the Devi-Bhagavata gives us the 37 following definition of the higher love (Para-Bhakti): "As oil poured 38 from one vessel to another falls in an unbroken line, so, when the 39 mind in an unbroken stream thinks of the Lord, we have what is 40 called Para-Bhakti or supreme love." This kind of undisturbed and 41 ever-steady direction of the mind and the heart to the Lord with an 42 inseparable attachment is indeed the highest manifestation of 43 man's love to God. All other forms of Bhakti are only preparatory to 44 the attainment of this highest form thereof, viz. the Para-Bhakti 45 which is also known as the love that comes after attachment 46 (Raganuga). When this supreme love once comes into the heart of 47 man, his mind will continuously think of God and remember nothing 48 else. He will give no room in himself to thoughts other than those of 49 God, and his soul will be unconquerably pure and will alone break 50 all the bonds of mind and matter and become serenely free. He

1 alone can worship the Lord in his own heart; to him forms, symbols, 2 books, and doctrines are all unnecessary and are incapable of 3 proving serviceable in any way. It is not easy to love the Lord thus.
4 Ordinarily human love is seen to flourish only in places where it is 5 returned; where love is not returned for love, cold indifference is 6 the natural result. There are, however, rare instances in which we 7 may notice love exhibiting itself even where there is no return of 8 love. We may compare this kind of love, for purposes of illustration, 9 to the love of the moth for the fire; the insect loves the fire, falls 10 into it, and dies. It is indeed in the nature of this insect to love so.
11 To love because it is the nature of love to love is undeniably the 12 highest and the most unselfish manifestation of love that may be 13 seen in the world. Such love, working itself out on the plane of 14 spirituality, necessarily leads to the attainment of Para-Bhakti.

17 THE TRIANGLE OF LOVE

19 We may represent love as a triangle, each of the angles of 20 which corresponds to one of its inseparable characteristics. There 21 can be no triangle without all its three angles; and there can be no 22 true love without its three following characteristics. The first angle 23 of our triangle of love is that love knows no bargaining. Wherever 24 there is any seeking for something in return, there can be no real 25 love; it becomes a mere matter of shopkeeping. As long as there is 26 in us any idea of deriving this or that favour from God in return for 27 our respect and allegiance to Him, so long there can be no true love 28 growing in our hearts. Those who worship God because they wish 29 Him to bestow favours on them are sure not to worship Him if those 30 favours are not forthcoming. The Bhakta loves the Lord because He 31 is lovable; there is no other motive originating or directing this 32 divine emotion of the true devotee.

33 We have heard it said that a great king once went into a 34 forest and there met a sage. He talked with the sage a little and 35 was very much pleased with his purity and wisdom. The king then 36 wanted the sage to oblige him by receiving a present from him. The 37 sage refused to do so, saying, "The fruits of the forest are enough 38 food for me; the pure streams of water flowing down from the 39 mountains give enough drink for me; the barks of the trees supply 40 me with enough covering; and the caves of the mountains form my 41 home. Why should I take any present from you or from anybody?" 42 The king said, "Just to benefit me, sir, please take something from 43 my hands and please come with me to the city and to my palace."
44 After much persuasion, the sage at last consented to do as the king 45 desired and went with him to his palace. Before offering the gift to 46 the sage, the king repeated his prayers, saying, "Lord, give me 47 more children; Lord, give me more wealth; Lord, give me more 48 territory; Lord, keep my body in better health", and so on. Before 49 the king finished saying his prayer, the sage had got up and walked 50 away from the room quietly. At this the king became perplexed and 51 began to follow him, crying aloud, "Sir, you are going away, you

1 have not received my gifts." The sage turned round to him and said, 2 "I do not beg of beggars. You are yourself nothing but a beggar, and 3 how can you give me anything? I am no fool to think of taking 4 anything from a beggar like you. Go away, do not follow me."

5 There is well brought out the distinction between mere 6 beggars and the real lovers of God. Begging is not the language of 7 love. To worship God even for the sake of salvation or any other 8 rewards equally degenerate. Love knows no reward. Love is always 9 for love's sake. The Bhakta loves because he cannot help loving.
10 When you see a beautiful scenery and fall in love with it, you do not 11 demand anything in the way of favour from the scenery, nor does 12 the scenery demand anything from you. Yet the vision thereof 13 brings you to a blissful state of the mind; it tones down all the 14 friction in your soul, it makes you calm, almost raises you, for the 15 time being, beyond your mortal nature and places you in a condition 16 of quite divine ecstasy. This nature of real love is the first angle of 17 our triangle. Ask not anything in return for your love; let your 18 position be always that of the giver; give your love unto God, but do 19 not ask anything in return even from Him.

20 The second angle of the triangle of love is that love knows no 21 fear. Those that love God through fear are the lowest of human 22 beings, quite undeveloped as men. They worship God from fear of 23 punishment. He is a great Being to them, with a whip in one hand 24 and the sceptre in the other; if they do not obey Him, they are 25 afraid they will be whipped. It is a degradation to worship God 26 through fear of punishment; such worship is, if worship at all, the 27 crudest form of the worship of love. So long as there is any fear in 28 the heart, how can there be love also? Love conquers naturally all 29 fear. Think of a young mother in the street and a dog barking at 30 her; she is frightened and flies into nearest house. But suppose the 31 next day she is in the street with her child, and a lion springs upon 32 the child. Where will be her position now? Of course, in the very 33 mouth of the lion, protecting her child. Love conquers all fear. Fear 34 comes from the selfish idea of cutting one's self off from the 35 universe. The smaller and the more selfish I make myself, the more 36 is my fear. If a man thinks he is a little nothing, fear will surely 37 come upon him. And the less you think of yourself as an 38 insignificant person, the less fear there will be for you. So long as 39 there is the least spark of fear in you there can be no love there.
40 Love and fear are incompatible; God is never to be feared by those 41 who love Him. The commandment, "Do not take the name of the 42 Lord thy God in vain", the true lover of God laughs at. How can 43 there be any blasphemy in the religion of love? The more you take 44 the name of the Lord, the better for you, in whatever way you may 45 do it. You are only repeating His name because you love Him.

46 The third angle of the love-triangle is that love knows no rival, 47 for in it is always embodied the lover's highest ideal. True love 48 never comes until the object of our love becomes to us our highest 49 ideal. It may be that in many cases human love is misdirected and 50 misplaced, but to the person who loves, the thing he loves is always 51 his own highest idea. One may see his ideal in the vilest of beings, 52 and another in the highest of beings; nevertheless, in every case it

1 is the ideal alone that can be truly and intensely loved. The highest 2 ideal of every man is called God. Ignorant or wise, saint or sinner, 3 man or woman, educated or uneducated, cultivated or uncultivated,
4 to every human being the highest ideal is God. The synthesis of all 5 the highest ideals of beauty, of sublimity, and of power gives us the 6 completest conception of the loving and lovable God.

7 These ideals exist in some shape or other in every mind
8 naturally; they form a part and parcel of all our minds. All the active 9 manifestations of human nature are struggles of those ideals to 10 become realised in practical life. All the various movements that we 11 see around us in society are caused by the various ideals in various 12 souls trying to come out and become concretised; what is inside 13 presses on to come outside. This perennially dominant influence of 14 the ideal is the one force, the one motive power, that may be seen 15 to be constantly working in the midst of mankind. It may be after 16 hundreds of births, after struggling through thousands of years, 17 that man finds that it is vain to try to make the inner ideal mould 18 completely the external conditions and square well with them; after 19 realising this he no more tries to project his own ideal on the 20 outside world, but worships the ideal itself as ideal from the highest 21 standpoint of love. This ideally perfect ideal embraces all lower 22 ideals. Every one admits the truth of the saying that a lover sees 23 Helen's beauty on an Ethiop's brow. The man who is standing aside 24 as a looker-on sees that love is here misplaced, but the lover sees 25 his Helen all the same and does not see the Ethiop at all. Helen or 26 Ethiop, the objects of our love are really the centres round which 27 our ideals become crystallised. What is it that the world commonly 28 worships? Not certainly this all-embracing, ideally perfect ideal of 29 the supreme devotee and lover. That ideal which men and women 30 commonly worship is what is in themselves; every person projects 31 his or her own ideal on the outside world and kneels before it. That 32 is why we find that men who are cruel and blood-thirsty conceive of 33 a blood-thirsty God, because they can only love their own highest 34 ideal. That is why good men have a very high ideal of God, and their 35 ideal is indeed so very different from that of others.

36 37 38 THE GOD OF LOVE IS HIS OWN PROOF 39

40 What is the ideal of the lover who has quite passed beyond 41 the idea of selfishness, of bartering and bargaining, and who knows 42 no fear? Even to the great God such a man will say, "I will give You 43 my all, and I do not want anything from You; indeed there is nothing 44 that I can call my own." When a man has acquired this conviction, 45 his ideal becomes one of perfect love, one of perfect fearlessness of 46 love. The highest ideal of such a person has no narrowness of 47 particularity about it; it is love universal, love without limits and 48 bonds, love itself, absolute love. This grand ideal of the religion of 49 love is worshipped and loved absolutely as such without the aid of 50 any symbols or suggestions. This is the highest form of Para-

1 Bhakti--the worship of such an all-comprehending ideal as the ideal;
2 all the other forms of Bhakti are only stages on the way to reach it.

3 All our failures and all our successes in following the religion
4 of love are on the road to the realisation of that one ideal. Object 5 after object is taken up, and the inner ideal is successively 6 projected on them all; and all such external objects are found 7 inadequate as exponents of the ever-expanding inner ideal and are 8 naturally rejected one after another. At last the aspirant begins to 9 think that it is vain to try to realise the ideal in external objects, 10 that all external objects are as nothing when compared with the 11 ideal itself; and, in course of time, he acquires the power of 12 realising the highest and the most generalised abstract ideal 13 entirely as an abstraction that is to him quite alive and real. When 14 the devotee has reached this point, he is no more impelled to ask 15 whether God can be demonstrated or not, whether He is 16 omnipotent and omniscient or not. To him He is only the God of 17 Love; He is the highest ideal of love, and that is sufficient for all his 18 purposes. He, as love, is self-evident. It requires no proofs to 19 demonstrate the existence of the beloved to the lover. The 20 magistrate-Gods of other forms of religion may require a good deal 21 of proof to prove Them, but the Bhakta does not and cannot think of 22 such Gods at all. To him God exists entirely as love. "None, O 23 beloved, loves the husband for the husband's sake, but it is for the 24 sake of the Self who is in the husband that the husband is loved; 25 none, O beloved, loves the wife for the wife's sake, but it is for the 26 sake of the Self who is in the wife that the wife is loved."

27 It is said by some that selfishness is the only motive power in 28 regard to all human activities. That also is love lowered by being 29 particularised. When I think of myself as comprehending the 30 Universal, there can surely be no selfishness in me; but when I, by 31 mistake, think that I am a little something, my love becomes 32 particularised and narrowed. The mistake consists in making the 33 sphere of love narrow and contracted. All things in the universe are 34 of divine origin and deserve to be loved; it has, however, to be 35 borne in mind that the love of the whole includes the love of the 36 parts. This whole is the God of the Bhaktas, and all the other Gods, 37 Fathers in Heaven, or Rulers, or Creators, and all theories and 38 doctrines and books have no purpose and no meaning for them, 39 seeing that they have through their supreme love and devotion 40 risen above those things altogether. When the heart is purified and 41 cleansed and filled to the brim with the divine nectar of love, all 42 other ideas of God become simply puerile and are rejected as being 43 inadequate or unworthy. Such is indeed the power of Para-Bhakti or 44 Supreme Love; and the perfected Bhakta no more goes to see God 45 in temples and churches; he knows no place where he will not find 46 Him. He finds Him in the temple as well as out of the temple, he 47 finds Him in the saint's saintliness as well as in the wicked man's 48 wickedness, because he has Him already seated in glory in his own 49 heart as the one Almighty inextinguishable Light of Love which is 50 ever shining and eternally present.

HUMAN REPRESENTATIONS OF THE DIVINE IDEAL OF LOVE

It is impossible to express the nature of this supreme and absolute ideal of love in human language. Even the highest flight of human imagination is incapable of comprehending it in all its infinite perfection and beauty. Nevertheless, the followers of the religion of love, in its higher as well as its lower forms, in all countries, have all along had to use the inadequate human language to comprehend and to define their own ideal of love. Nay more, human love itself, in all its varied forms, has been made to typify this inexpressible divine love. Man can think of divine things only in his own human way; to us the Absolute can be expressed only in our relative language. The whole universe is to us a writing of the Infinite in the language of the finite. Therefore Bhaktas make use of all the common terms associated with the common love of humanity in relation to God and His worship through love.

Some of the great writers on Para-Bhakti have tried to understand and experience this divine love in so many different ways. The lowest form in which this love is apprehended is what they call the peaceful--the Shanta. When a man worships God without the fire of love in him, without its madness in his brain, when his love is just the calm commonplace love, a little higher than mere forms and ceremonies and symbols, but not at all characterised by the madness of intensely active love, it is said to be Shanta. We see some people in the world who like to move on slowly, and others who come and go like the whirlwind. The Shanta-Bhakta is calm, peaceful, gentle.

The next higher type is that of Dasya, i.e. servanthship; it comes when a man thinks he is the servant of the Lord. The attachment of the faithful servant unto the master is his ideal.

The next type of love is Sakhya, friendship--"Thou art our beloved friend." Just as a man opens his heart to his friend and knows that the friend will never chide him or his faults but will always try to help him, just as there is the idea of equality between him and his friend, so equal love flows in and out between the worshipper and his friendly God. Thus God becomes our friend, the friend who is near, the friend to whom we may freely tell all the tales of our lives. The innermost secrets of our hearts we may place before Him with the great assurance of safety and support. He is the friend whom the devotee accepts as an equal. God is viewed here as our playmate. We may well say that we are all playing in this universe. Just as children play their games, just as the most glorious kings and emperors play their own games, so is the Beloved Lord Himself in sport with this universe. He is perfect; He does not want anything. Why should He create? Activity is always with us for the fulfilment of a certain want, and want always presupposes imperfection. God is perfect; He has no wants. Why should He go on with this work of an ever-active creation? What purpose has He in view? The stories about God creating this world for some end or other that we imagine are good as stories, but not

1 otherwise. It is all really in sport; the universe is His play going on.
2 The whole universe must after all be a big piece of pleasing fun to 3 Him. If you are poor, enjoy that as fun; if you are rich, enjoy the fun 4 of being rich; if dangers come, it is also good fun; if happiness 5 comes, there is more good fun. The world is just a playground, and 6 we are here having good fun, having a game; and God is with us 7 playing all the while, and we are with Him playing. God is our 8 eternal playmate. How beautifully He is playing! The play is 9 finished when the cycle comes to an end. There is rest for a shorter 10 or longer time; again all come out and play. It is only when you 11 forget that it is all play and that you are also helping in the play, it is 12 only then that misery and sorrows come. Then the heart becomes 13 heavy, then the world weighs upon you with tremendous power. But 14 as soon as you give up the serious idea of reality as the 15 characteristic of the changing incidents of the three minutes of life 16 and know it to be but a stage on which we are playing, helping Him 17 to play, at once misery ceases for you. He plays in every atom; He is 18 playing when He is building up earths, and suns, and moons; He is 19 playing with the human heart, with animals, with plants. We are His 20 chessmen; He puts the chessmen on the board and shakes them up.
21 He arranges us first in one way and then in another, and we are 22 consciously or unconsciously helping in His play. And, oh, bliss! we 23 are His playmates!

24 The next is what is known as Vatsalya, loving God not as our 25 Father but as our Child. This may look peculiar, but it is a discipline 26 to enable us to detach all ideas of power from the concept of God.
27 The idea of power brings with it awe. There should be no awe in 28 love. The ideas of reverence and obedience are necessary for the 29 formation of character; but when character is formed, when the 30 lover has tasted the calm, peaceful love and tasted also a little of its 31 intense madness, then he need talk no more of ethics and 32 discipline. To conceive God as mighty, majestic, and glorious, as the 33 Lord of the universe, or as the God of gods, the lover says he does 34 not care. It is to avoid this association with God of the fear-creating 35 sense of power that he worships God as his own child. The mother 36 and the father are not moved by awe in relation to the child; they 37 cannot have any reverence for the child. They cannot think of 38 asking any favour from the child. The child's position is always that 39 of the receiver, and out of love for the child the parents will give up 40 their bodies a hundred times over. A thousand lives they will 41 sacrifice for that one child of theirs, and, therefore, God is loved as 42 a child. This idea of loving God as a child comes into existence and 43 grows naturally among those religious sects which believe in the 44 incarnation of God. For the Mohammedans it is impossible to have 45 this idea of God as a child; they will shrink from it with a kind of 46 horror. But the Christian and the Hindu can realise it easily, 47 because they have the baby Jesus and the baby Krishna. The 48 women in India often look upon themselves as Krishna's mother;
49 Christian mothers also may take up the idea that they are Christ's 50 mothers, and it will bring to the West the knowledge of God's Divine 51 Motherhood which they so much need. The superstitions of awe and 52 reverence in relation to God are deeply rooted in the heart of our 53 hearts, and it takes long years to sink entirely in love our ideas of 1 reverence and veneration, of awe and majesty and glory with 2 regard to God.

3 There is one more human representation of the divine ideal of 4 love. It is known as Madhura, sweet, and is the highest of all such 5 representations. It is indeed based on the highest manifestation of 6 love in this world, and this love is also the strongest known to man.
7 What love shakes the whole nature of man, what love runs through 8 every atom of his being--makes him mad, makes him forget his own 9 nature, transforms him, makes him either a God or a demon--as the 10 love between man and woman? In this sweet representation of 11 divine love God is our husband. We are all women; there are no 12 men in this world; there is but One man, and this is He, our 13 Beloved. All that love which man gives to woman, or woman to man, 14 has here to be given up to the Lord.

15 All the different kinds of love which we see in the world, and 16 with which we are more or less playing merely, have God as the one 17 goal; but unfortunately, man does not know the infinite ocean into 18 which this mighty river of love is constantly flowing, and so, 19 foolishly, he often tries to direct it to little dolls of human beings.
20 The tremendous love for the child that is in human nature is not for 21 the little doll of a child; if you bestow it blindly and exclusively on 22 the child, you will suffer in consequence. But through such suffering 23 will come the awakening by which you are sure to find out that the 24 love which is in you, if it is given to any human being, will sooner or 25 later bring pain and sorrow as the result. Our love must, therefore, 26 be given to the Highest One who never dies and never changes, to 27 Him in the ocean of whose love there is neither ebb nor flow. Love 28 must get to its right destination, it must go unto Him who is really 29 the infinite ocean of love. All rivers flow into the ocean. Even the 30 drop of water coming down from the mountain side cannot stop its 31 course after reaching a brook or a river, however big it may be; at 32 last even that drop somehow does find its way to the ocean. God is 33 the one goal of all our passions and emotions. If you want to be 34 angry, be angry with Him. Chide your Beloved, chide your Friend.
35 Whom else can you safely chide? Mortal man will not patiently put 36 up with your anger; there will be a reaction. If you are angry with 37 me I am sure quickly to react, because I cannot patiently put up 38 with your anger. Say unto the Beloved, "Why do You not come to 39 me; why do You leave me thus alone?" Where is there any 40 enjoyment but in Him? What enjoyment can there be in little clods 41 of earth? It is the crystallised essence of infinite enjoyment that we 42 have to seek, and that is in God. Let all our passions and emotions 43 go up unto Him. They are meant for Him, for if they miss their mark 44 and go lower, they become vile; and when they go straight to the 45 mark, to the Lord, even the lowest of them becomes transfigured.
46 All of the energies of the human body and mind, howsoever they 47 may express themselves, have the Lord as their one goal, as their 48 Ekayana. All loves and all passions of the human heart must go to 49 God. He is the Beloved. Whom else can this heart love? He is the 50 most beautiful, the most sublime, He is beauty itself, sublimity 51 itself. Who in this universe is more beautiful than He? Who in this 52 universe is more fit to become the husband than He? Who in this

1 universe is fitter to be loved than He? So let Him be the husband, 2 let Him be the Beloved.

3 Often it so happens that divine lovers who sing of this divine 4 love accept the language of human love in all its aspects as 5 adequate to describe it. Fools do not understand this; they never 6 will. They look at it only with the physical eye. They do not 7 understand the mad throes of this spiritual love. How can they?
8 "For one kiss of Thy lips, O Beloved! One who has been kissed by 9 Thee, has his thirst for Thee increasing for ever, all his sorrows 10 vanish, and he forgets all things except Thee alone." Aspire after 11 that kiss of the Beloved, that touch of His lips which makes the 12 Bhakta mad, which makes a man a god. To him, who has been 13 blessed with such a kiss, the whole of nature changes, worlds 14 vanish, suns and moons die out, and the universe itself melts away 15 into that one infinite ocean of love. That is the perfection of the 16 madness of love.

17 Ay, the true spiritual lover does not rest even there; even the 18 love of husband and wife is not mad enough for him. The Bhaktas 19 take up also the idea of illegitimate love, because it is so strong; the 20 impropriety of it is not at all the thing they have in view. The nature 21 of this love is such that the more obstructions there are for its free 22 play, the more passionate it becomes. The love between husband 23 and wife is smooth, there are no obstructions there. So the Bhaktas 24 take up the idea of a girl who is in love with her own beloved, and 25 her mother or father or husband objects to such love; and the more 26 anybody obstructs the course of her love, so much the more is her 27 love tending to grow in strength. Human language cannot describe 28 how Krishna in the groves of Vrinda was madly loved, how at the 29 sound of his voice the ever-blessed Gopis rushed out to meet him, 30 forgetting everything, forgetting this world and its ties, its duties, 31 its joys, and its sorrows. Man, O man, you speak of divine love and 32 at the same time are able to attend to all the vanities of this world-- 33 are you sincere? "Where Rama is, there is no room for any desire-- 34 where desire is, there is no room for Rama; these never coexist-- 35 like light and darkness they are never together."

36 37 38 CONCLUSION

39
40 When this highest ideal of love is reached, philosophy is 41 thrown away; who will then care for it? Freedom, Salvation, 42 Nirvana--all are thrown away; who cares to become free while in 43 the enjoyment of divine love? "Lord, I do not want wealth, nor 44 friends, nor beauty, nor learning, nor even freedom; let me be born 45 again and again, and be Thou ever my Love. Be Thou ever and ever 46 my Love." "Who cares to become sugar?" says the Bhakta, "I want 47 to taste sugar." Who will then desire to become free and one with 48 God? "I may know that I am He; yet will I take myself away from 49 Him and become different, so that I may enjoy the Beloved." That is 50 what the Bhakta says. Love for love's sake is his highest enjoyment.

1 Who will not be bound hand and foot a thousand times over to enjoy 2 the Beloved? No Bhakta cares for anything except love, except to 3 love and to be loved. His unworldly love is like the tide rushing up 4 the river; this lover goes up the river against the current. The world 5 calls him mad. I know one whom the world used to call mad, and 6 this was his answer: "My friends, the whole world is a lunatic 7 asylum. Some are mad after worldly love, some after name, some 8 after fame, some after money, some after salvation and going to 9 heaven. In this big lunatic asylum I am also mad, I am mad after 10 God. If you are mad after money, I am mad after God. You are mad; 11 so am I. I think my madness is after all the best." The true Bhakta's 12 love is this burning madness before which everything else vanishes 13 for him. The whole universe is to him full of love and love alone; 14 that is how it seems to the lover. So when a man has this love in 15 him, he becomes eternally blessed, eternally happy. This blessed 16 madness of divine love alone can cure for ever the disease of the 17 world that is in us. With desire, selfishness has vanished. He has 18 drawn near to God, he has thrown off all those vain desires of which 19 he was full before.

20 We all have to begin as dualists in the religion of love. God is 21 to us a separate Being, and we feel ourselves to be separate beings 22 also. Love then comes in the middle, and man begins to approach 23 God, and God also comes nearer and nearer to man. Man takes up 24 all the various relationships of life, as father, as mother, as son, as 25 friend, as master, as lover, and projects them on his ideal of love, on 26 his God. To him God exists as all these, and the last point of his 27 progress is reached when he feels that he has become absolutely 28 merged in the object of his worship. We all begin with love for 29 ourselves, and the unfair claims of the little self make even love 30 selfish. At last, however, comes the full blaze of light, in which this 31 little self is seen to have become one with the Infinite. Man himself 32 is transfigured in the presence of this Light of Love, and he realises 33 at last the beautiful and inspiring truth that Love, the Lover, and the 34 Beloved are One.

LECTURES FROM COLOMBO TO ALMORA

FIRST PUBLIC LECTURE IN THE EAST

(Delivered in Colombo)

After his memorable work in the West, Swami Vivekananda landed at Colombo on the afternoon of January 15, 1897, and was given a right royal reception by the Hindu community there. The following address of welcome was then presented to him:

{Addresses of Welcome}

The Swami gave a brief reply, expressing his appreciation of the kind welcome he had received. He took advantage of the opportunity to point out that the demonstration had not been made in honour of a great politician, or a great soldier, or a millionaire, but of a begging Sannyâsin, showing the tendency of the Hindu mind towards religion. He urged the necessity of keeping religion as the backbone of the national life if the nation were to live, and disclaimed any personal character for the welcome he had received, but insisted upon its being the recognition of a principle.

On the evening of the 16th the Swami gave the following public lecture in the Floral Hall:

What little work has been done by me has not been from any inherent power that resides in me, but from the cheers, the goodwill, the blessings that have followed my path in the West from this our very beloved, most sacred, dear Motherland. Some good has been done, no doubt, in the West, but specially to myself; for what before was the result of an emotional nature, perhaps, has gained the certainty of conviction and attained the power and strength of demonstration. Formerly I thought as every Hindu thinks, and as the Hon. President has just pointed out to you, that this is the Punya Bhumi, the land of Karma. Today I stand here and say, with the conviction of truth, that it is so. If there is any land on this earth that can lay claim to be the blessed Punya Bhumi, to be the land to which all souls on this earth must come to account for Karma, the land to which every soul that is wending its way Godward must come to attain its last home, the land where humanity has attained its highest towards gentleness, towards generosity, towards purity, towards calmness, above all, the land of introspection and of spirituality--it is India. Hence have started the founders of religions from the most ancient times, deluging the earth again and again with the pure and perennial waters of spiritual truth. Hence have proceeded the tidal waves of philosophy that have covered the earth, East or West, North or South, and hence again must start the wave which is going to spiritualise the material civilisation of the world. Here is the life-giving water with which must be quenched the burning fire of materialism which is burning the core of the hearts of millions in other lands. Believe me, my friends, this is going to be.

1 So much I have seen, and so far those of you who are 2 students of the history of races are already aware of this fact. The 3 debt which the world owes to our Motherland is immense. Taking 4 country with country, there is not one race on this earth to which 5 the world owes so much as to the patient Hindu, the mild Hindu.
6 "The mild Hindu" sometimes is used as an expression of reproach; 7 but if ever a reproach concealed a wonderful truth, it is in the term, 8 "the mild Hindu", who has always been the blessed child of God.
9 Civilisations have arisen in other parts of the world. In ancient 10 times and in modern times, great ideas have emanated from strong 11 and great races. In ancient and in modern times, wonderful ideas 12 have been carried forward from one race to another. In ancient and 13 in modern times, seeds of great truth and power have been cast 14 abroad by the advancing tides of national life; but mark you, my 15 friends, it has been always with the blast of war trumpets and with 16 the march of embattled cohorts. Each idea had to be soaked in a 17 deluge of blood. Each idea had to wade through the blood of 18 millions of our fellow-beings. Each word of power had to be 19 followed by the groans of millions, by the wails of orphans, by the 20 tears of widows. This, in the main, other nations have taught; but 21 India has for thousands of years peacefully existed. Here activity 22 prevailed when even Greece did not exist, when Rome was not 23 thought of, when the very fathers of the modern Europeans lived in 24 the forests and painted themselves blue. Even earlier, when history 25 has no record, and tradition dares not peer into the gloom of that 26 intense past, even from then until now, ideas after ideas have 27 marched out from her, but every word has been spoken with a 28 blessing behind it and peace before it. We, of all nations of the 29 world, have never been a conquering race, and that blessing is on 30 our head, and therefore we live.

31 There was a time when at the sound of the march of big 32 Greek battalions the earth trembled. Vanished from off the face of 33 the earth, with not even a tale left behind to tell, gone is that 34 ancient land of the Greeks. There was a time when the Roman 35 Eagle floated over everything worth having in this world; 36 everywhere Rome's power was felt and pressed on the head of 37 humanity; the earth trembled at the name of Rome. But the 38 Capitoline Hill is a mass of ruins, the spider weaves its web where 39 the Caesars ruled. There have been other nations equally glorious 40 that have come and gone, living a few hours of exultant and 41 exuberant dominance and of a wicked national life, and then 42 vanishing like ripples on the face of the waters. Thus have these 43 nations made their mark on the face of humanity. But we live, and if 44 Manu came back today he would not be bewildered, and would not 45 find himself in a foreign land. The same laws are here, the laws 46 adjusted and thought out through thousands and thousands of 47 years; customs, the outcome of the acumen of ages and the 48 experience of centuries, that seem to be eternal; and as the days go 49 by, as blow after blow of misfortune has been delivered upon them, 50 such blows seem to have served one purpose only, that of making 51 them stronger and more constant. And to find the centre of all this, 52 the heart form which the blood flows, the mainspring of the national 53 life, believe me when I say after my experience of the world, that it

1 is here.

2 To the other nations of the world, religion is one among the 3 many occupations of life. There is politics, there are the enjoyments 4 of social life, there is all that wealth can buy or power can bring, 5 there is all that the sense can enjoy; and among all these various 6 occupations of life and all this searching after something which can 7 give yet a little more whetting to the cloyed senses--among all 8 these, there is perhaps a little bit of religion. But here, in India, 9 religion is the one and the only occupation of life. How many of you 10 know that there has been a Sino-Japanese War? Very few of you, if 11 any. That there are tremendous political movements and socialistic 12 movements trying to transform Western society, how many of you 13 know? Very few indeed, if any. But that there was a Parliament of 14 Religions in America, and that there was a Hindu Sannyâsin sent 15 over there, I am astonished to find that even the coolie knows of it.
16 That shows the way the wind blows, where the national life is. I 17 used to read books written by globe-trotting travellers, especially 18 foreigners, who deplored the ignorance of the Eastern masses, but I 19 found out that it was partly true and at the same time partly untrue.
20 If you ask a ploughman in England, or America, or France, or 21 Germany to what party he belongs, he can tell you whether he 22 belongs to the Radicals or the Conservatives, and for whom he is 23 going to vote. In America he will say whether he is Republican or 24 Democrat, and he even knows something about the silver question.
25 But if you ask him about his religion, he will tell you that he goes to 26 church and belongs to a certain denomination. This is all he knows, 27 and he thinks it is sufficient.

28 Now, when we come to India, if you ask one of our 29 ploughmen, "Do you know anything about politics?" He will reply, 30 "What is that?" He does not understand the socialistic movements, 31 the relation between capital and labour, and all that; he has never 32 heard of such things in his life, he works hard and earns his bread.
33 But you ask, "What is your religion?" He replies, "Look here, my 34 friend, I have marked it on my forehead." He can give you a good 35 hint or two on questions of religion. That has been my experience.
36 That is our nation's life.

37 Individuals have each their own peculiarities, and each man 38 has his own method of growth, his own life marked out for him by 39 the infinite past life, by all his past Karma as we Hindus say. Into 40 this world he comes with all the past on him, the infinite past 41 ushers the present, and the way in which we use the present is 42 going to make the future. Thus everyone born into this world has a 43 bent, a direction towards which he must go, through which he must 44 live, and what is true of the individual is equally true of the race.
45 Each race, similarly, has a peculiar bent, each race has a peculiar 46 raison d'être, each race has a peculiar mission to fulfil in the life of 47 the world. Each race has to make its own result, to fulfil its own 48 mission. Political greatness or military power is never the mission 49 of our race; it never was, and , mark my words, it never will be. But 50 there has been the other mission given to us, which is to conserve, 51 to preserve, to accumulate, as it were, into a dynamo, all the 52 spiritual energy of the race, and that concentrated energy is to pour

1 forth in a deluge on the world whenever circumstances are 2 propitious. Let the Persian or the Greek, the Roman, the Arab, or 3 the Englishman march his battalions, conquer the world, and link 4 the different nations together, and the philosophy and spirituality of 5 India is ever ready to flow along the new-made channels into the 6 veins of the nations of the world. The Hindu's calm brain must pour 7 out its own quota to give to the sum total of human progress. India's 8 gift to the world is the light spiritual.

9 Thus, in the past, we read in history that whenever there 10 arose a great conquering nation uniting the different races of the 11 world, binding India with the other races, taking her out, as it were, 12 from her loneliness and from her aloofness from the rest of the 13 world into which she again and again cast herself, that whenever 14 such a state has been brought about, the result has been the 15 flooding of the world with Indian spiritual ideas. At the beginning of 16 this century, Schopenhauer, the great German philosopher, 17 studying from a not very clear translation of the Vedas made from 18 an old translation into Persian and thence by a young Frenchman 19 into Latin, says, "In the whole world there is no study so beneficial 20 and so elevating as that of the Upanishads. It has been the solace of 21 my life, it will be the solace of my death." This great German sage 22 foretold that "The world is about to see a revolution in thought 23 more extensive and more powerful than that which was witnessed 24 by the Renaissance of Greek Literature", and today his predictions 25 are coming to pass. Those who keep their eyes open, those who 26 understand the workings in the minds of different nations of the 27 West, those who are thinkers and study the different nations, will 28 find the immense change that has been produced in the tone, the 29 procedure, in the methods, and in the literature of the world by this 30 slow, never-ceasing permeation of Indian thought.

31 But there is another peculiarity, as I have already hinted to 32 you. We never preached our thoughts with fire and sword. If there 33 is one word in the English language to represent the gift of India to 34 the world, if there is one word in the English language to express 35 the effect which the literature of India produces upon mankind, it is 36 this one word, "fascination". It is the opposite of anything that takes 37 you suddenly; it throws on you, as it were, a charm imperceptibly.
38 To many, Indian thought, Indian manners, Indian customs, Indian 39 philosophy, Indian literature are repulsive at the first sight; but let 40 them persevere, let them read, let them become familiar with the 41 great principles underlying these ideas, and it is ninety-nine to one 42 that the charm will come over them, and fascination will be the 43 result. Slow and silent, as the gentle dew that falls in the morning, 44 unseen and unheard yet producing a most tremendous result, has 45 been the work of the calm, patient, all-suffering spiritual race upon 46 the world of thought.

47 Once more history is going to repeat itself. For today, under 48 the blasting light of modern science, when old and apparently 49 strong and invulnerable beliefs have been shattered to their very 50 foundations, when special claims laid to the allegiance of mankind 51 by different sects have been all blown into atoms and have vanished 52 into air, when the sledge-hammer blows of modern antiquarian

1 researches are pulverising like masses of porcelain all sorts of 2 antiquated orthodoxies, when religion in the West is only in the 3 hands of the ignorant and the knowing ones look down with scorn 4 upon anything belonging to religion, here comes to the fore the 5 philosophy of India, which displays the highest religious aspirations 6 of the Indian mind, where the grandest philosophical facts have 7 been the practical spirituality of the people. This naturally is 8 coming to the rescue, the idea of the oneness of all, the Infinite, the 9 idea of the Impersonal, the wonderful idea of the eternal soul of 10 man, of the unbroken continuity in the march of beings, and the 11 infinity of the universe. The old sects looked upon the world as a 12 little mud-puddle and thought that time began but the other day. It 13 was there in our old books, and only there that the grand idea of 14 the infinite range of time, space, and causation, and above all, the 15 infinite glory of the spirit of man governed all the search for 16 religion. When the modern tremendous theories of evolution and 17 conservation of energy and so forth are dealing death blows to all 18 sorts of crude theologies, what can hold any more the allegiance of 19 cultured humanity but the most wonderful, convincing, broadening, 20 and ennobling ideas that can be found only in that most marvellous 21 product of the soul of man, the wonderful voice of God, the 22 Vedanta?

23 At the same time, I must remark that what I mean by our 24 religion working upon the nations outside of India comprises only 25 the principles, the background, the foundation upon which that 26 religion is built. The detailed workings, the minute points which 27 have been worked out through centuries of social necessity, little 28 ratiocinations about manners and customs and social well-being, do 29 not rightly find a place in the category of religion. We know that in 30 our books a clear distinction is made between two sets of truths.
31 The one set is that which abides for ever, being built upon the 32 nature of man, the nature of the soul, the soul's relation to God, the 33 nature of God, perfection, and so on; there are also the principles of 34 cosmology, of the infinitude of creation, or more correctly 35 speaking--projection, the wonderful law of cyclical procession, and 36 so on--these are the eternal principles founded upon the universal 37 laws in nature. The other set comprises the minor laws which 38 guided the working of our everyday life. They belong more properly 39 to the Purânas, to the Smritis, and not to the Shrutis. These have 40 nothing to do with the other principles. Even in our own nation 41 these minor laws have been changing all the time. Customs of one 42 age, of one Yuga, have not been the customs of another, and as 43 Yuga comes after Yuga, they will still have to change. Great Rishis 44 will appear and lead us to customs and manners that are suited to 45 new environments.

46 The great principles underlying all this wonderful, infinite, 47 ennobling, expansive view of man and God and the world have been 48 produced in India. In India alone man has not stood up to fight for a 49 little tribal God, saying "My God is true and yours is not true; let us 50 have a good fight over it." It was only here that such ideas did not 51 occur as fighting for little gods. These great underlying principles, 52 being based upon the eternal nature of man, are as potent today for 1 working for the good of the human race as they were thousands of 2 years ago, and they will remain so, so long as this earth remains, so 3 long as the law of Karma remains, so long as we are born as 4 individuals and have to work out our own destiny by our individual 5 power.

6 And above all, what India has to give to the world is this. If 7 we watch the growth and development of religions in different 8 races, we shall always find this that each tribe at the beginning has 9 a god of its own. If the tribes are allied to each other, these gods 10 will have a generic name, as for example, all the Babylonian gods 11 had. When the Babylonians were divided into many races, they had 12 the generic name of Baal, just as the Jewish races had different 13 gods with the common name of Moloch; and at the same time you 14 will find that one of these tribes becomes superior to the rest, and 15 lays claim to its own king as the king over all. Therefrom it naturally 16 follows that it also wants to preserve its own god as the god of all 17 the races. Baal-Merodach, said the Babylonians, was the greatest 18 god; all the others were inferior. Moloch-Yahveh was the superior 19 over all other Molochs. And these questions had to be decided by 20 the fortunes of battle. The same struggle was here also. In India the 21 same competing gods had been struggling with each other for 22 supremacy, but the great good fortune of this country and of the 23 world was that there came out in the midst of the din and confusion 24 a voice which declared {Sanskrit}--"That which exists is One; sages 25 call It by various names." It is not that Shiva is superior to Vishnu, 26 not that Vishnu is everything and Shiva is nothing, but it is the same 27 one whom you call either Shiva, or Vishnu, or by a hundred other 28 names. The names are different, but it is the same one. The whole 29 history of India you may read in these few words. The whole history 30 has been a repetition in massive language, with tremendous power, 31 of that one central doctrine. It was repeated in the land till it had 32 entered into the blood of the nation, till it began to tingle with every 33 drop of blood that flowed in its veins, till it became one with the life, 34 part and parcel of the material of which it was composed; and thus 35 the land was transmuted into the most wonderful land of toleration, 36 giving the right to welcome the various religions as well as all sects 37 into the old mother-country.

1 And herein is the explanation of the most remarkable 2 phenomenon that is only witnessed here--all the various sects,
3 apparently hopelessly contradictory, yet living in such harmony. You
4 may be a dualist, and I may be a monist. You may believe that you 5 are the eternal servant of God, and I may declare that I am one with 6 God Himself; yet both of us are good Hindus. How is that possible?
7 Read then {Sanskrit}--"That which exists is One; sages call It by 8 various names." Above all others, my countrymen, this is the one 9 grand truth that we have to teach to the world. Even the most 10 educated people of other countries turn up their noses at an angle 11 of forty-five degrees and call our religion idolatry. I have seen that; 12 and they never stopped to think what a mass of superstition there 13 was in their own heads. It is still so everywhere, this tremendous 14 sectarianism, the low narrowness of the mind. The thing which a 15 man has is the only thing worth having; the only life worth living is 16 his little life of dollar-worship and mammon-worship; the only little 17 possession worth having is his own property, and nothing else. If he 18 can manufacture a little clay nonsense or invent a machine, that is 19 to be admired beyond the greatest possessions. That is the case 20 over the whole world in spite of education and learning. But 21 education has yet to be in the world, and civilisation--civilisation has 22 begun nowhere yet. Ninety-nine decimal nine per cent of the human 23 race are more or less savages even now. We may read of these 24 things in books, and we hear of toleration in religion and all that, 25 but very little of it is there yet in the world; take my experience for 26 that. Ninety-nine per cent do not even think of it. There is 27 tremendous religious persecution yet in every country in which I 28 have been, and the same old objections are raised against learning 29 anything new. The little toleration that is in the world, the little 30 sympathy that is yet in the world for religious thought, is practically 31 here in the land of the Aryas, and nowhere else. It is here that 32 Indians build temples for Mohammedans and Christians; nowhere 33 else. If you go to other countries and ask Mohammedans or people 34 of other religions to build a temple for you, see how they will help.
35 They will instead try to break down your temple and you too if they 36 can. The one great lesson, therefore, that the world wants most, 37 that the world has yet to learn from India, is the idea not only of 38 toleration, but of sympathy. Well has it been said in the Mahimnah-
39 stotra: "As the different rivers, taking their start from different 40 mountains, running straight or crooked, at last come unto the 41 ocean, so, O Shiva, the different paths which men take through 42 different tendencies, various though they appear, crooked or 43 straight, all lead unto Thee." Though they may take various roads, 44 all are on the way. Some may run a little crooked, others may run 45 straight, but at last they will all come unto the Lord, the One. Then 46 and then alone, is your Bhakti of Shiva complete when you not only 47 see Him in the Linga, but you see Him everywhere. He is the sage, 48 he is the lover of Hari who sees Hari in everything and in everyone.
49 If you are a real lover of Shiva, you must see Him in everything and 50 in everyone. You must see that every worship is given unto Him 51 whatever may be the name or the form; that all knees bending 52 towards the Caaba, or kneeling in a Christian church, or in the 53 Buddhist temple are kneeling to Him whether they know it or not,

1 whether they are conscious of it or not; that in whatever name or 2 form they are offered, all these flowers are laid at His feet; for He is 3 the one Lord of all, the one Soul of all souls. He knows infinitely 4 better what this world wants than you or I. It is impossible that all 5 difference can cease; it must exist; without variation life must 6 cease. It is this clash, the differentiation of thought that makes for 7 light, for motion, for everything. Differentiation, infinitely 8 contradictory, must remain, but it is not necessary that we should 9 hate each other therefore; it is not necessary therefore that we 10 should fight each other.

11 Therefore we have again to learn the one central truth that 12 was preached only here in our Motherland, and that has to be 13 preached once more from India. Why? Because not only is it in our 14 books, but it runs through every phase of our national literature 15 and is in the national life. Here and here alone is it practised every 16 day, and any man whose eyes are open can see that it is practised 17 here and here alone. Thus we have to teach religion. There are 18 other and higher lessons that India can teach, but they are only for 19 the learned. The lessons of mildness, gentleness, forbearance, 20 toleration, sympathy, and brotherhood, everyone may learn, 21 whether man, woman, or child, learned or unlearned, without 22 respect of race, caste, or creed. "They call Thee by various names; 23 Thou art One."

VEDANTISM

The following address of welcome from the Hindus of Jaffna was presented to Swami Vivekananda:

{Address of Welcome}

An eloquent reply was given, and on the following evening the Swami lectured on Vedantism, a report of which is here appended:

The subject is very large and the time is short; a full analysis of the religion of the Hindus is impossible in one lecture. I will, therefore, present before you the salient points of our religion in as simple language as I can. The word Hindu, by which it is the fashion nowadays to style ourselves, has lost all its meaning, for this word merely meant those who lived on the other side of the river Indus (in Sanskrit, Sindhu). This name was murdered into Hindu by the ancient Persians, and all people living on the other side of the river Sindhu were called by them Hindus. Thus this word has come down to us; and during the Mohammedan rule we took up the word ourselves. There may not be any harm in using the word of course; but, as I have said, it has lost its significance, for you may mark that all the people who live on this side of the Indus in modern times do not follow the same religion as they did in ancient times. The word, therefore, covers not only Hindus proper, but Mohammedans, Christians, Jains, and other people who live in India. I therefore, would not use the word Hindu. What word should we use then? The other words which alone we can use either the Vaidikas, followers of the Vedas, or better still, the Vedantists, followers of the Vedanta. Most of the great religions of the world owe allegiance to certain books which they believe are the words of God or some other supernatural beings, and which are the basis of their religion. Now of all these books, according to the modern savants of the West, the oldest are the Vedas of the Hindus. A little understanding, therefore, is necessary about the Vedas.

This mass of writing called the Vedas is not the utterance of persons. Its date has never been fixed, can never be fixed, and, according to us, the Vedas are eternal. There is one salient point which I want you to remember, that all the other religions of the world claim their authority as being delivered by a Personal God or a number of personal beings, angels, or special messengers of God, unto certain persons; while the claim of the Hindus is that the Vedas do not owe their authority to anybody, they are themselves the authority, being eternal--the knowledge of God. They were never written, never created, they have existed throughout time; just as creation is infinite and eternal, without beginning and without end, so is the knowledge of God without beginning and without end. And this knowledge is what is meant by the Vedas (Vid to know). The mass of knowledge called the Vedanta was discovered by personages called Rishis, and the Rishi is defined as a Mantra-drashta, a seer of thought; not that the thought was his own. Whenever you hear that a certain passage of the Vedas came

1 from a certain Rishi, never think that he wrote it or created it out of 2 his mind; he was the seer of the thought which already existed; it 3 existed in the universe eternally. This sage was the discoverer; the 4 Rishis were spiritual discoverers.

5 This mass of writing, the Vedas, is divided principally into two 6 parts, the Karma Kânda and the Jnâna Kânda--the work portion and 7 the knowledge portion, the ceremonial and the spiritual. The work 8 portion consists of various sacrifices; most of them of late have 9 been given up as not practicable under present circumstances, but 10 others remain to the present day in some shape or other. The main 11 ideas of the Karma Kanda, which consists of the duties of man, the 12 duties of the student, of the householder, of the recluse, and the 13 various duties of the different stations of life, are followed more or 14 less down to the present day. But the spiritual portion of our 15 religion is in the second part, the Jnana Kanda, the Vedanta, the 16 end of the Vedas, the gist, the goal of the Vedas. The essence of the 17 knowledge of the Vedas was called by the name of Vedanta, which 18 comprises the Upanishads; and all the sects of India--Dualists, 19 Qualified-Monists, Monists, or the Shaivites, Vaishnavites, Shaktas, 20 Sauras, Ganapatyas, each one that dares to come within the fold of 21 Hinduism--must acknowledge the Upanishads of the Vedas. They 22 can have their own interpretations and can interpret them in their 23 own way, but they must obey the authority. That is why we want to 24 use the word Vedantist instead of Hindu. All the philosophers of 25 India who are orthodox have to acknowledge the authority of the 26 Vedanta; and all our present-day religions, however crude some of 27 them may appear to be, however inexplicable some of their 28 purposes may seem, one who understands them and studies them 29 can trace them back to the ideas of the Upanishads. So deeply have 30 these Upanishads sunk into our race that those of you who study 31 the symbology of the crudest religion of the Hindus will be 32 astonished to find sometimes figurative expressions of the 33 Upanishads--the Upanishads become symbolised after a time into 34 figures and so forth. Great spiritual and philosophical ideas in the 35 Upanishads are today with us, converted into household worship in 36 the form of symbols. Thus the various symbols now used by us, all 37 come from the Vedanta, because in the Vedanta they are used as 38 figures, and these ideas spread among the nation and permeated it 39 throughout until they became part of their everyday life as symbols.

40 Next to the Vedanta come the Smritis. These also are books 41 written by sages, but the authority of the Smritis is subordinate to 42 that of the Vedanta, because they stand in the same relation with us 43 as the scriptures of the other religions stand with regard to them.
44 We admit that the Smritis have been written by particular sages; in 45 that sense they are the same as the scriptures of other religions, 46 but these Smritis are not final authority. If there is anything in a 47 Smriti which contradicts the Vedanta, the Smriti is to be rejected-- 48 its authority is gone. These Smritis, we see again, have varied from 49 time to time. We read that such and such Smriti should have 50 authority in the Satya Yuga, such and such in the Treta Yuga, some 51 in the Dwapara Yuga, and some in the Kali Yuga, and so on. As 52 essential conditions changed, as various circumstances came to 1 have their influence on the race, manners and customs had to be 2 changed, and these Smritis, as mainly regulating the manners and 3 customs of the nation, had also to be changed from time to time.

4 This is a point I specially ask you to remember. The principles of 5 religion that are in the Vedanta are unchangeable. Why? Because 6 they are all built upon the eternal principles that are in man and 7 nature; they can never change. Ideas about the soul, going to 8 heaven, and so on can never change; they were the same thousands 9 of years ago, they are the same today, they will be the same millions 10 of years hence. But those religious practices which are based 11 entirely upon our social position and correlation must change with 12 the changes in society. Such an order, therefore, would be good and 13 true at a certain period and not at another. We find accordingly that 14 a certain food is allowed at one time and not another, because the 15 food was suitable for that time; but climate and other things 16 changed, various other circumstances required to be met, so the 17 Smriti changed the food and other things. Thus it naturally follows 18 that if in modern times our society requires changes to be made, 19 they must be met, and sages will come and show us the way how to 20 meet them; but not one jot of the principles of our religion will be 21 changed; they will remain intact.

22 Then there are the Purânas. {Sanskrit}--which means, the 23 Puranas are of five characteristics--that which treats of history, of 24 cosmology, with various symbological illustration of philosophical 25 principles, and so forth. These were written to popularise the 26 religion of the Vedas. The language in which the Vedas are written 27 is very ancient, and even among scholars very few can trace the 28 date of these books. The Puranas were written in the language of 29 the people of that time, what we call modern Sanskrit. They were 30 then meant not for scholars, but for the ordinary people; and 31 ordinary people cannot understand philosophy. Such things were 32 given unto them in concrete form, by means of the lives of saints 33 and kings and great men and historical events that happened to the 34 race etc. The sages made use of these things to illustrate the 35 eternal principles of religion.

36 There are still other books, the Tantras. These are very much 37 like Puranas in some respects, and in some of them there is an 38 attempt to revive the old sacrificial ideas of the Karma Kanda.

39 All these books constitute the scriptures of the Hindus. When 40 there is such a mass of sacred books in a nation and a race which 41 has devoted the greatest part of its energies to the thought of 42 philosophy and spirituality (nobody knows for how many thousands 43 of years), it is quite natural that there should be so many sects; 44 indeed it is a wonder that there are not thousands more. These 45 sects differ very much from each other in certain points. We shall 46 not have time to understand the differences between these sects 47 and all the spiritual details about them; therefore I shall take up the 48 common grounds, the essential principles of all these sects which 49 every Hindu must believe.

50 The first is the question of creation, that this nature, Prakriti, 51 Maya is infinite, without beginning. It is not that this world was 52 created the other day, not that a God came and created the world

1 and since that time has been sleeping; for that cannot be. The 2 creative energy is still going on. God is eternally creating-is never 3 at rest. Remember the passage in the Gita where Krishna says, "If I 4 remain at rest for one moment, this universe will be destroyed." If 5 that creative energy which is working all around us, day and night, 6 stops for a second, the whole thing falls to the ground. There never 7 was a time when that energy did not work throughout the universe, 8 but there is the law of cycles, Pralaya. Our Sanskrit word for 9 creation, properly translated, should be projection and not 10 creation. For the word creation in the English language has 11 unhappily got that fearful, that most crude idea of something 12 coming out of nothing, creation out of non-entity, non-existence 13 becoming existence, which, of course, I would not insult you by 14 asking you to believe. Our word, therefore, is projection. The whole 15 of this nature exists, it becomes finer, subsides; and then after a 16 period of rest, as it were, the whole thing is again projected 17 forward, and the same combination, the same evolution, the same 18 manifestations appear and remain playing, as it were, for a certain 19 time, only again to break into pieces, to become finer and finer, until 20 the whole thing subsides, and again comes out. Thus it goes on 21 backwards and forwards with a wave-like motion throughout 22 eternity. Time, space, and causation are all within this nature. To 23 say, therefore, that it had a beginning is utter nonsense. No 24 question can occur as to its beginning or its end. Therefore 25 wherever in our scriptures the words beginning and end are used, 26 you must remember that it means the beginning and the end of one 27 particular cycle; no more than that.

28 What makes this creation? God. What do I mean by the use of 29 the English word God? Certainly not the word as ordinarily used in 30 English--a good deal of difference. There is no other suitable word 31 in English. I would rather confine myself to the Sanskrit word 32 Brahman. He is the general cause of all these manifestations. What 33 is this Brahman? He is eternal, eternally pure, eternally awake, the 34 almighty, the all-knowing, the all-merciful, the omnipresent, the 35 formless, the partless. He creates this universe. If he is always 36 creating and holding up this universe, two difficulties arise. We see 37 that there is partiality in the universe. One person is born happy, 38 and another unhappy; one is rich, and another is poor; this shows 39 partiality. Then there is cruelty also, for here the very condition of 40 life is death. One animal tears another to pieces, and every man 41 tries to get the better of his own brother. This competition, cruelty, 42 horror, and sighs rending hearts day and night is the state of things 43 in this world of ours. If this be the creation of a God, that God is 44 worse than cruel, worse than any devil that man ever imagined. Ay!
45 says the Vedanta, it is not the fault of God that this partiality exists, 46 that this competition exists. Who makes it? We ourselves. There is a 47 cloud shedding its rain on all fields alike. But it is only the field that 48 is well cultivated, which gets the advantage of the shower; another 49 field, which has not been tilled or taken care of cannot get that 50 advantage. It is not the fault of the cloud. The mercy of God is 51 eternal and unchangeable; it is we that make the differentiation.
52 But how can this difference of some being born happy and some 53 unhappy be explained? They do nothing to make out that difference!

1 Not in this life, but they did in their last birth and the difference is 2 explained by this action in the previous life.

3 We now come to the second principle on which we all agree, 4 not only all Hindus, but all Buddhists and all Jains. We all agree that 5 life is eternal. It is not that it has sprung out of nothing, for that 6 cannot be. Such a life would not be worth having. Everything that 7 has a beginning in time must end in time. If life began but 8 yesterday, it must end tomorrow, and annihilation is the result. Life 9 must have been existing. It does not now require much acumen to 10 see that, for all the sciences of modern times have been coming 11 round to our help, illustrating from the material world the 12 principles embodied in our scriptures. You know it already that 13 each one of us is the effect of the infinite past; the child is ushered 14 into the world not as something flashing from the hands of nature, 15 as poets delight so much to depict, but he has the burden of an 16 infinite past; for good or evil he comes to work out his own past 17 deeds. That makes the differentiation. This is the law of Karma.
18 Each one of us is the maker of his own fate. This law knocks on the 19 head at once all doctrines of predestination and fate and gives us 20 the only means of reconciliation between God and man. We, we, 21 and none else, are responsible for what we suffer. We are the 22 effects, and we are the causes. We are free therefore. If I am 23 unhappy, it has been of my own making, and that very thing shows 24 that I can be happy if I will. If I am impure, that is also of my own 25 making, and that very thing shows that I can be pure if I will. The 26 human will stands beyond all circumstance. Before it--the strong, 27 gigantic, infinite will and freedom in man--all the powers, even of 28 nature, must bow down, succumb, and become its servants. This is 29 the result of the law of Karma.

30 The next question, of course, naturally would be: What is the 31 soul? We cannot understand God in our scriptures without knowing 32 the soul. There have been attempts in India, and outside of India 33 too, to catch a glimpse of the beyond by studying external nature; 34 and we all know what an awful failure has been the result. Instead 35 of giving us a glimpse of the beyond, the more we study the 36 material world, the more we tend to become materialised. The more 37 we handle the material world, even the little spirituality which we 38 possessed before vanishes. Therefore that is not the way to 39 spirituality, to knowledge of the Highest; but it must come through 40 the heart, the human soul. The external workings do not teach us 41 anything about the beyond, about the Infinite, it is only the internal 42 that can do so. Through soul, therefore, the analysis of the human 43 soul alone, can we understand God. There are differences of 44 opinion as to the nature of the human soul among the various sects 45 in India, but there are certain points of agreement. We all agree 46 that souls are without beginning and without end, and immortal by 47 their very nature; also that all powers, blessing, purity, 48 omnipresence, omniscience are buried in each soul. That is a grand 49 idea we ought to remember. In every man and in every animal, 50 however weak or wicked, great or small, resides the same 51 omnipresent, omniscient soul. The difference is not in the soul, but 52 in the manifestation. Between me and the smallest animal, the 1 difference is only in manifestation, but as a principle he is the same 2 as I am, he is my brother, he has the same soul as I have. This is the 3 greatest principle that India has preached. The talk of the 4 brotherhood of man becomes in India the brotherhood of universal 5 life, of animals, and of all life down to the little ants--all these are 6 our bodies. Even as our scripture says, "Thus the sage, knowing 7 that the same Lord inhabits all bodies, will worship every body as 8 such." That is why in India there have been such merciful ideas 9 about the poor, about animals, about everybody, and everything 10 else. This is one of the common grounds about our ideas of the soul.

11 Naturally, we come to the idea of God. One thing more about 12 the soul. Those who study the English language are often deluded 13 by the words, soul and mind. Our Atman and soul are entirely 14 different things. What we call Manas, the mind, the Western people 15 call soul. The West never had the idea of soul until they got it 16 through Sanskrit philosophy, some twenty years ago. The body is 17 here, beyond that is the mind, yet the mind is not the Atman; it is 18 the fine body, the Sukshma Sharira, made of fine particles, which 19 goes from birth to death, and so on; but behind the mind is the 20 Atman, the soul, the Self of man. It cannot be translated by the 21 word soul or mind, so we have to use the word Atman, or, as 22 Western philosophers have designated it, by the word Self.
23 Whatever word you use, you must keep it clear in your mind that 24 the Atman is separate from the mind, as well as from the body, and 25 that this Atman goes through birth and death, accompanied by the 26 mind, the Sukshma Sharira. And when the time comes that it has 27 attained to all knowledge and manifested itself to perfection, then 28 this going from birth to death ceases for it. Then it is at liberty 29 either to keep that mind, the Sukshma Sharira, or to let it go for 30 ever, and remain independent and free throughout all eternity. The 31 goal of the soul is freedom. That is one peculiarity of our religion.
32 We also have heavens and hells too; but these are not infinite, for in 33 the very nature of things they cannot be. If there were any heavens, 34 they would be only repetitions of this world of ours on a bigger 35 scale, with a little more happiness and a little more enjoyment, but 36 that is all the worse for the soul. There are many of these heavens.
37 Persons who do good works here with the thought of rewards, when 38 they die, are born again as gods in one of these heavens, as Indra 39 and others. These gods are the names of certain states. They also 40 had been men, and by good work they have become gods; and those 41 different names that you read of, such as Indra and so on, are not 42 the names of the same person. There will be thousands of Indras.
43 Nahusha was a great king, and when he died, he became Indra. It is 44 a position; one soul becomes high and takes the Indra position and 45 remains in it only a certain time; he then dies and is born again as 46 man. But the human body is the highest of all. Some of the gods 47 may try to go higher and give up all ideas of enjoyment in heavens; 48 but, as in this world, wealth and position and enjoyment delude the 49 vast majority, so do most of the gods become deluded also, and 50 after working out their good Karma, they fall down and become 51 human beings again. This earth, therefore, is the Karma Bhumi; it is 52 this earth from which we attain to liberation. So even these heavens 53 are not worth attaining to.

1 What is then worth having? Mukti, freedom. Even in the 2 highest of heavens, says our scripture, you are a slave; what 3 matters it if you are a king for twenty thousand years? So long as 4 you have a body, so long as you are a slave to happiness, so long as 5 time works on you, space works on you, you are a slave. The idea, 6 therefore, is to be free of external and internal nature. Nature must 7 fall at your feet, and you must trample on it and be free and 8 glorious by going beyond. No more is there life; therefore no more 9 is there death. No more enjoyment; therefore no more misery. It is 10 bliss unspeakable, indestructible, beyond everything. What we call 11 happiness and good here are but particles of that eternal Bliss. And 12 this eternal Bliss is our goal.

13 The soul is also sexless; we cannot say of the Atman that it is 14 a man or a woman. Sex belongs to the body alone. All such ideas, 15 therefore, as man or woman, are a delusion when spoken with 16 regard to the Self, and are only proper when spoken of the body. So 17 are the ideas of age. It never ages; the ancient One is always the 18 same. How did It come down to earth? There is but one answer to 19 that in our scriptures. Ignorance is the cause of all this bondage. It 20 is through ignorance that we have become bound; knowledge will 21 cure it by taking us to the other side. How will that knowledge 22 come? Through love, Bhakti; by the worship of God, by loving all 23 beings as the temples of God. He resides within them. Thus, with 24 that intense love will come knowledge, and ignorance will 25 disappear, the bonds will break, and the soul will be free.

26 There are two ideas of God in our scriptures--the one, the 27 personal; and the other, the impersonal. The idea of the Personal 28 God is that He is the omnipresent creator, preserver, and destroyer 29 of everything, the eternal Father and Mother of the universe, but 30 One who is eternally separate from us and from all souls; and 31 liberation consists in coming near to Him and living in Him. Then 32 there is the other idea of the Impersonal, where all those adjectives 33 are taken away as superfluous, as illogical and there remains an 34 impersonal, omnipresent Being who cannot be called a knowing 35 being, because knowledge only belongs to the human mind. He 36 cannot be called a thinking being, because that is a process of the 37 weak only. He cannot be called a reasoning being, because 38 reasoning is a sign of weakness. He cannot be called a creating 39 being, because none creates except in bondage. What bondage has 40 He? None works except for the fulfilment of desires; what desires 41 has He? None works except it be to supply some wants; what wants 42 has He? In the Vedas it is not the word "He" that is used, but "It", 43 for "He" would make an invidious distinction, as if God were a man.
44 "It", the impersonal, is used, and this impersonal "It" is preached.
45 This system is called the Advaita.

46 And what are our relations with this Impersonal Being?--that 47 we are He. We and He are one. Every one is but a manifestation of 48 that Impersonal, the basis of all being, and misery consists in 49 thinking of ourselves as different from this Infinite, Impersonal 50 Being; and liberation consists in knowing our unity with this 51 wonderful Impersonality. These, in short, are the two ideas of God 52 that we find in our scriptures.

1 Some remarks ought to be made here. It is only through the 2 idea of the Impersonal God that you can have any system of ethics.
3 In every nation the truth has been preached from the most ancient 4 times--love your fellow-beings as yourselves--I mean, love human 5 beings as yourselves. In India it has been preached, "love all beings 6 as yourselves"; we make no distinction between men and animals.
7 But no reason was forthcoming, no one knew why it would be good 8 to love other beings as ourselves. And the reason, why, is there in 9 the idea of the Impersonal God; you understand it when you learn 10 that the whole world is one--the oneness of the universe--the 11 solidarity of all life--that in hurting any one I am hurting myself, in 12 loving any one I am loving myself. Hence we understand why it is 13 that we ought not to hurt others. The reason for ethics, therefore, 14 can only be had from this ideal of the Impersonal God. Then there is 15 the question of the position of the Personal God in it. I understand 16 the wonderful flow of love that comes from the idea of a Personal 17 God, I thoroughly appreciate the power and potency of Bhakti on 18 men to suit the needs of different times. What we now want in our 19 country, however, is not so much of weeping, but a little strength.
20 What a mine of strength is in this Impersonal God, when all 21 superstitions have been thrown overboard, and man stands on his 22 feet with the knowledge--I am the Impersonal Being of the world!
23 What can make me afraid? I care not even for nature's laws. Death 24 is a joke to me. Man stands on the glory of his own soul, the infinite, 25 the eternal, the deathless--that soul which no instruments can 26 pierce, which no air can dry, nor fire burn, no water melt, the 27 infinite, the birthless, the deathless, without beginning and without 28 end, before whose magnitude the suns and moons and all their 29 systems appear like drops in the ocean, before whose glory space 30 melts away into nothingness and time vanishes into non-existence.
31 This glorious soul we must believe in. Out of that will come power.
32 Whatever you think, that you will be. If you think yourselves weak, 33 weak you will be; if you think yourselves strong, strong you will be; 34 if you think yourselves impure, impure you will be; if you think 35 yourselves pure, pure you will be. This teaches us not to think 36 ourselves as weak, but as strong, omnipotent, omniscient. No 37 matter that I have not expressed it yet, it is in me. All knowledge is 38 in me, all power, all purity, and all freedom. Why cannot I express 39 this knowledge? Because I do not believe in it. Let me believe in it, 40 and it must and will come out. This is what the idea of the 41 Impersonal teaches. Make your children strong from their very 42 childhood; teach them not weakness, nor forms, but make them 43 strong; let them stand on their feet--bold, all-conquering, all-44 suffering; and first of all, let them learn of the glory of the soul.
45 That you get alone in the Vedanta--and there alone. It has ideas of 46 love and worship and other things which we have in other religions, 47 and more besides; but this idea of the soul is the life-giving thought, 48 the most wonderful. There and there alone is the great thought that 49 is going to revolutionise the world and reconcile the knowledge of 50 the material world with religion.

51 Thus I have tried to bring before you the salient points of our 52 religion--the principles. I have only to say a few words about the 53 practice and the application. As we have seen, under the 1 circumstances existing in India, naturally many sects must appear.

2 As a fact, we find that there are so many sects in India, and at the 3 same time we know this mysterious fact that these sects do not 4 quarrel with each other. The Shaivite does not say that every 5 Vaishnavite is going to be damned, nor the Vaishnavite that every 6 Shaivite will be damned. The Shaivite says, this is my path, and you 7 have yours; at the end we must come together. They all know that 8 in India. This is the theory of Ishta. It has been recognised in the 9 most ancient times that there are various forms of worshipping 10 God. It is also recognised that different natures require different 11 methods. Your method of coming to God may not be my method, 12 possibly it might hurt me. Such an idea as that there is but one way 13 for everybody is injurious, meaningless, and entirely to be avoided.
14 Woe unto the world when everyone is of the same religious opinion 15 and takes to the same path. Then all religions and all thought will 16 be destroyed. Variety is the very soul of life. When it dies out 17 entirely, creation will die. When this variation in thought is kept up, 18 we must exist; and we need not quarrel because of that variety.
19 Your way is very good for you, but not for me. My way is good for 20 me, but not for you. My way is called in Sanskrit, my "Ishta". Mind 21 you, we have no quarrel with any religion in the world. We have 22 each our Ishta. But when we see men coming and saying, "This is 23 the only way", and trying to force it on us in India, we have a word 24 to say; we laugh at them. For such people who want to destroy their 25 brothers because they seem to follow a different path towards God-- 26 for them to talk of love is absurd. Their love does not count for 27 much. How can they preach of love who cannot bear another man 28 to follow a different path from their own? If that is love, what is 29 hatred? We have no quarrel with any religion in the world, whether 30 it teaches men to worship Christ, Buddha, or Mohammed, or any 31 other prophet. "Welcome, my brother," the Hindu says, "I am going 32 to help you; but you must allow me to follow my way too. That is my 33 Ishta. Your way is very good, no doubt; but it may be dangerous for 34 me. My own experience tells me what food is good for me, and no 35 army of doctors can tell me that. So I know from my own 36 experience what path is the best for me." That is the goal, the Ishta, 37 and, therefore, we say that if a temple, or a symbol, or an image 38 helps you to realise the Divinity within, you are welcome to it. Have 39 two hundred images if you like. If certain forms and formularies 40 help you to realise the Divine, God speed you; have, by all means, 41 whatever forms, and whatever temples, and whatever ceremonies 42 you want to bring you nearer to God. But do not quarrel about 43 them; the moment you quarrel, you are not going Godward, you are 44 going backward, towards the brutes.

45 These are a few ideas in our religion. It is one of inclusion of 46 every one, exclusion of none. Though our castes and our institutions 47 are apparently linked with our religion, they are not so. These 48 institutions have been necessary to protect us as a nation, and 49 when this necessity for self-preservation will no more exist, they 50 will die a natural death. But the older I grow, the better I seem to 51 think of these time-honoured institutions of India. There was a time 52 when I used to think that many of them were useless and worthless;
53 but the older I grow, the more I seem to feel a diffidence in cursing

1 any one of them, for each of them is the embodiment of the 2 experience of centuries. A child of but yesterday, destined to die the 3 day after tomorrow, comes to me and asks me to change all my 4 plans; and if I hear the advice of that baby and change all my 5 surroundings according to his ideas, I myself should be a fool, and 6 no one else. Much of the advice that is coming to us from different 7 countries is similar to this. Tell these wiseacres: "I will hear you 8 when you have made a stable society yourselves. You cannot hold 9 on to one idea for two days, you quarrel and fail; you are born like 10 moths in the spring and die like them in five minutes. You come up 11 like bubbles and burst like bubbles too. First form a stable society 12 like ours. First make laws and institutions that remain undiminished 13 in their power through scores of centuries. Then will be the time to 14 talk on the subject with you, but till then, my friend, you are only a 15 giddy child."

16 I have finished what I had to say about our religion. I will end 17 by reminding you of the one pressing necessity of the day. Praise be 18 to Vyâsa, the great author of the Mahabharata, that in this Kali
19 Yuga there is one great work. The Tapas and the other hard Yogas 20 that were practised in other Yugas do not work now. What is needed 21 in this Yuga is giving, helping others. What is meant by Dâna? The 22 highest of gifts is the giving of spiritual knowledge, the next is the 23 giving of secular knowledge, and the next is the saving of life, the 24 last is giving food and drink. He who gives spiritual knowledge, 25 saves the soul from many and many a birth. He who gives secular 26 knowledge opens the eyes of human beings towards spiritual 27 knowledge, and far below these rank all other gifts, even the saving 28 of life. Therefore it is necessary that you learn this and note that all 29 other kinds of work are of much less value than that of imparting 30 spiritual knowledge. The highest and greatest help is that given in 31 the dissemination of spiritual knowledge. There is an eternal 32 fountain of spirituality in our scriptures, and nowhere on earth, 33 except in this land of renunciation, do we find such noble examples 34 of practical spirituality. I have had a little experience of the world.
35 Believe me, there is much talking in other lands; but the practical 36 man of religion, who has carried it into his life, is here and here 37 alone. Talking is not religion; parrots may talk, machines may talk 38 nowadays. But show me the life of renunciation, of spirituality, of 39 all-suffering, of love infinite. This kind of life indicates a spiritual 40 man. With such ideas and such noble practical examples in our 41 country, it would be a great pity if the treasures in the brains and 42 hearts of all these great Yogis were not brought out to become the 43 common property of every one, rich and poor, high and low; not 44 only in India, but they must be thrown broadcast all over the world.
45 This is one of our greatest duties, and you will find that the more 46 you work to help others, the more you help yourselves. The one 47 vital duty incumbent on you, if you really love your religion, if you 48 really love your country, is that you must struggle hard to be up and 49 doing, with this one great idea of bringing out the treasures from 50 your closed books and delivering them over to their rightful heirs.

51 And above all, one thing is necessary. Ay, for ages we have 52 been saturated with awful jealousy; we are always getting jealous

1 of each other. Why has this man a little precedence, and not I? Even 2 in the worship of God we want precedence, to such a state of 3 slavery have we come. This is to be avoided. If there is any crying 4 sin in India at this time it is this slavery. Every one wants to 5 command, and no one wants to obey; and this is owing to the 6 absence of that wonderful Brahmacharya system of yore. First, 7 learn to obey. The command will come by itself. Always first learn to 8 be a servant and then you will be fit to be a master. Avoid this 9 jealousy, and you will do great works that have yet to be done. Our 10 ancestors did most wonderful works, and we look back upon their 11 work with veneration and pride. But we also are going to do great 12 deeds, and let others look back with blessings and pride upon us as 13 their ancestors. With the blessings of the Lord every one here will 14 yet do such deeds that will eclipse those of our ancestors, great and 15 glorious as they may have been.

2 REPLY TO THE ADDRESS OF WELCOME
3 AT PAMBAN

4
5 {Address of Welcome}

6
7 The Raja added to this a brief personal welcome, which was 8 remarkable for its depth of feeling, and then the Swami replied to 9 the following effect:

10
11 Our sacred motherland is a land of religion and philosophy-- 12 the birthplace of spiritual giants--the land of renunciation, where 13 and where alone, from the most ancient to the most modern times, 14 there has been the highest ideal of life open to man.

15 I have been in the countries of the West--have travelled 16 through many lands of many races; and each race and each nation 17 appears to me to have a particular ideal--a prominent ideal running 18 through its whole life; and this ideal is the backbone of the national 19 life. Not politics nor military power, nor commercial supremacy nor 20 mechanical genius furnishes India with that backbone, but religion; 21 and religion alone is all that we have and mean to have. Spirituality 22 has been always in India.

23 Great indeed are the manifestations of muscular power, and 24 marvellous the manifestations of intellect expressing themselves 25 through machines by the appliances of science; yet none of these is 26 more potent than the influence which spirit exerts upon the world.

27 The history of our race shows that India has always been 28 most active. Today we are taught by men who ought to know better 29 that the Hindu is mild and passive; and this has become a sort of 30 proverb with the people of other lands. I discard the idea that India 31 was ever passive. Nowhere has activity been more pronounced than 32 in this blessed land of ours, and the great proof of this activity is 33 that our most ancient and magnanimous race still lives, and at 34 every decade in its glorious career seems to take on fresh youth-- 35 undying and imperishable. This activity manifests here in religion.
36 But it is a peculiar fact in human nature that it judges others 37 according to its own standard of activity. Take, for instance, a 38 shoemaker. He understands only shoemaking and thinks there is 39 nothing in this life except the manufacturing of shoes. A bricklayer 40 understands nothing but bricklaying and proves this alone in his life 41 from day to day. And there is another reason which explains this.
42 When the vibrations of light are very intense, we do not see them, 43 because we are so constituted that we cannot go beyond our own 44 plane of vision. But the Yogi with his spiritual introspection is able 45 to see through the materialistic veil of the vulgar crowds.

46 The eyes of the whole world are now turned towards this land 47 of India for spiritual food; and India has to provide it for all the 48 races. Here alone is the best ideal for mankind; and Western

1 scholars are now striving to understand this ideal which is 2 enshrined in our Sanskrit literature and philosophy, and which has 3 been the characteristic of India all through the ages.

4 Since the dawn of history, no missionary went out of India to 5 propagate the Hindu doctrines and dogmas; but now a wonderful 6 change is coming over us. Shri Bhagavan Krishna says, "Whenever 7 virtue subsides and immorality prevails, then I come again and 8 again to help the world." Religious researches disclose to us the 9 fact that there is not a country possessing a good ethical code but 10 has borrowed something of it from us, and there is not one religion 11 possessing good ideas of the immortality of the soul but has derived 12 it directly or indirectly from us.

13 There never was a time in the world's history when there was 14 so much robbery, and high-handedness, and tyranny of the strong 15 over the weak, as at this latter end of the nineteenth century.
16 Everybody should know that there is no salvation except through 17 the conquering of desires, and that no man is free who is subject to 18 the bondage of matter. This great truth all nations are slowly 19 coming to understand and appreciate. As soon as the disciple is in a 20 position to grasp this truth, the words of the Guru come to his help.
21 The Lord sends help to His own children in His infinite mercy which 22 never ceaseth and is ever flowing in all creeds. Our Lord is the Lord 23 of all religions. This idea belongs to India alone; and I challenge any 24 one of you to find it in any other scripture of the world.

25 We Hindus have now been placed, under God's providence, in 26 a very critical and responsible position. The nations of the West are 27 coming to us for spiritual help. A great moral obligation rests on the 28 sons of India to fully equip themselves for the work of enlightening 29 the world on the problems of human existence. One thing we may 30 note, that whereas you will find the good and great men of other 31 countries take pride in tracing back their descent to some robber-32 baron who lived in a mountain fortress and emerged from time to 33 time to plunder passing wayfarers, we Hindus, on the other hand, 34 take pride in being the descendants of Rishis and sages who lived 35 on roots and fruits in mountains and caves, meditating on the 36 Supreme. We may be degraded and degenerated now; but however 37 degraded and degenerated we may be, we can become great if only 38 we begin to work in right earnest on behalf of our religion.

39 Accept my hearty thanks for the kind and cordial reception
40 you have given me. It is impossible for me to express my gratitude 41 to H.H. the Raja of Ramnad for his love towards me. If any good 42 work has been done by me and through me, India owes much to this 43 good man, for it was he who conceived the idea of my going to 44 Chicago, and it was he who put that idea into my head and 45 persistently urged me on to accomplish it. Standing beside me, he 46 with all his old enthusiasm is still expecting me to do more and 47 more work. I wish there were half a dozen more such Rajas to take 48 interest in our dear motherland and work for her amelioration in 49 the spiritual line.

ADDRESS AT THE RAMESWARAM TEMPLE ON REAL WORSHIP

A visit was subsequently paid to the Rameswaram Temple, where the Swami was asked to address a few words to the people who had assembled there. This he did in the following terms:

It is in love that religion exists and not in ceremony, in the pure and sincere love in the heart. Unless a man is pure in body and mind, his coming into a temple and worshipping Shiva is useless. The prayers of those that are pure in mind and body will be answered by Shiva, and those that are impure and yet try to teach religion to others will fail in the end. External worship is only a symbol of internal worship; but internal worship and purity are the real things. Without them, external worship would be of no avail. Therefore you must all try to remember this.

People have become so degraded in this Kali Yuga that they think they can do anything, and then they can go to a holy place, and their sins will be forgiven. If a man goes with an impure mind into a temple, he adds to the sins that he had already, and goes home a worse man than when he left it. Tirtha (place of pilgrimage) is a place which is full of holy things and holy men. But if holy people live in a certain place, and if there is no temple there, even that is a Tirtha. If unholy people live in a place where there may be a hundred temples, the Tirtha has vanished from that place. And it is most difficult to live in a Tirtha; for if sin is committed in any ordinary place it can easily be removed, but sin committed in a Tirtha cannot be removed. This is the gist of all worship--to be pure and to do good to others.

He who sees Shiva in the poor, in the weak, and in the diseased, really worships Shiva; and if he sees Shiva only in the image, his worship is but preliminary. He who has served and helped one poor man seeing Shiva in him, without thinking of his caste, or creed, or race, or anything, with him Shiva is more pleased than with the man who sees Him only in temples.

A rich man had a garden and two gardeners. One of these gardeners was very lazy and did not work; but when the owner came to the garden, the lazy man would get up and fold his arms and say, "How beautiful is the face of my master", and dance before him. The other gardener would not talk much, but would work hard, and produce all sorts of fruits and vegetables which he would carry on his head to his master who lived a long way off. Of these two gardeners, which would be the more beloved of his master? Shiva is that master, and this world is His garden, and there are two sorts of gardeners here; the one who is lazy, hypocritical, and does nothing, only talking about Shiva's beautiful eyes and nose and other features; and the other, who is taking care of Shiva's children, all those that are poor and weak, all animals, and all His creation. Which of these would be the more beloved of Shiva? Certainly he

1 that serves His children. He who wants to serve the father must 2 serve the children first. He who wants to serve Shiva must serve 3 His children--must serve all creatures in this world first. It is said in 4 the Shastra that those who serve the servants of God are His 5 greatest servants. So you will bear this in mind.

6 Let me tell you again that you must be pure and help any one
7 who comes to you, as much as lies in your power. And this is good 8 Karma. By the power of this, the heart becomes pure (Chitta-9 shuddhi), and then Shiva who is residing in every one will become 10 manifest. He is always in the heart of every one. If there is dirt and 11 dust on a mirror, we cannot see our image. So ignorance and 12 wickedness are the dirt and dust that are on the mirror of our 13 hearts. Selfishness is the chief sin, thinking of ourselves first. He 14 who thinks, "I will eat first, I will have more money than others, and 15 I will possess everything", he who thinks, "I will get to heaven 16 before others, I will get Mukti before others" is the selfish man. The 17 unselfish man says, "I will be last, I do not care to go to heaven, I 18 will even go to hell if by doing so I can help my brothers." This 19 unselfishness is the test of religion. He who has more of this 20 unselfishness is more spiritual and nearer to Shiva. Whether he is 21 learned or ignorant, he is nearer to Shiva than anybody else, 22 whether he knows it or not. And if a man is selfish, even though he 23 has visited all the temples, seen all the places of pilgrimage, and 24 painted himself like a leopard, he is still further off from Shiva.

2 REPLY TO THE ADDRESS OF WELCOME
3 AT RAMNAD

4
5 At Ramnad the following address was presented to Swami 6 Vivekananda by the Raja:

7 {Address of Welcome}

8 The Swami's reply follows in extenso:

9
10 The longest night seems to be passing away, the sorest 11 trouble seems to be coming to an end at last, the seeming corpse 12 appears to be awaking and a voice is coming to us--away back 13 where history and even tradition fails to peep into the gloom of the 14 past, coming down from there, reflected as it were from peak to 15 peak of the infinite Himalaya of knowledge, and of love, and of 16 work, India, this motherland of ours--a voice is coming unto us, 17 gentle, firm, and yet unmistakable in its utterances, and is gaining 18 volume as days pass by, and behold, the sleeper is awakening! Like 19 a breeze from the Himalayas, it is bringing life into the almost dead 20 bones and muscles, the lethargy is passing away, and only the blind 21 cannot see, or the perverted will not see, that she is awakening, 22 this motherland of ours, from her deep long sleep. None can resist 23 her any more; never is she going to sleep any more; no outward 24 powers can hold her back any more; for the infinite giant is rising to 25 her feet.

26 Your Highness and gentlemen of Ramnad, accept my heartfelt 27 thanks for the cordiality and kindness with which you have received 28 me. I feel that you are cordial and kind, for heart speaks unto heart 29 better than any language of the mouth; spirit speaks unto spirit in 30 silence, and yet in most unmistakable language, and I feel it in my 31 heart of hearts. Your Highness of Ramnad, if there has been any 32 work done by my humble self in the cause of our religion and our 33 motherland in the Western countries, if any little work has been 34 done in rousing the sympathies of our own people by drawing their 35 attention to the inestimable jewels that, they know not, are lying 36 deep buried about their own home--if, instead of dying of thirst and 37 drinking dirty ditch water elsewhere out of the blindness of 38 ignorance, they are being called to go and drink from the eternal 39 fountain which is flowing perennially by their own home--if anything 40 has been done to rouse our people towards action, to make them 41 understand that in everything, religion and religion alone is the life 42 of India, and when that goes India will die, in spite of politics, in 43 spite of social reforms, in spite of Kubera's wealth poured upon the 44 head of every one of her children--if anything has been done 45 towards this end, India and every country where any work has been 46 done owe much of it to you, Raja of Ramnad. For it was you who 47 gave me the idea first, and it was you who persistently urged me on 48 towards the work. You, as it were, intuitively understood what was 49 going to be, and took me by the hand, helped me all along, and have

1 never ceased to encourage me. Well is it, therefore, that you should 2 be the first to rejoice at my success, and meet it is that I should first 3 land in your territory on my return to India.

4 Great works are to be done, wonderful powers have to be 5 worked out, we have to teach other nations many things, as has 6 been said already by your Highness. This is the motherland of 7 philosophy, of spirituality, and of ethics, of sweetness, gentleness, 8 and love. These still exist, and my experience of the world leads me 9 to stand on firm ground and make the bold statement that India is 10 still the first and foremost of all the nations of the world in these 11 respects. Look at this little phenomenon. There have been immense 12 political changes within the last four or five years. Gigantic 13 organisations undertaking to subvert the whole of existing 14 institutions in different countries and meeting with a certain 15 amount of success have been working all over the Western world.
16 Ask our people if they have heard anything about them. They have 17 heard not a word about them. But that there was a Parliament of 18 Religions in Chicago, and that there was a Sannyasin sent over 19 from India to that Parliament, and that he was very well received 20 and since that time has been working in the West, the poorest 21 beggar has known. I have heard it said that our masses are dense, 22 that they do not want any education, and that they do not care for 23 any information. I had at one time a foolish leaning towards that 24 opinion myself, but I find experience is a far more glorious teacher 25 than any amount of speculation, or any amount of books written by 26 globe-trotters and hasty observers. This experience teaches me that 27 they are not dense, that they are not slow, that they are as eager 28 and thirsty for information as any race under the sun; but then each 29 nation has its own part to play, and naturally, each nation has its 30 own peculiarity and individuality with which it is born. Each 31 represents, as it were, one peculiar note in this harmony of nations, 32 and this is its very life, its vitality. In it is the backbone, the 33 foundation, and the bed-rock of the national life, and here in this 34 blessed land, the foundation, the backbone, the life-centre is 35 religion and religion alone. Let others talk of politics, of the glory of 36 acquisition of immense wealth poured in by trade, of the power and 37 spread of commercialism, of the glorious fountain of physical 38 liberty; but these the Hindu mind does not understand and does not 39 want to understand. Touch him on spirituality, on religion, on God, 40 on the soul, on the Infinite, on spiritual freedom, and I assure you, 41 the lowest peasant in India is better informed on these subjects 42 than many a so-called philosopher in other lands. I have said, 43 gentlemen, that we have yet something to teach to the world. This 44 is the very reason, the raison d'être, that this nation has lived on, in 45 spite of hundreds of years of persecution, in spite of nearly a 46 thousand years of foreign rule and foreign oppression. This nation 47 still lives; the raison d'être is it still holds to God, to the treasure-48 house of religion and spirituality.

49 In this land are, still, religion and spirituality, the fountains 50 which will have to overflow and flood the world to bring in new life 51 and new vitality to the Western and other nations, which are now 52 almost borne down, half-killed, and degraded by political ambitions

1 and social scheming. From out of many voices, consonant and 2 dissentient, from out of the medley of sounds filling the Indian 3 atmosphere, rises up supreme, striking, and full, one note, and that 4 is renunciation. Give up! That is the watchword of the Indian 5 religions. This world is a delusion of two days. The present life is of 6 five minutes. Beyond is the Infinite, beyond this world of delusion; 7 let us seek that. This continent is illumined with brave and gigantic 8 minds and intelligences which even think of this so-called infinite 9 universe as only a mud-puddle; beyond and still beyond they go.
10 Time, even infinite time, is to them but non-existence. Beyond and 11 beyond time they go. Space is nothing to them; beyond that they 12 want to go, and this going beyond the phenomenal is the very soul 13 of religion. The characteristic of my nation is this 14 transcendentalism, this struggle to go beyond, this daring to tear 15 the veil off the face of nature and have at any risk, at any price, a 16 glimpse of the beyond. That is our ideal, but of course all the people 17 in a country cannot give up entirely. Do you want to enthuse them, 18 then here is the way to do so. Your talks of politics, of social 19 regeneration, your talks of money-making and commercialism--all 20 these will roll off like water from a duck's back. This spirituality, 21 then, is what you have to teach the world. Have we to learn 22 anything else, have we to learn anything from the world? We have, 23 perhaps, to gain a little in material knowledge, in the power of 24 organisation, in the ability to handle powers, organising powers, in 25 bringing the best results out of the smallest of causes. This perhaps 26 to a certain extent we may learn from the West. But if any one 27 preaches in India the ideal of eating and drinking and making 28 merry, if any one wants to apotheosise the material world into a 29 God, that man is a liar; he has no place in this holy land, the Indian 30 mind does not want to listen to him. Ay, in spite of the sparkle and 31 glitter of Western civilisation, in spite of all its polish and its 32 marvellous manifestation of power, standing upon this platform, I 33 tell them to their face that it is all vain. It is vanity of vanities. God 34 alone lives. The soul alone lives. Spirituality alone lives. Hold onto 35 that.

36 Yet, perhaps, some sort of materialism, toned down to our 37 own requirements, would be a blessing to many of our brothers who 38 are not yet ripe for the highest truths. This is the mistake made in 39 every country and in every society, and it is a greatly regrettable 40 thing that in India, where it was always understood, the same 41 mistake of forcing the highest truths on people who are not ready 42 for them has been made of late. My method need not be yours. The 43 Sannyasin, as you all know, is the ideal of the Hindu's life, and 44 every one by our Shastras is compelled to give up. Every Hindu who 45 has tasted the fruits of this world must give up in the latter part of 46 his life, and he who does not is not a Hindu and has no more right 47 to call himself a Hindu. We know that this is the ideal--to give up 48 after seeing and experiencing the vanity of things. Having found out 49 that the heart of the material world is a mere hollow, containing 50 only ashes, give it up and go back. The mind is circling forward, as 51 it were, towards the senses, and that mind has to circle backwards; 52 the Pravritti has to stop and the Nivritti has to begin. That is the 53 ideal. But that ideal can only be realised after a certain amount of 1 experience. We cannot teach the child the truth of renunciation; the 2 child is a born optimist; his whole life is in his senses; his whole life 3 is one mass of sense-enjoyment. So there are childlike men in every 4 society who require a certain amount of experience, of enjoyment, 5 to see through the vanity of it, and then renunciation will come to 6 them. There has been ample provision made for them in our Books; 7 but unfortunately, in later times, there has been a tendency to bind 8 every one down by the same laws as those by which the Sannyasin 9 is bound, and that is a great mistake. But for that a good deal of the 10 poverty and the misery that you see in India need not have been. A 11 poor man's life is hemmed in and bound down by tremendous 12 spiritual and ethical laws for which he has no use. Hands off! Let 13 the poor fellow enjoy himself a little, and then he will raise himself 14 up, and renunciation will come to him of itself. Perhaps in this line, 15 we can be taught something by the Western people; but we must be 16 very cautious in learning these things. I am sorry to say that most of 17 the examples one meets nowadays of men who have imbibed the 18 Western ideas are more or less failures.

1 There are two great obstacles on our path in India, the Scylla
2 of old orthodoxy and the Charybdis of modern European civilisation.
3 Of these two, I vote for the old orthodoxy, and not for the 4 Europeanised system; for the old orthodox man may be ignorant, he 5 may be crude, but he is a man, he has a faith, he has strength, he 6 stands on his own feet; while the Europeanised man has no 7 backbone, he is a mass of heterogeneous ideas picked up at random 8 from every source--and these ideas are unassimilated, undigested, 9 unharmonised. He does not stand on his own feet, and his head is 10 turning round and round. Where is the motive power of his work?-- 11 in a few patronising pats from the English people. His schemes of 12 reforms, his vehement vituperations against the evils of certain 13 social customs, have, as the mainspring, some European patronage.
14 Why are some of our customs called evils? Because the Europeans 15 say so. That is about the reason he gives. I would not submit to that.
16 Stand and die in your own strength; if there is any sin in the world, 17 it is weakness; avoid all weakness, for weakness is sin, weakness is 18 death. These unbalanced creatures are not yet formed into distinct 19 personalities; what are we to call them--men, women, or animals?
20 While those old orthodox people were staunch and were men. There 21 are still some excellent examples, and the one I want to present 22 before you now is your Raja of Ramnad. Here you have a man than 23 whom there is no more zealous a Hindu throughout the length and 24 breadth of this land; here you have a prince than whom there is no 25 prince in this land better informed in all affairs, both oriental and 26 occidental, who takes from every nation whatever he can that is 27 good. "Learn good knowledge with all devotion from the lowest 28 caste. Learn the way to freedom, even if it comes from a Pariah, by 29 serving him. If a woman is a jewel, take her in marriage even if she 30 comes from a low family of the lowest caste." Such is the law laid 31 down by our great and peerless legislator, the divine Manu. This is 32 true. Stand on your own feet, and assimilate what you can; learn 33 from every nation, take what is of use to you. But remember that as 34 Hindus everything else must be subordinated to our own national 35 ideals. Each man has a mission in life, which is the result of all his 36 infinite past Karma. Each of you was born with a splendid heritage, 37 which is the whole of the infinite past life of your glorious nation.
38 Millions of your ancestors are watching, as it were, every action of 39 yours, so be alert. And what is the mission with which every Hindu 40 child is born? Have you not read the proud declaration of Manu 41 regarding the Brahmin where he says that the birth of the Brahmin 42 is "for the protection of the treasury of religion"? I should say that 43 that is the mission not only of the Brahmin, but of every child, 44 whether boy or girl, who is born in this blessed land "for the 45 protection of the treasury of religion". And every other problem in 46 life must be subordinated to that one principal theme. There is also 47 the law of harmony in music. There may be a nation whose theme of 48 life is political supremacy; religion and everything else must 49 become subordinate to that one great theme of its life. But here is 50 another nation whose great theme of life is spirituality and 51 renunciation, whose one watchword is that this world is all vanity 52 and a delusion of three days, and everything else, whether science 53 or knowledge, enjoyment or powers, wealth, name, or fame, must

1 be subordinated to that one theme. The secret of a true Hindu's 2 character lies in the subordination of his knowledge of European 3 sciences and learning, of his wealth, position, and name, to that one 4 principal theme which is inborn in every Hindu child--the 5 spirituality and purity of the race.

6 Therefore between these two, the case of the orthodox man 7 who has the whole of that life-spring of the race, spirituality, and 8 the other man whose hands are full of Western imitation-jewels but 9 has no hold on the life-giving principle, spirituality--of these, I do 10 not doubt that every one here will agree that we should choose the 11 first, the orthodox, because there is some hope in him--he has the 12 national theme, something to hold to; so he will live, but the other 13 will die. Just as in the case of individuals, if the principle of life is 14 undisturbed, if the principal function of that individual life is 15 present, all injuries received as regards other functions are not 16 serious, do not kill the individual, so, as long as this principal 17 function of our life is not disturbed, nothing can destroy our nation.
18 But mark you, if you give up that spirituality, leaving it aside to go 19 after the materialising civilisation of the West, the result will be 20 that in three generations you will be an extinct race; because the 21 backbone of the nation will be broken, the foundation upon which 22 the national edifice has been built will be undermined, and the 23 result will be annihilation all round.

24 Therefore, my friends, the way out is that first and foremost 25 we must keep a firm hold on spirituality--that inestimable gift 26 handed down to us by our ancient forefathers. Did you ever hear of 27 a country where the greatest kings tried to trace their descent not 28 to kings, not to robber-barons living in old castles who plundered 29 poor travellers, but to semi-naked sages who lived in the forest? Did 30 you ever hear of such a land? This is the land. In other countries 31 great priests try to trace their descent to some king, but here the 32 greatest kings would trace their descent to some ancient priest.
33 Therefore, whether you believe in spirituality or not, for the sake of 34 the national life, you have to get a hold on spirituality and keep to 35 it. Then stretch the other hand out and gain all you can from other 36 races, but everything must be subordinated to that one ideal of life;
37 and out of that a wonderful, glorious, future India will come--I am 38 sure it is coming--a greater India than ever was. Sages will spring 39 up greater than all the ancient sages; and your ancestors will not 40 only be satisfied, but I am sure, they will be proud from their 41 positions in other worlds to look down upon their descendants, so 42 glorious, and so great.

43 Let us all work hard, my brethren; this is no time for sleep.
44 On our work depends the coming of the India of the future. She is 45 there ready waiting. She is only sleeping. Arise and awake and see 46 her seated here on her eternal throne, rejuvenated, more glorious 47 than she ever was--this motherland of ours. The idea of God was 48 nowhere else ever so fully developed as in this motherland of ours, 49 for the same idea of God never existed anywhere else. Perhaps you 50 are astonished at my assertion; but show me any idea of God from 51 any other scripture equal to ours; they have only clan-Gods, the God 52 of the Jews, the God of the Arabs, and of such and such a race, and

1 their God is fighting the Gods of the other races. But the idea of 2 that beneficent, most merciful God, our father, our mother, our 3 friend, the friend of our friends, the soul of our souls, is here and 4 here alone. And may He who is the Shiva of the Shaivites, the 5 Vishnu of the Vaishnavites, the Karma of the Karmis, the Buddha of 6 the Buddhists, the Jina of the Jains, the Jehovah of the Christians 7 and the Jews, the Allah of the Mohammedans, the Lord of every 8 sect, the Brahman of the Vedantists, He the all-pervading, whose 9 glory has been known only in this land--may He bless us, may He 10 help us, may He give strength unto us, energy unto us, to carry this 11 idea into practice. May that which we have listened to and studied 12 become food to us, may it become strength in us, may it become 13 energy in us to help each other; may we, the teacher and the 14 taught, not be jealous of each other! Peace, peace, peace, in the 15 name of Hari!

REPLY TO THE ADDRESS OF WELCOME

AT PARAMAKUDI

{Address of Welcome}

In the course of his reply the Swami said:

It is almost impossible to express my thanks for the kindness and cordiality with which you have received me. But if I may be permitted to say so, I will add that my love for my country, and especially for my countrymen, will be the same whether they receive me with the utmost cordiality or spurn me from the country. For in the Gita Shri Krishna says--men should work for work's sake only, and love for love's sake. The work that has been done by me in the Western world has been very little; there is no one present here who could not have done a hundred times more work in the West than has been done by me. And I am anxiously waiting for the day when mighty minds will arise, gigantic spiritual minds, who will be ready to go forth from India to the ends of the world to teach spirituality and renunciation--those ideas which have come from the forests of India and belong to the Indian soil alone.

There comes periods in the history of the human race when, as it were, whole nations are seized with a sort of world-weariness, when they find that all their plans are slipping between their fingers, that old institutions and systems are crumbling into dust, that their hopes are all blighted and everything seems to be out of joint. Two attempts have been made in the world to found social life: the one was upon religion, and the other was upon social necessity. The one was founded upon spirituality, the other upon materialism; the one upon transcendentalism, the other upon realism. The one looks beyond the horizon of this little material world and is bold enough to begin life there, even apart from the other. The other, the second, is content to take its stand on the things of the world and expects to find a firm footing there. Curiously enough, it seems that at times the spiritual side prevails, and then the materialistic side--in wave-like motions following each other. In the same country there will be different tides. At one time the full flood of materialistic ideas prevails, and everything in this life--prosperity, the education which procures more pleasures, more food--will become glorious at first and then that will degrade and degenerate. Along with the prosperity will rise to white heat all the inborn jealousies and hatreds of the human race. Competitions and merciless cruelty will be the watchword of the day. To quote a very commonplace and not very elegant English proverb, "Everyone for himself, and the devil take the hindmost", becomes the motto of the day. Then people think that the whole scheme of life is a failure. And the world would be destroyed had not spirituality come to the rescue and lent a helping hand to the sinking world. Then the world gets new hope and finds a new basis for a new building, and another wave of spirituality comes, which in time again declines. As a rule, spirituality brings a class of men who lay exclusive claim to the special powers of the world. The immediate effect of this is a reaction towards materialism, which opens the door to scores of exclusive claims, until the time comes when not only all the spiritual

1 powers of the race, but all its material powers and privileges are 2 centred in the hands of a very few; and these few, standing on the 3 necks of the masses of the people, want to rule them. Then society 4 has to help itself, and materialism comes to the rescue.

5 If you look at India, our motherland, you will see that the 6 same thing is going on now. That you are here today to welcome 7 one who went to Europe to preach Vedanta would have been 8 impossible had not the materialism of Europe opened the way for it.
9 Materialism has come to the rescue of India in a certain sense by 10 throwing open the doors of life to everyone, by destroying the 11 exclusive privileges of caste, by opening up to discussion the 12 inestimable treasures which were hidden away in the hands of a 13 very few who have even lost the use of them.

14 Half has been stolen and lost; and the other half which 15 remains is in the hands of men who, like dogs in the manger, do not 16 eat themselves and will not allow others to do so. On the other 17 hand, the political systems that we are struggling for in India have 18 been in Europe for ages, have been tried for centuries, and have 19 been found wanting. One after another, the institutions, systems, 20 and everything connected with political government has been 21 condemned as useless; and Europe is restless, does not know where 22 to turn. The material tyranny is tremendous. The wealth and power 23 of a country are in the hands of a few men who do not work but 24 manipulate the work of millions of human beings. By this power 25 they can deluge the whole earth with blood. Religion and all things 26 are under their feet; they rule and stand supreme. The Western 27 world is governed by a handful of Shylocks. All those things that 28 you hear about--constitutional government, freedom, liberty, and 29 parliaments--are but jokes.

30 The West is groaning under the tyranny of the Shylocks, and 31 the East is groaning under the tyranny of the priests; each must 32 keep the other in check. Do not think that one alone is to help the 33 world. In this creation of the impartial Lord, He has made equal 34 every particle in the universe. The worse, most demoniacal man has 35 some virtues which the greatest saint has not; and the lowest worm 36 may have certain things which the highest man has not. The poor 37 labourer, who you think has so little enjoyment in life, has not your 38 intellect, cannot understand the Vedanta Philosophy and so forth; 39 but compare your body with his, and you will see, his body is not so 40 sensitive to pain as yours. If he gets severe cuts on his body, they 41 heal up more quickly than yours would. His life is in the senses, and 42 he enjoys there. His life also is one of equilibrium and balance.
43 Whether on the ground of materialism, or of intellect, or of 44 spirituality, the compensation that is given by the Lord to every one 45 impartially is exactly the same. Therefore we must not think that we 46 are the saviours of the world. We can teach the world, a good many 47 things, and we can learn a good many things from it too. We can 48 teach the world only what it is waiting for. The whole of Western 49 civilisation will crumble to pieces in the next fifty years if there is 50 no spiritual foundation. It is hopeless and perfectly useless to 51 attempt to govern mankind with the sword. You will find that the 52 very centres from which such ideas as government by force sprang

1 up are the very first centres to degrade and degenerate and 2 crumble to pieces. Europe, the centre of the manifestation of 3 material energy, will crumble into dust within fifty years if she is not 4 mindful to change her position, to shift her ground and make 5 spirituality the basis of her life. And what will save Europe is the 6 religion of the Upanishads.

7 Apart from the different sects, philosophies, and scriptures, 8 there is one underlying doctrine--the belief in the soul of man, the 9 Atman--common to all our sects; and that can change the whole 10 tendency of the world. With Hindus, Jains, and Buddhists, in fact 11 everywhere in India, there is the idea of a spiritual soul which is the 12 receptacle of all power. And you know full well that there is not one 13 system of philosophy in India which teaches you that you can get 14 power or purity or perfection from outside; but they all tell you that 15 these are your birthright, your nature. Impurity is a mere 16 superimposition under which your real nature has become hidden.
17 But the real you is already perfect, already strong. You do not 18 require any assistance to govern yourself; you are already self-19 restrained. The only difference is in knowing it or not knowing it.
20 Therefore the one difficulty has been summed up in the word, 21 Avidya. What makes the difference between God and man, between 22 the saint and the sinner? Only ignorance.

23 What is the difference between the highest man and the 24 lowest worm that crawls under your feet? Ignorance. That makes 25 all the difference. For inside that little crawling worm is lodged 26 infinite power, and knowledge, and purity--the infinite divinity of 27 God Himself. It is unmanifested; it will have to be manifested.

1 This is the one great truth India has to teach to the world,
2 because it is nowhere else. This is spirituality, the science of the 3 soul. What makes a man stand up and work? Strength. Strength is 4 goodness, weakness is sin. If there is one word that you find coming 5 out like a bomb from the Upanishads, bursting like a bomb-shell
6 upon masses of ignorance, it is the word fearlessness. And the only 7 religion that ought to be taught is the religion of fearlessness.
8 Either in this world or in the world of religion, it is true that fear is 9 the sure cause of degradation and sin. It is fear that brings misery, 10 fear that brings death, fear that breeds evil. And what causes fear?
11 Ignorance of our own nature. Each of us is heir-apparent to the 12 Emperor of emperors; we are of the substance of God Himself. Nay, 13 according to the Advaita, we are God Himself though we have 14 forgotten our own nature in thinking of ourselves as little men. We 15 have fallen from that nature and thus made differences--I am a little 16 better than you, or you than I, and so on. This idea of oneness is the 17 great lesson India has to give, and mark you, when this is 18 understood, it changes the whole aspect of things, because you look 19 at the world through other eyes than you have been doing before.
20 And this world is no more a battlefield where each soul is born to 21 struggle with every other soul and the strongest gets the victory 22 and the weakest goes to death. It becomes a playground where the 23 Lord is playing like a child, and we are His playmates, His fellow-24 workers. This is only a play, however terrible, hideous, and 25 dangerous it may appear. We have mistaken its aspect. When we 26 have known the nature of the soul, hope comes to the weakest, to 27 the most degraded, to the most miserable sinner. Only, declares 28 your Shashtra, despair not. For you are the same whatever you do, 29 and you cannot change your nature. Nature itself cannot destroy 30 nature. Your nature is pure. It may be hidden for millions of aeons, 31 but at last it will conquer and come out. Therefore the Advaita 32 brings hope to every one and not despair. Its teaching is not 33 through fear; it teaches, not of devils who are always on the watch 34 to snatch you if you miss your footing--it has nothing to do with 35 devils--but says that you have taken your fate in your own hands.
36 Your own Karma has manufactured for you this body, and no body 37 did it for you. The Omnipresent Lord has been hidden through 38 ignorance, and the responsibility is on yourself. You have not to 39 think that you were brought into the world without your choice and 40 left in this most horrible place, but to know that you have yourself 41 manufactured your body bit by bit just as you are doing it this very 42 moment. You yourself eat; nobody eats for you. You assimilate what 43 you eat; no one does it for you. You make blood, and muscles, and 44 body out of the food; nobody does it for you. So you have done all 45 the time. One link in a chain explains the infinite chain. If it is true 46 for one moment that you manufacture your body, it is true for every 47 moment that has been or will come. And all the responsibility of 48 good and evil is on you. This is the great hope. What I have done, 49 that I can undo. And at the same time our religion does not take 50 away from mankind the mercy of the Lord. That is always there. On 51 the other hand, He stands beside this tremendous current of good 52 and evil. He the bondless, the ever-merciful, is always ready to help 53 us to the other shore, for His mercy is great, and it always comes to 1 the pure in heart.

2 Your spirituality, in a certain sense, will have to form the basis
3 of the new order of society. If I had more time, I could show you 4 how the West has yet more to learn from some of the conclusions of 5 the Advaita, for in these days of materialistic science the ideal of 6 the Personal God does not count for much. But yet, even if a man 7 has a very crude form of religion and wants temples and forms, he 8 can have as many as he likes; if he wants a Personal God to love, he 9 can find here the noblest ideas of a Personal God such as were 10 never attained anywhere else in the world. If a man wants to be a 11 rationalist and satisfy his reason, it is also here that he can find the 12 most rational ideas of the Impersonal.

REPLY TO THE ADDRESS OF WELCOME AT SHIVAGANGA AND MANAMADURA

{Address of Welcome}

The Swami's reply was to the following effect:

I cannot express the deep debt of gratitude which you have laid upon me by the kind and warm welcome which has just been accorded to me by you. Unfortunately I am not just now in a condition to make a very big speech, however much I may wish it. In spite of the beautiful adjectives which our Sanskrit friend has been so kind to apply to me, I have a body after all, foolish though it may be; and the body always follows the promptings, conditions, and laws of matter. As such, there is such a thing as fatigue and weariness as regards the material body.

It is a great thing to see the wonderful amount of joy and appreciation expressed in every part of the country for the little work that has been done by me in the West. I look at it only in this way: I want to apply it to those great souls who are coming in the future. If the little bit of work that has been done by me receives such approbation from the nation, what must be the approbation that the spiritual giants, the world-movers coming after us, will get from this nation? India is the land of religion; the Hindu understands religion and religion alone. Centuries of education have always been in that line; and the result is that it is the one concern in life; and you all know well that it is so. It is not necessary that every one should be a shopkeeper; it is not necessary even that every one should be a school-master; it is not necessary that every one should be a fighter; but in this world there will be different nations producing the harmony of result.

Well, perhaps we are fated by Divine Providence to play the spiritual note in this harmony of nations, and it rejoices me to see that we have not yet lost the grand traditions which have been handed down to us by the most glorious forefathers of whom any nation can be proud. It gives me hope, it gives me adamant faith in the destiny of the race. It cheers me, not for the personal attention paid to me, but to know that the heart of the nation is there, and is still sound. India is still living; who says she is dead? But the West wants to see us active. If they want to see us active on the field of battle, they will be disappointed--that is not our field--just as we would be disappointed if we hoped to see a military nation active on the field of spirituality. But let them come here and see that we are equally active, and how the nation is living and is as alive as ever. We should dispel the idea that we have degenerated at all. So far so good.

But now I have to say a few harsh words, which I hope you will not take unkindly. For the complaint has just been made that European materialism has well nigh swamped us. It is not all the fault of the Europeans, but a good deal our own. We, as Vedantists,

1 must always look at things from an introspective viewpoint, from its 2 subjective relations. We, as Vedantists, know for certain that there 3 is no power in the universe to injure us unless we first injure 4 ourselves. One-fifth of the population of India have become 5 Mohammedans. Just as before that, going further back, two-thirds 6 of the population in ancient times had become Buddhists, one-fifth 7 are now Mohammedans, Christians are already more than a million.

8 Whose fault is it? One of our historians says in ever-9 memorable language: Why should these poor wretches starve and 10 die of thirst when the perennial fountain of life is flowing by? The 11 question is: What did we do for these people who forsook their own 12 religion? Why should they have become Mohammedans? I heard of 13 an honest girl in England who was going to become a streetwalker.
14 When a lady asked her not to do so, her reply was, "That is the only 15 way I can get sympathy. I can find none to help me now; but let me 16 be a fallen, downtrodden woman, and then perhaps merciful ladies 17 will come and take me to a home and do everything they can for 18 me." We are weeping for these renegades now, but what did we do 19 for them before? Let every one of us ask ourselves, what have we 20 learnt; have we taken hold of the torch of truth, and if so, how far 21 did we carry it? We did not help them then. This is the question we 22 should ask ourselves. That we did not do so was our own fault, our 23 own Karma. Let us blame none, let us blame our own Karma.

24 Materialism, or Mohammedanism, or Christianity, or any 25 other ism in the world could never have succeeded but that you 26 allowed them. No bacilli can attack the human frame until it is 27 degraded and degenerated by vice, bad food, privation, and 28 exposure; the healthy man passes scatheless through masses of 29 poisonous bacilli. But yet there is time to change our ways. Give up 30 all those old discussions, old fights about things which are 31 meaningless, which are nonsensical in their very nature. Think of 32 the last six hundred or seven hundred years of degradation when 33 grown-up men by hundreds have been discussing for years whether 34 we should drink a glass of water with the right hand or the left, 35 whether the hand should be washed three times or four times, 36 whether we should gargle five or six times. What can you expect 37 from men who pass their lives in discussing such momentous 38 questions as these and writing most learned philosophies on them!
39 There is a danger of our religion getting into the kitchen. We are 40 neither Vedantists, most of us now, nor Pauranics, nor Tantrics. We 41 are just "Don't touchists". Our religion is in the kitchen. Our God is 42 in the cooking-pot, and our religion is, "Don't touch me, I am holy".
43 If this goes on for another century, every one of us will be in a 44 lunatic asylum. It is a sure sign of softening of the brain when the 45 mind cannot grasp the higher problems of life; all originality is lost, 46 the mind has lost all its strength, its activity, and its power of 47 thought, and just tries to go round and round the smallest curve it 48 can find. This state of things has first to be thrown overboard, and 49 then we must stand up, be active and strong; and then we shall 50 recognise our heritage to that infinite treasure, the treasure our 51 forefathers have left for us, a treasure that the whole world 52 requires today. The world will die if this treasure is not distributed.

1 Bring it out, distribute it broadcast. Says Vyasa: Giving alone is the 2 one work in this Kali Yuga; and of all the gifts, giving spiritual life is 3 the highest gift possible; the next gift is secular knowledge; the 4 next, saving the life of man; and the last, giving food to the needy.
5 Of food we have given enough; no nation is more charitable than 6 we. So long as there is a piece of bread in the home of a beggar, he 7 will give half of it. Such a phenomenon can be observed only in 8 India. We have enough of that, let us go for the other two, the gifts 9 of spiritual and secular knowledge. And if we were all brave and 10 had stout hearts, and with absolute sincerity put our shoulders to 11 the wheel, in twenty-five years the whole problem would be solved, 12 and there would be nothing left here to fight about; the whole 13 Indian world would be once more Aryan.

14 This is all I have to tell you now. I am not given much to 15 talking about plans; I rather prefer to do and show, and then talk 16 about my plans. I have my plans, and mean to work them out if the 17 Lord wills it, if life is given to me. I do not know whether I shall 18 succeed or not, but it is a great thing to take up a grand ideal in life 19 and then give up one's whole life to it. For what otherwise is the 20 value of life, this vegetating, little, low life of man? Subordinating it 21 to one high ideal is the only value that life has. This is the great 22 work to be done in India. I welcome the present religious revival; 23 and I should be foolish if I lost the opportunity of striking the iron 24 while it is hot.

2 REPLY TO THE ADDRESS OF WELCOME AT 3 MADURA

5 {Address of Welcome}

6 The Swami replied in the following terms:

7 I wish I could live in your midst for several days and fulfil the 8 conditions that have just been pointed out by your most worthy 9 Chairman of relating to you my experiences in the West and the 10 result of all my labours there for the last four years. But, 11 unfortunately, even Swamis have bodies; and the continuous 12 travelling and speaking that I have had to undergo for the last three 13 weeks make it impossible for me to deliver a very long speech this 14 evening. I will, therefore, satisfy myself with thanking you very 15 cordially for the kindness that has been shown to me, and reserve 16 other things for some day in the future when under better 17 conditions of health we shall have time to talk over more various 18 subjects than we can do in so short a time this evening. Being in 19 Madura, as the guest of one of your well-known citizens and 20 noblemen, the Raja of Ramnad, one fact comes prominently to my 21 mind. Perhaps most of you are aware that it was the Raja who first 22 put the idea into my mind of going to Chicago, and it was he who all 23 the time supported it with all his heart and influence. A good deal, 24 therefore, of the praise that has been bestowed upon me in this 25 address, ought to go to this noble man of Southern India. I only 26 wish that instead of becoming a Raja he had become a Sannyasin, 27 for that is what he is really fit for.

28 Wherever there is a thing really needed in one part of the 29 world, the complement will find its way there and supply it with 30 new life. This is true in the physical world as well as in the spiritual.
31 If there is a want of spirituality in one part of the world, and at the 32 same time that spirituality exists elsewhere, whether we 33 consciously struggle for it or not, that spirituality will find its way to 34 the part where it is needed and balance the inequality. In the 35 history of the human race, not once or twice, but again and again, it 36 has been the destiny of India in the past to supply spirituality to the 37 world. We find that whenever either by mighty conquest or by 38 commercial supremacy different parts of the world have been 39 kneaded into one whole race and bequests have been made from 40 one corner to the other, each nation, as it were, poured forth its 41 own quota, either political, social, or spiritual. India's contribution 42 to the sum total of human knowledge has been spirituality, 43 philosophy. These she contributed even long before the rising of the 44 Persian Empire; the second time was during the Persian Empire; for 45 the third time during the ascendancy of the Greeks; and now for the 46 fourth time during the ascendancy of the English, she is going to 47 fulfil the same destiny once more. As the Western ideas of 48 organisation and external civilisation are penetrating and pouring 49 into our country, whether we will have them or not, so Indian 50 spirituality and philosophy are deluging the lands of the West. None

1 can resist it, and no more can we resist some sort of material 2 civilisation from the West. A little of it, perhaps, is good for us, and 3 a little spiritualization is good for the West; thus the balance will be 4 preserved. It is not that we ought to learn everything from the 5 West, or that they have to learn everything from us, but each will 6 have to supply and hand down to future generations what it has for 7 the future accomplishment of that dream of ages--the harmony of 8 nations, an ideal world. Whether that ideal world will ever come I 9 do not know, whether that social perfection will ever be reached I 10 have my own doubts; but whether it comes or not, each one of us
11 will have to work for the idea as if it will come tomorrow, and as if it 12 only depends on his work, and his alone. Each one of us will have to 13 believe that every one else in the world has done his work, and the 14 only work remaining to be done to make the world perfect has to be 15 done by himself. This is the responsibility we have to take upon 16 ourselves.

17 In the meanwhile, in India there is a tremendous revival of 18 religion. There is danger ahead as well as glory; for revival 19 sometimes breeds fanaticism, sometimes goes to the extreme, so 20 that often it is not even in the power of those who start the revival 21 to control it when it has gone beyond a certain length. It is better, 22 therefore, to be forewarned. We have to find our way between the 23 Scylla of the old superstitious orthodoxy and the Charybdis of 24 materialism--of Europeanism, of soulessness, of the so-called 25 reform--which has penetrated to the foundation of Western 26 progress. These two have to be taken care of. In the first place, we 27 cannot become Western; therefore imitating the Westerns is 28 useless. Suppose you can imitate the Westerns, that moment you 29 will die, you will have no more life in you. In the second place, it is 30 impossible. A stream is taking its rise, away beyond where time 31 began, flowing through millions of ages of human history; do you 32 mean to get hold of that stream and push it back to its source, to a 33 Himalayan glacier? Even if that were practicable, it would not be 34 possible for you to be Europeanised. If you find it is impossible for 35 the European to throw off the few centuries of culture which there 36 is in the West, do you think it is possible for you to throw off the 37 culture of shining scores of centuries? It cannot be. We must also 38 remember that in every little village-god and every little 39 superstitious custom is that we are accustomed to call our religious 40 faith. But local customs are infinite and contradictory. Which are we 41 to obey, and which not to obey? The Brahmin of Southern India, for 42 instance, would shrink in horror at the sight of another Brahmin 43 eating meat; a Brahmin in the North thinks it a most glorious and 44 holy thing to do--he kills goats by the hundred in sacrifice. If you put 45 forward your custom, they are equally ready with theirs. Various 46 are the customs all over India, but they are local. The greatest 47 mistake made is that ignorant people always think that this local 48 custom is the essence of our religion.

49 But beyond this there is a still greater difficulty. There are 50 two sorts of truth we find in our Shastras, one that is based upon 51 the eternal nature of man--the one that deals with the eternal 52 relation of God, soul, and nature; the other, with local

1 circumstances, environments of the time, social institutions of the 2 period, and so forth. The first class of truths is chiefly embodied in 3 our Vedas, our scriptures; the second in the Smritis, the Puranas, 4 etc. We must remember that for all periods the Vedas are the final 5 goal and authority, and if the Puranas differ in any respect from the 6 Vedas, that part of the Puranas is to be rejected without mercy. We 7 find, then, that in all these Smritis the teachings are different. One 8 Smriti says, this is the custom, and this should be the practice of 9 this age. Another one says, this is the practice of this age, and so 10 forth. This is the Achara which should be the custom of the Satya 11 Yuga, and this is the Achara which should be the custom of the Kali 12 Yuga, and so forth. Now this is one of the most glorious doctrines 13 that you have, that eternal truths, being based upon the nature of 14 man, will never change so long as man lives; they are for all times, 15 omnipresent, universal virtues. But the Smritis speak generally of 16 local circumstances, of duties arising from different environments, 17 and they change in the course of time. This you have always to 18 remember that because a little social custom is going to be changed 19 you are not going to lose your religion, not at all. Remember these 20 customs have already been changed. There was a time in this very 21 India when, without eating beef, no Brahmin could remain a 22 Brahmin; you read in the Vedas how, when a Sannyasin, a king, or a 23 great man came into a house, the best bullock was killed; how in 24 time it was found that as we were an agricultural race, killing the 25 best bulls meant annihilation of the race. Therefore the practice 26 was stopped, and a voice was raised against the killing of cows.
27 Sometimes we find existing then what we now consider the most 28 horrible customs. In course of time other laws had to be made.
29 These in turn will have to go, and other Smritis will come. This is 30 one fact we have to learn that the Vedas being eternal will be one 31 and the same throughout all ages, but the Smritis will have an end.
32 As time rolls on, more and more of the Smritis will go, sages will 33 come, and they will change and direct society into better channels, 34 into duties and into paths which accord with the necessity of the 35 age, and without which it is impossible that society can live. Thus 36 we have to guide our course, avoiding these two dangers; and I 37 hope that every one of us here will have breadth enough, and at the 38 same time faith enough, to understand what that means, which I 39 suppose is the inclusion of everything, and not the exclusion. I want 40 the intensity of the fanatic plus the extensity of the materialist.
41 Deep as the ocean, broad as the infinite skies, that is the sort of 42 heart we want. Let us be as progressive as any nation that ever 43 existed, and at the same time as faithful and conservative towards 44 our traditions as Hindus alone know how to be.

45 In plain words, we have first to learn the distinction between 46 the essentials and the non-essentials in everything. The essentials 47 are eternal, and non-essentials have value only for a certain time; 48 and if after a time they are not replaced by something essential, 49 they are positively dangerous. I do not mean that you should stand 50 up and revile all your old customs and institutions. Certainly not; 51 you must not revile even the most evil one of them. Revile none.
52 Even those customs that are now appearing to be positive evils, 53 have been positively life-giving in times past; and if we have to 1 remove these, we must not do so with curses, but with blessings 2 and gratitude for the glorious work these customs have done for the 3 preservation of our race. And we must also remember that the 4 leaders of our societies have never been either generals or kings, 5 but Rishis. And who are the Rishis? The Rishi as he is called in the 6 Upanishads is not an ordinary man, but a Mantra-drashta. He is a 7 man who sees religion, to whom religion is not merely book-8 learning, not argumentation, nor speculation, nor much talking, but 9 actual realisation, a coming face to face with truths which 10 transcend the senses. This is Rishihood, and that Rishihood does 11 not belong to any age, or time, or even to sects or caste. Vatsyayana 12 says, truth must be realised; and we have to remember that you, 13 and I, and every one of us will be called upon to become Rishis; and 14 we must have faith in ourselves; we must become world-movers, for 15 everything is in us. We must see Religion face to face, experience it, 16 and thus solve our doubts about it; and then standing up in the 17 glorious light of Rishihood each one of us will be a giant; and every 18 word falling from our lips will carry behind it that infinite sanction 19 of security; and before us evil will vanish by itself without the 20 necessity of cursing any one, without the necessity of abusing any 21 one, without the necessity of fighting any one in the world. May the 22 Lord help us, each one of us here, to realise the Rishihood for our 23 own salvation and for that of others!

THE MISSION OF THE VEDANTA

{Address of Welcome}

The Swami then delivered the following address on the Mission of the Vedanta:

A very small amount of religious work performed brings a large amount of result. If this statement of the Gita wanted an illustration, I am finding every day the truth of that great saying in my humble life. My work has been very insignificant indeed, but the kindness and the cordiality of welcome that have met me at every step of my journey from Colombo to this city are simply beyond all expectation. Yet, at the same time, it is worthy of our traditions as Hindus, it is worthy of our race; for here we are, the Hindu race, whose vitality, whose life-principle, whose very soul, as it were, is in religion. I have seen a little of the world, travelling among the races of the East and the West; and everywhere I find among nations one great ideal which forms the backbone, so to speak, of that race. With some it is politics, with others it is social culture; others again may have intellectual culture and so on for their national background. But this, our motherland, has religion and religion alone for its basis, for its backbone, for the bed-rock upon which the whole building of its life has been based. Some of you may remember that in my reply to the kind address which the people of Madras sent over to me in America, I pointed out the fact that a peasant in India has, in many respects, a better religious education than many a gentleman in the West, and today, beyond all doubt, I myself am verifying my own words. There was a time when I did feel rather discontented at the want of information among the masses of India and the lack of thirst among them for information, but now I understand it. Where their interest lies, there they are more eager for information than the masses of any other race that I have seen or have travelled among. Ask our peasants about the momentous political changes in Europe, the upheavals that are going on in European society--they do not know anything of them, nor do they care to know; but the peasants, even in Ceylon, detached from India in many ways, cut off from a living interest in India--I found the very peasants working in the fields there were already acquainted with the fact that there had been a Parliament of Religions in America, that an Indian Sannyasin had gone over there, and that he had had some success.

Where, therefore, their interest is, there they are as eager for information as any other race; and religion is the one and sole interest of the people of India. I am not just now discussing whether it is good to have the vitality of the race in religious ideals or in political ideals, but so far it is clear to us that, for good or for evil, our vitality is concentrated in our religion. You cannot change it. You cannot destroy it and put in its place another. You cannot transplant a large growing tree from one soil to another and make

1 it immediately take root there. For good or for evil, the religious 2 ideal has been flowing into India for thousands of years; for good or 3 for evil, the Indian atmosphere has been filled with ideals of 4 religion for shining scores of centuries; for good or for evil, we have 5 been born and brought up in the very midst of these ideas of 6 religion, till it has entered into our very blood and tingled with 7 every drop in our veins, and has become one with our constitution, 8 become the very vitality of our lives. Can you give such religion up 9 without the rousing of the same energy in reaction, without filling 10 the channel which that mighty river has cut out for itself in the 11 course of thousands of years? Do you want that the Ganga should 12 go back to its icy bed and begin a new course? Even if that were 13 possible, it would be impossible for this country to give up her 14 characteristic course of religious life and take up for herself a new 15 career of politics or something else. You can work only under the 16 law of least resistance, and this religious line is the line of least 17 resistance in India. This is the line of life, this is the line of growth, 18 and this is the line of well-being in India--to follow the track of 19 religion.

20 Ay, in other countries religion is only one of the many 21 necessities in life. To use a common illustration which I am in the 22 habit of using, my lady has many things in her parlour, and it is the 23 fashion nowadays to have a Japanese vase, and she must procure it; 24 it does not look well to be without it. So my lady, or my gentleman, 25 has many other occupations in life, and also a little bit of religion 26 must come in to complete it. Consequently he or she has a little 27 religion. Politics, social improvement, in one word, this world, is the 28 goal of mankind in the West, and God and religion come in quietly 29 as helpers to attain that goal. Their God is, so to speak, the Being 30 who helps to cleanse and to furnish this world for them; this is 31 apparently all the value of God for them. Do you not know how for 32 the last hundred or two hundred years you have been hearing again 33 and again out of the lips of men who ought to have known better, 34 from the mouths of those who pretend at least to know better, that 35 all the arguments they produce against the Indian religion is this-- 36 that our religion does not conduce to well-being in this world, that it 37 does not bring gold to us, that it does not make us robbers of 38 nations, that it does not make the strong stand upon the bodies of 39 the weak and feed themselves with the life-blood of the weak.
40 Certainly our religion does not do that. It cannot send cohorts, 41 under whose feet the earth trembles, for the purpose of destruction 42 and pillage and the ruination of races. Therefore they say--what is 43 there in this religion? It does not bring any grist to the grinding 44 mill, any strength to the muscles; what is there is such a religion?

45 They little dream that that is the very argument with which 46 we prove our religion, because it does not make for this world. Ours 47 is the only true religion because, according to it, this little sense-48 world of three days' duration is not to be made the end and aim of 49 all, is not to be our great goal. This little earthly horizon of a few 50 feet is not that which bounds the view of our religion. Ours is away 51 beyond, and still beyond; beyond the senses, beyond space, and 52 beyond time, away, away beyond, till nothing of this world is left

1 and the universe itself becomes like a drop in the transcendent
2 ocean of the glory of the soul. Ours is the true religion because it
3 teaches that God alone is true, that this world is false and fleeting, 4 that all your gold is but as dust, that all your power is finite, and 5 that life itself is oftentimes an evil; therefore it is, that ours is the 6 true religion. Ours is the true religion because, above all, it teaches 7 renunciation and stands up with the wisdom of ages to tell and to 8 declare to the nations who are mere children of yesterday in 9 comparison with us Hindus--who own the hoary antiquity of the 10 wisdom, discovered by our ancestors here in India--to tell them in 11 plain words: "Children, you are slaves of the senses; there is only 12 finiteness in the senses, there is only ruination in the senses; the 13 three short days of luxury here bring only ruin at last. Give it all up, 14 renounce the love of the senses and of the world; that is the way of 15 religion." Through renunciation is the way to the goal and not 16 through enjoyment. Therefore ours is the only true religion.

17 Ay, it is a curious fact that while nations after nations have 18 come upon the stage of the world, played their parts vigorously for 19 a few moments, and died almost without leaving a mark or a ripple 20 on the ocean of time, here we are living, as it were, an eternal life.
21 They talk a great deal of the new theories about the survival of the 22 fittest, and they think that it is the strength of the muscles which is 23 the fittest to survive. If that were true, any one of the aggressively 24 known old world nations would have lived in glory today, and we, 25 the weak Hindus, who never conquered even one other race or 26 nation, ought to have died out; yet we live here three hundred 27 million strong! (A young English lady once told me: What have the 28 Hindus done? They never even conquered a single race!) And it is 29 not at all true that all its energies are spent, that atrophy has 30 overtaken its body: that is not true. There is vitality enough, and it 31 comes out in torrents and deluges the world when the time is ripe 32 and requires it.

33 We have, as it were, thrown a challenge to the whole world 34 from the most ancient times. In the West, they are trying to solve 35 the problem how much a man can possess, and we are trying here 36 to solve the problem on how little a man can live. This struggle and 37 this difference will still go on for some centuries. But if history has 38 any truth in it and if prognostications ever prove true, it must be 39 that those who train themselves to live on the least and control 40 themselves well will in the end gain the battle, and that those who 41 run after enjoyment and luxury, however vigorous they may seem 42 for the moment, will have to die and become annihilated. There are 43 times in the history of a man's life, nay, in the history of the lives of 44 nations, when a sort of world-weariness becomes painfully 45 predominant. It seems that such a tide of world-weariness has come 46 upon the Western world. There, too, they have their thinkers, great 47 men; and they are already finding out that this race after gold and 48 power is all vanity of vanities; many, nay, most of the cultured men 49 and women there, are already weary of this competition, this 50 struggle, this brutality of their commercial civilisation, and they are 51 looking forward towards something better. There is a class which 52 still clings on to political and social changes as the only panacea for

1 the evils in Europe, but among the great thinkers there, other 2 ideals are growing. They have found out that no amount of political 3 or social manipulation of human conditions can cure the evils of life.
4 It is a change of the soul itself for the better that alone will cure the 5 evils of life. No amount of force, or government, or legislative 6 cruelty will change the conditions of a race, but it is spiritual 7 culture and ethical culture alone that can change wrong racial 8 tendencies for the better. Thus these races of the West are eager 9 for some new thought, for some new philosophy; the religion they 10 have had, Christianity, although good and glorious in many 11 respects, has been imperfectly understood, and is, as understood 12 hitherto, found to be insufficient. The thoughtful men of the West 13 find in our ancient philosophy, especially in the Vedanta, the new 14 impulse of thought they are seeking, the very spiritual food and 15 drink for which they are hungering and thirsting. And it is no 16 wonder that this is so.

17 I have become used to hearing all sorts of wonderful claims 18 put forward in favour of every religion under the sun. You have also 19 heard, quite within recent times, the claims put forward by Dr.
20 Barrows, a great friend of mine, that Christianity is the only 21 universal religion. Let me consider this question awhile and lay 22 before you my reasons why I think that it is Vedanta, and Vedanta 23 alone that can become the universal religion of man, and that no 24 other is fitted for the role. Excepting our own almost all the other 25 great religions in the world are inevitably connected with the life or 26 lives of one or more of their founders. All their theories, their 27 teachings, their doctrines, and their ethics are built round the life of 28 a personal founder, from whom they get their sanction, their 29 authority, and their power; and strangely enough, upon the 30 historicity of the founder's life is built, as it were, all the fabric of 31 such religions. If there is one blow dealt to the historicity of that 32 life, as has been the case in modern times with the lives of almost 33 all the so-called founders of religion--we know that half of the 34 details of such lives is not now seriously believed in, and that the 35 other half is seriously doubted--if this becomes the case, if that rock 36 of historicity, as they pretend to call it, is shaken and shattered, the 37 whole building tumbles down, broken absolutely, never to regain its 38 lost status.

39 Every one of the great religions in the world excepting our 40 own, is built upon such historical characters; but ours rests upon 41 principles. There is no man or woman who can claim to have 42 created the Vedas. They are the embodiment of eternal principles; 43 sages discovered them; and now and then the names of these sages 44 are mentioned--just their names; we do not even know who or what 45 they were. In many cases we do not know who their fathers were, 46 and almost in every case we do not know when and where they 47 were born. But what cared they, these sages, for their names? They 48 were the preachers of principles, and they themselves, so far as 49 they went, tried to become illustrations of the principles they 50 preached. At the same time, just as our God is an Impersonal and 51 yet a Personal God, so is our religion a most intensely impersonal 52 one--a religion based upon principles--and yet with an infinite scope

1 for the play of persons; for what religion gives you more
2 Incarnations, more prophets and seers, and still waits for infinitely 3 more? The Bhagavata says that Incarnations are infinite, leaving 4 ample scope for as many as you like to come. Therefore if anyone or 5 more of these persons in India's religious history, any one or more 6 of these Incarnations, and any one or more of our prophets are 7 proved not to have been historical, it does not injure our religion at 8 all; even then it remains firm as ever, because it is based upon 9 principles, and not upon persons. It is in vain we try to gather all 10 the peoples of the world around a single personality. It is difficult to 11 make them gather together even round eternal and universal 12 principles. If it ever becomes possible to bring the largest portion of 13 humanity to one way of thinking in regard to religion, mark you, it 14 must be always through principles and not through persons. Yet as I 15 have said, our religion has ample scope for the authority and 16 influence of persons. There is that most wonderful theory of Ishta 17 which gives you the fullest and freest choice possible among these 18 great religious personalities. You may take up any one of the 19 prophets or teachers as your guide and the object of your special 20 adoration; you are even allowed to think that he whom you have 21 chosen is the greatest of the prophets, greatest of all the Avatars; 22 there is no harm in that, but you must keep to a firm background of 23 eternally true principles. The strange fact here is that the power of 24 our Incarnations has been holding good with us only so far as they 25 are illustrations of the principles in the Vedas. The glory of Shri 26 Krishna is that he has been the best preacher of our eternal religion 27 of principles and the best commentator on the Vedanta that ever 28 lived in India.

29 The second claim of the Vedanta upon the attention of the 30 world is that, of all the scriptures in the world, it is the one 31 scripture the teaching of which is in entire harmony with the results 32 that have been attained by the modern scientific investigations of 33 external nature. Two minds in the dim past of history, cognate to 34 each other in form and kinship and sympathy, started, being placed 35 in different routes. The one was the ancient Hindu mind, and the 36 other was the ancient Greek mind. The former started by analysing 37 the internal world. The latter started in search of that goal beyond 38 by analysing the external world. And even through the various 39 vicissitudes of their history, it is easy to make out these two 40 vibrations of thought as tending to produce similar echoes of the 41 goal beyond. It seems clear that the conclusions of modern 42 materialistic science can be acceptable, harmoniously with their 43 religion, only to the Vedantins or Hindus as they are called. It 44 seems clear that modern materialism can hold its own and at the 45 same time approach spirituality by taking up the conclusions of the 46 Vedanta. It seems to us, and to all who care to know, that the 47 conclusions of modern science are the very conclusions of the 48 Vedanta reached ages ago; only, in modern science they are written 49 in the language of matter. This then is another claim of the Vedanta 50 upon modern Western minds, its rationality, the wonderful 51 rationalism of the Vedanta. I have myself been told by some of the 52 best Western scientific minds of the day, how wonderfully rational 53 the conclusions of the Vedanta are. I know one of them personally

1 who scarcely has time to eat his meal or go out of his laboratory, 2 but who yet would stand by the hour to attend my lectures on the 3 Vedanta; for, as he expresses it, they are so scientific, they so 4 exactly harmonise with the aspirations of the age and with the 5 conclusions to which modern science is coming at the present time.

6 Two such scientific conclusions drawn from comparative 7 religion, I would specially like to draw your attention to: the one 8 bears upon the idea of the universality of religions, and the other on 9 the idea of the oneness of things. We observe in the histories of 10 Babylon and among the Jews an interesting religious phenomenon 11 happening. We find that each of these Babylonian and Jewish 12 peoples was divided into so many tribes, each tribe having a god of 13 its own, and that these little tribal gods had often a generic name.
14 The gods among the Babylonians were all called Baals, and among 15 them Baal Merodach was the chief. In course of time one of these 16 many tribes would conquer and assimilate the other racially allied 17 tribes, and the natural result would be that the god of the 18 conquering tribe would be placed at the head of all the gods of the 19 other tribes. Thus the so-called boasted monotheism of the Semites 20 was created. Among the Jews the gods went by the name of 21 Molochs. Of these there was one Moloch who belonged to the tribe 22 called Israel, and he was called the Moloch-Yahveh or Moloch-Yava.
23 In time, this tribe of Israel slowly conquered some of the other 24 tribes of the same race, destroyed their Molochs, and declared its 25 own Moloch to be the Supreme Moloch of all the Molochs. And I am 26 sure, most of you know the amount of bloodshed, of tyranny, and of 27 brutal savagery that this religious conquest entailed. Later on, the 28 Babylonians tried to destroy this supremacy of Moloch-Yahveh, but 29 could not succeed in doing so.

30 It seems to me, that such an attempt at tribal self-assertion in 31 religious matters might have taken place on the frontiers and India 32 also. Here, too, all the various tribes of the Aryans might have come 33 into conflict with one another for declaring the supremacy of their 34 several tribal gods; but India's history was to be otherwise, was to 35 be different from that of the Jews. India alone was to be, of all 36 lands, the land of toleration and of spirituality; and therefore the 37 fight between tribes and their gods did not long take place here.
38 For one of the greatest sages that was ever born found out here in 39 India even at that distant time, which history cannot reach, and into 40 whose gloom even tradition itself dares not peep--in that distant 41 time the sage arose and declared, {Sanskrit}--"He who exists is 42 one; the sages call Him variously." This is one of the most 43 memorable sentences that was ever uttered, one of the grandest 44 truths that was ever discovered. And for us Hindus this truth has 45 been the very backbone of our national existence. For throughout 46 the vistas of the centuries of our national life, this one idea-- 47 {Sanskrit}--comes down, gaining in volume and in fullness till it has 48 permeated the whole of our national existence, till it has mingled in 49 our blood, and has become one with us. We live that grand truth in 50 every vein, and our country has become the glorious land of 51 religious toleration. It is here and here alone that they build 52 temples and churches for the religions which have come with the

1 object of condemning our own religion. This is one very great 2 principle that the world is waiting to learn from us. Ay, you little 3 know how much of intolerance is yet abroad. It struck me more 4 than once that I should have to leave my bones on foreign shores 5 owing to the prevalence of religious intolerance. Killing a man is 6 nothing for religion's sake; tomorrow they may do it in the very 7 heart of the boasted civilisation of the West, if today they are not 8 really doing so. Outcasting in its most horrible forms would often 9 come down upon the head of a man in the West if he dared to say a 10 word against his country's accepted religion. They talk glibly and 11 smoothly here in criticism of our caste laws. If you go to the West 12 and live there as I have done, you will know that even some of the 13 biggest professors you hear of are arrant cowards and dare not say, 14 for fear of public opinion, a hundredth part of what they hold to be 15 really true in religious matters.

16 Therefore the world is waiting for this grand idea of universal 17 toleration. It will be a great acquisition to civilisation. Nay, no 18 civilisation can long exist unless this idea enters into it. No 19 civilisation can grow unless fanaticism, bloodshed, and brutality 20 stop. No civilisation can begin to lift up its head until we look 21 charitably upon one another; and the first step towards that much-22 needed charity is to look charitably and kindly upon the religious 23 convictions of others. Nay more, to understand that not only should 24 we be charitable, but positively helpful to each other, however 25 different our religious ideas and convictions may be. And that is 26 exactly what we do in India as I have just related to you. It is here 27 in India that Hindus have built and are still building churches for 28 Christians and mosques for Mohammedans. That is the thing to do.
29 In spite of their hatred, in spite of their brutality, in spite of their 30 cruelty, in spite of their tyranny, and in spite of the vile language 31 they are given to uttering, we will and must go on building
32 churches for the Christians and mosques for the Mohammedans 33 until we conquer through love, until we have demonstrated to the 34 world that love alone is the fittest thing to survive and not hatred, 35 that it is gentleness that has the strength to live on and to fructify, 36 and not mere brutality and physical force.

37 The other great idea that the world wants from us today, the 38 thinking part of Europe, nay, the whole world--more, perhaps, the 39 lower classes than the higher, more the masses than the cultured, 40 more the ignorant than the educated, more the weak than the 41 strong--is that eternal grand idea of the spiritual oneness of the 42 whole universe. I need not tell you today, men from Madras 43 University, how the modern researches of the West have 44 demonstrated through physical means the oneness and the 45 solidarity of the whole universe; how, physically speaking, you and 46 I, the sun, moon, and stars are but little waves or wavelets in the 47 midst of an infinite ocean of matter; how Indian psychology 48 demonstrated ages ago that, similarly, both body and mind are but 49 mere names or little wavelets in the ocean of matter, the Samashti; 50 and how, going one step further, it is also shown in the Vedanta that 51 behind that idea of the unity of the whole show, the real Soul is one.
52 There is but one Soul throughout the universe, all is but One

1 Existence. This great idea of the real and basic solidarity of the 2 whole universe has frightened many, even in this country. It even 3 now finds sometimes more opponents than adherents. I tell you, 4 nevertheless, that it is the one great life-giving idea which the 5 world wants from us today, and which the mute masses of India 6 want for their uplifting, for none can regenerate this land of ours 7 without the practical application and effective operation of this 8 ideal of the oneness of things.

9 The rational West is earnestly bent upon seeking out the 10 rationality, the raison d'être of all its philosophy and its ethics; and 11 you all know well that ethics cannot be derived from the mere 12 sanction of any personage, however great and divine he may have 13 been. Such an explanation of the authority of ethics appeals no 14 more to the highest of the world's thinkers; they want something 15 more than human sanction for ethical and moral codes to be 16 binding, they want some eternal principle of truth as the sanction of 17 ethics. And where is that eternal sanction to be found except in the 18 only Infinite Reality that exists in you and in me and in all, in the 19 Self, in the Soul? The infinite oneness of the Soul is the eternal 20 sanction of all morality, that you and I are not only brothers--every 21 literature voicing man's struggle towards freedom has preached 22 that for you--but that you and I are really one. This is the dictate of 23 Indian philosophy. This oneness is the rationale of all ethics and all 24 spirituality. Europe wants it today just as much as our downtrodden 25 masses do, and this great principle is even now unconsciously 26 forming the basis of all the latest political and social aspirations 27 that are coming up in England, in Germany, in France, and in 28 America. And mark it, my friends, that in and through all the 29 literature voicing man's struggle towards freedom, towards 30 universal freedom, again and again you find the Indian Vedantic 31 ideals coming out prominently. In some cases the writers do not 32 know the source of their inspiration, in some cases they try to 33 appear very original, and a few there are, bold and grateful enough 34 to mention the source and acknowledge their indebtedness to it.

35 When I was in America, I heard once the complaint made that 36 I was preaching too much of Advaita, and too little of dualism. Ay, I 37 know what grandeur, what oceans of love, what infinite, ecstatic 38 blessings and joy there are in the dualistic love-theories of worship 39 and religion. I know it all. But this is not the time with us to weep 40 even in joy; we have had weeping enough; no more is this the time 41 for us to become soft. This softness has been with us till we have 42 become like masses of cotton and are dead. What our country now 43 wants are muscles of iron and nerves of steel, gigantic wills which 44 nothing can resist, which can penetrate into the mysteries and the 45 secrets of the universe, and will accomplish their purpose in any 46 fashion even if it meant going down to the bottom of the ocean and 47 meeting death face to face. That is what we want, and that can only 48 be created, established, and strengthened by understanding and 49 realising the ideal of the Advaita, that ideal of the oneness of all.
50 Faith, faith, faith in ourselves, faith, faith in God--this is the secret 51 of greatness. If you have faith in all the three hundred and thirty 52 millions of your mythological gods, and in all the gods which

1 foreigners have now and again introduced into your midst, and still 2 have no faith in yourselves, there is no salvation for you. Have faith 3 in yourselves, and stand up on that faith and be strong; that is what 4 we need. Why is it that we three hundred and thirty millions of 5 people have been ruled for the last one thousand years by any and 6 every handful of foreigners who chose to walk over our prostrate 7 bodies? Because they had faith in themselves and we had not. What 8 did I learn in the West, and what did I see behind those frothy 9 sayings of the Christian sects repeating that man was a fallen and 10 hopelessly fallen sinner? There I saw that inside the national hearts 11 of both Europe and America reside the tremendous power of the 12 men's faith in themselves. An English boy will tell you, "I am an 13 Englishman, and I can do anything." The American boy will tell you 14 the same thing, and so will any European boy. Can our boys say the 15 same thing here? No, nor even the boys' fathers. We have lost faith 16 in ourselves. Therefore to preach the Advaita aspect of the Vedanta 17 is necessary to rouse up the hearts of men, to show them the glory 18 of their souls. It is, therefore, that I preach this Advaita; and I do so 19 not as a sectarian, but upon universal and widely acceptable 20 grounds.

21 It is easy to find out the way of reconciliation that will not 22 hurt the dualist or the qualified monist. There is not one system in 23 India which does not hold the doctrine that God is within, that 24 Divinity resides within all things. Every one of our Vedantic systems 25 admits that all purity and perfection and strength are in the soul 26 already. According to some, this perfection sometimes becomes, as 27 it were, contracted, and at other times it becomes expanded again.
28 Yet it is there. According to the Advaita, it neither contracts nor 29 expands, but becomes hidden and uncovered now and again. Pretty 30 much the same thing in effect. The one may be a more logical 31 statement than the other, but as to the result, the practical 32 conclusions, both are about the same; and this is the one central 33 idea which the world stands in need of, and nowhere is the want 34 more felt than in this, our own motherland.

35 Ay, my friends, I must tell you a few harsh truths. I read in the 36 newspaper how, when one of our fellows is murdered or ill-treated 37 by an Englishman, howls go up all over the country; I read and I 38 weep, and the next moment comes to my mind the question: Who is 39 responsible for it all? As a Vedantist I cannot but put that question 40 to myself. The Hindu is a man of introspection; he wants to see 41 things in and through himself, through the subjective vision. I, 42 therefore, ask myself: Who is responsible? And the answer comes 43 every time: Not the English; no, they are not responsible; it is we 44 who are responsible for all our misery and all our degradation, and 45 we alone are responsible. Our aristocratic ancestors went on 46 treading the common masses of our country underfoot, till they 47 become helpless, till under this torment the poor, poor people 48 nearly forgot that they were human beings. They have been 49 compelled to be merely hewers of wood and drawers of water for 50 centuries, so much so, that they are made to believe that they are 51 born as slaves, born as hewers of wood and drawers of water. With 52 all our boasted education of modern times, if anybody says a kind

1 word for them, I often find our men shrink at once from the duty of 2 lifting them up, these poor downtrodden people. Not only so, but I 3 also find that all sorts of most demoniacal and brutal arguments, 4 culled from the crude ideas of hereditary transmission and other 5 such gibberish from the Western world, are brought forward in 6 order to brutalise and tyrannise over the poor all the more. At the 7 Parliament of Religions in America, there came among others a 8 young man, a born Negro, a real African Negro, and he made a 9 beautiful speech. I became interested in the young man and now 10 and then talked to him, but could learn nothing about him. But one 11 day in England, I met some Americans; and this is what they told 12 me. This boy was the son of a Negro chief who lived in the heart of 13 Africa, and that one day another chief became angry with the father 14 of the boy and murdered him and murdered the mother also, and 15 they were cooked and eaten; he ordered the child to be killed also 16 and cooked and eaten; but the boy fled, and after passing through 17 great hardships and having travelled a distance of several hundreds 18 of miles, he reached the seashore, and there he was taken into an 19 American vessel and brought over to America. And this boy made 20 that speech! After that, what was I to think of your doctrine of 21 heredity!

22 Ay, Brahmins, if the Brahmin has more aptitude for learning 23 on the ground of heredity than the Pariah, spend no more money on 24 the Brahmin's education, but spend all on the Pariah. Give to the 25 weak, for there all the gift is needed. If the Brahmin is born clever, 26 he can educate himself without help. If the others are not born 27 clever, let them have all the teaching and teachers they want. This 28 is justice and reason as I understand it. Our poor people, these 29 downtrodden masses of India, therefore, require to hear and to 30 know what they really are. Ay, let every man and woman and child, 31 without respect of caste or birth, weakness or strength, hear and 32 learn that behind the strong and the weak, behind the high and the 33 low, behind every one, there is that Infinite Soul, assuring the 34 infinite possibility and the infinite capacity of all to become great 35 and good. Let us proclaim to every soul: {Sanskrit}--Arise, awake, 36 and stop not till the goal is reached. Arise, awake! Awake from this 37 hypnotism of weakness. None is really weak; the soul is infinite, 38 omnipotent, and omniscient. Stand up, assert yourself, proclaim the 39 God within you, do not deny Him! Too much of inactivity, too much 40 of weakness, too much of hypnotism has been and is upon our race.
41 O ye modern Hindus, de-hypnotise yourselves. The way to do that is 42 found in your own sacred books. Teach yourselves, teach every one 43 his real nature, call upon the sleeping soul and see how it awakes.
44 Power will come, glory will come, goodness will come, purity will 45 come, and everything that is excellent will come when this sleeping 46 soul is roused to self-conscious activity. Ay, if there is anything in 47 the Gita that I like, it is these two verses, coming out strong as the 48 very gist, the very essence, of Krishna's teaching--"He who sees the 49 Supreme Lord dwelling alike in all beings, the Imperishable in 50 things that perish, he sees indeed. For seeing the Lord as the same, 51 everywhere present, he does not destroy the Self by the Self, and 52 thus he goes to the highest goal."

1 Thus there is a great opening for the Vedanta to do beneficent
2 work both here and elsewhere. This wonderful idea of the sameness 3 and omnipresence of the Supreme Soul has to be preached for the 4 amelioration and elevation of the human race here as elsewhere.
5 Wherever there is evil and wherever there is ignorance and want of 6 knowledge, I have found out by experience that all evil comes, as 7 our scriptures say, relying upon differences, and that all good 8 comes from faith in equality, in the underlying sameness and 9 oneness of things. This is the great Vedantic ideal. To have the ideal 10 is one thing, and to apply it practically to the details of daily life is 11 quite another thing. It is very good to point out an ideal, but where 12 is the practical way to reach it?

13 Here naturally comes the difficult and the vexed question of 14 caste and of social reformation, which has been uppermost for 15 centuries in the minds of our people. I must frankly tell you that I 16 am neither a caste-breaker nor a mere social reformer. I have 17 nothing to do directly with your castes or with your social 18 reformation. Live in any caste you like, but that is no reason why 19 you should hate another man or another caste. It is love and love 20 alone that I preach, and I base my teaching on the great Vedantic 21 truth of the sameness and omnipresence of the Soul of the 22 Universe. For nearly the past one hundred years, our country has 23 been flooded with social reformers and various social reform 24 proposals. Personally, I have no fault to find with these reformers.
25 Most of them are good, well-meaning men, and their aims too are 26 very laudable on certain points; but it is quite a patent fact that this 27 one hundred years of social reform has produced no permanent and 28 valuable result appreciable throughout the country. Platform 29 speeches have been made by the thousand, denunciations in 30 volumes after volumes have been hurled upon the devoted head of 31 the Hindu race and its civilisation, and yet no good practical result 32 has been achieved; and where is the reason for that? The reason is 33 not hard to find. It is in the denunciation itself. As I told you before, 34 in the first place, we must try to keep our historically acquired 35 character as a people. I grant that we have to take a great many 36 things from other nations, that we have to learn many lessons from 37 outside; but I am sorry to say that most of our modern reform 38 movements have been inconsiderate imitations of Western means 39 and methods of work; and that surely will not do for India; 40 therefore, it is that all our recent reform movements have had no 41 result.

42 In the second place, denunciation is not at all the way to do 43 good. That there are evils in our society even a child can see; and in 44 what society are there no evils? And let me take this opportunity, 45 my countrymen, of telling you that in comparing the different races 46 and nations of the world I have been among, I have come to the 47 conclusion that our people are on the whole the most moral and the 48 most godly, and our institutions are, in their plan and purpose, best 49 suited to make mankind happy. I do not, therefore, want any 50 reformation. My ideal is growth, expansion, development on 51 national lines. As I look back upon the history of my country, I do 52 not find in the whole world another country which has done quite so

1 much for the improvement of the human mind. Therefore I have no
2 words of condemnation for my nation. I tell them, "You have done
3 well; only try to do better." Great things have been done in the past 4 in this land, and there is both time and room for greater things to 5 be done yet. I am sure you know that we cannot stand still. If we 6 stand still, we die. We have either to go forward or to go backward.
7 We have either to progress or to degenerate. Our ancestors did 8 great things in the past, but we have to grow into a fuller life and 9 march beyond even their great achievements. How can we now go 10 back and degenerate ourselves? That cannot be; that must not be; 11 going back will lead to national decay and death. Therefore let us 12 go forward and do yet greater things; that is what I have to tell you.

13 I am no preacher of any momentary social reform. I am not 14 trying to remedy evils, I only ask you to go forward and to complete 15 the practical realisation of the scheme of human progress that has 16 been laid out in the most perfect order by our ancestors. I only ask 17 you to work to realise more and more the Vedantic ideal of the 18 solidarity of man and his inborn divine nature. Had I the time, I 19 would gladly show you how everything we have now to do was laid 20 out years ago by our ancient law-givers, and how they actually 21 anticipated all the different changes that have taken place and are 22 still to take place in our national institutions. They also were 23 breakers of caste, but they were not like our modern men. They did 24 not mean by the breaking of caste that all the people in the city 25 should sit down together to a dinner of beef-steak and champagne, 26 nor that all fools and lunatics in the country should marry when, 27 where, and whom they chose and reduce the country to a lunatic 28 asylum, nor did they believe that the prosperity of a nation is to be 29 gauged by the number of husbands its widows get. I have yet to see 30 such a prosperous nation.

31 The ideal man of our ancestors was the Brahmin. In all our 32 books stands out prominently this ideal of the Brahmin. In Europe 33 there is my Lord the Cardinal, who is struggling hard and spending 34 thousands of pounds to prove the nobility of his ancestors, and he 35 will not be satisfied until he has traced his ancestry to some 36 dreadful tyrant who lived on a hill and watched the people passing 37 by, and whenever he had the opportunity, sprang out on them and 38 robbed them. That was the business of these nobility-bestowing 39 ancestors, and my Lord Cardinal is not satisfied until he can trace 40 his ancestry to one of these. In India, on the other hand, the 41 greatest princes seek to trace their descent to some ancient sage 42 who dressed in a bit of loin-cloth, lived in a forest, eating roots and 43 studying the Vedas. It is there that the Indian prince goes to trace 44 his ancestry. You are of the high caste when you can trace your 45 ancestry to a Rishi, and not otherwise.

46 Our ideal of high birth, therefore, is different from that of 47 others. Our ideal is the Brahmin of spiritual culture and 48 renunciation. By the Brahmin ideal what do I mean? I mean the 49 ideal Brahmin-ness in which worldliness is altogether absent and 50 true wisdom is abundantly present. That is the ideal of the Hindu 51 race. Have you not heard how it is declared that he, the Brahmin, is 52 not amenable to law, that he has no law, that he is not governed by

1 kings, and that his body cannot be hurt? That is perfectly true. Do 2 not understand it in the light thrown upon it by interested and 3 ignorant fools, but understand it in the light of the true and original 4 Vedantic conception. If the Brahmin is he who has killed all 5 selfishness and who lives and works to acquire and propagate 6 wisdom and the power of love--if a country is altogether inhabited 7 by such Brahmins, by men and women who are spiritual and moral 8 and good, is it strange to think of that country as being above and 9 beyond all law? What police, what military are necessary to govern 10 them? Why should any one govern them at all? Why should they live 11 under a government? They are good and noble, and they are the 12 men of God; these are our ideal Brahmins, and we read that in the 13 Satya Yuga there was only one caste, and that was the Brahmin. We 14 read in the Mahabharata that the whole world was in the beginning 15 peopled with Brahmins, and that as they began to degenerate, they 16 became divided into different castes, and that when the cycle turns 17 round, they will all go back to that Brahminical origin. This cycle is 18 turning round now, and I draw your attention to this fact. Therefore 19 our solution of the caste question is not degrading those who are 20 already high up, is not running amuck through food and drink, is 21 not jumping out of our own limits in order to have more enjoyment, 22 but it comes by every one of us, fulfilling the dictates of our 23 Vedantic religion, by our attaining spirituality, and by our becoming 24 the ideal Brahmin. There is a law laid on each one of you in this 25 land by your ancestors, whether you are Aryans or non-Aryans, 26 Rishis or Brahmins, or the very lowest outcasts. The command is 27 the same to you all, that you must make progress without stopping, 28 and that from the highest man to the lowest Pariah, every one in 29 this country has to try and become the ideal Brahmin. This Vedantic 30 ideal is applicable not only here but over the whole world. Such is 31 our ideal of caste as meant for raising all humanity slowly and 32 gently towards the realisation of that great ideal of the spiritual 33 man who is non-resisting, calm, steady, worshipful, pure, and 34 meditative. In that ideal there is God.

35 How are these things to be brought about? I must again draw 36 your attention to the fact that cursing and vilifying and abusing do 37 not and cannot produce anything good. They have been tried for 38 years and years, and no valuable result has been obtained. Good 39 results can be produced only through love, through sympathy. It is a 40 great subject, and it requires several lectures to elucidate all the 41 plans that I have in view, and all the ideas that are, in this 42 connection, coming to my mind day after day. I must, therefore, 43 conclude, only reminding you of this fact that this ship of our 44 nation, O Hindus, has been usefully plying here for ages. Today, 45 perhaps, it has sprung a leak; today, perhaps, it has become a little 46 worn out. And if such is the case, it behoves you and me to try our 47 best to stop the leak and holes. Let us tell our countrymen of the 48 danger, let them awake and help us. I will cry at the top of my voice 49 from one part of this country to the other, to awaken the people to 50 the situation and their duty. Suppose they do not hear me, still I 51 shall not have one word of abuse for them, not one word of cursing.
52 Great has been our nation's work in the past; and if we cannot do 53 greater things in the future, let us have this consolation that we can 1 sink and die together in peace. Be patriots, love the race which has 2 done such great things for us in the past. Ay, the more I compare 3 notes, the more I love you, my fellow-countrymen; you are good and 4 pure and gentle. You have been always tyrannised over, and such is 5 the irony of this material word of Maya. Never mind that; the Spirit

6 will triumph in the long run. In the meanwhile let us work and let us 7 not abuse our country, let us not curse and abuse the weather-8 beaten and work-worn institutions of our thrice-holy motherland.
9 Have no word of condemnation even for the most superstitious and 10 the most irrational of its institutions, for they also must have served 11 some good in the past. Remember always that there is not in the 12 world any other country whose institutions are really better in their 13 aims and objects than the institutions of this land. I have seen 14 castes in almost every country of the world, but nowhere is their 15 plan and purpose so glorious as here. If caste is thus unavoidable, I 16 would rather have a caste of purity and culture and self-sacrifice, 17 than a caste of dollars. Therefore utter no words of condemnation.
18 Close your lips and let your hearts open. Work out the salvation of 19 this land and of the whole world, each of you thinking that the 20 entire burden is on your shoulders. Carry the light and the life of 21 the Vedanta to every door, and rouse up the divinity that is hidden 22 within every soul. Then, whatever may be the measure of your 23 success, you will have this satisfaction that you have lived, worked, 24 and died for a great cause. In the success of this cause, howsoever 25 brought about, is centred the salvation of humanity here and 26 hereafter.

REPLY TO THE ADDRESS OF WELCOME AT MADRAS

{Address of Welcome}

When the addresses had been read, the Swami left the hall and mounted to the box seat of a carriage in waiting. Owing to the intense enthusiasm of the large crowd assembled to welcome him, the Swami was only able to make the following short reply, postponing his reply proper to a future occasion:

Man proposes and God disposes. It was proposed that the addresses and the replies should be carried in the English fashion. But here God disposes--I am speaking to a scattered audience from a chariot in the Gita fashion. Thankful we are, therefore, that it should have happened so. It gives a zest to the speech, and strength to what I am going to tell you. I do not know whether my voice will reach all of you, but I will try my best. I never before had an opportunity of addressing a large open-air meeting.

The wonderful kindness, the fervent and enthusiastic joy with which I have been received from Colombo to Madras, and seem likely to be received all over India, have passed even my most sanguine expectations; but that only makes me glad, for it proves the assertion which I have made again and again in the past that as each nation has one ideal as its vitality, as each nation has one particular groove which is to become its own, so religion is the peculiarity of the growth of the Indian mind. In other parts of the world, religion is one of the many considerations, in fact it is a minor occupation. In England, for instance, religion is part of the national policy. The English Church belongs to the ruling class, and as such, whether they believe in it or not, they all support it, thinking that it is their Church. Every gentleman and every lady is expected to belong to that Church. It is a sign of gentility. So with other countries, there is a great national power; either it is represented by politics or it is represented by some intellectual pursuits; either it is represented by militarism or by commercialism. There the heart of the nation beats, and religion is one of the many secondary ornamental things which that nation possesses.

Here in India, it is religion that forms the very core of the national heart. It is the backbone, the bed-rock, the foundation upon which the national edifice has been built. Politics, power, and even intellect form a secondary consideration here. Religion, therefore, is the one consideration in India. I have been told a hundred times of the want of information there is among the masses of the Indian people; and that is true. Landing in Colombo I found not one of them had heard of the political upheavals going on in Europe--the changes, the downfall of ministries, and so forth. Not one of them had heard of what is meant by socialism, and anarchism, and of this and that change in the political atmosphere

1 of Europe. But that there was a Sannyasin from India sent over to 2 the Parliament of Religions, and that he had achieved some sort of 3 success had become known to every man, woman, and child in 4 Ceylon. It proves that there is no lack of information, nor lack of 5 desire for information where it is of the character that suits them, 6 when it falls in line with the necessities of their life. Politics and all 7 these things never formed a necessity of Indian life, but religion 8 and spirituality have been the one condition upon which it lived and 9 thrived and has got to live in the future.

10 Two great problems are being decided by the nations of the 11 world. India has taken up one side, and the rest of the world has 12 taken the other side. And the problem is this: who is to survive?
13 What makes one nation survive and the others die? Should love 14 survive or hatred, should enjoyment survive or renunciation, should 15 matter survive or the spirit, in the struggle of life? We think as our 16 ancestors did, away back in pre-historic ages. Where even tradition 17 cannot pierce the gloom of that past, there our glorious ancestors 18 have taken up their side of the problem and have thrown the 19 challenge to the world. Our solution is renunciation, giving up, 20 fearlessness, and love; these are the fittest to survive. Giving up the 21 senses makes a nation survive. As a proof of this, here is history 22 today telling us of mushroom nations rising and falling almost every 23 century--starting up from nothingness, making vicious play for a 24 few days, and then melting. This big, gigantic race which had to 25 grapple with some of the greatest problems of misfortunes, 26 dangers, and vicissitudes such as never fell upon the head of any 27 other nation of the world, survives because it has taken the side of 28 renunciation; for without renunciation how can there be religion?
29 Europe is trying to solve the other side of the problem as to how 30 much a man can have, how much more power a man can possess by 31 hook or by crook, by some means or other. Competition--cruel, cold, 32 and heartless--is the law of Europe. Our law is caste--the breaking 33 of competition, checking its forces, mitigating its cruelties, 34 smoothing the passage of the human soul through this mystery of 35 life.

36 At this stage the crowd became so unmanageable that the 37 Swami could not make himself heard to advantage. He therefore 38 ended his address with these words:

39 Friends, I am very much pleased with your enthusiasm. It is 40 marvellous. Do not think that I am displeased with you at all; I am, 41 on the other hand, intensely pleased at the show of enthusiasm.
42 That is what is required--tremendous enthusiasm. Only make it 43 permanent; keep it up. Let not the fire die out. We want to work out 44 great things in India. For that I require your help; such enthusiasm 45 is necessary. It is impossible to hold this meeting any longer. I thank 46 you very much for your kindness and enthusiastic welcome. In calm 47 moments we shall have better thoughts and ideas to exchange; now 48 for the time, my friends, good-bye.

49 It is impossible to address you on all sides, therefore you 50 must content yourselves this evening with merely seeing me. I will 51 reserve my speech for some other occasion. I thank you very much 52 for your enthusiastic welcome.

MY PLAN OF CAMPAIGN

(Delivered at the Victoria Hall, Madras)

As the other day we could not proceed, owing to the crowd, I shall take this opportunity of thanking the people of Madras for the uniform kindness that I have received at their hands. I do not know how better to express my gratitude for the beautiful words that have been expressed in the addresses than by praying to the Lord to make me worthy of the kind and generous expressions and by working all my life for the cause of our religion and to serve our motherland; and may the Lord make me worthy of them.

With all my faults, I think I have a little bit of boldness. I had a message from India to the West, and boldly I gave it to the American and the English peoples. I want, before going into the subject of the day, to speak a few bold words to you all. There have been certain circumstances growing around me, tending to thwart me, oppose my progress, and crush me out of existence if they could. Thank God they have failed, as such attempts will always fail. But there has been, for the last three years, a certain amount of misunderstanding, and so long as I was in foreign lands, I held my peace and did not even speak one word; but now, standing upon the soil of my motherland, I want to give a few words of explanation. Not that I care what the result will be of these words--not that I care what feeling I shall evoke from you by these words. I care very little, for I am the same Sannyasin that entered your city about four years ago with this staff and Kamandalu; the same broad world is before me. Without further preface let me begin.

First of all, I have to say a few words about the Theosophical Society. It goes without saying that a certain amount of good work has been done to India by the Society; as such every Hindu is grateful to it, and especially to Mrs. Besant; for though I know very little of her, yet what little I know has impressed me with the idea that she is a sincere well-wisher of this motherland of ours, and that she is doing the best in her power to raise our country. For that, the eternal gratitude of every true-born Indian is hers, and all blessings be on her and hers for ever. But that is one thing--and joining the Society of the Theosophists is another. Regard and estimation and love are one thing, and swallowing everything any one has to say, without reasoning, without criticising, without analysing, is quite another. There is a report going round that the Theosophists helped the little achievements of mine in America and England. I have to tell you plainly that every word of it is wrong, every word of it is untrue. We hear so much tall talk in this world, of liberal ideas and sympathy with differences of opinion. That is very good, but as a fact, we find that one sympathises with another only so long as the other believes in everything he has to say, but as soon as he dares to differ, that sympathy is gone, that love vanishes. There are others, again, who have their own axes to grind, and if anything arises in a country which prevents the grinding of them, their hearts burn, any amount of hatred comes out, and they do not know

1 what to do. What harm does it do to the Christian missionary that 2 the Hindus are trying to cleanse their own houses? What injury will 3 it do to the Brahmo Samaj and other reform bodies that the Hindus
4 are trying their best to reform themselves? Why should they stand 5 in opposition? Why should they be the greatest enemies of these 6 movements? Why?--I ask. It seems to me that their hatred and 7 jealousy are so bitter that no why or how can be asked there.

8 Four years ago, when I, a poor, unknown, friendless 9 Sannyasin was going to America, going beyond the waters to 10 America without any introductions or friends there, I called on the 11 leader of the Theosophical Society. Naturally I thought he, being an 12 American and a lover of India, perhaps would give me a letter of 13 introduction to somebody there. He asked me, "Will you join my 14 Society?" "No," I replied, "how can I? For I do not believe in most of 15 your doctrines." "Then, I am sorry, I cannot do anything for you," he 16 answered. That was not paving the way for me. I reached America, 17 as you know, through the help of a few friends in Madras. Most of 18 them are present here. Only one is absent, Mr. Justice Subramania 19 Iyer, to whom my deepest gratitude is due. He has the insight of a 20 genius and is one of the staunchest friends I have in this life, a true 21 friend indeed, a true child of India. I arrived in America several 22 months before the Parliament of Religions began. The money I had 23 with me was little, and it was soon spent. Winter approached, and I 24 had only thin summer clothes. I did not know what to do in that 25 cold, dreary climate, for if I went to beg in the streets, the result 26 would have been that I would have been sent to jail. There I was 27 with the last few dollars in my pocket. I sent a wire to my friends in 28 Madras. This came to be known to the Theosophists, and one of 29 them wrote, "Now the devil is going to die; God bless us all." Was 30 that paving the way for me? I would not have mentioned this now; 31 but, as my countrymen wanted to know, it must come out. For three 32 years I have not opened my lips about these things; silence has 33 been my motto; but today the thing has come out. That was not all. I 34 saw some Theosophists in the Parliament of Religions, and I wanted 35 to talk and mix with them. I remember the looks of scorn which 36 were on their faces, as much as to say, "What business has the 37 worm to be here in the midst of the gods?" After I had got name and 38 fame at the Parliament of Religions, then came tremendous work 39 for me; but at every turn the Theosophists tried to cry me down.
40 Theosophists were advised not to come and hear my lectures, for 41 thereby they would lose all sympathy of the Society, because the 42 laws of the esoteric section declare that any man who joins that 43 esoteric section should receive instruction from Kuthumi and Moria, 44 of course through their visible representatives--Mr. Judge and Mrs.
45 Besant--so that, to join the esoteric section means to surrender 46 one's independence. Certainly I could not do any such thing, nor 47 could I call any man a Hindu who did any such thing. I had a great 48 respect for Mr. Judge. He was a worthy man, open, fair, simple, and 49 he was the best representative the Theosophists ever had. I have no 50 right to criticise the dispute between him and Mrs. Besant when 51 each claims that his or her Mahatma is right. And the strange part 52 of it is that the same Mahatma is claimed by both. Lord knows the 53 truth: He is the Judge, and no one has the right to pass judgment

1 when the balance is equal. Thus they prepared the way for me all 2 over America!

3 They joined the other opposition--the Christian missionaries.
4 There is not one black lie imaginable that these latter did not invent 5 against me. They blackened my character from city to city, poor and 6 friendless though I was in a foreign country. They tried to oust me 7 from every house and to make every man who became my friend my 8 enemy. They tried to starve me out; and I am sorry to say that one 9 of my own countrymen took part against me in this. He is the leader 10 of a reform party in India. This gentleman is declaring every day, 11 "Christ has come to India." Is this the way Christ is to come to 12 India? Is this the way to reform India? And this gentleman I knew 13 from my childhood; he was one of my best friends; when I saw him-- 14 I had not met for a long time one of my countrymen--I was so glad, 15 and this was the treatment I received from him. The day the 16 Parliament cheered me, the day I became popular in Chicago, from 17 that day his tone changed; and in an underhand way, he tried to do 18 everything he could to injure me. Is that the way that Christ will 19 come to India? Is that the lesson that he had learnt after sitting 20 twenty years at the feet of Christ? Our great reformers declare that 21 Christianity and Christian power are going to uplift the Indian 22 people. Is that the way to do it? Surely, if that gentleman is an 23 illustration, it does not look very hopeful.

24 One word more: I read in the organ of the social reformers
25 that I am called a Shudra and am challenged as to what right a 26 Shudra has to become a Sannyasin. To which I reply: I trace my 27 descent to one at whose feet every Brahmin lays flowers when he 28 utters the words--{Sanskrit}--and whose descendants are the 29 purest of Kshatriyas. If you believe in your mythology or your 30 Pauranika scriptures, let these so-called reformers know that my 31 caste, apart from other services of the past, ruled half of India for 32 centuries. If my caste is left out of consideration, what will there be 33 left of the present-day civilisation of India? In Bengal alone, my 34 blood has furnished them with their greatest philosopher, the 35 greatest poet, the greatest historian, the greatest archaeologist, the 36 greatest religious preacher; my blood has furnished India with the 37 greatest of her modern scientists. These detractors ought to have 38 known a little of our own history, and to have studied our three 39 castes, and learnt that the Brahmin, the Kshatriya, and the Vaishya 40 have equal right to be Sannyasins: the Traivarnikas have equal 41 right to the Vedas. This is only by the way. I just refer to this, but I 42 am not at all hurt if they call me a Shudra. It will be a little 43 reparation for the tyranny of my ancestors over the poor. If I am a 44 Pariah, I will be all the more glad, for I am the disciple of a man, 45 who--the Brahmin of Brahmins--wanted to cleanse the house of a 46 Pariah. Of course the Pariah would not allow him; how could he let 47 this Brahmin Sannyasin come and cleanse his house! And this man 48 woke up in the dead of night, entered surreptitiously the house of 49 this Pariah, cleansed his latrine, and with his long hair wiped the 50 place, and that he did day after day in order that he might make 51 himself the servant of all. I bear the feet of that man on my head; he 52 is my hero; that hero's life I will try to imitate. By being the servant

1 of all, a Hindu seeks to uplift himself. That is how the Hindus should 2 uplift the masses, and not by looking for any foreign influence.
3 Twenty years of occidental civilisation brings to my mind the 4 illustration of the man who wants to starve his own friend in a 5 foreign land, simply because this friend is popular, simply because 6 he thinks that this man stands in the way of his making money. And 7 the other is the illustration of what genuine, orthodox Hinduism 8 itself will do at home. Let any one of our reformers bring out that 9 life, ready to serve even a Pariah, and then I will sit at his feet and 10 learn, and not before that. One ounce of practice is worth twenty 11 thousand tons of big talk.

1 Now I come to the reform societies in Madras. They have 2 been very kind to me. They have given me very kind words, and 3 they have pointed out, and I heartily agree with them, that there is 4 a difference between the reformers of Bengal and those of Madras.
5 Many of you will remember what I have very often told you, that 6 Madras is in a very beautiful state just now. It has not got into the 7 play of action and reaction as Bengal has done. Here there is steady 8 and slow progress all through; here is growth, and not reaction. In 9 many cases, and to a certain extent, there is a revival in Bengal; but 10 in Madras it is not a revival, it is a growth, a natural growth. As 11 such, I entirely agree with what the reformers point out as the 12 difference between the two peoples; but there is one difference 13 which they do not understand. Some of these societies, I am afraid, 14 try to intimidate me to join them. That is a strange thing for them to 15 attempt. A man who has met starvation face to face for fourteen 16 years of his life, who has not known where he will get a meal the 17 next day and where to sleep, cannot be intimidated so easily. A 18 man, almost without clothes, who dared to live where the 19 thermometer registered thirty degrees below zero, without knowing 20 where the next meal was to come from, cannot be so easily 21 intimidated in India. This is the first thing I will tell them--I have a 22 little will of my own. I have my little experience too; and I have a 23 message for the world which I will deliver without fear and without 24 care for the future. To the reformers I will point out that I am a 25 greater reformer than any one of them. They want to reform only 26 little bits. I want root-and-branch reform. Where we differ is in the 27 method. Theirs is the method of destruction, mine is that of 28 construction. I do not believe in reform; I believe in growth. I do not 29 dare to put myself in the position of God and dictate to our society, 30 "This way thou shouldst move and not that." I simply want to be like 31 the squirrel in the building of Rama's bridge, who was quite content 32 to put on the bridge his little quota of sand-dust. That is my 33 position. This wonderful national machine has worked through 34 ages, this wonderful river of national life is flowing before us. Who 35 knows, and who dares to say, whether it is good and how it shall 36 move? Thousands of circumstances are crowding round it, giving it 37 a special impulse, making it dull at one time and quicker at another.
38 Who dares command its motion? Ours is only to work, as the Gita 39 says, without looking for results. Feed the national life with the fuel 40 it wants, but the growth is its own; none can dictate its growth to it.
41 Evils are plentiful in our society, but so are there evils in every 42 other society. Here the earth is soaked sometimes with widows' 43 tears; there in the West, the air is rent with the sighs of the 44 unmarried. Here poverty is the great bane of life; there the life-45 weariness of luxury is the great bane that is upon the race. Here 46 men want to commit suicide because they have nothing to eat; 47 there they commit suicide because they have so much to eat. Evil is 48 everywhere; it is like chronic rheumatism. Drive it from the foot, it 49 goes to the head; drive it from there, it goes somewhere else. It is a 50 question of chasing it from place to place; that is all. Ay, children, to 51 try to remedy evil is not the true way. Our philosophy teaches that 52 evil and good are eternally conjoined, the obverse and the reverse 53 of the same coin. If you have one, you must have the other; a wave

1 in the ocean must be at the cost of a hollow elsewhere. Nay, all life
2 is evil. No breath can be breathed without killing some one else; not 3 a morsel of food can be eaten without depriving some one of it. This 4 is the law; this is philosophy. Therefore the only thing we can do is 5 to understand that all this work against evil is more subjective than 6 objective. The work against evil is more educational than actual, 7 however big we may talk. This, first of all, is the idea of work 8 against evil; and it ought to make us calmer, it ought to take 9 fanaticism out of our blood. The history of the world teaches us that 10 wherever there have been fanatical reforms, the only result has 11 been that they have defeated their own ends. No greater upheaval 12 for the establishment of right and liberty can be imagined than the 13 war for the abolition of slavery in America. You all know about it.
14 And what has been its results? The slaves are a hundred times 15 worse off today than they were before the abolition. Before the 16 abolition, these poor negroes were the property of somebody, and, 17 as properties, they had to be looked after, so that they might not 18 deteriorate. Today they are the property of nobody. Their lives are 19 of no value; they are burnt alive on mere pretenses. They are shot 20 down without any law for their murderers; for they are niggers, 21 they are not human beings, they are not even animals; and that is 22 the effect of such violent taking away of evil by law or by 23 fanaticism. Such is the testimony of history against every fanatical 24 movement, even for doing good. I have seen that. My own 25 experience has taught me that.

26 Therefore I cannot join any one of these condemning 27 societies. Why condemn? There are evils in every society;
28 everybody knows it. Every child of today knows it; he can stand 29 upon a platform and give us a harangue on the awful evils in Hindu 30 society. Every uneducated foreigner who comes here globe-trotting 31 takes a vanishing railway view of India and lectures most learnedly 32 on the awful evils in India. We admit that there are evils. Everybody 33 can show what evil is, but he is the friend of mankind who finds a 34 way out of the difficulty. Like the drowning boy and the 35 philosopher--when the philosopher was lecturing him, the boy cried, 36 "Take me out of the water first"--so our people cry: "We have had 37 lectures enough, societies enough, papers enough; where is the 38 man who will lend us a hand to drag us out? Where is the man who 39 really loves us? Where is the man who has sympathy for us?" Ay, 40 that man is wanted. That is where I differ entirely from these 41 reform movements. For a hundred years they have been here. What 42 good has been done except the creation of a most vituperative, a 43 most condemnatory literature? Would to God it was not here! They 44 have criticised, condemned, abused the orthodox, until the orthodox 45 have caught their tone and paid them back in their own coin; and 46 the result is the creation of a literature in every vernacular which is 47 the shame of the race, the shame of the country. Is this reform? Is 48 this leading the nation to glory? Whose fault is this?

49 There is, then, another great consideration. Here in India, we 50 have always been governed by kings; kings have made all our laws.
51 Now the kings are gone, and there is no one left to make a move.
52 The government dare not; it has to fashion its ways according to the

1 growth of public opinion. It takes time, quite a long time, to make a 2 healthy, strong, public opinion which will solve its own problems; 3 and in the interim we shall have to wait. The whole problem of 4 social reform, therefore, resolves itself into this: where are those 5 who want reform? Make them first. Where are the people? The 6 tyranny of a minority is the worst tyranny that the world ever sees.
7 A few men who think that certain things are evil will not make a 8 nation move. Why does not the nation move? First educate the 9 nation, create your legislative body, and then the law will be 10 forthcoming. First create the power, the sanction from which the 11 law will spring. The kings are gone; where is the new sanction, the 12 new power of the people? Bring it up. Therefore, even for social 13 reform, the first duty is to educate the people, and you will have to 14 wait till that time comes. Most of the reforms that have been 15 agitated for during the past century have been ornamental. Every 16 one of these reforms only touches the first two castes, and no other.
17 The question of widow marriage would not touch seventy per cent
18 of the Indian women, and all such questions only reach the higher 19 castes of Indian people who are educated, mark you, at the expense 20 of the masses. Every effort has been spent in cleaning their own 21 houses. But that is no reformation. You must go down to the basis of 22 the thing, to the very root of the matter. That is what I call radical 23 reform. Put the fire there and let it burn upwards and make an 24 Indian nation. And the solution of the problem is not so easy, as it is 25 a big and vast one. Be not in a hurry, this problem has been known 26 several hundred years.

27 Today it is the fashion to talk of Buddhism and Buddhistic 28 agnosticism, especially in the South. Little do they dream that this 29 degradation which is with us today has been left by Buddhism. This 30 is the legacy which Buddhism has left to us. You read in books 31 written by men who had never studied the rise and fall of Buddhism 32 that the spread of Buddhism was owing to the wonderful ethics and 33 the wonderful personality of Gautama Buddha. I have every respect 34 and veneration for Lord Buddha, but mark my words, the spread of 35 Buddhism was less owing to the doctrines and the personality of the 36 great preacher, than to the temples that were built, the idols that 37 were erected, and the gorgeous ceremonials that were put before 38 the nation. Thus Buddhism progressed. The little fire-places in the 39 houses in which the people poured their libations were not strong 40 enough to hold their own against these gorgeous temples and 41 ceremonies; but later on the whole thing degenerated. It became a 42 mass of corruption of which I cannot speak before this audience; 43 but those who want to know about it may see a little of it in those 44 big temples, full of sculptures, in Southern India; and this is all the 45 inheritance we have from the Buddhists.

46 Then arose the great reformer Shankaracharya and his 47 followers, and during these hundreds of years, since his time to the 48 present day, there has been the slow bringing back of the Indian 49 masses to the pristine purity of the Vedantic religion. These 50 reformers knew full well the evils which existed, yet they did not 51 condemn. They did not say, "All that you have is wrong, and you 52 must throw it away." It can never be so. Today I read that my friend

1 Dr. Barrows says that in three hundreds years Christianity
2 overthrew the Roman and Greek religious influences. That is not 3 the word of a man who has seen Europe, and Greece, and Rome.
4 The influence of Roman and Greek religion is all there, even in 5 Protestant countries, only with changed names--old gods 6 rechristened in a new fashion. They change their names; the 7 goddesses become Marys and the gods become saints, and the 8 ceremonials become new; even the old title of Pontifex Maximus is 9 there. So sudden changes cannot be and Shankaracharya knew it.
10 So did Ramanuja. The only way left to them was slowly to bring up 11 to the highest ideal the existing religion. If they had sought to apply 12 the other method, they would have been hypocrites, for the very 13 fundamental doctrine of their religion is evolution, the soul going 14 towards the highest goal, through all these various stages and 15 phases, which are, therefore, necessary and helpful. And who dares 16 condemn them?

17 It has become a trite saying that idolatry is wrong, and every 18 man swallows it at the present time without questioning. I once 19 thought so, and to pay the penalty of that I had to learn my lesson 20 sitting at the feet of a man who realised everything through idols; I 21 allude to Ramakrishna Paramahansa. If such Ramakrishna 22 Paramahansas are produced by idol-worship, what will you have-- 23 the reformer's creed or any number of idols? I want an answer.
24 Take a thousand idols more if you can produce Ramakrishna
25 Paramahansas through idol-worship, and may God speed you!
26 Produce such noble natures by any means you can. Yet idolatry is 27 condemned! Why? Nobody knows. Because some hundreds of years 28 ago some man of Jewish blood happened to condemn it? That is, he 29 happened to condemn everybody else's idols except his own. If God 30 is represented in any beautiful form or any symbolic form, said the 31 Jew, it is awfully bad; it is sin. But if He is represented in the form 32 of a chest, with two angels sitting on each side, and a cloud hanging 33 over it, it is the holy of holies. If God comes in the form of a dove, it 34 is holy. But if He comes in the form of a cow, it is heathen 35 superstition; condemn it! That is how the world goes. That is why 36 the poet says, "What fools we mortals be!" How difficult it is to look 37 through each other's eyes, and that is the bane of humanity. That is 38 the basis of hatred and jealousy, of quarrel and of fight. Boys, 39 moustached babies, who never went out of Madras, standing up 40 and wanting to dictate laws to three hundred millions of people 41 with thousands of traditions at their back! Are you not ashamed?
42 Stand back from such blasphemy and learn first your lessons!
43 Irreverent boys, simply because you can scrawl a few lines upon 44 paper and get some fool to publish them for you, you think you are 45 the educators of the world, you think you are the public opinion of 46 India! Is it so? This I have to tell to the social reformers of Madras 47 that I have the greatest respect and love for them. I love them for 48 their great hearts and their love for their country, for the poor, for 49 the oppressed. But what I would tell them with a brother's love is 50 that their method is not right; it has been tried a hundred years and 51 failed. Let us try some new method.

52 Did India ever stand in want of reformers? Do you read the

1 history of India? Who was Ramanuja? Who was Shankara? Who was 2 Nanak? Who was Chaitanya? Who was Kabir? Who was Dadu? Who 3 were all these great preachers, one following the other, a galaxy of 4 stars of the first magnitude? Did not Ramanuja feel for the lower 5 classes? Did he not try all his life to admit even the Pariah to his 6 community? Did he not try to admit even Mohammedans to his own
7 fold? Did not Nanak confer with Hindus and Mohammedans, and try 8 to bring about a new state of things? They all tried, and their work 9 is still going on. The difference is this. They had not the fanfaronade 10 of the reformers of today; they had no curses on their lips as 11 modern reformers have; their lips pronounced only blessings. They 12 never condemned. They said to the people that the race must 13 always grow. They looked back and they said, "O Hindus, what you 14 have done is good, but, my brothers, let us do better." They did not 15 say, "You have been wicked, now let us be good." They said, "You 16 have been good, but let us now be better." That makes a whole 17 world of difference. We must grow according to our nature. Vain is 18 it to attempt the lines of action that foreign societies have engrafted 19 upon us; it is impossible. Glory unto God, that it is impossible, that 20 we cannot be twisted and tortured into the shape of other nations. I 21 do not condemn the institutions of other races; they are good for 22 them, but not for us. What is meat for them may be poison for us.
23 This is the first lesson to learn. With other sciences, other 24 institutions, and other traditions behind them, they have got their 25 present system. We, with our traditions, with thousands of years of 26 Karma behind us, naturally can only follow our own bent, run in our 27 own grooves; and that we shall have to do.

28 What is my plan then? My plan is to follow the ideas of the 29 great ancient Masters. I have studied their work, and it has been 30 given unto me to discover the line of action they took. They were 31 the great originators of society. They were the great givers of 32 strength, and of purity, and of life. They did most marvellous work.
33 We have to do most marvellous work also. Circumstances have 34 become a little different, and in consequence the lines of action 35 have to be changed a little, and that is all. I see that each nation, 36 like each individual, has one theme in this life, which is its centre, 37 the principal note round which every other note comes to form the 38 harmony. In one nation political power is its vitality, as in England, 39 artistic life in another, and so on. In India, religious life forms the 40 centre, the keynote of the whole music of national life; and if any 41 nation attempts to throw off its national vitality--the direction which 42 has become its own through the transmission of centuries--that 43 nation dies if it succeeds in the attempt. And, therefore, if you 44 succeed in the attempt to throw off your religion and take up either 45 politics, or society, or any other things as your centre, as the vitality 46 of your national life, the result will be that you will become extinct.
47 To prevent this you must make all and everything work through that 48 vitality of your religion. Let all your nerves vibrate through the 49 backbone of your religion. I have seen that I cannot preach even 50 religion to Americans without showing them its practical effect on 51 social life. I could not preach religion in England without showing 52 the wonderful political changes the Vedanta would bring. So, in 53 India, social reform has to be preached by showing how much more

1 spiritual a life the new system will bring; and politics has to be 2 preached by showing how much it will improve the one thing that 3 the nation wants--its spirituality. Every man has to make his own 4 choice; so has every nation. We made our choice ages ago, and we 5 must abide by it. And, after all, it is not such a bad choice. Is it such 6 a bad choice in this world to think not of matter but of spirit, not of 7 man but of God? That intense faith in another world, that intense 8 hatred for this world, that intense power of renunciation, that 9 intense faith in God, that intense faith in the immortal soul, is in 10 you. I challenge anyone to give it up. You cannot. You may try to 11 impose upon me by becoming materialists, by talking materialism 12 for a few months, but I know what you are; if I take you by the 13 hand, back you come as good theists as ever were born. How can 14 you change your nature?

15 So every improvement in India requires first of all an 16 upheaval in religion. Before flooding India with socialistic or 17 political ideas, first deluge the land with spiritual ideas. The first 18 work that demands our attention is that the most wonderful truths 19 confined in our Upanishads, in our scriptures, in our Puranas must 20 be brought out from the books, brought out from the monasteries, 21 brought out from the forests, brought out from the possession of 22 selected bodies of people, and scattered broadcast all over the land, 23 so that these truths may run like fire all over the country from north 24 to south and east to west, from the Himalayas to Comorin, from 25 Sindh to the Brahmaputra. Everyone must know of them, because it 26 is said, "This has first to be heard, then thought upon, and then 27 meditated upon." Let the people hear first, and whoever helps in 28 making the people hear about the great truths in their own 29 scriptures cannot make for himself a better Karma today. Says our 30 Vyasa, "In the Kali Yuga there is one Karma left. Sacrifices and 31 tremendous Tapasyas are of no avail now. Of Karma one remains, 32 and that is the Karma of giving." And of these gifts, the gift of 33 spirituality and spiritual knowledge is the highest; the next gift is 34 the gift of secular knowledge; the next is the gift of life; and the 35 fourth is the gift of food. Look at this wonderfully charitable race; 36 look at the amount of gifts that are made in this poor, poor country; 37 look at the hospitality where a man can travel from the north to the 38 south, having the best in the land, being treated always by everyone 39 as if he were a friend, and where no beggar starves so long as there 40 is a piece of bread anywhere!

41 In this land of charity, let us take up the energy of the first 42 charity, the diffusion of spiritual knowledge. And that diffusion 43 should not be confined within the bounds of India; it must go out all 44 over the world. This has been the custom. Those that tell you that 45 Indian thought never went outside of India, those that tell you that I 46 am the first Sannyasin who went to foreign lands to preach, do not 47 know the history of their own race. Again and again this 48 phenomenon has happened. Whenever the world has required it, 49 this perennial flood of spirituality has overflowed and deluged the 50 world. Gifts of political knowledge can be made with the blast of 51 trumpets and the march of cohorts. Gifts of secular knowledge and 52 social knowledge can be made with fire and sword. But spiritual

1 knowledge can only be given in silence like the dew that falls
2 unseen and unheard, yet bringing into bloom masses of roses. This 3 has been the gift of India to the world again and again. Whenever 4 there has been a great conquering race, bringing the nations of the 5 world together, making roads and transit possible, immediately 6 India arose and gave her quota of spiritual power to the sum total 7 of the progress to the world. This happened ages before Buddha
8 was born, and remnants of it are still left in China, in Asia Minor, 9 and in the heart of the Malayan Archipelago. This was the case 10 when the great Greek conqueror united the four corners of the then 11 known world; then rushed out Indian spirituality, and the boasted 12 civilisation of the West is but the remnant of that deluge. Now the 13 same opportunity has again come; the power of England has linked 14 the nations of the world together as was never done before. English 15 roads and channels of communication rush from one end of the 16 world to the other. Owing to English genius, the world today has 17 been linked in such a fashion as has never before been done. Today 18 trade centres have been formed such as have never been before in 19 the history of mankind. And immediately, consciously or 20 unconsciously, India rises up and pours forth her gifts of 21 spirituality; and they will rush through these roads till they have 22 reached the very ends of the world. That I went to America was not 23 my doing or your doing; but the God of India who is guiding her 24 destiny sent me, and will send hundreds of such to all the nations of 25 the world. No power on earth can resist it. This also has to be done.
26 You must go out to preach your religion, preach it to every nation 27 under the sun, preach it to every people. This is the first thing to do.
28 And after preaching spiritual knowledge, along with it will come 29 that secular knowledge and every other knowledge that you want;
30 but if you attempt to get the secular knowledge without religion, I 31 tell you plainly, vain is your attempt in India, it will never have a 32 hold on people. Even the great Buddhistic movement was a failure, 33 partially on account of that.

1 Therefore, my friends, my plan is to start institutions in India, 2 to train our young men as preachers of the truths of our scriptures
3 in India and outside India. Men, men, these are wanted: everything 4 else will be ready, but strong, vigorous, believing young men, 5 sincere to the backbone, are wanted. A hundred such and the world
6 becomes revolutionised. The will is stronger than anything else.
7 Everything must go down before the will, for that comes from God 8 and God Himself; a pure and a strong will is omnipotent. Do you not 9 believe in it? Preach, preach unto the world the great truths of your 10 religion; the world waits for them. For centuries people have been 11 taught theories of degradation. They have been told that they are 12 nothing. The masses have been told all over the world that they are 13 not human beings. They have been so frightened for centuries, till 14 they have nearly become animals. Never were they allowed to hear 15 of the Atman. Let them hear of the Atman--that even the lowest of 16 the low have the Atman within, which never dies and never is born-- 17 of Him whom the sword cannot pierce, nor the fire burn, nor the air 18 dry--immortal, without beginning or end, the all-pure, omnipotent, 19 and omnipresent Atman! Let them have faith in themselves, for 20 what makes the difference between the Englishman and you? Let 21 them talk their religion and duty and so forth. I have found the 22 difference. The difference is here, that the Englishman believes in 23 himself and you do not. He believes in his being an Englishman, and 24 he can do anything. That brings out the God within him, and he can 25 do anything he likes. You have been told and taught that you can do 26 nothing, and nonentities you are becoming every day. What we want 27 is strength, so believe in yourselves. We have become weak, and 28 that is why occultism and mysticism come to us--these creepy 29 things; there may be great truths in them, but they have nearly 30 destroyed us. Make your nerves strong. What we want is muscles of 31 iron and nerves of steel. We have wept long enough. No more 32 weeping, but stand on your feet and be men. It is a man-making 33 religion that we want. It is man-making theories that we want. It is 34 man-making education all round that we want. And here is the test 35 of truth--anything that makes you weak physically, intellectually, 36 and spiritually, reject as poison; there is no life in it, it cannot be 37 true. Truth is strengthening. Truth is purity, truth is all-knowledge; 38 truth must be strengthening, must be enlightening, must be 39 invigorating. These mysticisms, in spite of some grains of truth in 40 them, are generally weakening. Believe me, I have a lifelong 41 experience of it, and the one conclusion that I draw is that it is 42 weakening. I have travelled all over India, searched almost every 43 cave here, and lived in the Himalayas. I know people who lived 44 there all their lives. I love my nation, I cannot see you degraded, 45 weakened any more than you are now. Therefore I am bound for 46 your sake and for truth's sake to cry, "Hold!" and to raise my voice 47 against this degradation of my race. Give up these weakening 48 mysticisms and be strong. Go back to your Upanishads--the shining, 49 the strengthening, the bright philosophy--and part from all these 50 mysterious things, all these weakening things. Take up this 51 philosophy; the greatest truths are the simplest things in the world, 52 simple as your own existence. The truths of the Upanishads are 53 before you. Take them up, live up to them, and the salvation of India

1 will be at hand.

2 One word more and I have finished. They talk of patriotism. I
3 believe in patriotism, and I also have my own ideal of patriotism.
4 Three things are necessary for great achievements. First, feel from 5 the heart. What is in the intellect or reason? It goes a few steps and 6 there it stops. But through the heart comes inspiration. Love opens 7 the most impossible gates; love is the gate to all the secrets of the 8 universe. Feel, therefore, my would-be reformers, my would-be 9 patriots! Do you feel? Do you feel that millions and millions of the 10 descendants of gods and of sages have become next-door 11 neighbours to brutes? Do you feel that millions are starving today, 12 and millions have been starving for ages? Do you feel that 13 ignorance has come over the land as a dark cloud? Does it make 14 you restless? Does it make you sleepless? Has it gone into your 15 blood, coursing through your veins, becoming consonant with your 16 heartbeats? Has it made you almost mad? Are you seized with that 17 one idea of the misery of ruin, and have you forgotten all about your 18 name, your fame, your wives, your children, your property, even 19 your own bodies? Have you done that? That is the first step to 20 become a patriot, the very first step. I did not go to America, as 21 most of you know, for the Parliament of Religions, but this demon of 22 a feeling was in me and within my soul. I travelled twelve years all 23 over India, finding no way to work for my countrymen, and that is 24 why I went to America. Most of you know that, who knew me then.
25 Who cared about this Parliament of Religions? Here was my own 26 flesh and blood sinking every day, and who cared for them? This 27 was my first step.

28 You may feel, then; but instead of spending your energies in 29 frothy talk, have you found any way out, any practical solution, 30 some help instead of condemnation, some sweet words to soothe 31 their miseries, to bring them out of this living death?

32 Yet that is not all. Have you got the will to surmount
33 mountain-high obstructions? If the whole world stands against you 34 sword in hand, would you still dare to do what you think is right? If 35 your wives and children are against you, if all your money goes, 36 your name dies, your wealth vanishes, would you still stick to it?
37 Would you still pursue it and go on steadily towards your own goal?
38 As the great King Bhartrihari says, "Let the sages blame or let them 39 praise; let the goddess of fortune come or let her go wherever she 40 likes; let death come today, or let it come in hundreds of years; he 41 indeed is the steady man who does not move one inch from the way 42 of truth." Have you got that steadfastness? If you have these three 43 things, each one of you will work miracles. You need not write in 44 the newspapers, you need not go about lecturing; your very face 45 will shine. If you live in a cave, your thoughts will permeate even 46 through the rock walls, will go vibrating all over the world for 47 hundreds of years, maybe, until they will fasten on to some brain 48 and work out there. Such is the power of thought, of sincerity, and 49 of purity of purpose.

50 I am afraid I am delaying you, but one word more. This 51 national ship, my countrymen, my friends, my children--this national 52 ship has been ferrying million and millions of souls across the 1 waters of life. For scores of shining centuries it has been plying 2 across this water, and through its agency, millions of souls have 3 been taken to the other shore, to blessedness. But today, perhaps 4 through your own fault, this boat has become a little damaged, has 5 sprung a leak; and would you therefore curse it? Is it fit that you 6 stand up and pronounce malediction upon it, one that has done 7 more work than any other thing in the world? If there are holes in 8 this national ship, this society of ours, we are its children. Let us go 9 and stop the holes. Let us gladly do it with our hearts' blood; and if 10 we cannot, then let us die. We will make a plug of our brains and 11 put them into the ship, but condemn it never. Say not one harsh 12 word against this society. I love it for its past greatness. I love you 13 all because you are the children of gods, and because you are the 14 children of the glorious forefathers. How then can I curse you!

15 Never. All blessings be upon you! I have come to you, my children, 16 to tell you all my plans. If you hear them I am ready to work with 17 you. But if you will not listen to them, and even kick me out of India, 18 I will come back and tell you that we are all sinking! I am come now 19 to sit in your midst, and if we are to sink, let us all sink together, but 20 never let curses rise to our lips.

VEDANTA IN ITS APPLICATION TO INDIAN LIFE

1 There is a word which has become very common as an 2 appellation of our race and our religion. The word "Hindu" requires 3 a little explanation in connection with what I mean by Vedantism.
4 This word "Hindu" was the name that the ancient Persians used to 5 apply to the river Sindhu. Whenever in Sanskrit there is an "s", in 6 ancient Persian it changes into "h", so that "Sindhu" became 7 "Hindu"; and you are all aware how the Greeks found it hard to 8 pronounce "h" and dropped it altogether, so that we became known 9 as Indians. Now this word "Hindu" as applied to the inhabitants of 10 the other side of the Indus, whatever might have been its meaning 11 in ancient times, has lost all its force in modern times; for all the 12 people that live on this side of the Indus no longer belong to one 13 religion. There are the Hindus proper, the Mohammedans, the 14 Parsees, the Christians, the Buddhists, and Jains. The word "Hindu" 15 in its literal sense ought to include all these; but as signifying the 16 religion, it would not be proper to call all these Hindus. It is very 17 hard, therefore, to find any common name for our religion, seeing 18 that this religion is a collection, so to speak, of various religions, of 19 various ideas, of various ceremonials and forms, all gathered 20 together almost without a name, and without a church, and without 21 an organisation. The only point where, perhaps, all our sects agree 22 is that we all believe in the scriptures--the Vedas. This perhaps is 23 certain that no man can have a right to be called Hindu who does 24 not admit the supreme authority of the Vedas. All these Vedas, as 25 you are aware, are divided into two portions--the Karma Kanda and 26 the Jnana Kanda. The Karma Kanda includes various sacrifices and 27 ceremonials, of which the larger part has fallen into disuse in the 28 present age. The Jnana Kanda, as embodying the spiritual teachings 29 of the Vedas known as the Upanishads and the Vedanta, has always 30 been cited as the highest authority by all our teachers, 31 philosophers, and writers, whether dualist, or qualified monist, or 32 monist. Whatever be his philosophy or sect, every one in India has 33 to find his authority in the Upanishads. If he cannot, his sect would 34 be heterodox. Therefore, perhaps the one name in modern times 35 which would designate every Hindu throughout the land would be 36 "Vedantist" or "Vaidika", as you may put it; and in that sense I 37 always use the words "Vedantism" and "Vedanta". I make to make it 38 a little clearer, for of late, it has become the custom of most people 39 to identify the word Vedanta with the Advaitic system of the 40 Vedanta philosophy. We all know the Advaitism is only one branch of 41 the various philosophic systems that have been founded on the 42 Upanishads. The followers of the Vishishadvaitic system have as 43 much reverence for the Upanishads as the followers of the Advaita, 44 and the Vishishtadvaitists claim as much authority for the Vedanta 45 as the Advaitist. So do the dualists; so does every other sect in 46 India. But the word Vedantist has become somewhat identified in 47 the popular mind with the word Advaitist, and perhaps with some 48 reason, because, although we have the Vedas for our scriptures, we 49 have Smritis and Puranas--subsequent writings--to illustrate the 50 doctrines of the Vedas; these of course have not the same weight as 51 the Vedas. And the law is that wherever these Puranas and Smritis 52 differ from any part of the Shruti, the Shruti must be followed and 53 the Smriti rejected. Now in the expositions of the great Advaitic

1 philosopher Shankara, and the school founded by him, we find most 2 of the authorities cited are from the Upanishads, very rarely is an 3 authority cited from the Smritis, except, perhaps, to elucidate a 4 point which could hardly be found in the Shrutis. On the other 5 hand, other schools take refuge more and more in the Smritis and 6 less and less in the Shrutis; and as we go to the more and more 7 dualistic sects, we find a proportionate quantity of the Smritis 8 quoted, which is out of all proportion to what we should expect 9 from a Vedantist. It is, perhaps, because these gave such 10 predominance to the Pauranika authorities that the Advaitist came 11 to be considered as the Vedantist par excellence, if I may say so.

12 However it might have been, the word Vedanta must cover 13 the whole ground of Indian religious life, and being part of the 14 Vedas, by all acceptance it is the most ancient literature that we 15 have; for whatever might be the idea of modern scholars, the 16 Hindus are not ready to admit that parts of the Vedas were written 17 at one time and parts were written at another time. They of course 18 still hold on to their belief that the Vedas as a whole were produced 19 at the same time, rather if I may say so, that they were never 20 produced, but that they always existed in the mind of the Lord. This 21 is what I mean by the word Vedanta, that it covers the ground of 22 dualism, of qualified monism, and Advaitism in India. Perhaps we 23 may even take in parts of Buddhism, and of Jainism too, if they 24 would come in--for our hearts are sufficiently large. But it is they 25 that will not come in, we are ready for upon severe analysis you will 26 always find that the essence of Buddhism was all borrowed from 27 the same Upanishads; even the ethics, the so-called great and 28 wonderful ethics of Buddhism, were there word for word, in some 29 one or other of the Upanishads; and so all the good doctrines of the 30 Jains were there, minus their vagaries. In the Upanishads, also, we 31 find the germs of all the subsequent development of Indian 32 religious thought. Sometimes it has been urged without any ground 33 whatsoever that there is no ideal of Bhakti in the Upanishads.
34 Those that have been students of the Upanishads know that that is 35 not true at all. There is enough of Bhakti in every Upanishad if you 36 will only seek for it; but many of these ideas which are found so 37 fully developed in later times in the Puranas and other Smritis are 38 only in the germ in the Upanishads. The sketch, the skeleton, was 39 there as it were. It was filled in some of the Puranas. But there is 40 not one full-grown Indian ideal that cannot be traced back to the 41 same source--the Upanishads. Certain ludicrous attempts have been 42 made by persons without much Upanishadic scholarship to trace 43 Bhakti to some foreign source; but as you know, these have all been 44 proved to be failures, and all that you want of Bhakti is there, even 45 in the Samhitas, not to speak of the Upanishads--it is there, worship 46 and love and all the rest of it; only the ideals of Bhakti are 47 becoming higher and higher. In the Samhita portions, now and 48 then, you find traces of a religion of fear and tribulation; in the 49 Samhitas now and then you find a worshipper quaking before a 50 Varuna, or some other god. Now and then you will find they are 51 very much tortured by the idea of sin, but the Upanishads have no 52 place for the delineation of these things. There is no religion of fear 53 in the Upanishads; it is one of Love and one of Knowledge.

1 These Upanishads are our scriptures. They have been 2 differently explained, and, as I have told you already, whenever 3 there is a difference between subsequent Pauranika literature and 4 the Vedas, the Puranas must give way. But it is at the same time
5 true that, as a practical result, we find ourselves ninety per cent 6 Pauranika and ten per cent Vaidika--even if so much as that. And we 7 all find the most contradictory usages prevailing in our midst and 8 also religious opinions prevailing in our society which scarcely have 9 any authority in the scriptures of the Hindus; and in many cases we 10 read in books, and see with astonishment, customs of the country 11 that neither have their authority in the Vedas nor in the Smritis or 12 Puranas, but are simply local. And yet each ignorant villager thinks 13 that if that little local custom dies out, he will no more remain a 14 Hindu. In his mind Vedantism and these little local customs have 15 been indissolubly identified. In reading the scriptures it is hard for 16 him to understand that what he is doing has not the sanction of the 17 scriptures, and that the giving up of them will not hurt him at all, 18 but on the other hand will make him a better man. Secondly, there 19 is the other difficulty. These scriptures of ours have been very vast.
20 We read in the Mahabhashya of Patanjali, that great philological 21 work, that the Sama-Veda had one thousand branches. Where are 22 they all? Nobody knows. So with each of the Vedas; the major 23 portion of these books have disappeared, and it is only the minor 24 portion that remains to us. They were all taken charge of by 25 particular families; and either these families died out, or were killed 26 under foreign persecution, or somehow became extinct; and with 27 them, that branch of the learning of the Vedas they took charge of 28 became extinct also. This fact we ought to remember, as it always 29 forms the sheet-anchor in the hands of those who want to preach 30 anything new or to defend anything even against the Vedas.
31 Wherever in India there is a discussion between local custom and 32 the Shrutis, and whenever it is pointed out that the local custom is 33 against the scriptures, the argument that is forwarded is that it is 34 not, that the customs existed in the branch of the Shrutis which has 35 become extinct and so has been a recognised one. In the midst of 36 all these varying methods of reading and commenting on our 37 scriptures, it is very difficult indeed to find the thread that runs 38 through all of them; for we become convinced at once that there 39 must be some common ground underlying all these varying 40 divisions and subdivisions. There must be harmony, a common plan, 41 upon which all these little bits of buildings have been constructed, 42 some basis common to this apparently hopeless mass of confusion 43 which we call our religion. Otherwise it could not have stood so 44 long, it could not have endured so long.

45 Coming to our commentators again, we find another difficulty.
46 The Advaitic commentator, whenever an Advaitic text comes, 47 preserves it just as it is; but the same commentator, as soon as a 48 dualistic text presents itself, tortures it if he can, and brings the 49 most queer meaning out of it. Sometimes the "Unborn" becomes a 50 "goat", such are the wonderful changes effected. To suit the 51 commentator, "Aja" the Unborn is explain as "Ajâ" a she-goat. In the 52 same way, if not in a still worse fashion, the texts are handled by 53 the dualistic commentator. Every dualistic text is preserved, and 1 every text that speaks of non-dualistic philosophy is tortured in any 2 fashion he likes. This Sanskrit language is so intricate, the Sanskrit

3 of the Vedas is so ancient, and the Sanskrit philology so perfect, 4 that any amount of discussion can be carried on for ages in regard 5 to the meaning of one word. If Pandit takes it into his head, he can 6 render anybody's prattle into correct Sanskrit by force of argument 7 and quotation of texts and rules. These are the difficulties in our 8 way of understanding the Upanishads. It was given to me to live 9 with a man who was as ardent a dualist, as ardent an Advaitist, as 10 ardent a Bhakta, as a Jnani. And living with this man first put it into 11 my head to understand the Upanishads and the texts of the 12 scriptures from an independent and better basis than by blindly 13 following the commentators; and in my opinion and in my 14 researches, I came to the conclusion that these texts are not at all 15 contradictory. So we need have no fear of text-torturing at all! The 16 texts are beautiful, ay, they are the most wonderful; and they are 17 not contradictory, but wonderfully harmonious, one idea leading up 18 to the other. But the one fact I found is that in all the Upanishads, 19 they begin with dualistic ideas, with worship and all that, and end 20 with a grand flourish of Advaitic ideas.

21 Therefore I now find in the light of this man's life that the 22 dualist and the Advaitist need not fight each other. Each has a 23 place, and a great place in the national life. The dualist must 24 remain, for he is as much part and parcel of the national religious 25 life as the Advaitist. One cannot exist without the other; one is the 26 fulfilment of the other; one is the building, the other is the top; the 27 one the root, the other the fruit, and so on. Therefore any attempt 28 to torture the texts of the Upanishads appears to me very 29 ridiculous. I begin to find out that the language is wonderful. Apart 30 from all its merits as the greatest philosophy, apart from its 31 wonderful merit as theology, as showing the path of salvation to 32 mankind, the Upanishadic literature is the most wonderful painting 33 of sublimity that the world has. Here comes out in full force that 34 individuality of the human mind, that introspective, intuitive Hindu 35 mind. We have paintings of sublimity elsewhere in all nations, but 36 almost without exception you will find that their ideal is to grasp the 37 sublime in the muscles. Take for instance, Milton, Dante, Homer, or 38 any of the Western poets. There are wonderfully sublime passages 39 in them; but there it is always a grasping at infinity through the 40 senses, the muscles, getting the ideal of infinite expansion, the 41 infinite of space. We find the same attempts made in the Samhita 42 portion. You know some of those wonderful Riks where creation is 43 described; the very heights of expression of the sublime in 44 expansion and the infinite in space are attained. But they found out 45 very soon that the Infinite cannot be reached in that way, that even 46 infinite space, and expansion, and infinite external nature could not 47 express the ideas that were struggling to find expression in their 48 minds, and so they fell back upon other explanations. The language 49 became new in the Upanishads; it is almost negative, it is 50 sometimes, chaotic, sometimes taking you beyond the senses, 51 pointing out to you something which you cannot grasp, which you 52 cannot sense, and at the same time you feel certain that it is there.
53 What passage in the world can compare with this?--

1 {Sanskrit}--"There the sun cannot illumine, nor the moon nor the 2 stars, the flash of lightning cannot illumine the place, what to speak 3 of this mortal fire." Again, where can you find a more perfect 4 expression of the whole philosophy of the world, the gist of what 5 the Hindus ever thought, the whole dream of human salvation, 6 painted in language more wonderful, in figure more marvellous 7 than this?

8 {Sanskrit}

9 Upon the same tree there are two birds of beautiful plumage, 10 most friendly to each other, one eating the fruits, the other sitting 11 there calm and silent without eating--the one on the lower branch 12 eating sweet and bitter fruits in turn and becoming happy and 13 unhappy, but the other one on the top, calm and majestic; he eats 14 neither sweet nor bitter fruits, cares neither for happiness nor 15 misery, immersed in his own glory. This is the picture of the human 16 soul. Man is eating the sweet and bitter fruits of this life, pursuing 17 gold, pursuing his senses, pursuing the vanities of life--hopelessly, 18 madly careering he goes. In other places the Upanishads have 19 compared the human soul to the charioteer, and the senses to the 20 mad horses unrestrained. Such is the career of men pursuing the 21 vanities of life--hopelessly, madly careering he goes. In other places 22 the Upanishads have compared the human soul to the charioteer, 23 and the senses to the mad horses unrestrained. Such is the career 24 of men pursuing the vanities of life, children dreaming golden 25 dreams only to find that they are but vain, and old men chewing the 26 cud of their past deeds, and yet not knowing how to get out of this 27 network. This is the world. Yet in the life of every one there come 28 golden moments; in the midst of the deepest sorrows, nay, of the 29 deepest joys, there come moments when a part of the cloud that 30 hides the sunlight moves away as it were, and we catch a glimpse, 31 in spite of ourselves of something beyond--away, away beyond the 32 life of the senses; away, away beyond its vanities, its joys, and its 33 sorrows; away, away beyond nature, or our imaginations of 34 happiness here or hereafter; away beyond all thirst for gold, or for 35 fame, or for name, or for posterity. Man stops for a moment at this 36 glimpse and sees the other bird calm and majestic, eating neither 37 sweet nor bitter fruits, but immersed in his own glory, Self-content, 38 Self-satisfied. As the Gita says, {Sanskrit}--"He whose devotion is to 39 the Atman, he who does not want anything beyond Atman, he who 40 has become satisfied in the Atman, what work is there for him to 41 do?" Why should he drudge? Man catches a glimpse, then again he 42 forgets and goes on eating the sweet and bitter fruits of life; 43 perhaps after a time he catches another glimpse, and the lower bird 44 goes nearer and nearer to the higher bird as blows after blows are 45 received. If he be fortunate to receive hard knocks, then he comes 46 nearer and nearer to his companion, the other bird, his life, his 47 friend; and as he approaches him, he finds that the light from the 48 higher bird is playing round his own plumage; and as he comes 49 nearer and nearer, lo! the transformation is going on. The nearer 50 and nearer he comes, he finds himself melting away, as it were, 51 until he has entirely disappeared. He did not really exist; it was but 52 the reflection of the other bird who was there calm and majestic

1 amidst the moving leaves. It was all his glory, that upper bird's. He 2 then becomes fearless, perfectly satisfied, calmly serene. In this 3 figure, the Upanishads take you from the dualistic to the utmost 4 Advaitic conception.

5 Endless examples can be cited, but we have no time in this 6 lecture to do that or to show the marvellous poetry of the 7 Upanishads, the painting of the sublime, the grand conceptions. But 8 one other idea I must note, that the language and the thought and 9 everything come direct, they fall upon you like a sword-blade, 10 strong as the blows of a hammer they come. There is no mistaking 11 their meanings. Every tone of that music is firm and produces its 12 full effect; no gyrations, no mad words, no intricacies in which the 13 brain is lost. No signs of degradation are there--no attempts at too 14 much allegorising, too much piling of adjectives after adjectives, 15 making it more and more intricate, till the whole of the sense is 16 lost, and the brain becomes giddy, and man does not know his way 17 out from the maze of that literature. There was none of that yet. If it 18 be human literature, it must be the production of a race which had 19 not yet lost any of its national vigour.

20 Strength, strength is what the Upanishads speak to me from 21 every page. This is the one great thing to remember, it has been the 22 one great lesson I have been taught in my life; strength, it says, 23 strength, O man, be not weak. Are there no human weaknesses?--
24 says man. There are, say the Upanishads, but will more weakness 25 heal them, would you try to wash dirt with dirt? Will sin cure sin, 26 weakness cure weakness? Strength, O man, strength, say the 27 Upanishads, stand up and be strong. Ay, it is the only literature in 28 the world where you find the word "Abhih", "fearless", used again 29 and again; in no other scripture in the world is this adjective 30 applied either to God or to man. Abhih, fearless! And in my mind 31 rises from the past the vision of the great Emperor of the West, 32 Alexander the Great, and I see, as it were in a picture, the great 33 monarch standing on the bank of the Indus, talking to one of our 34 Sannyasins in the forest; the old man he was talking to, perhaps 35 naked, stark naked, sitting upon a block of stone, and the Emperor, 36 astonished at his wisdom, tempting him with gold and honour to 37 come over to Greece. And this man smiles at his gold, and smiles at 38 his temptations, and refuses; and then the Emperor standing on his 39 authority as an Emperor, says, "I will kill you if you do not come", 40 and the man burst into a laugh and says, "You never told such a 41 falsehood in your life, as you tell just now. Who can kill me? Me you 42 kill, Emperor of the material world! Never! For I am Spirit unborn 43 and undecaying: never was I born and never do I die; I am the 44 Infinite, the Omnipresent, the Omniscient; and you kill me, child 45 that you are!" That is strength, that is strength! And the more I 46 read the Upanishads, my friends, my countrymen, the more I weep 47 for you, for therein is the great practical application. Strength, 48 strength for us. What we need is strength, but who will give us 49 strength? There are thousands to weaken us, and of stories we have 50 had enough. Every one of our Puranas, if you press it, gives out 51 stories enough to fill three-fourths of the libraries of the world.
52 Everything that can weaken us as a race we have had for the last

1 thousand years. It seems as if during that period the national life 2 had this one end in view, viz how to make us weaker and weaker till 3 we have become real earthworms, crawling at the feet of every one 4 who dares to put his foot on us. Therefore, my friends, as one of 5 your blood, as one that lives and dies with you, let me tell you that 6 we want strength, strength, and every time strength. And the 7 Upanishads are the great mine of strength. Therein lies strength 8 enough to invigorate the whole world; the whole world can be 9 vivified, made strong, energised through them. They will call with 10 trumpet voice upon the weak, the miserable, and the downtrodden 11 of all races, all creeds, and all sects to stand on their feet and be 12 free. Freedom, physical freedom, mental freedom, and spiritual 13 freedom are the watchwords of the Upanishads.

14 Ay, this is the one scripture in the world, of all others, that 15 does not talk of salvation, but of freedom. Be free from the bonds of 16 nature, be free from weakness! And it shows to you that you have 17 this freedom already in you. That is another peculiarity of its 18 teachings. You are a Dvaitist; never mind, you have got to admit 19 that by its very nature the soul is perfect; only by certain actions of 20 the soul has it become contracted. Indeed, Ramanuja's theory of 21 contraction and expansion is exactly what the modern evolutionists 22 call evolution and atavism. The soul goes back, becomes contracted 23 as it were, its powers become potential; and by good deeds and 24 good thoughts it expands again and reveals its natural perfection.
25 With the Advaitist the one difference is that he admits evolution in 26 nature and not in the soul. Suppose there is a screen, and there is a 27 small hole in the screen. I am a man standing behind the screen 28 and looking at this grand assembly. I can see only very few faces 29 here. Suppose the hole increases; as it increases, more and more of 30 this assembly is revealed to me, and in full when the hole has 31 become identified with the screen--there is nothing between you 32 and me in this case. Neither you changed nor I changed; all the 33 change was in the screen. You were the same from first to last; only 34 the screen changed. This is the Advaitist's position with regard to 35 evolution--evolution of nature and manifestation of the Self within.
36 Not that the Self can by any means be made to contract. It is 37 unchangeable, the Infinite One. It was covered, as it were, with a 38 veil, the veil of Maya, and as this Maya veil becomes thinner and 39 thinner, the inborn, natural glory of the soul comes out and 40 becomes more manifest. This is the one great doctrine which the 41 world is waiting to learn from India. Whatever they may talk, 42 however they may try to boast, they will find out day after day that 43 no society can stand without admitting this. Do you not find how 44 everything is being revolutionised? Do you not see how it was the 45 custom to take for granted that everything was wicked until it 46 proved itself good? In education, in punishing criminals, in treating 47 lunatics, in the treatment of common diseases even, that was the 48 old law. What is the modern law? The modern law says, the body 49 itself is healthy; it cures diseases of its own nature. Medicine can at 50 the best but help the storing up of the best in the body. What says it 51 of criminals? It takes for granted that however low a criminal may 52 be, there is still the divinity within, which does not change, and we 53 must treat criminals accordingly. All these things are now changing,

1 and reformatories and penitentiaries are established. So with 2 everything. Consciously or unconsciously that Indian idea of the 3 divinity within every one is expressing itself even in other countries.
4 And in your books is the explanation which other nations have to 5 accept. The treatment of one man to another will be entirely 6 revolutionised, and these old, old ideas of pointing to the weakness
7 of mankind will have to go. They will have received their death-blow
8 within this century. Now people may stand up and criticise us. I 9 have been criticised, from one end of the world to the other, as one 10 who preaches the diabolical idea that there is no sin! Very good.
11 The descendants of these very men will bless me as the preacher of 12 virtue, and not of sin. I am the teacher of virtue, not of sin. I glory in 13 being the preacher of light, and not of darkness.

14 The second great idea which the world is waiting to receive 15 from our Upanishads is the solidarity of the universe. The old lines 16 of demarcation and differentiation are vanishing rapidly. Electricity 17 and steam-power are placing the different parts of the world in 18 intercommunication with each other, and, as a result, we Hindus no 19 longer say that every country beyond our own land is peopled with 20 demons and hobgoblins, nor do the people of Christian countries 21 say that India is only peopled by cannibals and savages. When we 22 go out of our country, we find the same brother-man, with the same 23 strong hand to help, with the same lips to say godspeed; and 24 sometimes they are better than in the country in which we are 25 born. When they come here, they find the same brotherhood, the 26 same cheer, the same godspeed. Our Upanishads say that the cause 27 of all misery is ignorance; and that is perfectly true when applied to 28 every state of life, either social or spiritual. It is ignorance that 29 makes us hate each other, it is through ignorance that we do not 30 know and do not love each other. As soon as we come to know each 31 other, love comes, must come, for are we not one? Thus we find 32 solidarity coming in spite of itself. Even in politics and sociology, 33 problems that were only national twenty years ago can no more be 34 solved on national grounds only. They are assuming huge 35 proportions, gigantic shapes. They can only be solved when looked 36 at in the broader light of international grounds. International 37 organisations, international combinations, international laws are 38 the cry of the day. That shows the solidarity. In science, every day 39 they are coming to a similar broad view of matter. You speak of 40 matter, the whole universe as one mass, one ocean of matter, in 41 which you and I, the sun and the moon, and everything else are but 42 the names of different little whirlpools and nothing more. Mentally 43 speaking, it is one universal ocean of thought in which you and I are 44 similar little whirlpools; and as spirit it moveth not, it changeth not.
45 It is the One Unchangeable, Unbroken, Homogeneous Atman. The 46 cry for morality is coming also, and that is to be found in our books.
47 The explanation of morality, the fountain of ethics, that also the 48 world wants; and that it will get here.

49 What do we want in India? If foreigners want these things, we 50 want them twenty times more. Because, in spite of the greatness of 51 the Upanishads, in spite of our boasted ancestry of sages, 52 compared to many other races, I must tell you that we are weak,

1 very weak. First of all is our physical weakness. That physical 2 weakness is the cause of at least one-third of our miseries. We are 3 lazy, we cannot work; we cannot combine, we do not love each 4 other; we are intensely selfish, not three of us can come together 5 without hating each other, without being jealous of each other. That 6 is the state in which we are--hopelessly disorganised mobs, 7 immensely selfish, fighting each other for centuries as to whether a 8 certain mark is to be put on our forehead this way or that way, 9 writing volumes and volumes upon such momentous questions as to 10 whether the look of a man spoils my food or not! This we have been 11 doing for the past few centuries. We cannot expect anything high 12 from a race whose whole brain energy has been occupied in such 13 wonderfully beautiful problems and researches! And are we not 14 ashamed of ourselves? Ay, sometimes we are; but though we think 15 these things frivolous, we cannot give them up. We speak of many 16 things parrot-like, but never do them; speaking and not doing has 17 become a habit with us. What is the cause of that? Physical 18 weakness. This sort of weak brain is not able to do anything; we 19 must strengthen it. First of all, our young men must be strong.
20 Religion will come afterwards. Be strong, my young friends; that is 21 my advice to you. You will be nearer to Heaven through football 22 than through the study of the Gita. These are bold words; but I have 23 to say them, for I love you. I know where the shoe pinches. I have 24 gained a little experience. You will understand the Gita better with 25 your biceps, your muscles, a little stronger. You will understand the 26 mighty genius and the mighty strength of Krishna better with a 27 little of strong blood in you. You will understand the Upanishads 28 better and the glory of the Atman when your body stands firm upon 29 your feet, and you feel yourselves as men. Thus we have to apply 30 these to our needs.

1 People get disgusted many times at my preaching Advaitism. I 2 do not mean to preach Advaitism, or Dvaitism, or any ism in the 3 world. The only ism that we require now is this wonderful idea of 4 the soul--its eternal might, its eternal strength, its eternal purity, 5 and its eternal perfection. If I had a child I would from its very birth 6 begin to tell it, "Thou art the Pure One." You have read in one of the 7 Puranas that beautiful story of queen Madalasa, how as soon as she 8 has a child she puts her baby with her own hands in the cradle, and 9 how as the cradle rocks to and fro, she begins to sing, "Thou art the 10 Pure One, the Stainless, the Sinless, the Mighty One, the Great 11 One." Ay, there is much in that. Feel that you are great and you 12 become great. What did I get as my experience all over the world, is 13 the question. They may talk about sinners--and if all Englishmen 14 really believed that they were sinners, Englishmen would be no 15 better than the negroes in Central Africa. God bless them that they 16 do not believe it! On the other hand, the Englishman believes he is 17 born the lord of the world. He believes he is great and can do 18 anything in the world; if he wants to go to the sun or the moon, he 19 believes he can; and that makes him great. If he had believed his 20 priests that he was a poor miserable sinner, going to be barbecued 21 through all eternity, he would not be the same Englishman that he 22 is today. So I find in every nation that, in spite of priests and 23 superstition, the divine within lives and asserts itself. We have lost 24 faith. Would you believe me, we have less faith than the Englishman 25 and woman--a thousand times less faith! These are plain words; but 26 I say these, I cannot help it. Don't you see how Englishmen and 27 women, when they catch our ideals, become mad as it were; and 28 although they are the ruling class, they come to India to preach our 29 own religion notwithstanding the jeers and ridicule of their own 30 countrymen? How many of you could do that? And why cannot you 31 do that? Do you not know it? You know more than they do; you are 32 more wise than is good for you, that is your difficulty! Simply 33 because your blood is only like water, your brain is sloughing, your 34 body is weak! You must change the body. Physical weakness is the 35 cause and nothing else. You have talked of reforms, of ideals, and 36 all these things for the past hundred years; but when it comes to 37 practice, you are not to be found anywhere--till you have disgusted 38 the whole world, and the very name of reform is a thing of ridicule!
39 And what is the cause? Do you not know? You know too well. The 40 only cause is that you are weak, weak, weak; your body is weak, 41 your mind is weak, you have no faith in yourselves! Centuries and 42 centuries, a thousand years of crushing tyranny of castes and kings 43 and foreigners and your own people have taken out all your 44 strength, my brethren. Your backbone is broken, you are like 45 downtrodden worms. Who will give you strength? Let me tell you, 46 strength, strength is what we want. And the first step in getting 47 strength is to uphold the Upanishads, and believe--"I am the Soul", 48 "Me the sword cannot cut; nor weapons pierce; me the fire cannot 49 burn; me the air cannot dry; I am the Omnipotent, I am the 50 Omniscient." So repeat these blessed, saving words. Do not say we 51 are weak; we can do anything and everything. What can we not do?
52 Everything can be done by us; we all have the same glorious soul, 53 let us believe in it. Have faith, as Nachiketa. At the time of his

1 father's sacrifice, faith came unto Nachiketa; ay, I wish that faith 2 would come to each of you; and every one of you would stand up a 3 giant, a world-mover with a gigantic intellect--an infinite God in 4 every respect. That is what I want you to become. This is the 5 strength that you get from the Upanishads, this is the faith that you 6 get from there.

7 Ay, but it was only for the Sannyasin! Rahaysa (esoteric)! The 8 Upanishads were in the hands of the Sannyasin; he went into the 9 forest! Shankara was a little kind and said even Grihasthas 10 (householders) may study the Upanishads, it will do them good; it 11 will not hurt them. But still the idea is that the Upanishads talked 12 only of the forest life of the recluse. As I told you the other day, the 13 only commentary, the authoritative commentary on the Vedas, has 14 been made once and for all by Him who inspired the Vedas--by 15 Krishna in the Gita. It is there for every one in every occupation of 16 life. These conceptions of the Vedanta must come out, must remain 17 not only in the forest, not only in the cave, but they must come out 18 to work at the bar and the bench, in the pulpit, and in the cottage of 19 the poor man, with the fishermen that are catching fish, and with 20 the students that are studying. They call to every man, woman, and 21 child whatever be their occupation, wherever they may be. And 22 what is there to fear! How can the fishermen and all these carry out 23 the ideals of the Upanishads? The way has been shown. It is 24 infinite; religion is infinite, none can go beyond it; and whatever you 25 do sincerely is good for you. Even the least thing well done brings 26 marvellous results; therefore let everyone do what little he can. If 27 the fisherman thinks that he is the Spirit, he will be a better 28 fisherman; if the student thinks he is the Spirit, he will be a better 29 student. If the lawyer thinks that he is the Spirit, he will be a better 30 lawyer, and so on, and the result will be that the castes will remain 31 for ever. It is in the nature of society to form itself into groups; and 32 what will go will be these privileges. Caste is a natural order; I can 33 perform one duty in social life, and you another; you can govern a 34 country, and I can mend a pair of old shoes, but that is no reason 35 why you are greater than I, for can you mend my shoes? Can I 36 govern the country? I am clever in mending shoes, you are clever in 37 reading Vedas, but that is no reason why you should trample on my 38 head. Why if one commits murder should he be praised, and if 39 another steals an apple why should he be hanged? This will have to 40 go. Caste is good. That is the only natural way of solving life. Men 41 must form themselves into groups, and you cannot get rid of that.
42 Wherever you go, there will be caste. But that does not mean that 43 there should be these privileges.

44 They should be knocked on the head. If you teach Vedanta to 45 the fisherman, he will say, I am as good a man as you; I am a 46 fisherman, you are a philosopher, but I have the same God in me as 47 you have in you. And that is what we want, no privilege for any one, 48 equal chances for all; let every one be taught that the divine is 49 within, and every one will work out his own salvation.

50 Liberty is the first condition of growth. It is wrong, a 51 thousand times wrong, if any of you dares to say, "I will work out 52 the salvation of this woman or child." I am asked again and again,

1 what I think of the widow problem and what I think of the woman
2 question. Let me answer once for all--am I a widow that you ask me
3 that nonsense? Am I am a woman that you ask me that question
4 again and again? Who are you to solve women's problems? Are you 5 the Lord God that you should rule over every widow and every 6 woman? Hands off! They will solve their own problems. O tyrants, 7 attempting to think that you can do anything for any one! Hands
8 Off! The Divine will look after all. Who are you to assume that you 9 know everything? How dare you think, O blasphemers, that you 10 have the right over God? For don't you know that every soul is the 11 Soul of God? Mind your own Karma; a load of Karma is there in you 12 to work out. Your nation may put you upon a pedestal, your society 13 may cheer you up to the skies, and fools may praise you: but He 14 sleeps not, and retribution will be sure to follow, here or hereafter.

15 Look upon every man, woman, and every one as God. You 16 cannot help anyone, you can only serve: serve the children of the 17 Lord, serve the Lord Himself, if you have the privilege. If the Lord 18 grants that you can help any one of his children, blessed you are; do 19 not think too much of yourselves. Blessed you are that that privilege 20 was given to you when others had it not. Do it only as a worship. I 21 should see God in the poor, and it is for my salvation that I go and 22 worship them. The poor and the miserable are for our salvation, so 23 that we may serve the Lord, coming in the shape of the diseased, 24 coming in the shape of the lunatic, the leper, and the sinner! Bold 25 are my words; and let me repeat that it is the greatest privilege in 26 our life that we are allowed to serve the Lord in all these shapes.
27 Give up the idea that by ruling over others you can do any good to 28 them. But you can do just as much as you can in the case of the 29 plant; you can supply the growing seed with the materials for the 30 making up of its body, bringing to it the earth, the water, the air, 31 that it wants. It will take all that it wants by its own nature, it will 32 assimilate and grow by its own nature.

33 Bring all light into the world. Light, bring light! Let light 34 come unto every one; the task will not be finished till every one has 35 reached the Lord. Bring light to the poor; and bring more light to 36 the rich, for they require it more than the poor. Bring light to the 37 ignorant, and more light to the educated, for the vanities of the 38 education of our time are tremendous! Thus bring light to all and 39 leave the rest unto the Lord, for in the words of the same Lord, "To 40 work you have the right and not to the fruits thereof." "Let not your 41 work produce results for you, and at the same time may you never 42 be without work."

43 May He who taught such grand ideas to our forefathers ages 44 ago help us to get strength to carry into practice His commands!

THE SAGES OF INDIA

In speaking of the sages of India, my mind goes back to those periods of which history has no record, and tradition tries in vain to bring the secrets out of the gloom of the past. The sages of India have been almost innumerable, for what has the Hindu nation been doing for thousands of years except producing sages? I will take, therefore, the lives of a few of the most brilliant ones, the epoch-makers, and present them before you, that is to say, my study of them.

In the first place, we have to understand a little about our scriptures. Two ideals of truth are in our scriptures; the one is, what we call the eternal, and the other is not so authoritative, yet binding under particular circumstances, times, and places. The eternal relations which deal with the nature of the soul, and of God, and the relations between souls and God are embodied in what we call the Shrutis, the Vedas. The next set of truths is what we call the Smritis, as embodied in the words of Manu, Yajnavalkya, and other writers and also in the Puranas, down to the Tantras. The second class of books and teachings is subordinate to the Shrutis, inasmuch as whenever any one of these contradicts anything in the Shrutis, the Shrutis must prevail. This is the law. The idea is that the framework of the destiny and goal of man has been all delineated in the Vedas, the details have been left to be worked out in the Smritis and Puranas. As for general directions, the Shrutis are enough; for spiritual life, nothing more can be said, nothing more can be known. All that is necessary has been known, all the advice that is necessary to lead the soul to perfection has been completed in the Shrutis; the details alone were left out, and these the Smritis have supplied from time to time.

Another peculiarity is that these Shrutis have many sages as the recorders of the truths in them, mostly men, even some women. Very little is known of their personalities, the dates of their birth, and so forth, but their best thoughts, their best discoveries, I should say, are preserved there, embodied in the sacred literature of our country, the Vedas. In the Smritis, on the other hand, personalities are more in evidence. Startling, gigantic, impressive, world-moving persons stand before us, as it were, for the first time, sometimes of more magnitude even than their teachings.

This is a peculiarity which we have to understand--that our religion preaches an Impersonal Personal God. It preaches any amount of impersonal laws plus any amount of personality, but the very fountain-head of our religion is in the Shrutis, the Vedas, which are perfectly impersonal; the persons all come in the Smritis and Puranas--the great Avataras, the Incarnations of God, Prophets, and so forth. And this ought also to be observed that except our religion, every other religion in the world depends upon the life or lives of some personal founder or founders. Christianity is built upon the life of Jesus Christ, Mohammedanism upon Mohammed, Buddhism upon Buddha, Jainism upon the Jinas, and so on. It naturally follows

1 that there must be in all these religions a good deal of fight about 2 what they call the historical evidences of these great personalities.
3 If at any time the historical evidences about the existence of these 4 personages in ancient times become weak, the whole building of 5 the religion tumbles down and is broken to pieces. We escaped this 6 fate because our religion is not based upon persons but on 7 principles. That you obey your religion is not because it came 8 through the authority of a sage, no, not even of an Incarnation.
9 Krishna is not the authority of the Vedas, but the Vedas are the 10 authority of Krishna himself. His glory is that he is the greatest 11 preacher of the Vedas that ever existed. So with the other 12 Incarnations; so with all our sages. Our first principle is that all that 13 is necessary for the perfection of man and for attaining unto 14 freedom is there in the Vedas. You cannot find anything new. You 15 cannot go beyond a perfect unity, which is the goal of all 16 knowledge; this has been already reached there, and it is 17 impossible to go beyond the unity. Religious knowledge became 18 complete when Tat Twam Asi (Thou art That) was discovered, and 19 that was in the Vedas. What remained was the guidance of people 20 from time to time according to different times and places, according 21 to different circumstances and environments; people had to be 22 guided along the old, old path, and for this these great teachers 23 came, these great sages. Nothing can bear out more clearly this 24 position than the celebrated saying of Shri Krishna in the Gita:
25 "Whenever virtue subsides and irreligion prevails, I create Myself 26 for the protection of the good; for the destruction of all immorality I 27 am coming from time to time." This is the idea in India.

28 What follows? That on the one hand, there are these eternal 29 principles which stand upon their own foundations without 30 depending on any reasoning even, much less on the authority of 31 sages however great, of Incarnations however brilliant they may 32 have been. We may remark that as this is the unique position in 33 India, our claim is that the Vedanta only can be the universal 34 religion, that it is already the existing universal religion in the 35 world, because it teaches principles and not persons. No religion 36 built upon a person can be taken up as a type by all the races of 37 mankind. In our own country we find that there have been so many 38 grand characters; in even a small city many persons are taken up as 39 types by the different minds in that one city. How is it possible that 40 one person as Mohammed or Buddha or Christ, can be taken up as 41 the one type for the whole world, nay, that the whole of morality, 42 ethics, spirituality, and religion can be true only from the sanction 43 of that one person, and one person alone? Now, the Vedantic 44 religion does not require any such personal authority. Its sanction is 45 the eternal nature of man, its ethics are based upon the eternal 46 spiritual solidarity of man, already existing, already attained and 47 not to be attained. On the other hand, from the very earliest times, 48 our sages have been feeling conscious of this fact that the vast 49 majority of mankind requires a personality. They must have a 50 Personal God in some form or other. The very Buddha who declared 51 against the existence of a Personal God had not died fifty years 52 before his disciples manufactured a Personal God out of him. The 53 Personal God is necessary, and at the same time we know that

1 instead of and better than vain imaginations of a Personal God, 2 which in ninety-nine cases out of a hundred are unworthy of human 3 worship, we have in this world, living and walking in our midst, 4 living Gods, now and then. These are more worthy of worship than 5 any imaginary God, any creation of our imagination, that is to say, 6 any idea of God which we can form. Shri Krishna is much greater 7 than idea of God you or I can have. Buddha is a much higher idea, a 8 more living and idolised idea, than the ideal you or I can conceive of 9 in our minds; and therefore it is that they always command the 10 worship of mankind even to the exclusion of all imaginary deities.

11 This our sages knew, and, therefore, left it open to all Indian 12 people to worship such great personages, such Incarnations. Nay, 13 the greatest of these Incarnations goes further: "Wherever an 14 extraordinary spiritual power is manifested by external man, know 15 that I am there; it is from Me that that manifestation comes." That 16 leaves the door open for the Hindu to worship the Incarnations of 17 all the countries in the world. The Hindu can worship any sage and 18 any saint from any country whatsoever, and as a fact we know that 19 we go and worship many times in the churches of the Christians, 20 and many, many times in the Mohammedan mosques, and that is 21 good. Why not? Ours, as I have said, is the universal religion.

22 It is inclusive enough, it is broad enough to include all the 23 ideals. All the ideals of religion that already exist in the world can 24 be immediately included, and we can patiently wait for all the ideals 25 that are to come in the future to be taken in the same fashion, 26 embraced in the infinite arms of the religion of the Vedanta.

27 This, more or less, is our position with regard to the great 28 sages, the Incarnations of God. There are also secondary 29 characters. We find the word Rishi again and again mentioned in 30 the Vedas, and it has become a common word at the present time.
31 The Rishi is the great authority. We have to understand that idea.
32 The definition is that the Rishi is the Mantra-drashta, the seer of 33 thought. What is the proof of religion?--this was asked in very 34 ancient times. There is no proof in the senses was the declaration.
35 {Sanskrit}--"From whence words reflect back with thought without 36 reaching the goal." {Sanskrit} --"There the eyes cannot reach, 37 neither can speech, nor the mind."--that has been the declaration 38 for ages and ages. Nature outside cannot give us any answer as to 39 the existence of the soul, the existence of God, the eternal life, the 40 goal of man, and all that. This mind is continually changing, always 41 in a state of flux; it is finite, it is broken into pieces. How can nature 42 tell of the Infinite, the Unchangeable, the Unbroken, the Indivisible, 43 the Eternal? It never can. And whenever mankind has striven to get 44 an answer from dull dead matter, history shows how disastrous the 45 results have been. How comes, then, the knowledge which the 46 Vedas declare? It comes through being a Rishi. This knowledge is 47 not in the senses; but are the senses the be-all and the end-all of 48 the human being? Who dare say that the senses are the all-in-all of 49 man? Even in our lives, in the life of every one of us here, there 50 come moments of calmness, perhaps, when we see before us the 51 death of one we loved, when some shock comes to us, or when 52 extreme blessedness comes to us. Many other occasions there are 1 when the mind, as it were, becomes calm, feels for the moment its 2 real nature; and a glimpse of the Infinite beyond, where words 3 cannot reach nor the mind go, is revealed to us. This happens in 4 ordinary life, but it has to be heightened, practised, perfected. Men 5 found out ages ago that the soul is not bound or limited by the 6 senses, no, not even by consciousness. We have to understand that 7 this consciousness is only the name of one link in the infinite chain.

8 Being is not identical with consciousness, but consciousness is only 9 one part of Being. Beyond consciousness is where the bold search 10 lies. Consciousness is bound by the senses. Beyond that, beyond the 11 senses, men must go in order to arrive at truths of the spiritual 12 world, and there are even now persons who succeed in going 13 beyond the bounds of the senses. These are called Rishis, because 14 they come face to face with spiritual truths.

15 The proof, therefore, of the Vedas is just the same as the 16 proof of this table before me, Pratyaksha, direct perception. This I 17 see with the senses, and the truths of spirituality we also see in a 18 superconscious state of the human soul. This Rishi-state is not 19 limited by time or place, by sex or race. Vatsyayana boldly declares 20 that this Rishihood is the common property of the descendants of 21 the sage, of the Aryan, of the non-Aryan, of even the Mlechchha.
22 This is the sageship of the Vedas, and constantly we ought to 23 remember this ideal of religion in India, which I wish other nations 24 of the world would also remember and learn, so that there may be 25 less fight and less quarrel. Religion is not in books, nor in theories, 26 nor in dogmas, nor in talking, not even in reasoning. It is being and 27 becoming. Ay, my friends, until each one of you has become a Rishi 28 and come face to face with spiritual facts, religious life has not 29 begun for you. Until the superconscious opens for you, religion is 30 mere talk, it is nothing but preparation. You are talking 31 secondhand, third-hand, and here applies that beautiful saying of 32 Buddha when he had a discussion with some Brahmins. They came 33 discussing about the nature of Brahman, and the great sage asked, 34 "Have you seen Brahman?" "No", said the Brahmin; "Or your 35 father?" "No, neither has he"; "Or your grandfather?" "I don't think 36 even he saw Him." "My friend, how can you discuss about a person 37 whom your father and grandfather never saw, and try to put each 38 other down?" That is what the whole world is doing. Let us say in 39 the language of the Vedanta, "This Atman is not to be reached by 40 too much talk, no, not even by the highest intellect, no, not even by 41 the study of the Vedas themselves."

42 Let us speak to all the nations of the world in the language of 43 the Vedas: Vain are your fights and your quarrels; have you seen 44 God whom you want to preach? If you have not seen, vain is your 45 preaching; you do not know what you say; and if you have seen God, 46 you will not quarrel, your very face will shine. An ancient sage of 47 the Upanishads sent his son out to learn about Brahman, and the 48 child came back, and the father asked, "What have you learnt?" The 49 child replied he had learnt so many sciences. But the father said, 50 "That is nothing, go back." And the son went back, and when he 51 returned again the father asked the same question, and the same 52 answer came from the child. Once more he had to go back. And the 1 next time he came, his whole face was shining; and his father stood 2 up and declared, "Ay, today, my child, your face shines like a knower 3 of Brahman." When you have known God, your very face will be 4 changed, your voice will be changed, your whole appearance will be 5 changed. You will be a blessing to mankind; none will be able to 6 resist the Rishi. This is the Rishihood, the ideal in our religion. The 7 rest, all these talks and reasonings and philosophies and dualisms 8 and monisms, and even the Vedas themselves are but preparations, 9 secondary things. The other is primary. The Vedas, grammar, 10 astronomy, etc., all these are secondary; that is supreme knowledge 11 which makes us realise the Unchangeable One. Those who realised 12 are the sages whom we find in the Vedas; and we understand how 13 this Rishi is the name of a type, of a class, which every one of us, as 14 true Hindus, is expected to become at some period of our life, and 15 becoming which, to the Hindu, means salvation. Not belief in 16 doctrines, not going to thousands of temples, nor bathing in all the 17 rivers in the world, but becoming the Rishi, the Mantra-drashta-- 18 that is freedom, that is salvation.

19 Coming down to later times, there have been great world-20 moving sages, great Incarnations of whom there have been many; 21 and according to the Bhagavata, they also are infinite in number, 22 and those that are worshipped most in India are Rama and Krishna.
23 Rama, the ancient idol of the heroic ages, the embodiment of truth, 24 of morality, the ideal son, the ideal husband, the ideal father, and 25 above all, the ideal king, this Rama has been presented before us 26 by the great sage Valmiki. No language can be purer, none chaster, 27 none more beautiful and at the same time simpler than the 28 language in which the great poet has depicted the life of Rama. And 29 what to speak of Sita? You may exhaust the literature of the world 30 that is past, and I may assure you that you will have to exhaust the 31 literature of the world of the future, before finding another Sita.
32 Sita is unique; that character was depicted once and for all. There 33 may have been several Ramas, perhaps, but never more than one 34 Sita! She is the very type of the true Indian woman, for all the 35 Indian ideals of a perfected woman have grown out of that one life 36 of Sita; and here she stands these thousands of years, commanding 37 the worship of every man, woman, and child throughout the length 38 and breadth of the land of Aryavarta. There she will always be, this 39 glorious Sita, purer than purity itself, all patience, and all suffering.
40 She who suffered that life of suffering without a murmur, she the 41 ever-chaste and ever-pure wife, she the ideal of the people, the 42 ideal of the gods, the great Sita, our national God she must always 43 remain. And every one of us knows her too well to require much 44 delineation. All our mythology may vanish, even our Vedas may 45 depart, and our Sanskrit language may vanish for ever, but so long 46 as there will be five Hindus living here, even if only speaking the 47 most vulgar patois, there will be the story of Sita present. Mark my 48 words: Sita has gone into the very vitals of our race. She is there in 49 the blood of every Hindu man and woman; we are all children of 50 Sita. Any attempt to modernise our women, if it tries to take our 51 women away from that ideal of Sita, is immediately a failure, as we 52 see every day. The women of India must grow and develop in the 53 footprints of Sita, and that is the only way.

1 The next is He who is worshipped in various forms, the 2 favourite ideal of men as well as of women, the ideal of children, as 3 well as of grown-up men. I mean He whom the writer of the 4 Bhagavata was not content to call an Incarnation but says, "The 5 other Incarnations were but parts of the Lord. He, Krishna, was the 6 Lord Himself." And it is not strange that such adjectives are applied 7 to him when we marvel at the many-sidedness of his character. He 8 was the most wonderful Sannyasin, and the most wonderful 9 householder in one; he had the most wonderful amount of Rajas, 10 power, and was at the same time living in the midst of the most 11 wonderful renunciation. Krishna can never be understood until you 12 have studied the Gita, for he was the embodiment of his own 13 teaching. Every one of these Incarnations came as a living 14 illustration of what they came to preach. Krishna, the preacher of 15 the Gita, was all his life the embodiment of the Song Celestial; he 16 was the great illustration of non-attachment. He gives up his throne 17 and never cares for it. He, the leader of India, at whose word kings 18 came down from their thrones, never wants to be a king. He is the 19 simple Krishna, ever the same Krishna who played with the Gopis.
20 Ah, that most marvellous passage of his life, the most difficult to 21 understand, and which none ought to attempt to understand until 22 he has become perfectly chaste and pure, that most marvellous 23 expansion of love, allegorised and expressed in that beautiful play 24 at Vrindaban, which none can understand but he who has become 25 mad with love, drunk deep of the cup of love! Who can understand 26 the throes of the love of the Gopis--the very ideal of love, love that 27 wants nothing, love that even does not care for heaven, love that 28 does not care for anything in this world or the world to come? And 29 here, my friends, through this love of the Gopis has been found the 30 only solution of the conflict between the Personal and the 31 Impersonal God. We know how the Personal God is the highest 32 point of human life; we know that it is philosophical to believe in an 33 Impersonal God immanent in the universe, of whom everything is 34 but a manifestation. At the same time our souls hanker after 35 something concrete, something which we want to grasp, at whose 36 feet we can pour out our soul, and so on. The Personal God is 37 therefore the highest conception of human nature. Yet reason 38 stands aghast at such an idea. It is the same old, old question which 39 you find discussed in the Brahma-Sutras, which you find Draupadi 40 discussing with Yudhishtira in the forest: If there is a Personal 41 God, all-merciful, all-powerful, why is the hell of an earth here, why 42 did He create this?--He must be a partial God. There was no 43 solution, and the only solution that can be found is what you read 44 about the love of the Gopis. They hated every adjective that was 45 applied to Krishna; they did not care to know that he was the Lord 46 of creation, they did not care to know that he was almighty, they did 47 not care to know that he was omnipotent, and so forth. The only 48 thing they understood was that he was infinite Love, that was all.

49 The Gopis understood Krishna only as the Krishna of 50 Vrindaban. He, the leader of the hosts, the King of kings, to them 51 was the shepherd, and the shepherd for ever. "I do not want wealth, 52 nor many people, nor do I want learning; no, not even do I want to 53 go to heaven. Let me be born again and again, but Lord, grant me

1 this, that I may have love for Thee, and that for love's sake." A great 2 landmark in the history of religion is here, the ideal of love for 3 love's sake, work for work's sake, duty for duty's sake, and it for the 4 first time fell from the lips of the greatest of Incarnations, Krishna, 5 and for the first time in the history of humanity, upon the soil of 6 India. The religions of fear and of temptations were gone for ever, 7 and in spite of the fear of hell and temptation of enjoyment in 8 heaven, came the grandest of ideals, love for love's sake, duty for 9 duty's sake, work for work's sake.

10 And what a love! I have told you just now that it is very 11 difficult to understand the love of the Gopis. There are not wanting 12 fools, even in the midst of us, who cannot understand the 13 marvellous significance of that most marvellous of all episodes.
14 There are, let me repeat, impure fools, even born of our blood, who 15 try to shrink from that as if from something impure. To them I have 16 only to say, first make yourselves pure; and you must remember 17 that he who tells the history of the love of the Gopis is none else but 18 Shuka Deva. The historian who records this marvellous love of the 19 Gopis is one who was born pure, the eternally pure Shuka, the son 20 of Vyasa. So long as there is selfishness in the heart, so long is love 21 of God impossible; it is nothing but shopkeeping: "I give you 22 something; O Lord, you give me something in return"; and says the 23 Lord, "If you do not do this, I will take good care of you when you 24 die. I will roast you all the rest of your lives, perhaps", and so on. So 25 long as such ideas are in the brain, how can one understand the 26 mad throes of the Gopis' love? "O for one, one kiss of those lips!
27 One who has been kissed by Thee, his thirst for Thee increases for 28 ever, all sorrows vanish, and he forgets love for everything else but 29 for Thee and Thee alone." Ay, forget first the love for gold, and 30 name and fame, for this little trumpery world of ours. Then, only 31 then, you will understand the love of the Gopis, too holy to be 32 attempted without giving up everything, too sacred to be 33 understood until the soul has become perfectly pure. People with 34 ideas of sex, and of money, and of fame, bubbling up every minute 35 in the heart, daring to criticise and understand the love of the 36 Gopis! That is the very essence of the Krishna Incarnation. Even the 37 Gita, the great philosophy itself, does not compare with that 38 madness, for in the Gita the disciple is taught slowly how to walk 39 towards the goal, but here is the madness of enjoyment, the 40 drunkenness of love, where disciples and teachers and teachings 41 and books and all these things have become one; even the ideas of 42 fear, and God, and heaven--everything has been thrown away. What 43 remains is the madness of love. It is forgetfulness of everything, 44 and the lover sees nothing in the world except that Krishna and 45 Krishna alone, when the face of every being becomes a Krishna, 46 when his own face looks like Krishna, when his own soul has 47 become tinged with the Krishna colour. That was the great Krishna!

48 Do not waste your time upon little details. Take up the 49 framework, the essence of the life. There may be many historical 50 discrepancies, there may be interpolations in the life of Krishna. All 51 these things may be true; but, at the same time, there must have 52 been a basis, a foundation for this new and tremendous departure.

1 Taking the life of any other sage or prophet, we find that that 2 prophet is only the evolution of what had gone before him, we find 3 that that prophet is only preaching the ideas that had been 4 scattered about his own country even in his own times. Great 5 doubts may exist even as to whether that prophet existed or not.
6 But here, I challenge any one to show whether these things, these 7 ideals--work for work's sake, love for love's sake, duty for duty's 8 sake, were not original ideas with Krishna, and as such, there must 9 have been someone with whom these ideas originated. They could 10 not have been borrowed from anybody else. They were not floating 11 about in the atmosphere when Krishna was born. But the Lord 12 Krishna was the first preacher of this; his disciple Vyasa took it up 13 and preached it unto mankind. This is the highest idea to picture.
14 The highest thing we can get out of him is Gopijanavallabha, the 15 Beloved of the Gopis of Vrindaban. When that madness comes in 16 your brain, when you understand the blessed Gopis, then you will 17 understand what love is. When the whole world will vanish, when 18 all other considerations will have died out, when you will become 19 pure-hearted with no other aim, not even the search after truth, 20 then and then alone will come to you the madness of that love, the 21 strength and the power of that infinite love which the Gopis had, 22 that love for love's sake. That is the goal. When you have got that, 23 you have got everything.

1 To come down to the lower stratum--Krishna, the preacher of 2 the Gita. Ay, there is an attempt in India now which is like putting 3 the cart before the horse. Many of our people think that Krishna as 4 the lover of the Gopis is something rather uncanny, and the 5 Europeans do not like it much. Dr. So-and-so does not like it.
6 Certainly then, the Gopis have to go! Without the sanction of the 7 Europeans how can Krishna live? He cannot! In the Mahabharata 8 there is no mention of the Gopis except in one or two places, and 9 those not very remarkable places. In the prayer of Draupadi, there 10 is mention of a Vrindaban life, and in the speech of Shishupala 11 there is again mention of this Vrindaban. All these are 12 interpolations! What the Europeans do not want must be thrown off.
13 They are interpolations, the mention of the Gopis and of Krishna 14 too! Well, with these men, steeped in commercialism, where even 15 the ideal of religion has become commercial, they are all trying to 16 go to heaven by doing something here; the bania wants compound 17 interest, wants to lay by something here and enjoy it there.
18 Certainly the Gopis have no place in such a system of thought. From 19 that ideal lover we come down to the lower stratum of Krishna, the 20 preacher of the Gita. Than the Gita no better commentary on the 21 Vedas has been written or can be written. The essence of the 22 Shrutis, or of the Upanishads, is hard to be understood, seeing that 23 there are so many commentators, each one trying to interpret in his 24 own way. Then the Lord Himself comes, He who is the inspirer of 25 the Shrutis, to show us the meaning of them, as the preacher of the 26 Gita, and today India wants nothing better, the world wants nothing 27 better than that method of interpretation. It is a wonder that 28 subsequent interpreters of the scriptures, even commenting upon 29 the Gita, many times could not catch the meaning, many times 30 could not catch the drift. For what do you find in the Gita, and what 31 in modern commentators? One non-dualistic commentator takes up 32 an Upanishad; there are so many dualistic passages, and he twists 33 and tortures them into some meaning, and wants to bring them all 34 into a meaning of his own. If a dualistic commentator comes, there 35 are so many non-dualistic texts which he begins to torture, to bring 36 them all round to dualistic meaning. But you find in the Gita there is 37 no attempt at torturing any one of them. They are all right, says the 38 Lord; for slowly and gradually the human soul rises up and up, step 39 after step, from the gross to the fine, from the fine to the finer, until 40 it reaches the Absolute, the goal. That is what is in the Gita. Even 41 the Karma Kanda is taken up, and it is shown that although it 42 cannot give salvation direct, but only indirectly, yet that is also 43 valid; images are valid indirectly; ceremonies, forms, everything is 44 valid only with one condition, purity of the heart. For worship is 45 valid and leads to the goal if the heart is pure and the heart is 46 sincere; and all these various modes of worship are necessary, else 47 why should they be there? Religions and sects are not the work of 48 hypocrites and wicked people who invented all these to get a little 49 money, as some of our modern men want to think. However 50 reasonable that explanation may seem, it is not true, and they were 51 not invented that way at all. They are the outcome of the necessity 52 of the human soul. They are all here to satisfy the hankering and 53 thirst of different classes of human minds, and you need not preach

1 against them. The day when that necessity will cease, they will 2 vanish along with the cessation of that necessity; and so long as 3 that necessity remains, they must be there in spite of your 4 preaching, in spite of your criticism. You may bring the sword or the 5 gun into play, you may deluge the world with human blood, but so 6 long as there is a necessity for idols, they must remain. These 7 forms, and all the various steps in religion will remain, and we 8 understand from the Lord Shri Krishna why they should.

9 A rather sadder chapter of India's history comes now. In the 10 Gita we already hear the distant sound of the conflicts of sects, and 11 the Lord comes in the middle to harmonise them all; He, the great 12 preacher of harmony, the greatest teacher of harmony, Lord Shri 13 Krishna. He says, "In Me they are all strung like pearls upon a 14 thread." We already hear the distant sounds, the murmurs of the 15 conflict, and possibly there was a period of harmony and calmness 16 when it broke out anew, not only on religious grounds, but most 17 possibly on caste grounds--the fight between the two powerful 18 factors in our community, the kings and the priests. And from the 19 topmost crest of the wave that deluged India for nearly a thousand 20 years, we see another glorious figure, and that was our Gautama 21 Shakyamuni. You all know about his teachings and preachings. We 22 worship him as God incarnate, the greatest, the boldest preacher of 23 morality that the world ever saw, the greatest Karma-Yogi; as 24 disciple of himself, as it were, the same Krishna came to show how 25 to make his theories practical. There came once again the same 26 voice that in the Gita preached, "Even the least bit done of this 27 religion saves from great fear". "Women, or Vaishyas, or even 28 Shudras, all reach the highest goal." Breaking the bondages of all, 29 the chains of all, declaring liberty to all to reach the highest goal, 30 come the words of the Gita, rolls like thunder the mighty voice of 31 Krishna: "Even in this life they have conquered relativity, whose 32 minds are firmly fixed upon the sameness, for God is pure and the 33 same to all, therefore such are said to be living in God." "Thus 34 seeing the same Lord equally present everywhere, the sage does 35 not injure the Self by the self, and thus reaches the highest goal." 36 As it were to give a living example of this preaching, as it were to 37 make at least one part of it practical, the preacher himself came in 38 another form, and this was Shakyamuni, the preacher to the poor 39 and the miserable, he who rejected even the language of the gods 40 to speak in the language of the people, so that he might reach the 41 hearts of the people, he who gave up a throne to live with beggars, 42 and the poor, and the downcast, he who pressed the Pariah to his 43 breast like a second Rama.

44 You all know about his great work, his grand character. But 45 the work had one great defect, and for that we are suffering even 46 today. No blame attaches to the Lord. He is pure and glorious, but 47 unfortunately such high ideals could not be well assimilated by the 48 different uncivilised and uncultured races of mankind who flocked 49 within the fold of the Aryans. These races, with varieties of 50 superstition and hideous worship, rushed within the fold of the 51 Aryans and for a time appeared as if they had become civilised, but 52 before a century had passed they brought out their snakes, their

1 ghosts, and all the other things their ancestors used to worship, and 2 thus the whole of India became one degraded mass of superstition.
3 The earlier Buddhists in their rage against the killing of animals
4 had denounced the sacrifices of the Vedas; and these sacrifices 5 used to be held in every house. There was a fire burning, and that 6 was all the paraphernalia of worship. These sacrifices were 7 obliterated, and in their place came gorgeous temples, gorgeous 8 ceremonies, and gorgeous priests, and all that you see in India in 9 modern times. I smile when I read books written by some modern 10 people who ought to have known better, that the Buddha was the 11 destroyer of Brahminical idolatry. Little do they know that 12 Buddhism created Brahminism and idolatry in India.

13 There was a book written a year or two ago by a Russian 14 gentleman, who claimed to have found out a very curious life of 15 Jesus Christ, and in one part of the book he says that Christ went to 16 the temple of Jagannath to study with the Brahmins, but became 17 disgusted with their exclusiveness and their idols, and so he went to 18 the Lamas of Tibet instead, become perfect, and went home. To any 19 man who knows anything about Indian history, that very statement 20 proves that the whole thing was a fraud, because the temple of 21 Jagannath is an old Buddhistic temple. We took this and others over 22 and re-Hinduised them. We shall have to do many things like that 23 yet. That is Jagannath, and there was not one Brahmin there then, 24 and yet we are told that Jesus Christ came to study with the 25 Brahmins there. So says our great Russian archaeologist.

26 Thus, in spite of the preaching of mercy to animals, in spite of 27 the sublime ethical religion, in spite of the hair-splitting discussions 28 about the existence or non-existence of a permanent soul, the whole 29 building of Buddhism tumbled down piecemeal; and the ruin was 30 simply hideous. I have neither the time nor the inclination to 31 describe to you the hideousness that came in the wake of 32 Buddhism. The most hideous ceremonies, the most horrible, the 33 most obscene books that human hands ever wrote or the human 34 brain ever conceived, the most bestial forms that ever

1 passed under the name of religion, have all been the creation
2 of degraded Buddhism.

3 But India has to live, and the spirit of the Lord descended 4 again. He who declared, "I will come whenever virtue subsides", 5 came again, and this time the manifestation was in the South, and 6 up rose that young Brahmin of whom it has been declared that at 7 the age of sixteen he had completed all his writings; the marvellous 8 boy Shankaracharya arose. The writings of this boy of sixteen are 9 the wonders of the modern world, and so was the boy. He wanted to 10 bring back the Indian world to its pristine purity, but think of the 11 amount of the task before him. I have told you a few points about 12 the state of things that existed in India. All these horrors that you 13 are trying to reform are the outcome of that reign of degradation.
14 The Tartars and the Baluchis and all the hideous races of mankind 15 came to India and became Buddhists, and assimilated with us, and 16 brought their national customs, and the whole of our national life 17 became a huge page of the most horrible and the most bestial 18 customs. That was the inheritance which that boy got from the 19 Buddhists, and from that time to this, the whole work in India is a 20 reconquest of this Buddhistic degradation by the Vedanta. It is still 21 going on, it is not yet finished. Shankara came, a great philosopher, 22 and showed that the real essence of Buddhism and that of the 23 Vedanta are not very different, but that the disciples did not 24 understand the Master and have degraded themselves, denied the 25 existence of the soul and of God, and have become atheists. That 26 was what Shankara showed, and all the Buddhists began to come 27 back to the old religion. But then they had become accustomed to 28 all these forms; what could be done?

29 Then came the brilliant Ramanuja. Shankara, with his great 30 intellect, I am afraid, had not as great a heart. Ramanuja's heart 31 was greater. He felt for the downtrodden, he sympathised with 32 them. He took up the ceremonies, the accretions that had gathered, 33 made them pure so far as they could be, and instituted new 34 ceremonies, new methods of worship, for the people who absolutely 35 required them. At the same time he opened the door to the highest 36 spiritual worship from the Brahmin to the Pariah. That was 37 Ramanuja's work. That work rolled on, invaded the North, was 38 taken up by some great leaders there; but that was much later, 39 during the Mohammedan rule; and the brightest of these prophets 40 of comparatively modern times in the North was Chaitanya.

41 You may mark one characteristic since the time of Ramanuja-- 42 the opening of the door of spirituality to every one. That has been 43 the watchword of all prophets succeeding Ramanuja, as it had been 44 the watchword of all the prophets before Shankara. I do not know 45 why Shankara should be represented as rather exclusive; I do not 46 find anything in his writings which is exclusive. As in the case of the 47 declarations of the Lord Buddha, this exclusiveness that has been 48 attributed to Shankara's teachings is most possibly not due to his 49 teachings, but to the incapacity of his disciples. This one great 50 Northern sage, Chaitanya, represented the mad love of the Gopis.
51 Himself a Brahmin, born of one of the most rationalistic families of 52 the day, himself a professor of logic fighting and gaining a word-

1 victory--for, this he had learnt from his childhood as the highest 2 ideal of life and yet through the mercy of some sage the whole life 3 of that man became changed; he gave up his fight, his quarrels, his 4 professorship of logic and became one of the greatest teachers of 5 Bhakti the world has ever known--mad Chaitanya. His Bhakti rolled 6 over the whole land of Bengal, bringing solace to every one. His 7 love knew no bounds. The saint or the sinner, the Hindu or the 8 Mohammedan, the pure or the impure, the prostitute, the 9 streetwalker--all had a share in his love, all had a share in his 10 mercy; and even to the present day, although greatly degenerated, 11 as everything does become in time, his sect is the refuge of the 12 poor, of the downtrodden, of the outcast, of the weak, of those who 13 have been rejected by all society. But at the same time I must 14 remark for truth's sake that we find this: In the philosophic sects 15 we find wonderful liberalism. There is not a man who follows 16 Shankara who will say that all the different sects of India are really 17 different. At the same time he was a tremendous upholder of 18 exclusiveness as regards caste. But with every Vaishnavite 19 preacher we find a wonderful liberalism as to the teaching of caste 20 questions, but exclusiveness as regards religious questions.

21 The one had a great head, the other a large heart, and the 22 time was ripe for one to be born, the embodiment of both this head 23 and heart; the time was ripe for one to be born who in one body 24 would have the brilliant intellect of Shankara and the wonderfully 25 expansive, infinite heart of Chaitanya; one who would see in every 26 sect the same spirit working, the same God; one who would see 27 God in every being, one whose heart would weep for the poor, for 28 the weak, for the outcast, for the downtrodden, for every one in this 29 world, inside India or outside India; and at the same time whose 30 grand brilliant intellect would conceive of such noble thoughts as 31 would harmonise all conflicting sects, not only in India but outside 32 of India, and bring a marvellous harmony, the universal religion of 33 head and heart into existence. Such a man was born, and I had the 34 good fortune to sit at his feet for years. The time was ripe, it was 35 necessary that such a man should be born, and he came; and the 36 most wonderful part of it was that his life's work was just near a 37 city which was full of Western thought, a city which had run mad 38 after these occidental ideas, a city which had become more 39 Europeanised than any other city in India. There he lived, without 40 any book-learning whatsoever; this great intellect never learnt even 41 to write his own name,³ but the most brilliant graduates of our 42 university found in him an intellectual giant. He was a strange man, 43 this Shri Ramakrishna Paramahansa. It is a long, long story, and I 44 have no time to tell anything about him tonight. Let me now only 45 mention the great Shri Ramakrishna, the fulfilment of the Indian 46 sages, the sage for the time, one whose teaching is just now, in the 47 present time, most beneficial. And mark the divine power working 48 behind the man. The son of a poor priest, born in an out-of-the-way 49 village, unknown and unthought of, today is worshipped literally by

1 ³ ?Later research has shown that although Shri Ramakrishna was almost 2 illiterate in the Western sense, he could read and write Bengali.
3

1 thousands in Europe and America, and tomorrow will be 2 worshipped by thousands more. Who knows the plans of the Lord!

3 Now, my brothers, if you do not see the hand, the finger of 4 Providence, it is because you are blind, born blind indeed. If time
5 comes, and another opportunity, I will speak to you more fully about 6 him. Only let me say now that if I have told you one word of truth, it 7 was his and his alone, and if I have told you many things which 8 were not true, which were not correct, which were not beneficial to 9 the human race, they were all mine, and on me is the responsibility.

THE WORK BEFORE US

(Delivered at the Triplicane Literary Society, Madras)

The problem of life is becoming deeper and broader every day as the world moves on. The watchword and the essence have been preached in the days of yore when the Vedantic truth was first discovered, the solidarity of all life. One atom in this universe cannot move without dragging the whole world along with it. There cannot be any progress without the whole world following in the wake, and it is becoming every day clearer that the solution of any problem can never be attained on racial, or national, or narrow grounds. Every idea has to become broad till it covers the whole of this world, every aspiration must go on increasing till it has engulfed the whole of humanity, nay, the whole of life, within its scope. This will explain why our country for the last few centuries has not been what she was in the past. We find that one of the causes which led to this degeneration was the narrowing of our view, narrowing the scope of our actions.

1 Two curious nations there have been--sprung of the same
2 race, but placed in different circumstances and environments,
3 working out the problems of life each in its own particular way. I
4 mean the ancient Hindu and the ancient Greek. The Indian Aryan-- 5 bounded on the north by the snow-caps of the Himalayas, with 6 fresh-water rivers like rolling oceans surrounding him in the plains, 7 with eternal forests which, to him, seemed to be the end of the 8 world--turned his vision inward; and given the natural instinct, the 9 superfine brain of the Aryan, with this sublime scenery surrounding 10 him, the natural result was that he became introspective. The 11 analysis of his own mind was the great theme of the Indo-Aryan.
12 With the Greek, on the other hand, who arrived at a part of the 13 earth which was more beautiful than sublime, the beautiful islands 14 of the Grecian Archipelago, nature all around him generous yet 15 simple--his mind naturally went outside. It wanted to analyse the 16 external world. And as a result we find that from India have sprung 17 all the analytical sciences, and from Greece all the sciences of 18 generalisation. The Hindu mind went on in its own direction and 19 produced the most marvellous results. Even at the present day, the 20 logical capacity of the Hindus, and the tremendous power which the 21 Indian brain still possesses, is beyond compare. We all know that 22 our boys pitched against the boys of any other country triumph 23 always. At the same time when the national vigour went, perhaps 24 one or two centuries before the Mohammedan conquest of India, 25 this national faculty became so much exaggerated that it degraded 26 itself, and we find some of this degradation in everything in India, in 27 art, in music, in sciences, in everything. In art, no more was there a 28 broad conception, no more the symmetry of form and sublimity of 29 conception, but the tremendous attempt at the ornate and florid 30 style had arisen. The originality of the race seemed to have been 31 lost. In music no more were there the soul-stirring ideas of the 32 ancient Sanskrit music, no more did each note stand, as it were, on 33 its own feet, and produce the marvellous harmony, but each note 34 had lost its individuality. The whole of modern music is a jumble of 35 notes, a confused mass of curves. That is a sign of degradation in 36 music. So, if you analyse your idealistic conceptions, you will find 37 the same attempt at ornate figures, and loss of originality. And even 38 in religion, your special field, there came the most horrible 39 degradations. What can you expect of a race which for hundreds of 40 years has been busy in discussing such momentous problems as 41 whether we should drink a glass of water with the right hand or the 42 left? What more degradation can there be than that the greatest 43 minds of a country have been discussing about the kitchen for 44 several hundreds of years, discussing whether I may touch you or 45 you touch me, and what is the penance for this touching! The 46 themes of the Vedanta, the sublimest and the most glorious 47 conceptions of God and soul ever preached on earth, were half-lost, 48 buried in the forests, preserved by a few Sannyasins, while the rest 49 of the nation discussed the momentous questions of touching each 50 other, and dress, and food. The Mohammedan conquest gave us 51 many good things, no doubt; even the lowest man in the world can 52 teach something to the highest; at the same time it could not bring 53 vigour into the race. Then for good or evil, the English conquest of 1 India took place. Of course every conquest is bad, for conquest is 2 an evil, foreign government is an evil, no doubt; but even through 3 evil comes good sometimes, and the great good of the English 4 conquest is this: England, nay the whole of Europe, has to thank 5 Greece for its civilisation. It is Greece that speaks through 6 everything in Europe. Every building, every piece of furniture has 7 the impress of Greece upon it; European science and art are 8 nothing but Grecian. Today the ancient Greek is meeting the 9 ancient Hindu on the soil of India. Thus slowly and silently the 10 leaven has come; the broadening, the life-giving and the revivalist 11 movement that we see all around us has been worked out by these 12 forces together. A broader and more generous conception of life is 13 before us; and although at first we have been deluded a little and 14 wanted to narrow things down, we are finding out today that these 15 generous impulses which are at work, these broader conceptions of 16 life, are the logical interpretation of what is in our ancient books.

17 They are the carrying out, to the rigorously logical effect, of the 18 primary conceptions of our own ancestors. To become broad, to go 19 out, to amalgamate, to universalise, is the end of our aims. And all 20 the time we have been making ourselves smaller and smaller, and 21 dissociating ourselves, contrary to the plans laid down in our 22 scriptures.

23 Several dangers are in the way, and one is that of the extreme 24 conception that we are the people in the world. With all my love for 25 India, and with all my patriotism and veneration for the ancients, I 26 cannot but think that we have to learn many things from other 27 nations. We must be always ready to sit at the feet of all, for, mark 28 you, every one can teach us great lessons. Says our great law-giver 29 Manu: "Receive some good knowledge even from the low-born, and 30 even from the man of lowest birth learn by service the road to 31 heaven." We, therefore, as true children of Manu, must obey his 32 commands and be ready to learn the lessons of this life or the life 33 hereafter from any one who can teach us. At the same time we must 34 not forget that we have also to teach a great lesson to the world.
35 We cannot do without the world outside India; it was our 36 foolishness that we thought we could, and we have paid the penalty 37 by about a thousand years of slavery. That we did not go out to 38 compare things with other nations, did not mark the workings that 39 have been all around us, has been the one great cause of this 40 degradation of the Indian mind. We have paid the penalty; let us do 41 it no more. All such foolish ideas that Indians must not go out of 42 India are childish. They must be knocked on the head; the more you 43 go out and travel among the nations of the world, the better for you 44 and for your country. If you had done that for hundreds of years 45 past, you would not be here today at the feet of every nation that 46 wants to rule India. The first manifest effect of life is expansion. You 47 must expand if you want to live. The moment you have ceased to 48 expand, death is upon you, danger is ahead. I went to America and 49 Europe, to which you so kindly allude; I have to, because that is the 50 first sign of the revival of national life, expansion. This reviving 51 national life, expanding inside, threw me off, and thousands will be 52 thrown off in that way. Mark my words, it has got to come if this 53 nation lives at all. This question, therefore, is the greatest of the 1 signs of the revival of national life, and through this expansion our 2 quota of offering to the general mass of human knowledge, our 3 contribution to the general upheaval of the world, is going out to 4 the external world.

5 Again, this is not a new thing. Those of you who think that the 6 Hindus have been always confined within the four walls of their 7 country through all ages, are entirely mistaken; you have not 8 studied the old books, you have not studied the history of the race 9 aright if you think so. Each nation must give in order to live. When 10 you give life, you will have life; when you receive, you must pay for 11 it by giving to all others; and that we have been living for so many 12 thousands of years is a fact that stares us in the face, and the 13 solution that remains is that we have been always giving to the 14 outside world, whatever the ignorant may think. But the gift of 15 India is the gift of religion and philosophy, and wisdom and 16 spirituality. And religion does not want cohorts to march before its 17 path and clear its way. Wisdom and philosophy do not want to be 18 carried on floods of blood. Wisdom and philosophy do not march 19 upon bleeding human bodies, do not march with violence but come 20 on the wings of peace and love, and that has always been so.
21 Therefore we had to give. I was asked by a young lady in London, 22 "What have you Hindus done? You have never even conquered a 23 single nation." That is true from the point of view of the 24 Englishman, the brave, the heroic, the Kshatriya--conquest is the 25 greatest glory that one man can have over another. That is true 26 from his point of view, but from ours it is quite the opposite. If I ask 27 myself what has been the cause of India's greatness, I answer, 28 because we have never conquered. That is our glory. You are 29 hearing every day, and sometimes, I am sorry to say, from men who 30 ought to know better, denunciations of our religion, because it is 31 not at all a conquering religion. To my mind that is the argument 32 why our religion is truer than any other religion, because it never 33 conquered, because it never shed blood, because its mouth always 34 shed on all, words of blessing, of peace, words of love and 35 sympathy. It is here and here alone that the ideals of toleration 36 were first preached. And it is here and here alone that toleration 37 and sympathy have become practical; it is theoretical in every other 38 country; it is here and here alone, that the Hindu builds mosques 39 for the Mohammedans and churches for the Christians.

40 So, you see, our message has gone out to the world many a 41 time, but slowly, silently, unperceived. It is on a par with everything 42 in India. The one characteristic of Indian thought is its silence, its 43 calmness. At the same time the tremendous power that is behind it 44 is never expressed by violence. It is always the silent mesmerism of 45 Indian thought. If a foreigner takes up our literature to study, at 46 first it is disgusting to him; there is not the same stir, perhaps, the 47 same amount of go that rouses him instantly. Compare the 48 tragedies of Europe with our tragedies. The one is full of action, 49 that rouses you for the moment, but when it is over there comes the 50 reaction, and everything is gone, washed off as it were from your 51 brains. Indian tragedies are like the mesmerist's power, quiet, 52 silent, but as you go on studying them they fascinate you; you

1 cannot move; you are bound; and whoever has dared to touch our 2 literature has felt the bondage, and is there bound for ever. Like the 3 gentle dew that falls unseen and unheard, and yet brings into 4 blossom the fairest of roses, has been the contribution of India to 5 the thought of the world. Silent, unperceived, yet omnipotent in its 6 effect, it has revolutionised the thought of the world, yet nobody 7 knows when it did so. It was once remarked to me, "How difficult it 8 is to ascertain the name of any writer in India", to which I replied, 9 "That is the Indian idea." Indian writers are not like modern writers 10 who steal ninety per cent of their ideas from other authors, while 11 only ten per cent is their own, and they take care to write a preface 12 in which they say, "For these ideas I am responsible". Those great 13 master minds producing momentous results in the hearts of 14 mankind were content to write their books without even putting 15 their names, and to die quietly, leaving the books to posterity. Who 16 knows the writers of our philosophy, who knows the writers of our 17 Puranas? They all pass under the generic name of Vyasa, and 18 Kapila, and so on. They have been true children of Shri Krishna.
19 They have been true followers of the Gita; they practically carried 20 out the great mandate, "To work you have the right, but not to the 21 fruits thereof."

22 Thus India is working upon the world, but one condition is 23 necessary. Thoughts like merchandise can only run through 24 channels made by somebody. Roads have to be made before even 25 thought can travel from one place to another, and whenever in the 26 history of the world a great conquering nation has arisen, linking 27 the different parts of the world together, then has poured through 28 these channels the thought of India and thus entered into the veins 29 of every race. Before even the Buddhists were born, there are 30 evidences accumulating every day that Indian thought penetrated 31 the world. Before Buddhism, Vedanta had penetrated into China, 32 into Persia, and the Islands of the Eastern Archipelago. Again when 33 the mighty mind of the Greek had linked the different parts of the 34 Eastern world together there came Indian thought; and Christianity 35 with all its boasted civilisation is but a collection of little bits of 36 Indian thought. Ours is the religion of which Buddhism with all its 37 greatness is a rebel child, and of which Christianity is a very patchy 38 imitation. One of these cycles has again arrived. There is the 39 tremendous power of England which has linked the different parts 40 of the world together. English roads no more are content like 41 Roman roads to run over lands, but they have also ploughed the 42 deep in all directions. From ocean to ocean run the roads of 43 England. Every part of the world has been linked to every other 44 part, and electricity plays a most marvellous part as the new 45 messenger. Under all these circumstances we find again India 46 reviving and ready to give her own quota to the progress and 47 civilisation of the world. And that I have been forced, as it were, by 48 nature, to go over and preach to America and England is the result.
49 Every one of us ought to have seen that the time had arrived.
50 Everything looks propitious, and Indian thought, philosophical and 51 spiritual, must once more go over and conquer the world. The 52 problem before us, therefore, is assuming larger proportions every 53 day. It is not only that we must revive our own country--that is a

1 small matter; I am an imaginative man--and my idea is the conquest
2 of the whole world by the Hindu race.

3 There have been great conquering races in the world. We also 4 have been great conquerors. The story of our conquest has been 5 described by that noble Emperor of India, Ashoka, as the conquest 6 of religion and of spirituality. Once more the world must be 7 conquered by India. This is the dream of my life, and I wish that 8 each one of you who hear me today will have the same dream in 9 your minds, and stop not till you have realised the dream. They will 10 tell you every day that we had better look to our own homes first 11 and then go to work outside. But I will tell you in plain language 12 that you work best when you work for others. The best work that 13 you ever did for yourselves was when you worked for others, trying 14 to disseminate your ideas in foreign languages beyond the seas, 15 and this very meeting is proof how the attempt to enlighten other 16 countries with your thoughts is helping your own country. One-17 fourth of the effect that has been produced in this country by my 18 going to England and America would not have been brought about, 19 had I confined my ideas only to India. This is the great ideal before 20 us, and every one must be ready for it--the conquest of the whole 21 world by India--nothing less than that, and we must all get ready for 22 it, strain every nerve for it. Let foreigners come and flood the land 23 with their armies, never mind. Up, India, and conquer the world
24 with your spirituality! Ay, as has been declared on this soil first, love 25 must conquer hatred, hatred cannot conquer itself. Materialism and 26 all its miseries can never be conquered by materialism. Armies 27 when they attempt to conquer armies only multiply and make 28 brutes of humanity. Spirituality must conquer the West. Slowly they 29 are finding out that what they want is spirituality to preserve them 30 as nations. They are waiting for it, they are eager for it. Where is 31 the supply to come from? Where are the men ready to go out to 32 every country in the world with the messages of the great sages of 33 India? Where are the men ready to go out to every country in the 34 world with the messages of the great sages of India? Where are the 35 men who are ready to sacrifice everything, so that this message 36 shall reach every corner of the world? Such heroic souls are wanted 37 to help the spread of truth. Such heroic workers are wanted to go 38 abroad and help to disseminate the great truths of Vedanta. The 39 world wants it; without it the world will be destroyed. The whole of 40 the Western world is on a volcano which may burst tomorrow, go to 41 pieces tomorrow. They have searched every corner of the world and 42 have found no respite. They have drunk deep of the cup of pleasure 43 and found it vanity. Now is the time to work so that India's spiritual 44 ideas may penetrate deep into the West. Therefore young men of 45 Madras, I specially ask you to remember this. We must go out, we 46 must conquer the world through our spirituality and philosophy.
47 There is no other alternative, we must do it or die. The only 48 condition of national life, of awakened and vigorous national life, is 49 the conquest of the world by Indian thought.

1 At the same time we must not forget that what I mean by the 2 conquest of the world by spiritual thought is the sending out of life-3 giving principles, not the hundreds of superstitions that we have 4 been hugging to our breasts for centuries. These have to be weeded 5 out even on this soil, and thrown aside, so that they may die for 6 ever. These are the causes of the degradation of the race and will 7 lead to the softening of the brain. That brain which cannot think 8 high and noble thoughts, which has lost all power of originality, 9 which has lost all vigour, that brain which is always poisoning itself 10 with all sorts of little superstitions passing under the name of 11 religion, we must beware of. In our sight, here in India, there are 12 several dangers. Of these, the two, Scylla and Charybdis, rank 13 materialism and its opposite arrant superstition, must be avoided.
14 There is the man today who after drinking the cup of Western 15 wisdom, thinks that he knows everything. He laughs at the ancient 16 sages. All Hindu thought to him is arrant trash--philosophy mere 17 child's prattle, and religion the superstition of fools. On the other 18 hand, there is the man educated, but a sort of monomaniac, who 19 runs to the other extreme and wants to explain the omen of this and 20 that. He has philosophical and metaphysical, and Lord knows what 21 other puerile explanations for every superstition that belongs to his 22 peculiar race, or his peculiar gods, or his peculiar village. Every 23 little village superstition is to him a mandate of the Vedas, and upon 24 the carrying out of it, according to him, depends the national life.
25 You must beware of this. I would rather see every one of you rank 26 atheists than superstitious fools, for the atheist is alive and you can 27 make something out of him. But if superstition enters, the brain is 28 gone, the brain is softening, degradation has seized upon the life.
29 Avoid these two. Brave, bold men, these are what we want. What 30 we want is vigour in the blood, strength in the nerves, iron muscles 31 and nerves of steel, not softening namby-pamby ideas. Avoid all 32 these. Avoid all mystery. There is no mystery in religion. Is there 33 any mystery in the Vedanta, or in the Vedas, or in the Samhitas, or 34 in the Puranas? What secret societies did the sages of yore 35 establish to preach their religion? What sleight-of-hand tricks are 36 there recorded as used by them to bring their grand truths to 37 humanity? Mystery mongering and superstition are always signs of 38 weakness. These are always signs of degradation and of death.
39 Therefore beware of them; be strong, and stand on your own feet.
40 Great things are there, most marvellous things. We may call them 41 supernatural things so far as our ideas of nature go, but not one of 42 these things is a mystery. It was never preached on this soil that the 43 truths of religion were mysteries or that they were the property of 44 secret societies sitting on the snow-caps of the Himalayas. I have 45 been in the Himalayas. You have not been there; it is several 46 hundred miles from your homes. I am a Sannyasin, and I have been 47 for the last fourteen years on my feet. These mysterious societies 48 do not exist anywhere. Do not run after these superstitions. Better 49 for you and for the race that you become rank atheists, because you 50 would have strength, but these are degradation and death. Shame 51 on humanity that strong men should spend their time on these 52 superstitions, spend all their time in inventing allegories to explain 53 the most rotten superstitions of the world. Be bold; do not try to 1 explain everything that way. The fact is that we have many 2 superstitions, many bad spots and sores on our body--these have to 3 be excised, cut off, and destroyed--but these do not destroy our 4 religion, our national life, our spirituality. Every principle of religion 5 is safe, and the sooner these black spots are purged away, the 6 better the principles will shine, the more gloriously. Stick to them.

7 You hear claims made by every religion as being the universal 8 religion of the world. Let me tell you in the first place that perhaps 9 there never will be such a thing, but if there is a religion which can 10 lay claim to be that, it is only our religion and no other, because 11 every other religion depends on some person or persons. All the 12 other religions have been built round the life of what they think a 13 historical man; and what they think the strength of religion is really 14 the weakness, for disprove the historicity of the man and the whole 15 fabric tumbles to the ground. Half the lives of these great founders 16 of religions have been broken into pieces, and the other half 17 doubted very seriously. As such, every truth that had its sanction 18 only in their words vanishes into air. But the truths of our religion, 19 although we have persons by the score, do not depend upon them.
20 The glory of Krishna is not that he was Krishna, but that he was the 21 great teacher of Vedanta. If he had not been so, his name would 22 have died out of India in the same way as the name of Buddha has 23 done. Thus our allegiance is to the principles always, and not to the 24 persons. Persons are but the embodiments, the illustrations of the 25 principles. If the principles are there, the persons will come by the 26 thousands and millions. If the principle is safe, persons like Buddha 27 will be born by the hundreds and thousands. But if the principle is 28 lost and forgotten and the whole of national life tries to cling round 29 a so-called historical person, woe unto that religion, danger unto 30 that religion! Ours is the only religion that does not depends on a 31 person or persons; it is based upon principles. At the same time 32 there is room for millions of persons. There is ample ground for 33 introducing persons, but each one of them must be an illustration of 34 the principles. We must not forget that. These principles of our 35 religion are all safe, and it should be the life-work of every one of us 36 to keep them safe, and to keep them free from the accumulating 37 dirt and dust of ages. It is strange that in spite of the degradation 38 that seized upon the race again and again, these principles of the 39 Vedanta were never tarnished. No one, however wicked, ever dared 40 to throw dirt upon them. Our scriptures are the best preserved 41 scriptures in the world. Compared to other books there have been 42 no interpolations, no text-torturing, no destroying of the essence of 43 the thought in them. It is there just as it was first, directing the 44 human mind towards the ideal, the goal.

45 You find that these texts have been commented upon by 46 different commentators, preached by great teachers, and sects 47 founded upon them; and you find that in these books of the Vedas 48 there are various apparently contradictory ideas. There are certain 49 texts which are entirely dualistic, others are entirely monistic. The 50 dualistic commentator, knowing no better, wishes to knock the 51 monistic texts on the head. Preachers and priests want to explain 52 them in the dualistic meaning. The monistic commentator serves

1 the dualistic texts in a similar fashion. Now this is not the fault of 2 the Vedas. It is foolish to attempt to prove that the whole of the 3 Vedas is dualistic. It is equally foolish to attempt to prove that the 4 whole of the Vedas is non-dualistic. They are dualistic and non-5 dualistic both. We understand them better today in the light of 6 newer ideas. These are but different conceptions leading to the 7 final conclusion that both dualistic and monistic conceptions are 8 necessary for the evolution of the mind, and therefore the Vedas 9 preach them. In mercy to the human race the Vedas show the 10 various steps to the higher goal. Not that they are contradictory, 11 vain words used by the Vedas to delude children; they are 12 necessary not only for children, but for many a grown-up man. So 13 long as we have a body and so long as we are deluded by the idea 14 of our identity with the body, so long as we have five senses and see 15 the external world, we must have a Personal God. For if we have all 16 these ideas, we must take, as the great Ramanuja has proved, all 17 the ideas about God and nature and the individualised soul; when 18 you take the one you have to take the whole triangle--we cannot 19 avoid it. Therefore as long as you see the external world, to avoid a 20 Personal God and a personal soul is arrant lunacy. But there may be 21 times in the lives of sages when the human mind transcends as it 22 were its own limitations, when man goes even beyond nature, to the 23 realm of which the Shruti declares, "whence words fall back with 24 the mind without reaching it"; "There the eyes cannot reach nor 25 speech nor mind"; "We cannot say that we know it, we cannot say 26 that we do not know it". There the human soul transcends all 27 limitations, and then and then alone flashes into the human soul the 28 conception of monism: I and the whole universe are one; I and 29 Brahman are one. And this conclusion you will find has not only 30 been reached through knowledge and philosophy, but parts of it 31 through the power of love. You read in the Bhagavata, when 32 Krishna disappeared and the Gopis bewailed his disappearance, 33 that at last the thought of Krishna became so prominent in their 34 minds that each one forgot her own body and thought she was 35 Krishna, and began to decorate herself and to play as he did. We 36 understand, therefore, that this identity comes even through love.
37 There was an ancient Persian Sufi poet, and one of his poems said, 38 "I came to the Beloved and beheld the door was closed; I knocked 39 at the door and from inside a voice came, 'Who is there?' I replied, 40 'I am'. The door did not open. A second time I came and knocked at 41 the door and the same voice asked, 'Who is there?' 'I am so-and-42 so.' The door did not open. A third time I came and the same voice 43 asked, 'Who is there?' 'I am Thyself, my Love', and the door 44 opened."

45 There are, therefore, many stages, and we need not quarrel 46 about them even if there have been quarrels among the ancient 47 commentators, whom all of us ought to revere; for there is no 48 limitation to knowledge, there is no omniscience exclusively the 49 property of any one in ancient or modern times. If there have been 50 sages and Rishis in the past, be sure that there will be many now. If 51 there have been Vyasas and Valmikis and Shankaracharyas in 52 ancient times, why may not each one of you become a 53 Shankaracharya? This is another point of our religion that you must

1 always remember, that in all other scriptures inspiration is quoted 2 as their authority, but this inspiration is limited to a very few 3 persons, and through them the truth came to the masses, and we 4 have all to obey them. Truth came to Jesus of Nazareth, and we 5 must all obey him. But the truth came to the Rishis of India--the 6 Mantra-drashtas, the seers of thought--and will come to all Rishis in 7 the future, not to talkers, not to book-swallowers, not to scholars, 8 not to philologists, but to seers of thought. The Self is not to be 9 reached by too much talking, not even by the highest intellects, not 10 even by the study of the scriptures. The scriptures themselves say 11 so. Do you find in any other scripture such a bold assertion as that-- 12 not even by the study of the Vedas will you reach the Atman? You 13 must open your heart. Religion is not going to church, or putting 14 marks on the forehead, or dressing in a peculiar fashion; you may 15 paint yourselves in all the colours of the rainbow, but if the heart 16 has not been opened, if you have not realised God, it is all vain. If 17 one has the colour of the heart, he does not want any external 18 colour. That is the true religious realisation. We must not forget that 19 colours and all these things are good so far as they help; so far they 20 are all welcome. But they are apt to degenerate and instead of 21 helping they retard, and a man identifies religion with externalities.
22 Going to the temple becomes tantamount to spiritual life. Giving 23 something to a priest becomes tantamount to religious life. These 24 are dangerous and pernicious, and should be at once checked. Our 25 scriptures declare again and again that even the knowledge of the 26 external senses is not religion. That is religion which makes us 27 realise the Unchangeable One, and that is the religion for ever one.
28 He who realises transcendental truth, he who realises the Atman in 29 his own nature, he who comes face to face with God, sees God 30 alone in everything, has become a Rishi. And there is no religious 31 life for you until you have become a Rishi. Then alone religion 32 begins for you, now is only the preparation. Then religion dawns 33 upon you, now you are only undergoing intellectual gymnastics and 34 physical tortures.

35 We must, therefore, remember that our religion lays down 36 distinctly and clearly that every one who wants salvation must pass 37 through the stage of Rishihood--must become a Mantra-drashta, 38 must see God. That is salvation; that is the law laid down by our 39 scriptures. Then it becomes easy to look into the scripture with our 40 own eyes, understand the meaning for ourselves, to analyse just 41 what we want, and to understand the truth for ourselves. This is 42 what has to be done. At the same time we must pay all reverence to 43 the ancient sages for their work. They were great, these ancients, 44 but we want to be greater. They did great work in the past, but we 45 must do greater work than they. They had hundreds of Rishis in 46 ancient India. We will have millions--we are going to have, and the 47 sooner every one of you believes in this, the better for India and the 48 better for the world. Whatever you believe, that you will be. If you 49 believe yourselves to be sages, sages you will be tomorrow. There is 50 nothing to obstruct you. For if there is one common doctrine that 51 runs through all our apparently fighting and contradictory sects, it 52 is that all glory, power, and purity are within the soul already; only 53 according to Ramanuja, the soul contracts and expands at times,

1 and according to Shankara, it comes under a delusion. Never mind
2 these differences. All admit the truth that the power is there-- 3 potential or manifest it is there--and the sooner you believe that, the 4 better for you. All power is within you; you can do anything and 5 everything. Believe in that, do not believe that you are weak; do not 6 believe that you are half-crazy lunatics, as most of us do nowadays.
7 You can do anything and everything without even the guidance of 8 any one. All power is there. Stand up and express the divinity within 9 you.

THE FUTURE OF INDIA

This is the ancient land where wisdom made its home before it went into any other country, the same India whose influx of spirituality is represented, as it were, on the material plane, by rolling rivers like oceans, where the eternal Himalayas, rising tier above tier with their snowcaps, looks as it were into the very mysteries of heaven. Here is the same India whose soil has been trodden by the feet of the greatest sages that ever lived. Here first sprang up inquiries into the nature of man and into the internal world. Here first arose the doctrines of the immortality of the soul, the existence of a supervising God, an immanent God in nature and in man, and here the highest ideals of religion and philosophy have attained their culminating points. This is the land from whence, like tidal waves, spirituality and philosophy have again and again rushed out and deluged the world, and this is the land from whence once more such tides must proceed in order to bring life and vigour into the decaying races of mankind. It is the same India which has withstood the shocks of centuries, of hundreds of foreign invasions, of hundreds of upheavals of manners and customs. It is the same land which stands firmer than any rock in the world, with its undying vigour, indestructible life. Its life is of the same nature as the soul, without beginning and without end, immortal; and we are the children of such a country.

Children of India, I am here to speak to you today about some practical things, and my object in reminding you about the glories of the past is simply this. Many times have I been told that looking into the past only degenerates and leads to nothing, and that we should look to the future. That is true. But out of the past is built the future. Look back, therefore, as far as you can, drink deep of the eternal fountains that are behind, and after that, look forward, march forward and make India brighter, greater, much higher than she ever was. Our ancestors were great. We must first recall that. We must learn the elements of our being, the blood that courses in our veins; we must have faith in that blood and what it did in the past; and out of that faith and consciousness of past greatness, we must build an India yet greater than what she has been. There have been periods of decay and degradation. I do not attach much importance to them; we all know that. Such periods have been necessary. A mighty tree produces a beautiful ripe fruit. That fruit falls on the ground, it decays and rots, and out of that decay springs the root and the future tree, perhaps mightier than the first one. This period of decay through which we have passed was all the more necessary. Out of this decay is coming the India of the future; it is sprouting, its first leaves are already out; and a mighty, gigantic tree, the Urdhvamula, is here, already beginning to appear; and it is about that that I am going to speak to you.

The problems in India are more complicated, more momentous, than the problems in any other country. Race, religion, language, government--all these together make a nation. The

1 elements which compose the nations of the world are indeed very 2 few, taking race after race, compared to this country. Here have 3 been the Aryan, the Dravidian, the Tartar, the Turk, the Mogul, the 4 European--all the nations of the world, as it were, pouring their 5 blood into this land. Of languages the most wonderful 6 conglomeration is here; of manners and customs there is more 7 difference between two Indian races than between the European 8 and the Eastern races.

9 The one common ground that we have is our sacred tradition, 10 our religion. That is the only common ground, and upon that we 11 shall have to build. In Europe, political ideas form the national 12 unity. In Asia, religious ideals form the national unity. The unity in 13 religion, therefore, is absolutely necessary as the first condition of 14 the future of India. There must be the recognition of one religion 15 throughout the length and breadth of this land. What do I mean by 16 one religion? Not in the sense of one religion as held among the 17 Christians, or the Mohammedans, or the Buddhists. We know that 18 our religion has certain common grounds, common to all our sects, 19 however varying their conclusions may be, however different their 20 claims may be. So there are certain common grounds; and within 21 their limitation this religion of ours admits of a marvellous 22 variation, an infinite amount of liberty to think and live our own 23 lives. We all know that, at least those of us who have thought; and 24 what we want is to bring out these life-giving common principles of 25 our religion, and let every man, woman, and child, throughout the 26 length and breadth of this country, understand them, know them, 27 and try to bring them out in their lives. This is the first step; and, 28 therefore, it has to be taken.

29 We see how in Asia, and especially in India, race difficulties, 30 linguistic difficulties, social difficulties, national difficulties, all melt 31 away before this unifying power of religion. We know that to the 32 Indian mind there is nothing higher than religious ideals, that this is 33 the keynote of Indian life, and we can only work in the line of least 34 resistance. It is not only true that the ideal of religion is the highest 35 ideal; in the case of India it is the only possible means of work; 36 work in any other line, without first strengthening this, would be 37 disastrous. Therefore the first plank in the making of a future India, 38 the first step that is to be hewn out of that rock of ages, is this 39 unification of religion. All of us have to be taught that we Hindus-- 40 dualists, qualified monists, or monists, Shaivas, Vaishnavas, or 41 Pashupatas--to whatever denomination we may belong, have certain 42 common ideas behind us, and that the time has come when for the 43 well-being of ourselves, for the well-being of our race, we must give 44 up all our little quarrels and differences. Be sure, these quarrels 45 are entirely wrong; they are condemned by our scriptures, 46 forbidden by our forefathers; and those great men from whom we 47 claim our descent, whose blood is in our veins, look down with 48 contempt on their children quarrelling about minute differences.

49 With the giving up of quarrels all other improvements will 50 come. When the life-blood is strong and pure, no disease germ can 51 live in that body. Our life-blood is spirituality. If it flows clear, if it 52 flows strong and pure and vigorous, everything is right; political,

1 social, any other material defects, even the poverty of the land, will 2 all be cured if that blood is pure. For if the disease germ be thrown 3 out, nothing will be able to enter into the blood. To take a simile 4 from modern medicine, we know that there must be two causes to 5 produce a disease, some poison germ outside, and the state of the 6 body. Until the body is in a state to admit the germs, until the body 7 is degraded to a lower vitality so that the germs may enter and 8 thrive and multiply, there is no power in any germ and in the world 9 to produce a disease in the body. In fact, millions of germs are 10 continually passing through everyone's body; but so long as it is 11 vigorous, it never is conscious of them. It is only when the body is 12 weak that these germs take possession of it and produce disease.
13 Just so with the national life. It is when the national body is weak 14 that all sorts of disease germs, in the political state of the race or in 15 its social state, in its educational or intellectual state, crowd into 16 the system and produce disease. To remedy it, therefore, we must 17 go to the root of this disease and cleanse the blood of all impurities.
18 The one tendency will be to strengthen the man, to make the blood 19 pure, the body vigorous, so that it will be able to resist and throw 20 off all external poisons.

21 We have seen that our vigour, our strength, nay, our national 22 life is in our religion. I am not going to discuss now whether it is 23 right or not, whether it is correct or not, whether it is beneficial or 24 not in the long run, to have this vitality in religion, but for good or 25 evil it is there; you cannot get out of it, you have it now and for ever, 26 and you have to stand by it, even if you have not the same faith that 27 I have in our religion. You are bound by it, and if you give it up, you 28 are smashed to pieces. That is the life of our race and that must be 29 strengthened. You have withstood the shocks of centuries simply 30 because you took great care of it, you sacrificed everything else for 31 it. Your forefathers underwent everything boldly, even death itself, 32 but preserved their religion. Temple after temple was broken down 33 by the foreign conqueror, but no sooner had the wave passed than 34 the spire of the temple rose up again. Some of these old temples of 35 Southern India and those like Somnath of Gujarat will teach you 36 volumes of wisdom, will give you a keener insight into the history of 37 the race than any amount of books. Mark how these temples bear 38 the marks of a hundred attacks and a hundred regenerations, 39 continually destroyed and continually springing up out of the ruins, 40 rejuvenated and strong as ever! That is the national mind, that is 41 the national life-current. Follow it and it leads to glory. Give it up 42 and you die; death will be the only result, annihilation the only 43 effect, the moment you step beyond that life-current. I do not mean 44 to say that other things are not necessary. I do not mean to say that 45 political or social improvements are not necessary, but what I mean 46 is this, and I want you to bear it in mind, that they are secondary 47 here and that religion is primary. The Indian mind is first religious, 48 then anything else. So this is to be strengthened, and how to do it? I 49 will lay before you my ideas. They have been in my mind for a long 50 time, even years before I left the shores of Madras for America, and 51 that I went to America and England was simply for propagating 52 those ideas. I did not care at all for the Parliament of Religions or 53 anything else; it was simply an opportunity; for it was really those 1 ideas of mine that took me all over the world.

1 My idea is first of all to bring out the gems of spirituality that 2 are stored up in our books and in the possession of a few only,
3 hidden, as it were, in monasteries and in forests--to bring them out; 4 to bring the knowledge out of them, not only from the hands where 5 it is hidden, but from the still more inaccessible chest, the language 6 in which it is preserved, the incrustation of centuries of Sanskrit 7 words. In one word, I want to make them popular. I want to bring 8 out these ideas and let them be the common property of all, of 9 every man in India, whether he knows the Sanskrit language or not.
10 The great difficulty in the way is the Sanskrit language--the glorious 11 language of ours; and this difficulty cannot be removed until--if it is 12 possible--the whole of our nation are good Sanskrit scholars. You 13 will understand the difficulty when I tell you that I have been 14 studying this language all my life, and yet every new book is new to 15 me. How much more difficult would it then be for people who never 16 had time to study the language thoroughly! Therefore the ideas 17 must be taught in the language of the people; at the same time, 18 Sanskrit education must go on along with it, because the very 19 sound of Sanskrit words gives a prestige and a power and a 20 strength to the race. The attempts of the great Ramanuja and of 21 Chaitanya and of Kabir to raise the lower classes of India show that 22 marvellous results were attained during the lifetime of those great 23 prophets; yet the later failures have to be explained, and cause 24 shown why the effect of their teachings stopped almost within a 25 century of the passing away of these great Masters. The secret is 26 here. They raised the lower classes; they had all the wish that these 27 should come up, but they did not apply their energies to the 28 spreading of the Sanskrit language among the masses. Even the 29 great Buddha made one false step when he stopped the Sanskrit 30 language from being studied by the masses. He wanted rapid and 31 immediate results, and translated and preached in the language of 32 the day, Pali. That was grand; he spoke in the language of the 33 people, and the people understood him. That was great; it spread 34 the ideas quickly and made them reach far and wide. But along with 35 that, Sanskrit ought to have spread. Knowledge came, but the 36 prestige was not there, culture was not there. It is culture that 37 withstands shocks, not a simple mass of knowledge. You can put a 38 mass of knowledge into the world, but that will not do it much good.
39 There must come culture into the blood. We all know in modern 40 times of nations which have masses of knowledge, but what of 41 them? They are like tigers, they are like savages, because culture is 42 not there. Knowledge is only skin-deep, as civilisation is, and a little 43 scratch brings out the old savage. Such things happen; this is the 44 danger. Teach the masses in the vernaculars, give them ideas; they 45 will get information, but something more is necessary; give them 46 culture. Until you give them that, there can be no permanence in 47 the raised condition of the masses. There will be another caste 48 created, having the advantage of the Sanskrit language, which will 49 quickly get above the rest and rule them all the same. The only 50 safety, I tell you men who belong to the lower castes, the only way 51 to raise your condition is to study Sanskrit, and this fighting and 52 writing and frothing against the higher castes is in vain, it does no 53 good, and it creates fight and quarrel, and this race, unfortunately

1 already divided, is going to be divided more and more. The only way 2 to bring about the levelling of caste is to appropriate the culture, 3 the education which is the strength of the higher castes. That done, 4 you have what you want.

5 In connection with this I want to discuss one question which 6 has a particular bearing with regard to Madras. There is a theory 7 that there was a race of mankind in Southern India called 8 Dravidians, entirely differing from another race in Northern India 9 called the Aryans, and that the Southern Indian Brahmins are the 10 only Aryans that came from the North, the other men of Southern 11 India belong to an entirely different caste and race to those of 12 Southern India Brahmins. Now I beg your pardon, Mr. Philologist.
13 This is entirely unfounded. The only proof of it is that there is a 14 difference of language between the North and the South. I do not 15 see any other difference. We are so many Northern men here, and I 16 ask my European friends to pick out the Northern and Southern 17 men from this assembly. Where is the difference? A little difference 18 of language. But the Brahmins are a race that came here speaking 19 the Sanskrit language! Well then, they took up the Dravidian 20 language and forgot their Sanskrit. Why should not the other castes 21 have done the same? Why should not all the other castes have come 22 one after the other from Northern India, taken up the Dravidian 23 language, and so forgotten their own? That is an argument working 24 both ways. Do not believe in such silly things. There may have been 25 a Dravidian people who vanished from here, and the few who 26 remained lived in forests and other places. It is quite possible that 27 the language may have been taken up, but all these are Aryans who 28 came from the North. The whole of India is Aryan, nothing else.

29 Then there is the other idea that the Shudra caste are surely 30 the aborigines. What are they? They are slaves. They say history 31 repeats itself. The Americans, English, Dutch, and the Portuguese 32 got hold of the poor Africans and made them work hard while they 33 lived, and their children of mixed birth were born in slavery and 34 keep in that condition for a long period. From that wonderful 35 example, the mind jumps back several thousand years and fancies 36 that the same thing happened here, and our archaeologist dreams
37 of India being full of dark-eyed aborigines, and the bright Aryan 38 came from--the Lord knows where. According to some, they came 39 from Central Tibet, others will have it that they came from Central 40 Asia. There are patriotic Englishmen who think that the Aryans 41 were all red-haired. Others, according to their idea, think that they 42 were all black-haired. If the writer happens to be a black-haired 43 man, the Aryans were all black-haired. Of late, there was an 44 attempt made to prove that the Aryans lived on the Swiss lakes. I 45 should not be sorry if they had been all drowned there, theory and 46 all. Some say now that they lived at the North Pole. Lord bless the 47 Aryans and their habitations! As for the truth of these theories, 48 there is not one word in our scriptures, not one, to prove that the 49 Aryan ever came from anywhere outside of India, and in ancient 50 India was included Afghanistan. There it ends. And the theory that 51 the Shudra caste were all non-Aryans and they were a multitude, is 52 equally illogical and equally irrational. It could not have been

1 possible in those days that a few Aryans settled and lived there with 2 a hundred thousands slaves at their command. These slaves would 3 have eaten them up, made "chutney" of them in five minutes. The 4 only explanation is to be found in the Mahabharata, which says that 5 in the beginning of the Satya Yuga there was one caste, the 6 Brahmins, and then by difference of occupations they went on 7 dividing themselves into different castes, and that is the only true 8 and rational explanation that has been given. And in the coming 9 Satya Yuga all the other castes will have to go back to the same 10 condition.

11 The solution of the caste problem in India, therefore, assumes 12 this form, not to degrade the higher castes, not to crush out the 13 Brahmin. The Brahminhood is the ideal of humanity in India, as 14 wonderfully put forward by Shankaracharya at the beginning of his 15 commentary on the Gita, where he speaks about the reason for 16 Krishna's coming as a preacher for the preservation of 17 Brahminhood, of Brahminness. That was the great end. This 18 Brahmin, the man of God, he who has known Brahman, the ideal 19 man, the perfect man, must remain; he must not go. And with all 20 the defects of the caste now, we know that we must all be ready to 21 give to the Brahmins this credit, that from them have come more 22 men with real Brahminness in them than from all the other castes.
23 That is true. That is the credit due to them from all the other castes.
24 We must be bold enough, must be brave enough to speak of their 25 defects, but at the same time we must give the credit that is due to 26 them. Remember the old English proverb, "Give every man his 27 due". Therefore, my friends, it is no use fighting among the castes.
28 What good will it do? It will divide us all the more, weaken us all the 29 more, degrade us all the more. The days of exclusive privileges and 30 exclusive claims are gone, gone for ever from the soil of India, and 31 it is one of the great blessings of the British Rule in India. Even to 32 the Mohammedan Rule we owe that great blessing, the destruction 33 of exclusive privilege. That Rule was, after all, not all bad; nothing 34 is all bad, and nothing is all good. The Mohammedan conquest of 35 India came as a salvation to the downtrodden, to the poor. That is 36 why one-fifth of our people have become Mohammedans. It was not 37 the sword that did it all. It would be the height of madness to think 38 it was all the work of sword and fire. And one-fifth--one-half--of your 39 Madras people will become Christians if you do not take care. Was 40 there ever a sillier thing before in the world than what I saw in the 41 Malabar country? The poor Pariah is not allowed to pass through 42 the same street as the high-caste man, but if he changes his name 43 to a hodge-podge English name, it is all right; or to a Mohammedan 44 name, it is all right. What inference would you draw except that 45 these Malabaris are all lunatics, their homes so many lunatic 46 asylums, and that they are to be treated with derision by every race 47 in India until they mend their manners and know better. Shame 48 upon them that such wicked and diabolical customs are allowed; 49 their own children are allowed to die of starvation, but as soon as 50 they take up some other religion they are well fed. There ought to 51 be no more fight between the castes.

1 The solution is not by bringing down the higher, but by raising
2 the lower up to the level of the higher. And that is the line of work 3 that is found in all our books, in spite of what you may hear from 4 some people whose knowledge of their own scriptures and whose 5 capacity to understand the mighty plans of the ancients are only 6 zero. They do not understand, but those do that have brains, that 7 have the intellect to grasp the whole scope of the work. They 8 stand aside and follow the wonderful procession of national life 9 through the ages. They can trace it step by step through all the 10 books, ancient and modern. What is the plan? The ideal at one end 11 is the Brahmin and the ideal at the other end is the Chandala, and 12 the whole work is to raise the Chandala up to the Brahmin. Slowly 13 and slowly you find more and more privileges granted to them.
14 There are books where you read such fierce words as these: "If the 15 Shudra hears the Vedas, fill his ears with molten lead, and if he 16 remembers a line, cut his tongue out. If he says to the Brahmin, 17 'You Brahmin', cut his tongue out". This is diabolical old barbarism 18 no doubt; that goes without saying; but do not blame the law-givers, 19 who simply record the customs of some section of the community.
20 Such devils sometimes arose among the ancients. There have been 21 devils everywhere more or less in all ages. Accordingly, you will find 22 that later on, this tone is modified a little, as for instance, "Do not 23 disturb the Shudras, but do not teach them higher things". Then 24 gradually we find in other Smritis, especially in those that have full 25 power now, that if the Shudras imitate the manner and customs of 26 the Brahmins they do well, they ought to be encouraged. Thus it is 27 going on. I have no time to place before you all these workings, nor 28 how they can be traced in detail; but coming to plain facts, we find 29 that all the castes are to rise slowly and slowly. There are thousands 30 of castes, and some are even getting admission into Brahminhood, 31 for what prevents any caste from declaring they are Brahmins?
32 Thus caste, with all its rigour, has been created in that manner. Let 33 us suppose that there are castes here with ten thousand people in 34 each. If these put their heads together and say, we will call 35 ourselves Brahmins, nothing can stop them; I have seen it in my 36 own life. Some castes become strong, and as soon as they all agree, 37 who is to say nay? Because whatever it was, each caste was 38 exclusive of the other. It did not meddle with others' affairs; even 39 the several divisions of one caste did not meddle with the other 40 divisions, and those powerful epoch-makers, Shankaracharya and 41 others, were the great caste-makers. I cannot tell you all the 42 wonderful things they fabricated, and some of you may resent what 43 I have to say. But in my travels and experiences I have traced them 44 out, and have arrived at most wonderful results. They would 45 sometimes get hordes of Baluchis and at once make them
46 Kshatriyas, also get hold of hordes of fishermen and make them 47 Brahmins forthwith. They were all Rishis and sages, and we have to 48 bow down to their memory. So, be you all Rishis and sages; that is 49 the secret. More or less we shall all be Rishis. What is meant by a 50 Rishi? The pure one. Be pure first, and you will have power. Simply 51 saying, "I am a Rishi", will not do; but when you are a Rishi you will 52 find that others obey you instinctively. Something mysterious 53 emanates from you, which makes them follow you, makes them

1 hear you, makes them unconsciously, even against their will, carry 2 out your plans. That is Rishihood.

3 Now as to the details, they of course have to be worked out 4 through generations. But this is merely a suggestion in order to 5 show you that these quarrels should cease. Especially do I regret 6 that in modern times there should be so much dissension between 7 the castes. This must stop. It is useless on both sides, especially on 8 the side of the higher caste, the Brahmin, because the day for these 9 privileges and exclusive claims is gone. The duty of every 10 aristocracy is to dig its own grave, and the sooner it does so, the 11 better. The more it delays, the more it will fester and the worse 12 death it will die. It is the duty of the Brahmin, therefore, to work for 13 the salvation of the rest of mankind in India. If he does that, and so 14 long as he does that, he is a Brahmin, but he is no Brahmin when he 15 goes about making money. You on the other hand should give help 16 only to the real Brahmin who deserves it; that leads to heaven. But 17 sometimes a gift to another person who does not deserve it leads to 18 the other place, says our scripture. You must be on your guard 19 about that. He only is the Brahmin who has no secular employment.
20 Secular employment is not for the Brahmin but for the other castes.
21 To the Brahmins I appeal, that they must work hard to raise the 22 Indian people by teaching them what they know, by giving out the 23 culture that they have accumulated for centuries. It is clearly the 24 duty of the Brahmins of India to remember what real Brahminhood 25 is. As Manu says, all these privileges and honours are given to the 26 Brahmin, because "with him is the treasury of virtue". He must 27 open that treasury and distribute its valuables to the world. It is 28 true that he was the earliest preacher to the Indian races, he was 29 the first to renounce everything in order to attain to the higher 30 realisation of life before others could reach to the idea. It was not 31 his fault that he marched ahead of the other castes. Why did not the 32 other castes so understand and do as he did? Why did they sit down 33 and be lazy, and let the Brahmins win the race?

34 But it is one thing to gain an advantage, and another thing to 35 preserve it for evil use. Whenever power is used for evil, it becomes 36 diabolical; it must be used for good only. So this accumulated 37 culture of ages of which the Brahmin has been the trustee, he must 38 now give to the people at large, and it was because he did not give 39 it to the people that the Mohammedan invasion was possible. It was 40 because he did not open this treasury to the people from the 41 beginning, that for a thousand years we have been trodden under 42 the heels of every one who chose to come to India. It was through 43 that we have become degraded, and the first task must be to break 44 open the cells that hide the wonderful treasures which our common 45 ancestors accumulated; bring them out and give them to everybody, 46 and the Brahmin must be the first to do it. There is an old 47 superstition in Bengal that if the cobra that bites, sucks out his own 48 poison from the patient, the man must survive. Well then, the 49 Brahmin must suck out his own poison. To the non-Brahmin castes I 50 say, wait, be not in a hurry. Do not seize every opportunity of 51 fighting the Brahmin, because, as I have shown, you are suffering 52 from your own fault. Who told you to neglect spirituality and

1 Sanskrit learning? What have you been doing all this time? Why 2 have you been indifferent? Why do you now fret and fume because 3 somebody else had more brains, more energy, more pluck and go, 4 than you? Instead of wasting your energies in vain discussions and 5 quarrels in the newspapers, instead of fighting and quarrelling in 6 your own homes--which is sinful--use all your energies in acquiring 7 the culture which the Brahmin has, and the thing is done. Why do
8 you not become Sanskrit scholars? Why do you not spend millions 9 to bring Sanskrit education to all the castes of India? That is the 10 question. The moment you do these things, you are equal to the 11 Brahmin. That is the secret of power in India.

12 Sanskrit and prestige go together in India. As soon as you 13 have that, none dares say anything against you. That is the one 14 secret; take that up. The whole universe, to use the ancient 15 Advaitist's simile, is in a state of self-hypnotism. It is will that is the 16 power. It is the man of strong will that throws, as it were, a halo 17 round him and brings all other people to the same state of vibration 18 as he has in his own mind. Such gigantic men do appear. And what 19 is the idea? When a powerful individual appears, his personality 20 infuses his thoughts into us, and many of us come to have the same 21 thoughts, and thus we become powerful. Why is it that 22 organisations are so powerful? Do not say organisation is material.
23 Why is it, to take a case in point, that forty millions of Englishmen 24 rule three hundred millions of people here? What is the 25 psychological explanation? These forty millions put their wills 26 together and that means infinite power, and you three hundred 27 millions have a will each separate from the other. Therefore to 28 make a great future in India, the whole secret lies in organisation, 29 accumulation of power, co-ordination of wills.

30 Already before my mind rises one of the marvellous verses of 31 the Rig-Veda Samhita which says, "Be thou all of one mind, be thou 32 all of one thought, for in the days of yore, the gods being of one 33 mind were enabled to receive oblations." That the gods can be 34 worshipped by men is because they are of one mind. Being of one 35 mind is the secret of society. And the more you go on fighting and 36 quarrelling about all trivialities such as "Dravidian" and "Aryan", 37 and the question of Brahmins and non-Brahmins and all that, the 38 further you are off from that accumulation of energy and power 39 which is going to make the future India. For mark you, the future 40 India depends entirely upon that. That is the secret--accumulation 41 of will-power, co-ordination, bringing them all, as it were, into one 42 focus. Each Chinaman thinks in his own way, and a handful of 43 Japanese all think in the same way, and you know the result. That is 44 how it goes throughout the history of the world. You find in every 45 case, compact little nations always governing and ruling huge 46 unwieldy nations, and this is natural, because it is easier for the 47 little compact nations to bring their ideas into the same focus, and 48 thus they become developed. And the bigger the nation, the more 49 unwieldy it is. Born, as it were, a disorganised mob, they cannot 50 combine. All these dissensions must stop.

51 There is yet another defect in us. Ladies, excuse me, but 52 through centuries of slavery, we have become like a nation of 1 women. You scarcely can get three women together for five minutes 2 in this country or any other country, but they quarrel. Women make 3 big societies in European countries, and make tremendous 4 declarations of women's power and so on; then they quarrel, and 5 some man comes and rules them all. All over the world they still 6 require some man to rule them. We are like them. Women we are. If 7 a woman comes to lead women, they all begin immediately to 8 criticise her, tear her to pieces, and make her sit down. If a man 9 comes and gives them a little harsh treatment, scolds them now and 10 then, it is all right, they have been used to that sort of mesmerism.

11 The whole world is full of such mesmerists and hypnotists. In the 12 same way, if one of our countrymen stands up and tries to become 13 great, we all try to hold him down, but if a foreigner comes and 14 tries to kick us, it is all right. We have been used to it, have we not?
15 And slaves must become great masters! So give up being a slave.
16 For the next fifty years this alone shall be our keynote--this, our 17 great Mother India. Let all other vain gods disappear for the time 18 from our minds. This is the only god that is awake, our own 19 race--"everywhere his hands, everywhere his feet, everywhere his 20 ears, he covers everything." All other gods are sleeping. What vain 21 gods shall we go after and yet cannot worship the god that we see 22 all round us, the Virat? When we have worshipped this, we shall be 23 able to worship all the other gods. Before we can crawl half a mile, 24 we want to cross the ocean like Hanuman! It cannot be. Everyone 25 going to be a Yogi, everyone going to meditate! It cannot be. The 26 whole day mixing with the world with Karma Kanda, and in the 27 evening sitting down and blowing through your nose! Is it so easy?
28 Should Rishis comes flying through the air, because you have blown 29 three times through the nose? Is it a joke? It is all nonsense. What 30 is needed is Chittashuddhi, purification of the heart. And how does 31 that come? The first of all worship is the worship of the Virat--of 32 those all around us. Worship It. Worship is the exact equivalent of 33 the Sanskrit word, and no other English word will do. These are all 34 our gods--men and animals; and the first gods we have to worship 35 are our countrymen. These we have to worship, instead of being 36 jealous of each other and fighting each other. It is the most terrible 37 Karma for which we are suffering, and yet it does not open our 38 eyes!

39 Well, the subject is so great that I do not know where to stop, 40 and I must bring my lecture to a close by placing before you in a 41 few words the plans I want to carry out in Madras. We must have a 42 hold on the spiritual and secular education of the nation. Do you 43 understand that? You must dream it, you must talk it, you must 44 think it, and you must work it out. Till then there is no salvation for 45 the race. The education that you are getting now has some good 46 points, but it has a tremendous disadvantage which is so great that 47 the good things are all weighed down. In the first place it is not a 48 man-making education, it is merely and entirely a negative 49 education. A negative education or any training that is based on 50 negation, is worse than death. The child is taken to school, and the 51 first thing that he learns is that his father is a fool, the second thing 52 that his grandfather is a lunatic, the third thing that all his teachers 53 are hypocrites, the fourth that all the sacred books are lies! By the 1 time he is sixteen he is a mass of negation, lifeless and boneless.

2 And the result is that fifty years of such education has not produced 3 one original man in the three Presidencies. Every man of originality 4 that has been produced has been educated elsewhere, and not in 5 this country, or they have gone to the old universities once more to 6 cleanse themselves of superstitions. Education is not the amount of 7 information that is put into your brain and runs riot there, 8 undigested, all your life. We must have life-building, man-making, 9 character-making assimilation of ideas. If you have assimilated five 10 ideas and made them your life and character, you have more 11 education than any man who has got by heart a whole library.
12 {Sanskrit}--"The ass carrying its load of sandalwood knows only the 13 weight and not the value of the sandalwood." If education is 14 identical with information, the libraries are the greatest sages in 15 the world, and encyclopaedias are the Rishis. The ideal, therefore, 16 is that we must have the whole education of our country, spiritual 17 and secular, in our own hands, and it must be on national lines, 18 through national methods as far as practical.

19 Of course this is a very big scheme, a very big plan. I do not 20 know whether it will ever work out. But we must begin the work.
21 But how? Take Madras, for instance. We must have a temple, for 22 with Hindus religion must come first. Then, you may say, all sects 23 will quarrel about it. But we will make it a non-sectarian temple, 24 having only "Om" as the symbol, the greatest symbol of any sect. If 25 there is any sect here which believes that "Om" ought not to be the 26 symbol, it has not right to call itself Hindu. All will have the right to 27 interpret Hinduism, each one according to his own sect ideas, but 28 we must have a common temple. You can have your own images 29 and symbols in other places, but do not quarrel here with those who 30 differ from you. Here should be taught the common grounds of our 31 different sects, and at the same time the different sects should have 32 perfect liberty to come and teach their doctrines, with only one 33 restriction, that is, not to quarrel with other sects. Say what you 34 have to say, the world wants it; but the world has no time to hear 35 what you think about other people; you can keep that to yourselves.

36 Secondly, in connection with this temple there should be an 37 institution to train teachers who must go about preaching religion 38 and giving secular education to our people; they must carry both.
39 As we have been already carrying religion from door to door, let us 40 along with it carry secular education also. That can be easily done.
41 Then the work will extend through these bands of teachers and 42 preachers, and gradually we shall have similar temples in other 43 places, until we have covered the whole of India. That is my plan. It 44 may appear gigantic, but it is much needed. You may ask, where is 45 the money. Money is not needed. Money is nothing. For the last 46 twelve years of my life, I did not know where the next meal would 47 come from; but money and everything else I want must come, 48 because they are my slaves, and not I theirs; money and everything 49 else must come. Must--that is the word. Where are the men? That is 50 the question. Young men of Madras, my hope is in you. Will you 51 respond to the call of your nation? Each one of you has a glorious 52 future if you dare believe me. Have a tremendous faith in

1 yourselves, like the faith I had when I was a child, and which I am 2 working out now. Have that faith, each one of you, in yourself-that 3 eternal power is lodged in every soul--and you will revive the whole 4 of India. Ay, we will then go to every country under the sun, and our 5 ideas will before long be a component of the many forces that are 6 working to make up every nation in the world. We must enter into 7 the life of every race in India and abroad; we shall have to work to 8 bring this about. Now for that, I want young men. "It is the young, 9 the strong, and healthy, of sharp intellect that will reach the Lord", 10 say the Vedas. This is the time to decide your future--while you 11 possess the energy of youth, not when you are worn out and jaded, 12 but in the freshness and vigour of youth. Work--this is the time; for 13 the freshest, the untouched, and unsmelled flowers alone are to be 14 laid at the feet of the Lord, and such He receives. Rouse yourselves, 15 therefore, for life is short. There are greater works to be done than 16 aspiring to become lawyers and picking quarrels and such things. A 17 far greater work is this sacrifice of yourselves for the benefit of 18 your race, for the welfare of humanity. What is in this life? You are 19 Hindus, and there is the instinctive belief in you that life is eternal.
20 Sometimes I have young men come and talk to me about atheism; I 21 do not believe a Hindu can become an atheist. He may read 22 European books, and persuade himself he is a materialist, but it is 23 only for a time. It is not in your blood. You cannot believe what is 24 not in your constitution; it would be a hopeless task for you. Do not 25 attempt that sort of thing. I once attempted it when I was a boy, but 26 it could not be. Life is short, but the soul is immortal and eternal, 27 and one thing being certain, death, let us therefore take up a great 28 ideal and give up our whole life to it. Let this be our determination, 29 and may He, the Lord, who "comes again and again for the 30 salvation of His own people", to quote from our scriptures--may the 31 great Krishna bless us and lead us all to the fulfilment of our aims!

ON CHARITY

During his stay in Madras the Swami presided at the annual meeting of the Chennapuri Annadana Samajam, an institution of a charitable nature, and in the course of a brief address referred to a remark by a previous speaker deprecating special alms-giving to the Brahmin over and above the other castes. Swamiji pointed out that this had its good as well as its bad side. All the culture, practically, which the nation possessed, was among the Brahmins, and they also had been the thinkers of the nation. Take away the means of living which enabled them to be thinkers, and the nation as a whole would suffer. Speaking of the indiscriminate charity of India as compared with the legal charity of other nations, he said, the outcome of their system of relief was that the vagabond of India was contented to receive readily what he was given readily and lived a peaceful and contented life: while the vagabond in the West, unwilling to go to the poor-house--for man loves liberty more than food--turned a robber, the enemy of society, and necessitated the organisation of a system of magistracy, police, jails, and other establishments. Poverty there must be, so long as the disease known as civilisation existed: and hence the need for relief. So that they had to choose between the indiscriminate charity of India, which, in the case of Sannyasins at any rate, even if they were not sincere men, at least forced them to learn some little of their scriptures before they were able to obtain food; and the discriminate charity of Western nations which necessitated a costly system of poor-law relief, and in the end succeeded only in changing mendicants into criminals.

2 ADDRESS OF WELCOME PRESENTED 3 AT CALCUTTA AND REPLY
4

5 The Swami's reply was as follows:

6 One wants to lose the individual in the universal, one 7 renounces, flies off, and tries to cut himself off from all associations 8 of the body of the past, one works hard to forget even that he is a 9 man; yet, in the heart of his heart, there is a soft sound, one string 10 vibrating, one whisper, which tells him, East or West, home is best.
11 Citizens of the capital of this Empire, before you I stand, not as a 12 Sannyasin, no, not even as a preacher, but I come before you the 13 same Calcutta boy to talk to you as I used to do. Ay, I would like to 14 sit in the dust of the streets of this city, and, with the freedom of 15 childhood, open my mind to you, my brothers. Accept, therefore, my 16 heartfelt thanks for this unique word that you have used, "Brother".
17 Yes, I am your brother, and you are my brothers. I was asked by an 18 English friend on the eve of my departure, "Swami, how do you like 19 now your motherland after four years' experience of the luxurious, 20 glorious, powerful West?" I could only answer, "India I loved before 21 I came away. Now the very dust of India has become holy to me, the 22 very air is now to me holy; it is now the holy land, the place of 23 pilgrimage, the Tirtha." Citizens of Calcutta--my brothers--I cannot 24 express my gratitude to you for the kindness you have shown, or 25 rather I should not thank you at all, for you are my brothers, you 26 have done only a brother's duty, ay, only a Hindu brother's duty; for 27 such family ties, such relationships, such love exist nowhere beyond 28 the bounds of this motherland of ours.

29 The Parliament of Religions was a great affair, no doubt. From 30 various cities of this land, we have thanked the gentlemen who 31 organised the meeting, and they deserved all our thanks for the 32 kindness that has been shown to us; but yet allow me to construe 33 for you the history of the Parliament of Religions. They wanted a 34 horse, and they wanted to ride it. There were people there who 35 wanted to make it a heathen show, but it was ordained otherwise; it 36 could not help being so. Most of them were kind, but we have 37 thanked them enough.

38 On the other hand, my mission in America was not to the 39 Parliament of Religions. That was only something by the way, it was 40 only an opening, an opportunity, and for that we are very thankful 41 to the members of the Parliament; but really, our thanks are due to 42 the great people of the United States, the American nation, the 43 warm-hearted, hospitable, great nation of America, where more 44 than anywhere else the feeling of brotherhood has been developed.
45 An American meets you for five minutes on board a train, and you 46 are his friend, and the next moment he invites you as a guest to his 47 home and opens the secret of his whole living there. That is the 48 character of the American race, and we highly appreciate it. Their 49 kindness to me is past all narration, it would take me years yet to 50 tell you how I have been treated by them most kindly and most

1 wonderfully. So are our thanks due to the other nation on the other 2 side of the Atlantic. No one ever landed on English soil with more 3 hatred in his heart for a race than I did for the English, and on this 4 platform are present English friends who can bear witness to the 5 fact; but the more I lived among them and saw how the machine
6 was working--the English national life--and mixed with them, I
7 found where the heartbeat of the nation was, and the more I loved 8 them. There is none among you here present, my brothers, who 9 loves the English people more than I do now. You have to see what 10 is going on there, and you have to mix with them. As the philosophy, 11 our national philosophy of the Vedanta, has summarised all 12 misfortune, all misery, as coming from that one cause, ignorance, 13 herein also we must understand that the difficulties that arise 14 between us and the English people are mostly due to that 15 ignorance; we do not know them, they do not know us.

16 Unfortunately, to the Western mind, spirituality, nay, even 17 morality, is eternally connected with worldly prosperity; and as soon 18 as an Englishman or any other Western man lands on our soil and 19 finds a land of poverty and of misery, he forthwith concludes that 20 there cannot be any religion here, there cannot be any morality 21 even. His own experience is true. In Europe, owing to the 22 inclemency of the climate and many other circumstances, poverty 23 and sin go together, but not so in India. In India, on the other hand, 24 my experience is that the poorer the man the better he is in point of 25 morality. Now this takes time to understand, and how many foreign 26 people are there who will stop to understand this, the very secret of 27 national existence in India? Few are there who will have the 28 patience to study the nation and understand. Here, and here alone, 29 is the only race where poverty does not mean crime, poverty does 30 not mean sin; and here is the only race where not only poverty does 31 not mean crime, but poverty has been deified, and the beggar's 32 garb is the garb of the highest in the land. On the other hand, we 33 have also similarly, patiently to study the social institutions of the 34 West and not rush into mad judgments about them. Their 35 intermingling of the sexes, their different customs, their manners, 36 have all their meaning, have all their grand sides, if you have the 37 patience to study them. Not that I mean that we are going to 38 borrow their manners and customs, not that they are going to 39 borrow ours, for the manners and customs of each race are the 40 outcome of centuries of patient growth in that race, and each one 41 has a deep meaning behind it; and, therefore, neither are they to 42 ridicule our manners and customs, nor we theirs.

43 Again, I want to make another statement before this 44 assembly. My work in England has been more satisfactory to me
45 than my work in America. The bold, brave, and steady Englishman, 46 if I may use the expression, with his skull a little thicker than those 47 of other people--if he has once an idea put into his brain, it never 48 comes out; and the immense practicality and energy of the race 49 makes it sprout up and immediately bear fruit. It is not so in any 50 other country. That immense practicality, that immense vitality of 51 the race, you do not see anywhere else. There is less of 52 imagination, but more of work, and who knows the well-spring, the 1 mainspring of the English heart? How much of imagination and of 2 feeling is there! They are a nation of heroes, they are the true 3 Kshatriyas; their education is to hide their feelings and never to 4 show them. From their childhood they have been educated up to 5 that. Seldom will you find an Englishman manifesting feeling, nay, 6 even an Englishwoman. I have seen Englishwomen go to work and 7 do deeds which would stagger the bravest of Bengalis to follow. But 8 with all this heroic superstructure, behind this covering of the 9 fighter, there is a deep spring of feeling in the English heart. If you 10 once know how to reach it, if you get there, if you have personal 11 contact and mix with him, he will open his heart, he is your friend 12 for ever, he is your servant. Therefore in my opinion, my work in 13 England has been more satisfactory than anywhere else. I firmly 14 believe that if I should die tomorrow the work in England would not 15 die, but would go on expanding all the time.

16 Brothers, you have touched another chord in my heart, the 17 deepest of all, and that is the mention of my teacher, my master, my 18 hero, my ideal, my God in life--Shri Ramakrishna Paramahansa. If 19 there has been anything achieved by me, by thoughts, or words, or 20 deeds, if from my lips has ever fallen one word that has helped any 21 one in the world, I lay no claim to it, it was his. But if there have 22 been curses falling from my lips, if there has been hatred coming 23 out of me, it is all mine and not his. All that has been weak has been 24 mine, and all that has been life-giving, strengthening, pure, and 25 holy, has been his inspiration, his words, and he himself. Yes, my 26 friends, the world has yet to know that man. We read in the history 27 of the world about prophets and their lives, and these come down to 28 us through centuries of writings and workings by their disciples.
29 Through thousands of years of chiselling and modelling, the lives of 30 the great prophets of yore come down to us; and yet, in my opinion, 31 not one stands so high in brilliance as that life which I saw with my 32 own eyes, under whose shadow I have lived, at whose feet I have 33 learnt everything--the life of Ramakrishna Paramahansa. Ay, 34 friends, you all know the celebrated saying of the Gita:

35 {Sanskrit}

36 "Whenever, O descendant of Bharata, there is decline of 37 Dharma, and rise of Adharma, then I body Myself forth. For the 38 protection of the good, for the destruction of the wicked, and for 39 the establishment of Dharma I come into being in every age."

40 Along with it you have to understand one thing more. Such a 41 thing is before us today. Before one of these tidal waves of 42 spirituality comes, there are whirlpools of lesser manifestation all 43 over society. One of these comes up, at first unknown, unperceived, 44 and unthought of, assuming proportion, swallowing, as it were, and 45 assimilating all the other little whirlpools, becoming immense, 46 becoming a tidal wave, and falling upon society with a power which 47 none can resist. Such is happening before us. If you have eyes, you 48 will see it. If your heart is open, you will receive it. If you are truth-49 seekers, you will find it. Blind, blind indeed is the man who does not 50 see the signs of the day! Ay, this boy born of poor Brahmin parents 51 in an out-of-the-way village of which very few of you have even 52 heard, is literally being worshipped in lands which have been

1 fulminating against heathen worship for centuries. Whose power is 2 it? Is it mine or yours? It is none else than the power which was 3 manifested here as Ramakrishna Paramahansa. For, you and I, and 4 sages and prophets, nay, even Incarnations, the whole universe, are 5 but manifestations of power more or less individualised, more or 6 less concentrated. Here has been a manifestation of an immense 7 power, just the very beginning of whose workings we are seeing, 8 and before this generation passes away, you will see more 9 wonderful workings of that power. It has come just in time for the 10 regeneration of India, for we forget from time to time the vital 11 power that must always work in India.

12 Each nation has its own peculiar method of work. Some work 13 through politics, some through social reforms, some through other 14 lines. With us, religion is the only ground along which we can move.
15 The Englishman can understand even religion through politics.
16 Perhaps the American can understand even religion through social 17 reforms. But the Hindu can understand even politics when it is 18 given through religion; sociology must come through religion, 19 everything must come through religion. For that is the theme, the 20 rest are the variations in the national life-music. And that was in 21 danger. It seemed that we were going to change this theme in our 22 national life, that we were going to exchange the backbone of our 23 existence, as it were, that we were trying to replace a spiritual by a 24 political backbone. And if we could have succeeded, the result 25 would have been annihilation. But it was not to be. So this power 26 became manifest. I do not care in what light you understand this 27 great sage, it matters not how much respect you pay to him, but I 28 challenge you face to face with the fact that here is a manifestation 29 of the most marvellous power that has been for several centuries in 30 India, and it is your duty, as Hindus, to study this power, to find 31 what has been done for the regeneration, for the good of India, and 32 for the good of the whole human race through it. Ay, long before 33 ideas of universal religion and brotherly feeling between different 34 sects were mooted and discussed in any country in the world, here, 35 in sight of this city, had been living a man whose whole life was a 36 Parliament of Religions as it should be.

37 The highest ideal in our scriptures is the impersonal, and 38 would to God everyone of us here were high enough to realise that 39 impersonal idea; but, as that cannot be, it is absolutely necessary 40 for the vast majority of human beings to have a personal ideal; and 41 no nation can rise, can become great, can work at all, without 42 enthusiastically coming under the banner of one of these great 43 ideals in life. Political ideals, personages representing political 44 ideals, even social ideals, commercial ideals, would have no power 45 in India. We want spiritual ideals before us, we want 46 enthusiastically to gather round grand spiritual names. Our heroes 47 must be spiritual. Such a hero has been given to us in the person of 48 Ramakrishna Paramahansa. If this nation wants to rise, take my 49 word for it, it will have to rally enthusiastically round this name. It 50 does not matter who preaches Ramakrishna Paramahansa, 51 whether I, or you, or anybody else. But him I place before you, and 52 it is for you to judge, and for the good of our race, for the good of 1 our nation, to judge now, what you shall do with this great ideal of 2 life. One thing we are to remember that it was the purest of all lives 3 that you have ever seen, or let me tell you distinctly, that you have 4 ever read of. And before you is the fact that it is the most 5 marvellous manifestation of soul-power that you can read of, much 6 less expect to see. Within ten years of his passing away, this power 7 has encircled the globe; that fact is before you. In duty bound,

8 therefore, for the good of our race, for the good of our religion, I 9 place this great spiritual ideal before you. Judge him not through 10 me. I am only a weak instrument. Let not his character be judged 11 by seeing me. It was so great that if I or any other of his disciples 12 spent hundreds of lives, we could not do justice to a millionth part 13 of what he really was. Judge for yourselves; in the heart of your 14 hearts is the Eternal Witness, and may He, the same Ramakrishna 15 Paramahansa, for the good of our nation, for the welfare of our 16 country, and for the good of humanity, open your hearts, make you 17 true and steady to work for the immense change which must come, 18 whether we exert ourselves or not. For the work of the Lord does 19 not wait for the like of you or me. He can raise His workers from 20 the dust by hundreds and thousands. It is a glory and a privilege 21 that we are allowed to work at all under Him.

22 From this the idea expands. As you have pointed out to me, 23 we have to conquer the world. That we have to! India must conquer 24 the world, and nothing less than that is my ideal. It may be very big, 25 it may astonish many of you, but it is so. We must conquer the world 26 or die. There is no other alternative. The sign of life is expansion; 27 we must go out, expand, show life, or degrade, fester, and die.
28 There is no other alternative. Take either of these, either live or die.
29 Now, we all know about the petty jealousies and quarrels that we 30 have in our country. Take my word, it is the same everywhere. The 31 other nations with their political lives have foreign policies. When 32 they find too much quarrelling at home, they look for somebody 33 abroad to quarrel with, and the quarrel at home stops. We have 34 these quarrels without any foreign policy to stop them. This must be 35 our eternal foreign policy, preaching the truths of our Shastras to 36 the nations of the world. I ask you who are politically minded, do 37 you require any other proof that this will unite us as a race? This 38 very assembly is a sufficient witness.

39 Secondly, apart from these selfish considerations, there are 40 the unselfish, the noble, the living examples behind us. One of the 41 great causes of India's misery and downfall has been that she 42 narrowed herself, went into her shell as the oyster does, and 43 refused to give her jewels and her treasures to the other races of 44 mankind, refused to give the life-giving truths to thirsting nations 45 outside the Aryan fold. That has been the one great cause; that we 46 did not go out, that we did not compare notes with other nations-- 47 that has been the one great cause of our downfall, and every one of 48 you knows that little stir, the little life that you see in India, begins 49 from the day when Raja Rammohan Roy broke through the walls of 50 that exclusiveness. Since that day, history in India has taken 51 another turn, and now it is growing with accelerated motion. If we 52 have had little rivulets in the past, deluges are coming, and none

1 can resist them. Therefore we must go out, and the secret of life is 2 to give and take. Are we to take always, to sit at the feet of the 3 Westerners to learn everything, even religion? We can learn 4 mechanism from them. We can learn many other things. But we 5 have to teach them something, and that is our religion, that is our 6 spirituality. For a complete civilisation the world is waiting, waiting 7 for the treasures to come out of India, waiting for the marvellous 8 spiritual inheritance of that race, which, through decades of 9 degradation and misery, the nation has still clutched to her breast.
10 The world is waiting for that treasure; little do you know how much 11 of hunger and of thirst there is outside of India for these wonderful 12 treasures of our forefathers. We talk here, we quarrel with each 13 other, we laugh at and we ridicule everything sacred, till it has 14 become almost a national vice to ridicule everything holy. Little do 15 we understand the heart-pangs of millions waiting outside the 16 walls, stretching forth their hands for a little sip of that nectar 17 which our forefathers have preserved in this land of India.
18 Therefore we must go out, exchange our spirituality for anything 19 they have to give us; for the marvels of the region of spirit we will 20 exchange the marvels of the region of matter. We will not be 21 students always, but teachers also. There cannot be friendship 22 without equality, and there cannot be equality when one party is 23 always the teacher and the other party sits always at his feet. If you 24 want to become equal with the Englishman or the American, you 25 will have to teach as well as to learn, and you have plenty yet to 26 teach to the world for centuries to come. This has to be done. Fire 27 and enthusiasm must be in our blood. We Bengalis have been 28 credited with imagination, and I believe we have it. We have been 29 ridiculed as an imaginative race, as men with a good deal of feeling.
30 Let me tell you, my friends, intellect is great indeed, but it stops 31 within certain bounds. It is through the heart, and the heart alone, 32 that inspiration comes. It is through the feelings that the highest 33 secrets are reached; and therefore it is the Bengali, the man of 34 feeling, that has to do this work.

35 {Sanskrit}--Arise, awake and stop not till the desired end is 36 reached. Young men of Calcutta, arise, awake, for the time is 37 propitious. Already everything is opening out before us. Be bold and 38 fear not. It is only in our scriptures that this adjective is given unto 39 the Lord--Abhiih, Abhiih. We have to become Abhiih, fearless, and our 40 task will be done. Arise, awake, for your country needs this 41 tremendous sacrifice. It is the young men that will do it. "The 42 young, the energetic, the strong, the well-built, the intellectual"--for 43 them is the task. And we have hundreds and thousands of such 44 young men in Calcutta. If, as you say, I have done something, 45 remember that I was that good-for-nothing boy playing in the 46 streets of Calcutta. If I have done so much, how much more will you 47 do! Arise and awake, the world is calling upon you. In other parts of 48 India, there is intellect, there is money, but enthusiasm is only in my 49 motherland. That must come out; therefore arise, young men of 50 Calcutta, with enthusiasm in your blood. Think not that you are 51 poor, that you have no friends. Ay, who ever saw money make the 52 man? It is man that always makes money. The whole world has been 53 made by the energy of man, by the power of enthusiasm, by the 1 power of faith.

2 Those of you who have studied that most beautiful of all the 3 Upanishads, the Katha, will remember how the king was going to 4 make a great sacrifice, and, instead of giving away things that were 5 of any worth, he was giving away cows and horses that were not of 6 any use, and the book says that at that time Shraddha entered into 7 the heart of his son Nachiketa. I would not translate this word 8 Shraddha to you, it would be a mistake; it is a wonderful word to 9 understand, and much depends on it; we will see how it works, for 10 immediately we find Nachiketa telling himself, "I am superior to 11 many, I am inferior to few, but nowhere am I the last, I can also do 12 something." And this boldness increased, and the boy wanted to 13 solve the problem which was in his mind, the problem of death. The 14 solution could only be got by going to the house of Death, and the 15 boy went. There he was, brave Nachiketa, waiting at the house of 16 Death for three days, and you know how he obtained what he 17 desired. What we want is this Shraddha. Unfortunately, it has 18 nearly vanished from India, and this is why we are in our present 19 state. What makes the difference between man and man is the 20 difference in this Shraddha and nothing else. What makes one man 21 great and another weak and low is this Shraddha. My Master used 22 to say, he who thinks himself weak will become weak, and that is 23 true. This Shraddha must enter into you. Whatever of material 24 power you see manifested by the Western races is the outcome of 25 this Shraddha, because they believe in their muscles, and if you 26 believe in your spirit, how much more will it work! Believe in that 27 infinite soul, the infinite power, which, with consensus of opinion, 28 your books and sages preach. That Atman which nothing can 29 destroy, in It is infinite power only waiting to be called out. For here 30 is the great difference between all other philosophies and the 31 Indian philosophy. Whether dualistic, qualified monistic, or 32 monistic, they all firmly believe that everything is in the soul itself; 33 it has only to come out and manifest itself. Therefore, this Shraddha 34 is what I want, and what all of us here want, this faith in ourselves, 35 and before you is the great task to get that faith. Give up the awful 36 disease that is creeping into our national blood, that idea of 37 ridiculing everything, that loss of seriousness. Give that up. Be 38 strong and have this Shraddha, and everything else is bound to 39 follow.

40 I have done nothing as yet; you have to do the task. If I die 41 tomorrow the work will not die. I sincerely believe that there will be 42 thousands coming up from the ranks to take up the work and carry 43 it further and further, beyond all my most hopeful imagination ever 44 painted. I have faith in my country, and especially in the youth of my 45 country. The youth of Bengal have the greatest of all tasks that has 46 ever been placed on the shoulders of young men. I have travelled 47 for the last ten years or so over the whole of India, and my 48 conviction is that from the youth of Bengal will come the power 49 which will raise India once more to her proper spiritual place. Ay, 50 from the youth of Bengal, with this immense amount of feeling and 51 enthusiasm in the blood, will come those heroes who will march 52 from one corner of the earth to the other, preaching and teaching

1 the eternal spiritual truths of our forefathers. And this is the great 2 work before you. Therefore, let me conclude by reminding you once 3 more, "Arise, awake and stop not till the desired end is reached." 4 Be not afraid, for all great power, throughout the history of 5 humanity, has been with the people. From out of their ranks have 6 come all the greatest geniuses of the world, and history can only 7 repeat itself. Be not afraid of anything. You will do marvellous work.
8 The moment you fear, you are nobody. It is fear that is the great 9 cause of misery in the world. It is fear that is the greatest of all 10 superstitions. It is fear that is the cause of our woes, and it is 11 fearlessness that brings heaven even in a moment. Therefore, 12 "Arise, awake, and stop not till the goal is reached."

13 Gentlemen, allow me to thank you once more for all the 14 kindness that I have received at your hands. It is my wish--my 15 intense, sincere wish--to be even of the least service to the world, 16 and above all to my own country and countrymen.

THE VEDANTA IN ALL ITS PHASES

(Delivered in Calcutta)

Away back, where no recorded history, nay, not even the dim light of tradition, can penetrate, has been steadily shining the light, sometimes dimmed by external circumstances, at others effulgent, but undying and steady, shedding its lustre not only over India, but permeating the whole thought-world with its power, silent, unperceived, gentle, yet omnipotent, like the dew that falls in the morning, unseen and unnoticed, yet bringing into bloom the fairest of roses: this has been the thought of the Upanishads, the philosophy of the Vedanta. Nobody knows when it first came to flourish on the soil of India. Guesswork has been vain. The guesses, especially of Western writers, have been so conflicting that no certain date can be ascribed to them. But we Hindus, from the spiritual standpoint, do not admit that they had any origin. This Vedanta, the philosophy of the Upanishads, I would make bold to state, has been the first as well as the final thought on the spiritual plane that has ever been vouchsafed to man.

1 From this ocean of the Vedanta, waves of light from time to 2 time have been going Westward and Eastward. In the days of yore it 3 travelled Westward and gave its impetus to the mind of the Greeks, 4 either in Athens, or in Alexandria, or in Antioch. The Sankhya 5 system must clearly have made its mark on the minds of the ancient 6 Greeks; and the Sankhya and all other systems in India had that 7 one authority, the Upanishads, the Vedanta. In India, too, in spite of 8 all these jarring sects that we see today and all those that have 9 been in the past, the one authority, the basis of all these systems, 10 has yet been the Upanishads, the Vedanta. Whether you are a 11 dualist, or a qualified monist, an Advaitist, or a Vishishtadvaitist, a 12 Shuddhadvaitist, or any other Advaitist, or Dvaitist, or whatever you 13 may call yourself, there stand behind you as authority, your 14 Shastras, your scriptures, the Upanishads. Whatever system in 15 India does not obey the Upanishads cannot be called orthodox, and 16 even the systems of the Jains and the Buddhists have been rejected 17 from the soil of India only because they did not bear allegiance to 18 the Upanishads. Thus the Vedanta, whether we know it or not, has 19 penetrated all the sects of India, and what we call Hinduism, this 20 mighty banyan with its immense, almost infinite ramifications, has 21 been throughout interpenetrated by the influence of the Vedanta.
22 Whether we are conscious of it or not, we think the Vedanta, we live 23 in the Vedanta, we breathe the Vedanta, and we die in the Vedanta, 24 and every Hindu does that. To preach Vedanta in the land of India, 25 and before an Indian audience, seems, therefore, to be an anomaly.
26 But it is the one thing that has to be preached, and it is the 27 necessity of the age that it must be preached. For, as I have just 28 told you, all the Indian sects must bear allegiance to the 29 Upanishads; but among these sects there are many apparent 30 contradictions. Many times the great sages of yore themselves 31 could not understand the underlying harmony of the Upanishads.
32 Many times, even sages quarrelled, so much so that it became a 33 proverb that there are no sages who do not differ. But the time 34 requires that a better interpretation should be given to this 35 underlying harmony of the Upanishadic texts, whether they are 36 dualistic, or non-dualistic, quasi-dualistic, or so forth. That has to be 37 shown before the world at large, and this work is required as much 38 in India as outside of India; and I, through the grace of God, had the 39 great good fortune to sit at the feet of one whose whole life was 40 such an interpretation, whose life, a thousandfold more than whose 41 teaching, was a living commentary on the texts of the Upanishads, 42 was in fact the spirit of the Upanishads living in a human form.
43 Perhaps I have got a little of that harmony; I do not know whether I 44 shall be able to express it or not. But this is my attempt, my mission 45 in life, to show that the Vedantic schools are not contradictory, that 46 they all necessitate each other, all fulfil each other, and one, as it 47 were, is the stepping-stone to the other, until the goal, the Advaita, 48 the Tat Tvam Asi, is reached. There was a time in India when the 49 Karma Kanda had its sway. There are many grand ideals, no doubt, 50 in that portion of the Vedas. Some of our present daily worship is 51 still according to the precepts of the Karma Kanda. But with all 52 that, the Karma Kanda of the Vedas has almost disappeared from 53 India. Very little of our life today is bound and regulated by the 1 orders of the Karma Kanda of the Vedas. In our ordinary lives we 2 are mostly Pauranikas or Tantrikas, and, even where some Vedic

3 texts are used by the Brahmins of India, the adjustment of the texts
4 is mostly not according to the Vedas, but according to the Tantras 5 or the Puranas. As such, to call ourself Vaidikas in the sense of 6 following the Karma Kanda of the Vedas, I do not think, would be 7 proper. But the other fact stands that we are all of us Vedantists.
8 The people who call themselves Hindus had better be called 9 Vedantists, and, as I have shown you, under that one name 10 Vaidantika come in all our various sects, whether dualists or non-11 dualists.

12 The sects that are at the present time in India come to be 13 divided in general into the two great classes of dualists and 14 monists. The little differences which some of these sects insist 15 upon, and upon the authority of which want to take new names as 16 pure Advaitists, or qualified Advaitists, and so forth, do not matter 17 much. As a classification, either they are dualists or monists, and of 18 the sects existing at the present time, some of them are very new, 19 and others seem to be reproductions of very ancient sects. The one 20 class I would present by the life and philosophy of Ramanuja, and 21 the other by Shankaracharya.

22 Ramanuja is the leading dualistic philosopher of later India, 23 whom all the other dualist sects have followed, directly or 24 indirectly, both in the substance of their teaching and in the 25 organisation of their sects even down to some of the most minute 26 points of their organisation. You will be astonished if you compare 27 Ramanuja and his work with the other dualistic Vaishnava sects in 28 India, to see how much they resemble each other in organisation, 29 teaching, and method. There is the great Southern preacher 30 Madhva Muni, and following him, our great Chaitanya of Bengal 31 who took up the philosophy of the Madhvas and preached it in 32 Bengal. There are some other sects also in Southern India, as the 33 qualified dualistic Shaivas. The Shaivas in the most parts of India 34 are Advaitists, except in some portions of Southern India and in 35 Ceylon. But they also only substitute Shiva for Vishnu and are 36 Ramanujists in every sense of the term except in the doctrine of the 37 soul. The followers of Ramanuja hold that the soul is Anu, like a 38 particle, very small, and the followers of Shankaracharya hold that 39 it is Vibhu, omnipresent. There have been several non-dualistic 40 sects. It seems that there have been sects in ancient times which 41 Shankara's movement has entirely swallowed up and assimilated.
42 You find sometimes a fling at Shankara himself in some of the 43 commentaries, especially in that of Vijnana Bhikshu who, although 44 an Advaitist, attempts to upset the Mayavada of Shankara. It seems 45 there were schools who did not believe in this Mayavada, and they 46 went so far as to call Shankara a crypto-Buddhist, Prachchhanna 47 Bauddha, and they thought this Mayavada was taken from the 48 Buddhists and brought within the Vedantic fold. However that may 49 be, in modern times the Advaitists have all ranged themselves 50 under Shankaracharya; and Shankaracharya and his disciples have 51 been the great preachers of Advaita both in Southern and in 52 Northern India. The influence of Shankaracharya did not penetrate

1 much into our country of Bengal and in Kashmir and the Punjab, 2 but in Southern India the Smartas are all followers of 3 Shankaracharya, and with Varanasi as the centre, his influence is 4 simply immense even in many parts of Northern India.

5 Now both Shankara and Ramanuja laid aside all claim to 6 originality. Ramanuja expressly tells us he is only following the 7 great commentary of Bodhayana. {Sanskrit} --"Ancient teachers 8 abridged that extensive commentary on the Brahma-sutras which 9 was composed by the Bhagavan Bodhayana; in accordance with 10 their opinion, the words of the Sutra are explained." That is what 11 Ramanuja says at the beginning of his commentary, the Shri- 12 Bhashya. He takes it up and makes of it a Samkshepa, and that is 13 what we have today. I myself never had an opportunity of seeing 14 this commentary of Bodhayana. The late Swami Dayananda 15 Saraswati wanted to reject every other commentary of the Vyasa-
16 Sutras except that of Bodhayana; and although he never lost an 17 opportunity of having a fling at Ramanuja, he himself could never 18 produce the Bodhayana. I have sought for it all over India, and 19 never yet have been able to see it. But Ramanuja is very plain on 20 the point, and he tells us that he is taking the ideas, and sometimes 21 the very passages out of Bodhayana, and condensing them into the 22 present Ramanuja Bhashya. It seems that Shankaracharya was also 23 doing the same. There are a few places in his Bhashya which 24 mention older commentaries, and when we know that his Guru and 25 his Guru's Guru had been Vedantists of the same school as he, 26 sometimes even more thorough-going, bolder even than Shankara 27 himself on certain points, it seems pretty plain that he also was not 28 preaching anything very original, and that even in his Bhashya he 29 himself had been doing the same work that Ramanuja did with 30 Bodhayana, but from what Bhashya, it cannot be discovered at the 31 present time.

32 All these Darshanas that you have ever seen or heard of are 33 based upon Upanishadic authority. Whenever they want to quote a 34 Shruti, they mean the Upanishads. They are always quoting the 35 Upanishads. Following the Upanishads there come other 36 philosophies of India, but every one of them failed in getting that 37 hold on India which the philosophy of Vyasa got, although the 38 philosophy of Vyasa is a development out of an older one, the 39 Sankhya, and every philosophy and every system in India--I mean 40 throughout the world--owes much to Kapila, perhaps the greatest 41 name in the history of India in psychological and philosophical lines.
42 The influence of Kapila is everywhere seen throughout the world.
43 Wherever there is a recognised system of thought, there you can 44 trace his influence; even if it be thousands of years back, yet he 45 stands there, the shining, glorious, wonderful Kapila. His 46 psychology and a good deal of his philosophy have been accepted 47 by all the sects of India with but very little differences. In our own 48 country, our Naiyayika philosophers could not make much 49 impression on the philosophical world of India. They were too busy 50 with little things like species and genus, and so forth, and that most 51 cumbersome terminology, which it is a life's work to study. As such, 52 they were very busy with logic and left philosophy to the Vedantists,

1 but every one of the Indian philosophical sects in modern times has 2 adopted the logical terminology of the Naiyayikas of Bengal.
3 Jagadisha, Gadadhara, and Shiromani are as well known at Nadia 4 as in some of the cities in Malabar. But the philosophy of Vyasa, the 5 Vyasa-Sutras, is firm-seated and has attained the permanence of 6 that which it intended to present to men, the Brahman of the 7 Vedantic side of philosophy. Reason was entirely subordinated to 8 the Shrutis, and as Shankaracharya declares, Vyasa did not care to 9 reason at all. His idea in writing the Sutras was just to bring 10 together, and with one thread to make a garland of the flowers of 11 Vedantic texts. His Sutras are admitted so far as they are 12 subordinate to the authority of the Upanishads, and no further.

13 And, as I have said, all the sects of India now hold these 14 Vyasa-Sutras to be the great authority, and every new sect in India 15 starts with a fresh commentary on the Vyasa-Sutras according to 16 its light. The difference between some of these commentators is 17 sometimes very great, sometimes the text-torturing is quite 18 disgusting. The Vyasa-Sutras have got the place of authority, and 19 no one can expect to found a sect in India until he can write a fresh 20 commentary on the Vyasa-Sutras.

21 Next in authority is the celebrated Gita. The great glory of 22 Shankaracharya was his preaching of the Gita. It is one of the 23 greatest works that this great man did among the many noble 24 works of his noble life--the preaching of the Gita and writing the 25 most beautiful commentary upon it. And he has been followed by all 26 founders of the orthodox sects in India, each of whom has written a 27 commentary on the Gita.

28 The Upanishads are many, and said to be one hundred and 29 eight, but some declare them to be still larger in number. Some of 30 them are evidently of a much later date, as for instance, the 31 Allopanishad in which Allah is praised and Mohammed is called the 32 Rajasulla. I have been told that this was written during the reign of 33 Akbar to bring the Hindus and Mohammedans together, and 34 sometimes they got hold of some word, as Allah, or Illa in the 35 Samhitas, and made an Upanishad on it. So in this Allopanishad, 36 Mohammed is the Rajasulla, whatever that may mean. There are 37 other sectarian Upanishads of the same species, which you find to 38 be entirely modern, and it has been so easy to write them, seeing 39 that this language of the Samhita portion of the Vedas is so archaic 40 that there is no grammar to it. Years ago I had an idea of studying 41 the grammar of the Vedas, and I began with all earnestness to 42 study Panini and the Mahabhashya, but to my surprise I found that 43 the best part of the Vedic grammar consists only of exceptions to 44 rules. A rule is made, and after that comes a statement to the 45 effect, "This rule will be an exception". So you see what an amount 46 of liberty there is for anybody to write anything, the only safeguard 47 being the dictionary of Yaska. Still, in this you will find, for the most 48 part, but a large number of synonyms. Given all that, how easy it is 49 to write any number of Upanishads you please. Just have a little 50 knowledge of Sanskrit, enough to make words look like the old 51 archaic words, and you have no fear of grammar. Then you bring in 52 Rajasulla or any other Sula you like. In that way many Upanishads

1 have been manufactured, and I am told that that is being done even 2 now. In some parts of India, I am perfectly certain, they are trying 3 to manufacture such Upanishads among the different sects. But 4 among the Upanishads are those, which, on the face of them, bear 5 the evidence of genuineness, and these have been taken up by the 6 great commentators and commented upon, especially by Shankara, 7 followed by Ramanuja and all the rest.

8 There are one or two more ideas with regard to the 9 Upanishads which I want to bring to your notice, for these are an 10 ocean of knowledge, and to talk about the Upanishads, even for an 11 incompetent person like myself, takes years and not one lecture 12 only. I want, therefore, to bring to your notice one or two points in 13 the study of the Upanishads. In the first place, they are the most 14 wonderful poems in the world. If you read the Samhita portion of 15 the Vedas, you now and then find passages of most marvellous 16 beauty. For instance, the famous Shloka which describes Chaos-- 17 {Sanskrit}--"When darkness was hidden in darkness", so on it goes.
18 One reads and feels the wonderful sublimity of the poetry. Do you 19 mark this that outside of India, and inside also, there have been 20 attempts at painting the sublime. But outside, it has always been 21 the infinite in the muscles, the external world, the infinite of matter, 22 or of space. When Milton or Dante, or any other great European 23 poet, either ancient or modern, wants to paint a picture of the 24 infinite, he tries to soar outside, to make you feel the infinite 25 through the muscles. That attempt has been made here also. You 26 find it in the Samhitas, the infinite of extension most marvellously 27 painted and placed before the readers, such as has been done 28 nowhere else. Mark that one sentence {Sanskrit}, and now mark 29 the description of darkness by three poets. Take our own 30 Kalidasa--"Darkness which can be penetrated with the point of a 31 needle"; then Milton--"No light but rather darkness visible"; but 32 come now to the Upanishad, "Darkness was covering darkness", 33 "Darkness was hidden in darkness". We who live in the tropics can 34 understand it, the sudden outburst of the monsoon, when in a 35 moment, the horizon becomes darkened and clouds become 36 covered with more rolling black clouds. So on, the poem goes; but 37 yet, in the Samhita portion, all these attempts are external. As 38 everywhere else, the attempts at finding the solution of the great 39 problems of life have been through the external world. Just as the 40 Greek mind or the modern European mind wants to find the 41 solution of life and of all the sacred problems of Being by searching 42 into the eternal world, so also did our forefathers, and just as the 43 Europeans failed, they failed also. But the Western people never 44 made a move more, they remained there, they failed in the search 45 for the solution of the great problems of life and death in the 46 external world, and there they remained, stranded; our forefathers 47 also found it impossible, but were bolder in declaring the utter 48 helplessness of the senses to find the solution. Nowhere else was 49 the answer better put than in the Upanishad:{Sanskrit}--"From 50 whence words come back reflected, together with the mind"; 51 {Sanskrit}--"There the eye cannot go, nor can speech reach". There 52 are various sentences which declare the utter helplessness of the 53 senses, but they did not stop there; they fell back upon the internal 1 nature of man, they went to get the answer from their own soul,

2 they became introspective; they gave up external nature as a 3 failure, as nothing could be done there, as no hope, no answer 4 could be found; they discovered that dull, dead matter would not 5 give them truth, and they fell back upon the shining soul of man, 6 and there the answer was found.

7 {Sanskrit}--"Know this Atman alone," they declared, "give up 8 all other vain words, and hear no other." In the Atman they found 9 the solution--the greatest of all Atmans, the God, the Lord of this 10 universe, His relation to the Atman of man, our duty to Him, and 11 through that our relation to each other. And herein you find the 12 most sublime poetry in the world. No more is the attempt made to 13 paint this Atman in the language of matter. Nay, for it they have 14 given up even all positive language. No more is there any attempt 15 to come to the senses to give them the idea of the infinite, no more 16 is there an external, dull, dead, material, spacious, sensuous 17 infinite, but instead of that comes something which is as fine as 18 even that mentioned in the saying--

19 {Sanskrit}

20 What poetry in the world can be more sublime than this!
21 "There the sun cannot illumine, nor the moon, nor the stars, there 22 this flash of lightning cannot illumine; what to speak of this mortal 23 fire!" Such poetry you find nowhere else. Take that most marvellous 24 Upanishad, the Katha. What a wonderful finish, what a most 25 marvellous art displayed in that poem! How wonderfully it opens 26 with that little boy to whom Shraddha came, who wanted to see 27 Yama, and how that most marvellous of all teachers, Death himself, 28 teaches him the great lessons of life and death! And what was his 29 quest? To know the secret of death.

1 The second point that I want you to remember is the perfectly 2 impersonal character of the Upanishads. Although we find many 3 names, and many speakers, and many teachers in the Upanishads, 4 not one of them stands as an authority of the Upanishads, not one 5 verse is based upon the life of any one of them. These are simply 6 figures like shadows moving in the background, unfelt, unseen, 7 unrealised, but the real force is in the marvellous, the brilliant, the 8 effulgent texts of the Upanishads, perfectly impersonal. If twenty 9 Yajnavalkyas came and lived and died, it does not matter; the texts 10 are there. And yet it is against no personality; it is broad and 11 expansive enough to embrace all the personalities that the world
12 has yet produced, and all that are yet to come. It has nothing to say 13 against the worship of persons, or Avataras, or sages. On the other 14 hand, it is always upholding it. At the same time, it is perfectly 15 impersonal. It is a most marvellous idea, like the God it preaches, 16 the impersonal idea of the Upanishads. For the sage, the thinker, 17 the philosopher, for the rationalist, it is as much impersonal as any 18 modern scientist can wish. And these are our scriptures. You must 19 remember that what the Bible is to the Christians, what the Koran 20 is to the Mohammedans, what the Tripitaka is to the Buddhist, what 21 the Zend Avesta is to the Parsees, these Upanishads are to us.
22 These and nothing but these are our scriptures. The Puranas, the 23 Tantras, and all the other books, even the Vyasa-Sutras, are of 24 secondary, tertiary authority, but primary are the Vedas. Manu, and 25 the Puranas, and all the other books are to be taken so far as they 26 agree with the authority of the Upanishads, and when they disagree
27 they are to be rejected without mercy. This we ought to remember 28 always, but unfortunately for India, at the present time we have 29 forgotten it. A petty village custom seems now the real authority 30 and not the teaching of the Upanishads. A petty idea current in a 31 wayside village in Bengal seems to have the authority of the Vedas, 32 and even something better. And that word "orthodox", how 33 wonderful its influence! To the villager, the following of every little 34 bit of the Karma Kanda is the very height of "orthodoxy", and one 35 who does not do it is told, "Go away, you are no more a Hindu." So 36 there are, most unfortunately in my motherland, persons who will 37 take up one of these Tantras and say, that the practice of this Tantra 38 is to be obeyed; he who does not do so is no more orthodox in his 39 views. Therefore it is better for us to remember that in the 40 Upanishads is the primary authority, even the Grihya and Shrauta 41 Sutras are subordinate to the authority of the Vedas. They are the 42 words of the Rishis, our forefathers, and you have to believe them if 43 you want to become a Hindu. You may even believe the most 44 peculiar ideas about the Godhead, but if you deny the authority of 45 the Vedas, you are a Nastika. Therein lies the difference between 46 the scriptures of the Christians or the Buddhists and ours; theirs 47 are all Puranas, and not scriptures, because they describe the 48 history of the deluge, and the history of kings and reigning families, 49 and record the lives of great men, and so on. This is the work of the 50 Puranas, and so far as they agree with the Vedas, they are good. So 51 far as the Bible and the scriptures of other nations agree with the 52 Vedas, they are perfectly good, but when they do not agree, they 53 are no more to be accepted. So with the Koran. There are many

1 moral teachings in these, and so far as they agree with the Vedas 2 they have the authority of the Puranas, but no more. The idea is 3 that the Vedas were never written; the idea is, they never came into 4 existence. I was told once by a Christian missionary that their 5 scriptures have a historical character, and therefore are true, to 6 which I replied, "Mine have no historical character and therefore 7 they are true; yours being historical, they were evidently made by 8 some man the other day. Yours are man-made and mine are not; 9 their non-historicity is in their favour." Such is the relation of the 10 Vedas with all the other scriptures at the present day.

11 We now come to the teachings of the Upanishads. Various 12 texts are there. Some are perfectly dualistic, while others are 13 monistic. But there are certain doctrines which are agreed to by all 14 the different sects of India. First, there is the doctrine of Samsara 15 or reincarnation of the soul. Secondly, they all agree in their 16 psychology; first there is the body, behind that, what they call the 17 Sukshma Sharira, the mind, and behind that even, is the Jiva. That 18 is the great difference between Western and Indian psychology; in 19 the Western psychology the mind is the soul, here it is not. The 20 Antahkarana, the internal instrument, as the mind is called, is only 21 an instrument in the hands of that Jiva, through which the Jiva 22 works on the body or on the external world. Here they all agree, 23 and they all also agree that this Jiva or Atman, Jivatman as it is 24 called by various sects, is eternal, without beginning; and that it is 25 going from birth to birth, until it gets a final release. They all agree 26 in this, and they also all agree in one other most vital point, which 27 alone marks characteristically, most prominently, most vitally, the 28 difference between the Indian and the Western mind, and it is this, 29 that everything is in the soul. There is no inspiration, but properly 30 speaking, expiration. All powers and all purity and all greatness-- 31 everything is in the soul. The Yogi would tell you that the Siddhis-- 32 Anima, Laghima, and so on--that he wants to attain to are not to be 33 attained, in the proper sense of the word, but are already there in 34 the soul; the work is to make them manifest. Patanjali, for instance, 35 would tell you that even in the lowest worm that crawls under your 36 feet, all the eightfold Yogi's powers are already existing. The 37 difference has been made by the body. As soon as it gets a better 38 body, the powers will become manifest, but they are there.
39 {Sanskrit}--"Good and bad deeds are not the direct causes in the 40 transformations of nature, but they act as breakers of obstacles to 41 the evolutions of nature: as a farmer breaks the obstacles to the 42 course of water, which then runs down by its own nature." Here 43 Patanjali gives the celebrated example of the cultivator bringing 44 water into his field from a huge tank somewhere. The tank is 45 already filled and the water would flood his land in a moment, only 46 there is a mud-wall between the tank and his field. As soon as the 47 barrier is broken, in rushes the water out of its own power and 48 force. This mass of power and purity and perfection is in the soul 49 already. The only difference is the Avarana--this veil--that has been 50 cast over it. Once the veil is removed, the soul attains to purity, and 51 its powers become manifest. This, you ought to remember, is the 52 great difference between Eastern and Western thought. Hence you 53 find people teaching such awful doctrines as that we are all born

1 sinners, and because we do not believe in such awful doctrines we 2 are all born wicked. They never stop to think that if we are by our 3 very nature wicked, we can never be good--for how can nature 4 change? If it changes, it contradicts itself; it is not nature. We ought 5 to remember this. Here the dualist, and the Advaitist, and all others 6 in India agree.

7 The next point, which all the sects in India believe in, is God.
8 Of course their ideas of God will be different. The dualists believe in 9 a Personal God, and a personal only. I want you to understand this 10 word personal a little more. This word personal does not mean that 11 God has a body, sits on a throne somewhere, and rules this world, 12 but means Saguna, with qualities. There are many descriptions of 13 the Personal God. This Personal God as the Ruler, the Creator, the 14 Preserver, and the Destroyer of this universe is believed in by all 15 the sects. The Advaitists believe something more. They believe in a 16 still higher phase of this Personal God, which is personal-17 impersonal. No adjective can illustrate where there is no
18 qualification, and the Advaitist would not give Him any qualities 19 except the three--Sat-Chid-Ananda, Existence, Knowledge, and Bliss
20 Absolute. This is what Shankara did. But in the Upanishads 21 themselves you find they penetrate even further, and say, nothing 22 can be predicated of it except Neti, Neti, "Not this, Not this".

23 Here all the different sects of India agree. But taking the 24 dualistic side, as I have said, I will take Ramanuja as the typical 25 dualist of India, the great modern representative of the dualistic 26 system. It is a pity that our people in Bengal know so very little 27 about the great religious leaders in India, who have been born in 28 other parts of the country; and for the matter of that, during the 29 whole of the Mohammedan period, with the exception of our 30 Chaitanya, all the great religious leaders were born in Southern 31 India, and it is the intellect of Southern India that is really 32 governing India now; for even Chaitanya belonged to one of these 33 sects, a sect of the Madhvas. According to Ramanuja, these three 34 entities are eternal--God, and soul, and nature. The souls are 35 eternal, and they will remain eternally existing, individualised 36 through eternity, and will retain their individuality all through. Your 37 soul will be different from my soul through all eternity, says 38 Ramanuja, and so will this nature--which is an existing fact, as 39 much a fact as the existence of soul or the existence of God--remain 40 always different. And God is interpenetrating, the essence of the 41 soul, He is the Antaryamin. In this sense Ramanuja sometimes 42 thinks that God is one with the soul, the essence of the soul, and 43 these souls--at the time of Pralaya, when the whole of nature 44 becomes what he calls Sankuchita, contracted--become contracted 45 and minute and remain so for a time. And at the beginning of the 46 next cycle they all come out, according to their past Karma, and 47 undergo the effect of that Karma. Every action that makes the 48 natural inborn purity and perfection of the soul get contracted is a 49 bad action, and every action that makes it come out and expand 50 itself is a good action, says Ramanuja. Whatever helps to make the 51 Vikasha of the soul is good, and whatever makes it Sankuchita is 52 bad. And thus the soul is going on, expanding or contracting in its

1 actions, till through the grace of God comes salvation. And that 2 grace comes to all souls, says Ramanuja, that are pure and struggle 3 for that grace.

4 There is a celebrated verse in the Shrutis, {Sanskrit}: "When 5 the food is pure, then the Sattva becomes pure; when the Sattva is 6 pure, then the Smriti"--the memory of the Lord, or the memory of 7 our own perfection--if you are an Advaitist--"becomes truer, 8 steadier, and absolute". Here is a great discussion. First of all, what 9 is this Sattva? We know that according to the Sankhya--and it has 10 been admitted by all our sects of philosophy--the body is composed 11 of three sorts of materials--not qualities. It is the general idea that 12 Sattva, Rajas, and Tamas are qualities. Not at all, not qualities but 13 the materials of this universe, and with Ahara-shuddhi, when the 14 food is pure, the Sattva material becomes pure. The one theme of 15 the Vedanta is to get this Sattva. As I have told you, the soul is 16 already pure and perfect, and it is, according to the Vedanta, 17 covered up by Rajas and Tamas particles. The Sattva particles are 18 the most luminous, and the effulgence of the soul penetrates 19 through them as easily as light through glass. So if the Rajas and 20 Tamas particles go, and leave the Sattva particles, in this state the 21 power and purity of the soul will appear, and leave the soul more 22 manifest.

23 Therefore it is necessary to have this Sattva. And the text
24 says, "When Ahara becomes pure". Ramanuja takes this word Ahara 25 to mean food, and he has made it one of the turning points of his 26 philosophy. Not only so, it has affected the whole of India, and all 27 the different sects. Therefore it is necessary for us to understand 28 what it means, for that, according to Ramanuja, is one of the 29 principal factors in our life, Ahara-shuddhi. What makes food 30 impure? asks Ramanuja. Three sorts of defects make food impure-- 31 first, Jati-dosha, the defect in the very nature of the class to which 32 the food belongs, as the smell in onions, garlic, and suchlike. The 33 next is Ashraya-dosha, the defect in the person from whom the food 34 comes; food coming from a wicked person will make you impure. I 35 myself have seen many great sages in India following strictly that 36 advice all their lives. Of course they had the power to know who 37 brought the food, and even who had touched the food, and I have 38 seen it in my own life, not once, but hundreds of times. Then 39 Nimitta-dosha, the defect of impure things or influences coming in 40 contact with food is another. We had better attend to that a little 41 more now. It has become too prevalent in India to take food with 42 dirt and dust and bits of hair in it. If food is taken from which these 43 three defects have been removed, that makes Sattva-shuddhi, 44 purifies the Sattva. Religion seems to be a very easy task then.
45 Then every one can have religion if it comes by eating pure food 46 only. There is none so weak or incompetent in this world, that I 47 know, who cannot save himself from these defects. Then comes 48 Shankaracharya, who says this word Ahara means thought 49 collected in the mind; when that becomes pure, the Sattva becomes 50 pure, and not before that. You may eat what you like. If food alone 51 would purify the Sattva, then feed the monkey with milk and rice all 52 its life; would it become a great Yogi? Then the cows and the deer

1 would be great Yogis. As has been said, "If it is by bathing much 2 that heaven is reached, the fishes will get to heaven first. If by 3 eating vegetables a man gets to heaven, the cows and the deer will 4 get to heaven first."

5 But what is the solution? Both are necessary. Of course the 6 idea that Shankaracharya gives us of Ahara is the primary idea. But 7 pure food, no doubt, helps pure thought; it has an intimate 8 connection; both ought to be there. But the defect is that in modern 9 India we have forgotten the advice of Shankaracharya and taken 10 only the "pure food" meaning. That is why people get mad with me 11 when I say, religion has got into the kitchen; and if you had been in 12 Madras with me, you would have agreed with me. The Bengalis are 13 better than that. In Madras they throw away food if anybody looks 14 at it. And with all this, I do not see that the people are any the 15 better there. If only eating this and that sort of food and saving it 16 from the looks of this person and that person would give them 17 perfection, you would expect them all to be perfect men, which they 18 are not.

19 Thus, although these are to be combined and linked together
20 to make a perfect whole, do not put the cart before the horse. There 21 is a cry nowadays about this and that food and about Varnashrama, 22 and the Bengalis are the most vociferous in these cries. I would ask 23 every one of you, what do you know about this Varnashrama?
24 Where are the four castes today in this country? Answer me; I do 25 not see the four castes. Just as our Bengali proverb has it, "A 26 headache without a head", so you want to make this Varnashrama 27 here. There are not four castes here. I see only the Brahmin and the 28 Shudra. If there are the Kshatriyas and the Vaishyas, where are 29 they and why do not you Brahmins order them to take the 30 Yajnopavita and study the Vedas, as every Hindu ought to do? And if 31 the Vaishyas and the Kshatriyas do not exist, but only the Brahmins 32 and the Shudras, the Shastras say that the Brahmin must not live in 33 a country where there are only Shudras; so depart bag and 34 baggage! Do you know what the Shastras say about people how 35 have been eating Mlechchha food and living under a government of 36 the Mlechchhas, as you have for the past thousand years? Do you 37 know the penance for that? The penance would be burning oneself 38 with one's own hands. Do you want to pass as teachers and walk 39 like hypocrites? If you believe in your Shastras, burn yourselves 40 first like the one great Brahmin did who went with Alexander the 41 Great and burnt himself because he thought he had eaten the food 42 of a Mlechchha. Do like that, and you will see that the whole nation 43 will be at your feet. You do not believe in your own Shastras and yet 44 want to make others believe in them. If you think you are not able 45 to do that in this age, admit your weakness and excuse the 46 weakness of others, take the other castes up, give them a helping 47 hand, let them study the Vedas and become just as good Aryans as 48 any other Aryans in the world, and be you likewise Aryans, you 49 Brahmins of Bengal.

50 Give up this filthy Vamachara that is killing your country. You 51 have not seen the other parts of India. When I see how much the 52 Vamachara has entered our society, I find it a most disgraceful

1 place with all its boast of culture. These Vamachara sects are 2 honeycombing our society in Bengal. Those who come out in the 3 daytime and preach most loudly about Achara, it is they who carry 4 on the horrible debauchery at night and are backed by the most 5 dreadful books. They are ordered by the books to do these things.
6 You who are of Bengal know it. The Bengali Shastras are the 7 Vamachara Tantras. They are published by the cart-load, and you 8 poison the minds of your children with them instead of teaching 9 them your Shrutis. Fathers of Calcutta, do you not feel ashamed 10 that such horrible stuff as these Vamachara Tantras, with 11 translations too, should be put into the hands of your boys and girls, 12 and their minds poisoned, and that they should be brought up with 13 the idea that these are the Shastras of the Hindus? If you are 14 ashamed, take them away from your children, and let them read the 15 true Shastras, the Vedas, the Gita, the Upanishads.

16 According to the dualistic sects of India, the individual souls
17 remain as individuals throughout, and God creates the universe out 18 of pre-existing material only as the efficient cause. According to the 19 Advaitists, on the other hand, God is both the material and the 20 efficient cause of the universe. He is not only the Creator of the 21 universe, but He creates it out of Himself. That is the Advaitist 22 position. There are crude dualistic sects who believe that this world 23 has been created by God out of Himself, and at the same time God 24 is eternally separate from the universe, and everything is eternally 25 subordinate to the Ruler of the universe. There are sects too who 26 also believe that out of Himself God has evolved this universe, and 27 individuals in the long run attain to Nirvana to give up the finite and 28 become the Infinite. But these sects have disappeared. The one sect 29 of Advaitists that you see in modern India is composed of the 30 followers of Shankara. According to Shankara, God is both the 31 material and the efficient cause through Maya, but not in reality.
32 God has not become this universe; but the universe is not, and God 33 is. This is one of the highest points to understand of Advaita 34 Vedanta, this idea of Maya. I am afraid I have no time to discuss 35 this one most difficult point in our philosophy. Those of you who are 36 acquainted with Western philosophy will find something very 37 similar in Kant. But I must warn you, those of you who have studied 38 Professor Max Muller's writings on Kant, that there is one idea 39 most misleading. It was Shankara who first found out the idea of 40 the identity of time, space, and causation with Maya, and I had the 41 good fortune to find one or two passages in Shankara's 42 commentaries and send them to my friend the Professor. So even 43 that idea was here in India. Now this is a peculiar theory--this Maya 44 theory of the Advaita Vedantists. The Brahman is all that exists, but 45 differentiation has been caused by this Maya. Unity, the one 46 Brahman, is the ultimate, the goal, and herein is an eternal 47 dissension again between Indian and Western thought. India has 48 thrown this challenge to the world for thousands of years, and the 49 challenge has been taken up by different nations, and the result is 50 that they all succumbed and you live. This is the challenge that this 51 world is a delusion, that it is all Maya, that whether you eat off the 52 ground with your fingers or dine off golden plates, whether you live 53 in palaces and are one of the mightiest monarchs or are the poorest

1 of beggars, death is the one result; it is all the same, all Maya. That 2 is the old Indian theme, and again and again nations are springing 3 up trying to unsay it, to disprove it; becoming great, with enjoyment 4 as their watchword, power in their hands, they use that power to 5 the utmost, enjoy to the utmost, and the next moment they die. We 6 stand for ever because we see that everything is Maya. The 7 children of Maya live for ever, but the children of enjoyment die.

8 Here again is another great difference. Just as you find the 9 attempts of Hegel and Schopenhauer in German philosophy, so you 10 will find the very same ideas brought forward in ancient India.
11 Fortunately for us, Hegelianism was nipped in the bud and not 12 allowed to sprout and cast its baneful shoots over this motherland 13 of ours. Hegel's one idea is that the one, the absolute, is only chaos, 14 and that the individualised form is the greater. The world is greater 15 than the non-world, Samsara is greater than salvation. That is the 16 one idea, and the more you plunge into this Samsara the more your 17 soul is covered with the workings of life, the better you are. They 18 say, do you not see how we built houses, cleanse the streets, enjoy 19 the senses? Ay, behind that they may hide rancour, misery, horror-- 20 behind every bit of that enjoyment.

21 On the other hand, our philosophers have from the very first 22 declared that every manifestation, what you call evolution, is vain, a 23 vain attempt of the unmanifested to manifest itself. Ay, you the 24 mighty cause of this universe, trying to reflect yourself in little mud 25 puddles! But after making the attempt for a time you find out it was 26 all in vain and beat a retreat to the place from whence you came.
27 This is Vairagya, or renunciation, and the very beginning of religion.
28 How can religion or morality begin without renunciation itself? The 29 Alpha and Omega is renunciation. "Give up," says the Veda, "give 30 up." That is the one way, "Give up". {Sanskrit}--"Neither through 31 wealth, nor through progeny, but by giving up alone that 32 immortality is to be reached." That is the dictate of the Indian 33 books. Of course, there have been great givers-up of the world, 34 even sitting on thrones. But even (King) Janaka himself had to 35 renounce; who was a greater renouncer than he? But in modern 36 times we all want to be called Janakas! They are all Janakas (lit.
37 fathers) of children--unclad, ill-fed, miserable children. The word 38 Janaka can be applied to them in that sense only; they have none of 39 the shining, Godlike thoughts as the old Janaka had. These are our 40 modern Janakas! A little less of this Janakism now, and come 41 straight to the mark! If you can give up, you will have religion. If 42 you cannot, you may read all the books that are in the world, from 43 East to West, swallow all the libraries, and become the greatest of 44 Pandits, but if you have Karma Kanda only, you are nothing; there is 45 no spirituality. Through renunciation alone this immortality is to be 46 reached. It is the power, the great power, that cares not even for 47 the universe; then it is that {Sanskrit}

48 "The whole universe becomes like a hollow made by a cow's 49 foot."

50 Renunciation, that is the flag, the banner of India, floating 51 over the world, the one undying thought which India sends again 52 and again as a warning to dying races, as a warning to all tyranny,

1 as a warning to wickedness in the world. Ay, Hindus, let not your 2 hold of that banner go. Hold it aloft. Even if you are weak and 3 cannot renounce, do not lower the ideal. Say, "I am weak and 4 cannot renounce the world", but do not try to be hypocrites, 5 torturing texts, and making specious arguments, and trying to 6 throw dust in the eyes of people who are ignorant. Do not do that, 7 but own you are weak. For the idea is great, that of renunciation.
8 What matters it if millions fail in the attempt, if ten soldiers or even 9 two return victorious! Blessed be the millions dead! Their blood has 10 bought the victory. This renunciation is the one ideal throughout the 11 different Vedic sects except one, and that is the Vallabhacharya sect 12 in Bombay Presidency, and most of you are aware what comes 13 where renunciation does not exist. We want orthodoxy--even the 14 hideously orthodox, even those who smother themselves with ashes, 15 even those who stand with their hands uplifted. Ay, we want them, 16 unnatural though they be, for standing for that idea of giving up, 17 and acting as a warning to the race against succumbing to the 18 effeminate luxuries that are creeping into India, eating into our very 19 vitals, and tending to make the whole race a race of hypocrites. We 20 want to have a little of asceticism. Renunciation conquered India in 21 days of yore, it has still to conquer India. Still it stands as the 22 greatest and highest of Indian ideals--this renunciation. The land of 23 Buddha, the land of Ramanuja, of Ramakrishna Paramahansa, the 24 land of renunciation, the land where, from the days of yore, Karma 25 Kanda was preached against, and even today there are hundreds 26 who have given up everything, and become Jivanmuktas--ay, will 27 that land give up its ideals? Certainly not. There may be people 28 whose brains have become turned by the Western luxurious ideals; 29 there may be thousands and hundreds of thousands who have 30 drunk deep of enjoyment, this curse of the West--the senses--the 31 curse of the world; yet for all that, there will be other thousands in 32 this motherland of mine to whom religion will ever be a reality, and 33 who will be ever ready to give up without counting the cost, if need 34 be.

35 Another ideal very common in all our sects, I want to place 36 before you; it is also a vast subject. This unique idea that religion is 37 to be realised is in India alone. {Sanskrit}--"This Atman is not to be 38 reached by too much talking, nor is it to be reached by the power of 39 the intellect, nor by much study of the scriptures." Nay, ours is the 40 only scripture in the world that declares, not even by the study of 41 the scriptures can the Atman be realised--not talks, not lecturing, 42 none of that, but It is to be realised. It comes from the teacher to 43 the disciple. When this insight comes to the disciple, everything is 44 cleared up and realisation follows.

45 One more idea. There is a peculiar custom in Bengal, which 46 they call Kula-Guru, or hereditary Guruship. "My father was your 47 Guru, now I shall be your Guru. My father was the Guru of your 48 father, so shall I be yours." What is a Guru? Let us go back to the 49 Shrutis--"He who knows the secret of the Vedas", not bookworms, 50 not grammarians, not Pandits in general, but he who knows the 51 meaning. {Sanskrit}--"An ass laden with a load of sandalwood 52 knows only the weight of the wood, but not its precious qualities";

1 so are these Pandits. We do not want such. What can they teach if 2 they have no realisation? When I was a boy here, in this city of 3 Calcutta, I used to go from place to place in search of religion, and 4 everywhere I asked the lecturer after hearing very big lectures, 5 "Have you seen God?"

6 The man was taken aback at the idea of seeing God; and the 7 only man who told me, "I have", was Ramakrishna Paramahansa, 8 and not only so, but he said, "I will put you in the way of seeing Him 9 too". The Guru is not a man who twists and tortures texts.
10 {Sanskrit}--"Different ways of throwing out words, different ways 11 of explaining texts of the scriptures, these are for the enjoyment of 12 the learned, not for freedom." Shrotriya, he who knows the secret 13 of the Shrutis, Avrijina, the sinless, and Akamahata, unpierced by 14 desire--he who does not want to make money by teaching you--he is 15 the Shanta, the Sadhu, who comes as the spring which brings the 16 leaves and blossoms to various plants but does not ask anything 17 from the plant, for its very nature is to do good. It does good and 18 there it is. Such is the Guru, {Sanskrit}--"Who has himself crossed 19 this terrible ocean of life, and without any idea of gain to himself, 20 helps others also to cross the ocean." This is the Guru, and mark 21 that none else can be a Guru, for {Sanskrit}--"Themselves steeped 22 in darkness, but in the pride of their hearts, thinking they know 23 everything, the fools want to help others, and they go round and 24 round in many crooked ways, staggering to and fro, and thus like 25 the blind leading the blind, both fall into the ditch." Thus say the 26 Vedas. Compare that and your present custom. You are Vedantists, 27 you are very orthodox, are you not? You are great Hindus and very 28 orthodox. Ay, what I want to do is to make you more orthodox. The 29 more orthodox you are, the more sensible; and the more you think 30 of modern orthodoxy, the more foolish you are. Go back to your old 31 orthodoxy, for in those days every sound that came from these 32 books, every pulsation, was out of a strong, steady, and sincere 33 heart; every note was true. After that came degradation in art, in 34 science, in religion, in everything, national degradation. We have no 35 time to discuss the causes, but all the books written about that 36 period breathe of the pestilence--the national decay; instead of 37 vigour, only wails and cries. Go back, go back to the old days when 38 there was strength and vitality. Be strong once more, drink deep of 39 this fountain of yore, and that is the only condition of life in India.

40 According to the Advaitist, this individuality which we have 41 today is a delusion. This has been a hard nut to crack all over the 42 world. Forthwith you tell a man he is not an individual, he is so 43 much afraid that his individuality, whatever that may be, will be 44 lost! But the Advaitist says there never has been an individuality, 45 you have been changing every moment of your life. You were a child 46 and thought in one way, now you are a man and think another way, 47 again you will be an old man and think differently. Everybody is 48 changing. If so, where is your individuality? Certainly not in the 49 body, or in the mind, or in thought. And beyond that is your Atman, 50 and, says the Advaitist, this Atman is the Brahman Itself. There 51 cannot be two infinities. There is only one individual and it is 52 infinite. In plain words, we are rational beings, and we want to 1 reason. And what is reason? More or less of classification, until you 2 cannot go on any further. And the finite can only find its ultimate 3 rest when it is classified into the infinite. Take up a finite thing and 4 go on analysing it, but you will find rest nowhere until you reach the 5 ultimate or infinite, and that infinite, says the Advaitist, is what 6 alone exists. Everything else is Maya, nothing else has real 7 existence; whatever is of existence in any material thing is this 8 Brahman; we are this Brahman, and the shape and everything else 9 is Maya. Take away the form and shape, and you and I are all one.

10 But we have to guard against the word, "I". Generally people say, "If 11 I am the Brahman, why cannot I do this and that?" But this is using 12 the word in a different sense.

13 As soon as you think you are bound, no more you are 14 Brahman, the Self, who wants nothing, whose light is inside. All His 15 pleasures and bliss are inside; perfectly satisfied with Himself, He 16 wants nothing, expects nothing, perfectly fearless, perfectly free.
17 That is Brahman. In That we are all one.

18 Now this seems, therefore, to be the great point of difference 19 between the dualist and the Advaitist. You find even great 20 commentators like Shankaracharya making meanings of texts, 21 which, to my mind, sometimes do not seem to be justified.
22 Sometimes you find Ramanuja dealing with texts in a way that is 23 not very clear. The idea has been even among our Pandits that only 24 one of these sects can be true and the rest must be false, although 25 they have the idea in the Shrutis, the most wonderful idea that 26 India has yet to give to the world--{Sanskrit}--"That which exists is 27 One; sages call It by various names." That has been the theme, and 28 the working out of the whole of this life-problem of the nation is the 29 working out of that theme--{Sanskrit}. Yea, except a very few 30 learned men, I mean, barring a very few spiritual men, in India, we 31 always forget this. We forget this great idea, and you will find that 32 there are persons among Pandits--I should think ninety-eight per 33 cent--who are of opinion that either the Advaitist will be true, or the 34 Vishishtadvaitist will be true, or the Dvaitist will be true; and if you 35 go to Varanasi, and sit for five minutes in one of the Ghats there, 36 you will have demonstration of what I say. You will see a regular 37 bull-fight going on about these various sects and things.

38 Thus it remains. Then came one whose life was the 39 explanation, whose life was the working out of the harmony that is 40 the background of all the different sects of India, I mean 41 Ramakrishna Paramahansa. It is his life that explains that both of 42 these are necessary, that they are like the geocentric and the 43 heliocentric theories in astronomy. When a child is taught 44 astronomy, he is taught the geocentric first, and works out similar 45 ideas of astronomy to the geocentric. But when he comes to finer 46 points of astronomy, the heliocentric will be necessary, and he will 47 understand it better. Dualism is the natural idea of the senses; as 48 long as we are bound by the senses we are bound to see a God who 49 is only Personal, and nothing but Personal, we are bound to see the 50 world as it is. Says Ramanuja, "So long as you think you are a body, 51 and you think you are a mind, and you think you are a Jiva, every 52 act of perception will give you the three--Soul, and nature, and 1 something as causing both." But yet, at the same time, even the 2 idea of the body disappears where the mind itself becomes finer 3 and finer, till it has almost disappeared, when all the different 4 things that make us fear, make us weak, and bind us down to this 5 body-life have disappeared. Then and then alone one finds out the 6 truth of that grand old teaching. What is the teaching?

7 {Sanskrit}

8 "Even in this life they have conquered the round of birth and 9 death whose minds are firm-fixed on the sameness of everything, 10 for God is pure and the same to all, and therefore such are said to 11 be living in God."

12 {Sanskrit}

13 "Thus seeing the Lord the same everywhere, he, the sage, 14 does not hurt the Self by the self, and so goes to the highest goal."

ADDRESS OF WELCOME AT ALMORA AND REPLY

{address of welcome}

Two other addresses were presented, to which the Swami made the following brief reply:

This is the land of dreams of our forefathers, in which was born Parvati, the Mother of India. This is the holy land where every ardent soul in India wants to come at the end of its life, and to close the last chapter of its mortal career. On the tops of the mountains of this blessed land, in the depths of its caves, on the banks of its rushing torrents, have been thought out the most wonderful thoughts, a little bit of which has drawn so much admiration even from foreigners, and which have been pronounced by the most competent of judges to be incomparable. This is the land which, since my very childhood, I have been dreaming of passing my life in, and as all of you are aware, I have attempted again and again to live here; and although the time was not ripe, and I had work to do and was whirled outside of this holy place, yet it is the hope of my life to end my days somewhere in this Father of Mountains where the Rishis lived, where philosophy was born. Perhaps, my friends, I shall not be able to do it, in the way that I had planned before--how I wish that silence, that unknownness would be given to me--yet I sincerely pray and hope, and almost believe, that my last days will be spent here, of all places on earth.

Inhabitants of this holy land, accept my gratitude for the kind praise that has fallen from you for my little work in the West. But at the same time, my mind does not want to speak of that, either in the East or in the West. As peak after peak of this Father of Mountains began to appear before my sight, all the propensities to work, that ferment that had been going on in my brain for years, seemed to quiet down, and instead of talking about what had been done and what going to be done, the mind reverted to that one eternal theme which the Himalayas always teach us, that one theme which is reverberating in the very atmosphere of this place, the one theme the murmur of which I hear even now in the rushing whirlpools of its rivers--renunciation! {Sanskrit}--"Everything in this life is fraught with fear. It is renunciation alone that makes one fearless." Yes, this is the land of renunciation.

The time will not permit me, and the circumstances are not fitting, to speak to you fully. I shall have to conclude, therefore, by pointing out to you that the Himalayas stand for that renunciation, and the grand lesson we shall ever teach to humanity will be renunciation. As our forefathers used to be attracted towards it in the latter days of their lives, so strong souls from all quarters of this earth, in time to come, will be attracted to this Father of Mountains, when all this fight between sects and all those differences in dogmas will not be remembered any more, and quarrels between your religion and my religion will have vanished altogether, when mankind will understand that there is but one eternal religion, and

1 that is the perception of the divine within, and the rest is mere 2 froth: such ardent souls will come here knowing that the world is 3 but vanity of vanities, knowing that everything is useless except the 4 worship of the Lord and the Lord alone.

5 Friends, you have been very kind to allude to an idea of mine, 6 which is to start a centre in the Himalayas, and perhaps I have 7 sufficiently explained why it should be so, why, above all others, this 8 is the spot which I want to select as one of the great centres to 9 teach this universal religion. These mountains are associated with 10 the best memories of our race; if these Himalayas are taken away 11 from the history of religious India, there will be very little left 12 behind. Here, therefore, must be one of those centres, not merely 13 of activity, but more of calmness, of meditation, and of peace; and I 14 hope some day to realise it. I hope also to meet you at other times 15 and have better opportunities of talking to you. For the present, let 16 me thank you again for all the kindness that has been shown to me, 17 and let me take it as not only kindness shown to me in person, but 18 as to one who represents our religion. May it never leave our 19 hearts! May we always remain as pure as we are at the present 20 moment, and as enthusiastic for spirituality as we are just now!

VEDIC TEACHING IN THEORY AND PRACTICE

3

4 When the Swami's visit was drawing to a close, his friends in 5 Almora invited him to give a lecture in Hindi. He consented to make 6 the attempt for the first time. He began slowly, and soon warmed to 7 his theme, and found himself building his phrases and almost his 8 words as he went along. Those best acquainted with the difficulties 9 and limitations of the Hindi language, still undeveloped as a 10 medium for oratory, expressed their opinion that a personal triumph 11 had been achieved by Swamiji and that he had proved by his 12 masterly use of Hindi that the language had in it undreamt-of 13 possibilities of development in the direction of oratory.

14 Another lecture was delivered at the English Club in English, 15 of which a brief summary follows.

16 The subject was "Vedic Teaching in Theory and Practice". A 17 short historical sketch of the rise of the worship of the tribal God 18 and its spread through conquest of other tribes was followed by an 19 account of the Vedas. Their nature, character, and teaching were 20 briefly touched upon. Then the Swami spoke about the soul, 21 comparing the Western method which seeks for the solution of vital 22 and religious mysteries in the outside world, with the Eastern 23 method which finding no answer in nature outside turns its inquiry 24 within. He justly claimed for his nation the glory of being the 25 discoverers of the introspective method peculiar to themselves, and 26 of having given to humanity the priceless treasures of spirituality 27 which are the result of that method alone. Passing from this theme, 28 naturally so dear to the heart of a Hindu, the Swami reached the 29 climax of his power as a spiritual teacher when he described the 30 relation of the soul to God, its aspiration after and real unity with 31 God. For some time it seemed as though the teacher, his words, his 32 audience, and the spirit pervading them all were one. No longer 33 was there any consciousness of "I" and "Thou", of "This" or "That".
34 The different units collected there were for the time being lost and 35 merged in the spiritual radiance which emanated so powerfully 36 from the great teacher and held them all more than spellbound.

37 Those that have frequently heard him will recall similar 38 experiences when he ceased to be Swami Vivekananda lecturing to 39 critical and attentive hearers, when all details and personalities 40 were lost, names and forms disappeared, only the Spirit remaining, 41 uniting the speaker, hearer, and the spoken word.

BHAKTI

(Delivered at Sialkote, Punjab)

The subject of the Swamiji's Hindi lecture was Bhakti, a summary of which, translated into English, is given below:

The various religions that exist in the world, although they differ in the form of worship they take, are really one. In some places the people build temples and worship in them, in some they worship fire, in others they prostrate themselves before idols, while there are many who do not believe at all in God. All are true, for, if you look to the real spirit, the real religion, and the truths in each of them, they are all alike. In some religions God is not worshipped, nay, His existence is not believed in, but good and worthy men are worshipped as if they were Gods. The example worthy of citation in this case is Buddhism. Bhakti is everywhere, whether directed to God or to noble persons. Upasana in the form of Bhakti is everywhere supreme, and Bhakti is more easily attained than Jnana. The latter requires favourable circumstances and strenuous practice. Yoga cannot be properly practised unless a man is physically very healthy and free from all worldly attachments. But Bhakti can be more easily practised by persons in every condition of life. Shandilya Rishi, who wrote about Bhakti, says that extreme love for God is Bhakti. Prahlada speaks to the same effect. If a man does not get food one day, he is troubled; if his son dies, how agonising it is to him! The true Bhakta feels the same pangs in his heart when he yearns after God. The great quality of Bhakti is that it cleanses the mind, and the firmly established Bhakti for the Supreme Lord is alone sufficient to purify the mind. "O God, Thy names are innumerable, but in every name Thy power is manifest, and every name is pregnant with deep and mighty significance." We should think of God always and not consider time and place for doing so.

The different names under which God is worshipped are apparently different. One thinks that his method of worshipping God is the most efficacious, and another thinks that his is the more potent process of attaining salvation. But look at the true basis of all, and it is one. The Shaivas call Shiva the most powerful; the Vaishnavas hold to their all-powerful Vishnu; the worshippers of Devi will not yield to any in their idea that their Devi is the most omnipotent power in the universe. Leave inimical thoughts aside if you want to have permanent Bhakti. Hatred is a thing which greatly impedes the course of Bhakti, and the man who hates none reaches God. Even then the devotion for one's own ideal is necessary. Hanuman says, "Vishnu and Rama, I know, are one and the same, but after all, the lotus-eyed Rama is my best treasure." The peculiar tendencies with which a person is born must remain with him. That is the chief reason why the world cannot be of one religion--and God forbid that there should be one religion only--for the world would then be a chaos and not a cosmos. A man must follow the tendencies peculiar to himself; and if he gets a teacher to help him

1 to advance along his own lines, he will progress. We should let a 2 person go the way he intends to go, but if we try to force him into 3 another path, he will lose what he has already attained and will 4 become worthless. As the face of one person does not resemble that 5 of another, so the nature of one differs from that of another, and 6 why should he not be allowed to act accordingly? A river flows in a 7 certain direction; and if you direct the course into a regular 8 channel, the current becomes more rapid and the force is 9 increased, but try to divert it from its proper course, and you will 10 see the result; the volume as well as the force will be lessened. This 11 life is very important, and it, therefore, ought to be guided in the 12 way one's tendency prompts him. In India there was no enmity, and 13 every religion was left unmolested; so religion has lived. It ought to 14 be remembered that quarrels about religion arise from thinking 15 that one alone has the truth and whoever does not believe as one 16 does is a fool; while another thinks that the other is a hypocrite, for 17 if he were not one, he would follow him.

18 If God wished that people should follow one religion, why 19 have so many religions sprung up? Methods have been vainly tried 20 to force one religion upon everyone. Even when the sword was 21 lifted to make all people follow one religion, history tells us that ten 22 religions sprang up in its place. One religion cannot suit all. Man is 23 the product of two forces, action and reaction, which make him 24 think. If such forces did not exercise a man's mind, he would be 25 incapable of thinking. Man is a creature who thinks; Manushya 26 (man) is a being with Manas (mind); and as soon as his thinking 27 power goes, he becomes no better than an animal. Who would like 28 such a man? God forbid that any such state should come upon the 29 people of India. Variety in unity is necessary to keep man as man.
30 Variety ought to be preserved in everything; for as long as there is 31 variety the world will exist. Of course variety does not merely mean 32 that one is small and the other is great; but if all play their parts 33 equally well in their respective positions in life, the variety is still 34 preserved. In every religion there have been men good and able, 35 thus making the religion to which they belonged worthy of respect; 36 and as there are such people in every religion, there ought to be no 37 hatred for any sect whatsoever.

38 Then the question may be asked, should we respect that 39 religion which advocates vice? The answer will be certainly in the 40 negative, and such a religion ought to be expelled at once, because 41 it is productive of harm. All religion is to be based upon morality, 42 and personal purity is to be counted superior to Dharma. In this 43 connection it ought to be known that Achara means purity inside 44 and outside. External purity can be attained by cleansing the body 45 with water and other things which are recommended in the 46 Shastras. The internal man is to be purified by not speaking 47 falsehood, by not drinking, by not doing immoral acts, and by doing 48 good to others. If you do not commit any sin, if you do not tell lies, if 49 you do not drink, gamble, or commit theft, it is good. But that is 50 only your duty and you cannot be applauded for it. Some service to 51 others is also to be done. As you do good to yourself, so you must do 52 good to others.

1 Here I shall say something about food regulations. All the old 2 customs have faded away, and nothing but a vague notion of not 3 eating with this man and not eating with that man has been left 4 among our countrymen. Purity by touch is the only relic left of the 5 good rules laid down hundreds of years ago. Three kinds of food are 6 forbidden in the Shastras. First, the food that is by its very nature
7 defective, as garlic or onions. If a man eats too much of them it 8 creates passion, and he may be led to commit immoralities, hateful 9 both to God and man. Secondly, food contaminated by external 10 impurities. We ought to select some place quite neat and clean in 11 which to keep our food. Thirdly, we should avoid eating food 12 touched by a wicked man, because contact with such produces bad 13 ideas in us. Even if one be a son of a Brahmin, but is profligate and 14 immoral in his habits, we should not eat food from his hands.

15 But the spirit of these observances is gone. What is left is 16 this, that we cannot eat from the hands of any man who is not of the 17 highest caste, even though he be the most wise and holy person.
18 The disregard of those old rules is ever to be found in the 19 confectioner's shop. If you look there, you will find flies hovering all 20 over the confectionery, and the dust from the road blowing upon the 21 sweetmeats, and the confectioner himself in a dress that is not very 22 clean and neat. Purchasers should declare with one voice that they 23 will not buy sweets unless they are kept in glass-cases in the 24 Halwai's shop. That would have the salutary effect of preventing 25 flies from conveying cholera and other plague germs to the sweets.
26 We ought to improve, but instead of improving we have gone back.
27 Manu says that we should not spit in water, but we throw all sorts 28 of filth into the rivers. Considering all these things we find that the 29 purification of one's outer self is very necessary. The Shastrakaras 30 knew that very well. But now the real spirit of this observance of 31 purity about food is lost and the letter only remains. Thieves, 32 drunkards, and criminals can be our caste-fellows, but if a good and 33 noble man eats food with a person of a lower caste, who is quite as 34 respectable as himself, he will be outcasted and lost for ever. This 35 custom has been the bane of our country. It ought, therefore, to be 36 distinctly understood that sin is incurred by coming in contact with 37 sinners, and nobility in the company of good persons; and keeping 38 aloof from the wicked is the external purification.

39 The internal purification is a task much more severe. It 40 consists in speaking the truth, serving the poor, helping the needy, 41 etc. Do we always speak the truth? What happens is often this.
42 People go to the house of a rich person for some business of their 43 own and flatter him by calling him benefactor of the poor and so 44 forth, even though that man may cut the throat of a poor man 45 coming to his house. What is this? Nothing but falsehood. And it is 46 this that pollutes the mind. It is therefore, truly said that whatever 47 a man says who has purified his inner self for twelve years without 48 entertaining a single vicious idea during that period is sure to come 49 true. This is the power of truth, and one who has cleansed both the 50 inner and the outer self is alone capable of Bhakti. But the beauty is 51 that Bhakti itself cleanses the mind to a great extent. Although the 52 Jews, Mohammedans, and Christians do not set so much

1 importance upon the excessive external purification of the body as 2 the Hindus do, still they have it in some form or other; they find that 3 to a certain extent it is always required. Among the Jews, idol-
4 worship is condemned, but they had a temple in which was kept a 5 chest which they called an ark, in which the Tables of the Law were 6 preserved, and above the chest were two figures of angels with 7 wings outstretched, between which the Divine Presence was 8 supposed to manifest itself as a cloud. That temple has long since 9 been destroyed, but the new temples are made exactly after the old 10 fashion, and in the chest religious books are kept. The Roman 11 Catholics and the Greek Christians have idol-worship in certain 12 forms. The image of Jesus and that of his mother are worshipped.
13 Among Protestants there is no idol-worship, yet they worship God in 14 a personal form, which may be called idol-worship in another form.
15 Among Parsees and Iranians fire-worship is carried on to a great 16 extent. Among Mohammedans the prophets and great and noble 17 persons are worshipped, and they turn their faces towards the 18 Caaba when they pray. These things show that men at the first 19 stage of religious development have to make use of something 20 external, and when the inner self becomes purified they turn to 21 more abstract conceptions. "When the Jiva is sought to be united 22 with Brahman it is best, when meditation is practised it is mediocre, 23 repetition of names is the lowest form, and external worship is the 24 lowest of the low." But it should be distinctly understood that even 25 in practising the last there is no sin. Everybody ought to do what he 26 is able to do; and if he be dissuaded from that, he will do it in some 27 other way in order to attain his end. So we should not speak ill of a 28 man who worships idols. He is in that stage of growth, and, 29 therefore, must have them; wise men should try to help forward 30 such men and get them to do better. But there is no use in 31 quarrelling about these various sorts of worship.

32 Some persons worship God for the sake of obtaining wealth, 33 others because they want to have a son, and they think themselves 34 Bhagavatas (devotees). This is no Bhakti, and they are not true 35 Bhagavatas. When a Sadhu comes who professes that he can make 36 gold, they run to him, and they still consider themselves 37 Bhagavatas. It is not Bhakti if we worship God with the desire for a 38 son; it is not Bhakti if we worship with the desire to be rich; it is not 39 Bhakti even if we have a desire for heaven; it is not Bhakti if a man 40 worships with the desire of being saved from the tortures of hell.
41 Bhakti is not the outcome of fear or greediness. He is the true 42 Bhagavata who says, "O God, I do not want a beautiful wife, I do not 43 want knowledge or salvation. Let me be born and die hundreds of 44 times. What I want is that I should be ever engaged in Thy service." 45 It is at this stage--and when a man sees God in everything, and 46 everything in God--that he attains perfect Bhakti. It is then that he 47 sees Vishnu incarnated in everything from the microbe to Brahma, 48 and it is then that he sees God manifesting Himself in everything, it 49 is then that he feels that there is nothing without God, and it is then 50 and then alone that thinking himself to be the most insignificant of 51 all beings he worships God with the true spirit of a Bhakta. He then 52 leaves Tirthas and external forms of worship far behind him, he 53 sees every man to be the most perfect temple.

1 Bhakti is described in several ways in the Shastras. We say
2 that God is our Father. In the same way we call Him Mother, and so
3 on. These relationships are conceived in order to strengthen Bhakti 4 in us, and they make us feel nearer and dearer to God. Hence these 5 names are justifiable in one way, and that is that the words are 6 simply words of endearment, the outcome of the fond love which a 7 true Bhagavata feels for God. Take the story of Radha and Krishna
8 in Rasalila. The story simply exemplifies the true spirit of a Bhakta, 9 because no love in the world exceeds that existing between a man
10 and a woman. When there is such intense love, there is no fear, no 11 other attachment save that one which binds that pair in an 12 inseparable and all-absorbing bond. But with regard to parents, 13 love is accompanied with fear due to the reverence we have for 14 them. Why should we care whether God created anything or not, 15 what have we to do with the fact that He is our preserver? He is 16 only our Beloved, and we should adore Him devoid of all thoughts 17 of fear. A man loves God only when he has no other desire, when he 18 thinks of nothing else and when he is mad after Him. That love 19 which a man has for his beloved can illustrate the love we ought to 20 have for God. Krishna is the God and Radha loves Him; read those 21 books which describe that story, and then you can imagine the way 22 you should love God. But how many understand this? How can 23 people who are vicious to their very core and have no idea of what 24 morality is understand all this? When people drive all sorts of 25 worldly thoughts from their minds and live in a clear moral and 26 spiritual atmosphere, it is then that they understand the abstrusest 27 of thoughts even if they be uneducated. But how few are there of 28 that nature! There is not a single religion which cannot be 29 perverted by man. For example, he may think that the Atman is 30 quite separate from the body, and so, when committing sins with 31 the body his Atman is unaffected. If religions were truly followed, 32 there would not have been a single man, whether Hindu, 33 Mohammedan, or Christian, who would not have been all purity. But 34 men are guided by their own nature, whether good or bad; there is 35 no gainsaying that. But in the world, there are always some who get 36 intoxicated when they hear of God, and shed tears of joy when they 37 read of God. Such men are true Bhaktas.

38 At the initial stage of religious development a man thinks of 39 God as his Master and himself as His servant. He feels indebted to 40 Him for providing for his daily wants, and so forth. Put such 41 thoughts aside. There is but one attractive power, and that is God; 42 and it is in obedience to that attractive power that the sun and the 43 moon and everything else move. Everything in this world, whether 44 good or bad, belongs to God. Whatever occurs in our life, whether 45 good or bad, is bringing us to Him. One man kills another because 46 of some selfish purpose. But the motive behind is love, whether for 47 himself or for any one else. Whether we do good or evil, the 48 propeller is love. When a tiger kills a buffalo, it is because he or his 49 cubs are hungry.

50 God is love personified. He is apparent in everything.
51 Everybody is being drawn to Him whether he knows it or not. When 52 a woman loves her husband, she does not understand that it is the 1 divine in her husband that is the great attractive power. The God of 2 Love is the one thing to be worshipped. So long as we think of Him

3 only as the Creator and Preserver, we can offer Him external 4 worship, but when we get beyond all that and think Him to be Love 5 Incarnate, seeing Him in all things and all things in Him, it is then 6 that supreme Bhakti is attained.

THE COMMON BASES OF HINDUISM

On his arrival at Lahore the Swamiji was accorded a grand reception by the leaders, both of the Arya Samaj and of the Sanatana Dharma Sabha. During his brief stay in Lahore, Swamiji delivered three lectures. The first of these was on "The Common Bases of Hinduism", the second on "Bhakti", and the third one was the famous lecture on "The Vedanta". On the first occasion he spoke as follows:

This is the land which is held to be the holiest even in holy Aryavarta; this is the Brahmavarta of which our great Manu speaks. This is the land from whence arose that mighty aspiration after the Spirit, ay, which in times to come, as history shows, is to deluge the world. This is the land where, like its mighty rivers, spiritual aspirations have arisen and joined their strength, till they travelled over the length and breadth of the world and declared themselves with a voice of thunder. This is the land which had first to bear the brunt of all inroads and invasions into India; this heroic land had first to bare its bosom to every onslaught of the outer barbarians into Aryavarta. This is the land which, after all its sufferings, has not yet entirely lost its glory and its strength. Here it was that in later times the gentle Nanak preached his marvellous love for the world. Here it was that his broad heart was opened and his arms outstretched to embrace the whole world, not only of Hindus, but of Mohammedans too. Here it was that one of the last and one of the most glorious heroes of our race, Guru Govinda Singh, after shedding his blood and that of his dearest and nearest for the cause of religion, even when deserted by those for whom this blood was shed, retired into the South to die like a wounded lion struck to the heart, without a word against his country, without a single word of murmur.

Here, in this ancient land of ours, children of the land of five rivers, I stand before you, not as a teacher, for I know very little to teach, but as one who has come from the east to exchange words of greeting with the brothers of the west, to compare notes. Here am I, not to find out differences that exist among us, but to find where we agree. Here am I trying to understand on what ground we may always remain brothers, upon what foundations the voice that has spoken from eternity may become stronger and stronger as it grows. Here am I trying to propose to you something of constructive work and not destructive. For criticism the days are past, and we are waiting for constructive work. The world needs, at times, criticisms even fierce ones; but that is only for a time, and the work for eternity is progress and construction, and not criticism and destruction. For the last hundred years or so, there has been a flood of criticism all over this land of ours, where the full play of Western science has been let loose upon all the dark spots, and as a result the corners and the holes have become much more prominent than anything else. Naturally enough there arose mighty intellects all over the land, great and glorious, with the love of truth

1 and justice in their hearts, with the love of their country, and above 2 all, an intense love for their religion and their God; and because 3 these mighty souls felt so deeply, because they loved so deeply, they 4 criticised everything they thought was wrong. Glory unto these 5 mighty spirits of the past! They have done so much good; but the 6 voice of the present day is coming to us, telling, "Enough!" There 7 has been enough of criticism, there has been enough of fault-
8 finding, the time has come for the rebuilding, the reconstructing; 9 the time has come for us to gather all our scattered forces, to 10 concentrate them into one focus, and through that, to lead the 11 nation on its onward march, which for centuries almost has been 12 stopped. The house has been cleansed; let it be inhabited anew. The 13 road has been cleared. March ahead, children of the Aryans!

14 Gentlemen, this is the motive that brings me before you, and 15 at the start I may declare to you that I belong to no party and no 16 sect. They are all great and glorious to me, I love them all, and all 17 my life I have been attempting to find what is good and true in 18 them. Therefore, it is my proposal tonight to bring before you points 19 where we are agreed, to find out, if we can, a ground of agreement; 20 and if through the grace of the Lord such a state of things be 21 possible, let us take it up, and from theory carry it out into practice.
22 We are Hindus. I do not use the word Hindu in any bad sense at all, 23 nor do I agree with those that think there is any bad meaning in it.
24 In old times, it simply meant people who lived on the other side of 25 the Indus; today a good many among those who hate us may have 26 put a bad interpretation upon it, but names are nothing. Upon us 27 depends whether the name Hindu will stand for everything that is 28 glorious, everything that is spiritual, or whether it will remain a 29 name of opprobrium, one designating the downtrodden, the 30 worthless, the heathen. If at present the word Hindu means 31 anything bad, never mind; by our action let us be ready to show 32 that this is the highest word that any language can invent. It has 33 been one of the principles of my life not to be ashamed of my own 34 ancestors. I am one of the proudest men ever born, but let me tell 35 you frankly, it is not for myself, but on account of my ancestry. The 36 more I have studied the past, the more I have looked back, more 37 and more has this pride come to me, and it has give me the 38 strength and courage of conviction, raised me up from the dust of 39 the earth, and set me working out that great plan laid out by those 40 great ancestors of ours. Children of those ancient Aryans, through 41 the grace of the Lord may you have the same pride, may that faith 42 in your ancestors come into your blood, may it become a part and 43 parcel of your lives, may it work towards the salvation of the world!

44 Before trying to find out the precise point where we are all 45 agreed, the common ground of our national life, one thing we must 46 remember. Just as there is an individuality in every man, so there is 47 a national individuality. As one man differs from another in certain 48 particulars, in certain characteristics of his own, so one race differs 49 from another in certain peculiar characteristics; and just as it is the 50 mission of every man to fulfil a certain purpose in the economy of 51 nature, just as there is a particular line set out for him by his own 52 past Karma, so it is with nations--each nation has a destiny to fulfil,

1 each nation has a message to deliver, each nation has a mission to 2 accomplish. Therefore, from the very start, we must have to 3 understand the mission of our own race, the destiny it has to fulfil, 4 the place it has to occupy in the march of nations, and note which it 5 has to contribute to the harmony of races. In our country, when 6 children, we hear stories how some serpents have jewels in their 7 heads, and whatever one may do with the serpent, so long as the 8 jewel is there, the serpent cannot be killed. We hear stories of 9 giants and ogres who had souls living in certain little birds, and so 10 long as the bird was safe, there was no power on earth to kill these 11 giants; you might hack them to pieces, or do what you liked to 12 them, the giants could not die. So with nations, there is a certain 13 point where the life of a nation centres, where lies the nationality of 14 the nation, and until that is touched, the nation cannot die. In the 15 light of this we can understand the most marvellous phenomenon 16 that the history of the world has ever known. Wave after wave of 17 barbarian conquest has rolled over this devoted land of ours. "Allah 18 Ho Akbar!" has rent the skies for hundreds of years, and no Hindu 19 knew what moment would be his last. This is the most suffering and 20 the most subjugated of all the historic lands of the world. Yet we 21 still stand practically the same race, ready to face difficulties again 22 and again if necessary; and not only so, of late there have been 23 signs that we are not only strong, but ready to go out, for the sign 24 of life is expansion.

25 We find today that our ideas and thoughts are no more 26 cooped up within the bounds of India, but whether we will it or not, 27 they are marching outside, filtering into the literature of nations, 28 taking their place among nations, and in some, even getting a 29 commanding dictatorial position. Behind this we find the 30 explanation that the great contribution to the sum total of the 31 world's progress from India is the greatest, the noblest, the 32 sublimest theme that can occupy the mind of man--it is philosophy 33 and spirituality. Our ancestors tried many other things; they, like 34 other nations, first went to bring out the secrets of external nature 35 as we all know, and with their gigantic brains that marvellous race 36 could have done miracles in that line of which the world could have 37 been proud for ever. But they gave it up for something higher; 38 something better rings out from the pages of the Vedas: "That 39 science is the greatest which makes us know Him who never 40 changes!" The science of nature, changeful, evanescent, the world 41 of death, of woe, of misery, may be great, great indeed; but the 42 science of Him who changes not, the Blissful One, where alone is 43 peace, where alone is life eternal, where alone is perfection, where 44 alone all misery ceases--that, according to our ancestors, was the 45 sublimest science of all. After all, sciences that can give us only 46 bread and clothes and power over our fellowmen, sciences that can 47 teach us only how to conquer our fellow-beings, to rule over them, 48 which teach the strong to domineer over the weak--those they could 49 have discovered if they willed. But praise be unto the Lord, they 50 caught at once the other side, which was grander, infinitely higher, 51 infinitely more blissful, till it has become the national characteristic, 52 till it has come down to us, inherited from father to son for 53 thousands of years, till it has become a part and parcel of us, till it

1 tingles in every drop of blood that runs through our veins, till it has 2 become our second nature, till the name of religion and Hindu have 3 become one. This is the national characteristic, and this cannot be 4 touched. Barbarians with sword and fire, barbarians bringing 5 barbarous religions, not one of them could touch the core, not one 6 could touch the "jewel", not one had the power to kill the "bird" 7 which the soul of the race inhabited. This, therefore, is the vitality 8 of the race, and so long as that remains, there is no power under 9 the sun that can kill the race. All the tortures and miseries of the 10 world will pass over without hurting us, and we shall come out of 11 the flames like Prahlada, so long as we hold on to this grandest of 12 all our inheritances, spirituality. If a Hindu is not spiritual I do not 13 call him a Hindu. In other countries a man may be political first, 14 and then he may have a little religion, but here in India the first and 15 the foremost duty of our lives is to be spiritual first, and then, if 16 there is time, let other things come. Bearing this in mind we shall 17 be in a better position to understand why, for our national welfare, 18 we must first seek out at the present day all the spiritual forces of 19 the race, as was done in days of yore and will be done in all times to 20 come. National union in India must be a gathering up of its 21 scattered spiritual forces. A nation in India must be a union of those 22 whose hearts beat to the same spiritual tune.

23 There have been sects enough in this country. There are sects 24 enough, and there will be enough in the future, because this has 25 been the peculiarity of our religion that in abstract principles so 26 much latitude has been given that, although afterwards so much 27 detail has been worked out, all these details are the working out of 28 principles, broad as the skies above our heads, eternal as nature 29 herself. Sects, therefore, as a matter of course, must exist here, but 30 what need not exist is sectarian quarrel. Sects must be, but 31 sectarianism need not. The world would not be the better for 32 sectarianism, but the world cannot move on without having sects.
33 One set of men cannot do everything. The almost infinite mass of 34 energy in the world cannot be managed by a small number of 35 people. Here, at once we see the necessity that forced this division 36 of labour upon us--the division into sects. For the use of spiritual 37 forces let there be sects; but is there any need that we should 38 quarrel when our most ancient books declare that this 39 differentiation is only apparent, that in spite of all these differences 40 there is a thread of harmony, that beautiful unity, running through 41 them all? Our most ancient books have declared: {Sanskrit}--"That 42 which exists is One; sages call Him by various names." Therefore, if 43 there are these sectarian struggles, if there are these fights among 44 the different sects, if there is jealousy and hatred between the 45 different sects in India, the land where all sects have always been 46 honoured, it is a shame on us who dare to call ourselves the 47 descendants of those fathers.

48 There are certain great principles in which, I think, we-- 49 whether Vaishnavas, Shaivas, Shaktas, or Ganapatyas, whether 50 belonging to the ancient Vedantists or the modern ones, whether 51 belonging to the old rigid sects or the modern reformed ones--are 52 all one, and whoever calls himself a Hindu, believes in these

1 principles. Of course there is a difference in the interpretation, in 2 the explanation of these principles, and that difference should be 3 there, and it should be allowed, for our standard is not to bind 4 every man down to our position. It would be a sin to force every 5 man to work out our own interpretation of things, and to live by our 6 own methods. Perhaps all who are here will agree on the first point 7 that we believe the Vedas to be the eternal teachings of the secrets 8 of religion. We all believe that this holy literature is without 9 beginning and without end, coeval with nature, which is without 10 beginning and without end; and that all our religious differences, all 11 our religious struggles must end when we stand in the presence of 12 that holy book; we are all agreed that this is the last court of appeal 13 in all our spiritual differences. We may take different points of view 14 as to what the Vedas are. There may be one sect which regards one 15 portion as more sacred than another, but that matters little so long 16 as we say that we are all brothers in the Vedas, that out of these 17 venerable, eternal, marvellous books has come everything that we 18 possess today, good, holy, and pure. Well, therefore, if we believe in 19 all this, let this principle first of all be preached broadcast 20 throughout the length and breadth of the land. If this be true, let 21 the Vedas have that prominence which they always deserve, and 22 which we all believe in. First, then, the Vedas. The second point we 23 all believe in is God, the creating, the preserving power of the 24 whole universe, and unto whom it periodically returns to come out 25 at other periods and manifest this wonderful phenomenon, called 26 the universe. We may differ as to our conception of God. One may 27 believe in a God who is entirely personal, another may believe in a 28 God who is personal and yet not human, and yet another may 29 believe in a God who is entirely impersonal, and all may get their 30 support from the Vedas. Still we are all believers in God; that is to 31 say, that man who does not believe in a most marvellous infinite 32 Power from which everything has come, in which everything lives, 33 and to which everything must in the end return, cannot be called a 34 Hindu. If that be so, let us try to preach that idea all over the land.
35 Preach whatever conception you have to give, there is no 36 difference, we are not going to fight over it, but preach God; that is 37 all we want. One idea may be better than another, but, mind you, 38 not one of them is bad. One is good, another is better, and again 39 another may be the best, but the word bad does not enter the 40 category of our religion. Therefore, may the Lord bless them all 41 who preach the name of God in whatever form they like! The more 42 He is preached, the better for this race. Let our children be brought 43 up in this idea, let this idea enter the homes of the poorest and the 44 lowest, as well as of the richest and the highest--the idea of the 45 name of God.

46 The third idea that I will present before you is that, unlike all 47 other races of the world, we do not believe that this world was 48 created only so many thousand years ago, and is going to be 49 destroyed eternally on a certain day. Nor do we believe that the 50 human soul has been created along with this universe just out of 51 nothing. Here is another point I think we are all able to agree upon.
52 We believe in nature being without beginning and without end; only 53 at psychological periods this gross material of the outer universe

1 goes back to its finer state, thus to remain for a certain period, 2 again to be projected outside to manifest all this infinite panorama
3 we call nature. This wavelike motion was going on even before time 4 began, through eternity, and will remain for an infinite period of 5 time.

6 Next, all Hindus believe that man is not only a gross material 7 body; not only that within this there is the finer body, the mind, but 8 there is something yet greater--for the body changes and so does 9 the mind--something beyond, the Atman--I cannot translate the 10 word to you for any translation will be wrong--that there is 11 something beyond even this fine body, which is the Atman of man, 12 which has neither beginning nor end, which knows not what death 13 is. And then this peculiar idea, different from that of all other races 14 of men, that this Atman inhabits body after body until there is no 15 more interest for it to continue to do so, and it becomes free, not to 16 be born again, I refer to the theory of Samsara and the theory of 17 eternal souls taught by our Shastras. This is another point where 18 we all agree, whatever sect we may belong to. There may be 19 differences as to the relation between the soul and God. According 20 to one sect the soul may be eternally different from God, according 21 to another it may be a spark of that infinite fire, yet again according 22 to others it may be one with that Infinite. It does not matter what 23 our interpretation is, so long as we hold on to the one basic belief 24 that the soul is infinite, that this soul was never created, and 25 therefore will never die, that it had to pass and evolve into various 26 bodies, till it attained perfection in the human one--in that we are 27 all agreed. And then comes the most differentiating, the grandest, 28 and the most wonderful discovery in the realms of spirituality that 29 has ever been made. Some of you, perhaps, who have been 30 studying Western thought, may have observed already that there is 31 another radical difference severing at one stroke all that is Western 32 from all that is Eastern. It is this that we hold, whether we are 33 Shaktas, Sauras, or Vaishnavas, even whether we are Bauddhas or 34 Jainas, we all hold in India that the soul is by its nature pure and 35 perfect, infinite in power and blessed. Only, according to the 36 dualist, this natural blissfulness of the soul has become contracted 37 by past bad work, and through the grace of God it is going to open 38 out and show its perfection; while according to the monist, even 39 this idea of contraction is a partial mistake, it is the veil of Maya 40 that causes us to think the soul has lost its powers, but the powers 41 are there fully manifest. Whatever the difference may be, we come 42 to the central core, and there is at once an irreconcilable difference 43 between all that is Western and Eastern. The Eastern is looking 44 inward for all that is great and good. When we worship, we close 45 our eyes and try to find God within. The Western is looking up 46 outside for his God. To the Western their religious books have been 47 inspired, while with us our books have been expired; breath-like 48 they came, the breath of God, out of the hearts of sages they 49 sprang, the Mantra-drashtas.

50 This is one great point to understand, and, my friends, my 51 brethren, let me tell you, this is the one point we shall have to insist 52 upon in the future. For I am firmly convinced, and I beg you to 1 understand this one fact--no good comes out of the man who day 2 and night thinks he is nobody. If a man, day and night, thinks he is 3 miserable, low, and nothing, nothing he becomes. If you say, yea, 4 yea, "I am, I am", so shall you be; and if you say "I am not", think 5 that you are not, and day and night meditate upon the fact that you 6 are nothing, ay, nothing shall you be. That is the great fact which 7 you ought to remember. We are the children of the Almighty, we are 8 sparks of the infinite, divine fire. How can we be nothings? We are 9 everything, ready to do everything, we can do everything, and man 10 must do everything. This faith in themselves was in the hearts of 11 our ancestors, this faith in themselves was the motive power that 12 pushed them forward and forward in the march of civilisation; and 13 if there has been degeneration, if there has been defect, mark my 14 words, you will find that degradation to have started on the day our 15 people lost this faith in themselves. Losing faith in one's self means 16 losing faith in God. Do you believe in that infinite, good Providence 17 working in and through you? If you believe that this Omnipresent 18 One, the Antaryamin, is present in every atom, is through and 19 through, Ota-prota, as the Sanskrit word goes, penetrating your 20 body, mind and soul, how can you lose heart? I may be a little 21 bubble of water, and you may be a mountain-high wave. Never 22 mind! The infinite ocean is the background of me as well as of you.

23 Mine also is that infinite ocean of life, of power, of spirituality, as 24 well as yours. I am already joined--from my very birth, from the 25 very fact of my life--I am in Yoga with that infinite life and infinite 26 goodness and infinite power, as you are, mountain-high though you 27 may be. Therefore, my brethren, teach this life-saving, great, 28 ennobling, grand doctrine to your children, even from their very 29 birth. You need not teach them Advaitism; teach them Dvaitism, or 30 any "ism" you please, but we have seen that this is the common 31 "ism" all through India; this marvellous doctrine of the soul, the 32 perfection of the soul, is commonly believed in by all sects. As says 33 our great philosopher Kapila, if purity has not been the nature of 34 the soul, it can never attain purity afterwards, for anything that was 35 not perfect by nature, even if it attained to perfection, that 36 perfection would go away again. If impurity is the nature of man, 37 then man will have to remain impure, even though he may be pure 38 for five minutes. The time will come when this purity will wash out, 39 pass away, and the old natural impurity will have its sway once 40 more. Therefore, say all our philosophers, good is our nature, 41 perfection is our nature, not imperfection, not impurity--and we 42 should remember that. Remember the beautiful example of the 43 great sage who, when he was dying, asked his mind to remember 44 all his mighty deeds and all his mighty thoughts. There you do not 45 find that he was teaching his mind to remember all his weaknesses 46 and all his follies. Follies there are, weakness there must be, but 47 remember your real nature always--that is the only way to cure the 48 weakness, that is the only way to cure the follies.

49 It seems that these few points are common among all the 50 various religious sects in India, and perhaps in future upon this 51 common platform, conservative and liberal religionists, old type and 52 new type, may shake hands. Above all, there is another thing to 53 remember, which I am sorry we forget from time to time, that

1 religion, in India, means realisation and nothing short of that.
2 "Believe in the doctrine, and you are safe", can never be taught to 3 us, for we do not believe in that. You are what you make yourselves.
4 You are, by the grace of God and your own exertions, what you are.
5 Mere believing in certain theories and doctrines will not help you 6 much. The mighty word that came out from the sky of spirituality in 7 India was Anubhuti, realisation, and ours are the only books which 8 declare again and again: "The Lord is to be seen". Bold, brave 9 words indeed, but true to their very core; every sound, every 10 vibration is true. Religion is to be realised, not only heard; it is not 11 in learning some doctrine like a parrot. Neither is it mere 12 intellectual assent--that is nothing; but it must come into us. Ay, and 13 therefore the greatest proof that we have of the existence of a God 14 is not because our reason says so, but because God has been seen 15 by the ancients as well as by the moderns. We believe in the soul 16 not only because there are good reasons to prove its existence, but, 17 above all, because there have been in the past thousands in India, 18 there are still many who have realised, and there will be thousands 19 in the future who will realise and see their own souls. And there is 20 no salvation for man until he sees God, realises his own soul.
21 Therefore, above all, let us understand this, and the more we 22 understand it the less we shall have of sectarianism in India, for it 23 is only that man who has realised God and seen Him, who is 24 religious. In him the knots have been cut asunder, in him alone the 25 doubts have subsided; he alone has become free from the fruits of 26 action who has seen Him who is nearest of the near and farthest of 27 the far. Ay, we often mistake mere prattle for religious truth, mere 28 intellectual perorations for great spiritual realisation, and then 29 comes sectarianism, then comes fight. If we once understand that 30 this realisation is the only religion, we shall look into our own 31 hearts and find how far we are towards realising the truths of 32 religion. Then we shall understand that we ourselves are groping in 33 darkness, and are leading others to grope in the same darkness, 34 then we shall cease from sectarianism, quarrel, and fight. Ask a 35 man who wants to start a sectarian fight, "Have you seen God?
36 Have you seen the Atman? If you have not, what right have you to 37 preach His name--you walking in darkness trying to lead me into 38 the same darkness--the blind leading the blind, and both falling into 39 the ditch?"

40 Therefore, take more thought before you go and find fault 41 with others. Let them follow their own path to realisation so long as 42 they struggle to see truth in their own hearts; and when the broad, 43 naked truth will be seen, then they will find that wonderful 44 blissfulness which marvellously enough has been testified to by 45 every seer in India, by every one who has realised the truth. Then 46 words of love alone will come out of that heart, for it has already 47 been touched by Him who is the essence of Love Himself. Then and 48 then alone, all sectarian quarrels will cease, and we shall be in a 49 position to understand, to bring to our hearts, to embrace, to 50 intensely love the very word Hindu and every one who bears that 51 name. Mark me, then and then alone you are a Hindu when the 52 very name sends through you a galvanic shock of strength. Then 53 and then alone you are a Hindu when every man who bears the

1 name, from any country, speaking our language or any other 2 language, becomes at once the nearest and the dearest to you.
3 Then and then alone you are a Hindu when the distress of anyone 4 bearing that name comes to your heart and makes you feel as if 5 your own son were in distress. Then and then alone you are a Hindu 6 when you will be ready to bear everything for them, like the great 7 example I have quoted at the beginning of this lecture, of your 8 great Guru Govind Singh. Driven out from this country, fighting 9 against its oppressors, after having shed his own blood for the 10 defence of the Hindu religion, after having seen his children killed 11 on the battlefield--ay, this example of the great Guru, left even by 12 those for whose sake he was shedding his blood and the blood of 13 his own nearest and dearest--he, the wounded lion, retired from the 14 field calmly to die in the South, but not a word of curse escaped his 15 lips against those who had ungratefully forsaken him! Mark me, 16 every one of you will have to be a Govind Singh, if you want to do 17 good to your country. You may see thousands of defects in your 18 countrymen, but mark their Hindu blood. They are the first Gods 19 you will have to worship even if they do everything to hurt you, 20 even if everyone of them send out a curse to you, you send out to 21 them words of love. If they drive you out, retire to die in silence like 22 that mighty lion, Govind Singh. Such a man is worthy of the name of 23 Hindu; such an ideal ought to be before us always. All our hatchets 24 let us bury; send out this grand current of love all round.

25 Let them talk of India's regeneration as they like. Let me tell 26 you as one who has been working--at least trying to work--all his 27 life, that there is no regeneration for India until you be spiritual.
28 Not only so, but upon it depends the welfare of the whole world.
29 For I must tell you frankly that the very foundations of Western 30 civilisation have been shaken to their base. The mightiest buildings, 31 if built upon the loose sand foundations of materialism, must come 32 to grief one day, must totter to their destruction some day. The 33 history of the world is our witness. Nation after nation has arisen 34 and based its greatness upon materialism, declaring man was all 35 matter. Ay, in Western language, a man gives up the ghost, but in 36 our language a man gives up his body. The Western man is a body 37 first, and then he has a soul; with us a man is a soul and spirit, and 38 he has a body. Therein lies a world of difference. All such 39 civilisations, therefore, as have been based upon such sand 40 foundations as material comfort and all that, have disappeared one 41 after another, after short lives, from the face of the world; but the 42 civilisation of India and the other nations that have stood at India's 43 feet to listen and learn, namely Japan and China, live even to the 44 present day, and there are signs even of revival among them. Their 45 lives are like that of the Phoenix, a thousand times destroyed, but 46 ready to spring up again more glorious. But a materialistic 47 civilisation once dashed down, never can come up again; that 48 building once thrown down is broken into pieces once for all.
49 Therefore have patience and wait, the future is in store for us.

50 Do not be in a hurry, do not go out to imitate anybody else.
51 This is another great lesson we have to remember; imitation is not 52 civilisation. I may deck myself out in a Raja's dress, but will that 1 make me a Raja? An ass in a lion's skin never makes a lion.

2 Imitation, cowardly imitation, never makes for progress. It is verily
3 the sign of awful degradation in a man. Ay, when a man has begun 4 to hate himself, then the last blow has come. When a man has 5 begun to be ashamed of his ancestors, the end has come. Here am 6 I, one of the least of the Hindu race, yet proud of my race, proud of 7 my ancestors. I am proud to call myself a Hindu, I am proud that I
8 am one of your unworthy servants. I am proud that I am a 9 countryman of yours, you the descendants of the sages, you the 10 descendants of the most glorious Rishis the world ever saw.
11 Therefore have faith in yourselves, be proud of your ancestors, 12 instead of being ashamed of them. And do not imitate, do not 13 imitate! Whenever you are under the thumb of others, you lose your 14 own independence. If you are working, even in spiritual things, at 15 the dictation of others, slowly you lose all faculty, even of thought.
16 Bring out through your own exertions what you have, but do not 17 imitate, yet take what is good from others. We have to learn from 18 others. You put the seed in the ground, and give it plenty of earth, 19 and air, and water to feed upon; when the seed grows into the plant 20 and into a gigantic tree, does it become the earth, does it become 21 the air, or does it become the water? It becomes the mighty plant, 22 the mighty tree, after its own nature, having absorbed everything 23 that was given to it. Let that be your position. We have indeed many 24 things to learn from others, yea, that man who refuses to learn is 25 already dead. Declares our Manu: {Sanskrit}--"Take the jewel of a 26 woman for your wife, though she be of inferior descent. Learn 27 supreme knowledge with service even from the man of low birth; 28 and even from the Chandala, learn by serving him the way to 29 salvation." Learn everything that is good from others, but bring it 30 in, and in your own way absorb it; do not become others. Do not be 31 dragged away out of this Indian life; do not for a moment think that 32 it would be better for India if all the Indians dressed, ate, and 33 behaved like another race. You know the difficulty of giving up a 34 habit of a few years. The Lord knows how many thousands of years 35 are in your blood; this national specialised life has been flowing in 36 one way, the Lord knows for how many thousands of years; and do 37 you mean to say that that mighty stream, which has nearly reached 38 its ocean, can go back to the snows of its Himalayas again? That is 39 impossible! The struggle to do so would only break it. Therefore, 40 make way for the life-current of the nation. Take away the blocks 41 that bar the way to the progress of this mighty river, cleanse its 42 path, clear the channel, and out it will rush by its own natural 43 impulse, and the nation will go on careering and progressing.

44 These are the lines which I beg to suggest to you for spiritual 45 work in India. There are many other great problems which, for 46 want of time, I cannot bring before you this night. For instance, 47 there is the wonderful question of caste. I have been studying this 48 question, its pros and cons, all my life; I have studied it in nearly 49 every province in India. I have mixed with people of all castes in 50 nearly every part of the country, and I am too bewildered in my own 51 mind to grasp even the very significance of it. The more I try to 52 study it, the more I get bewildered. Still at last I find that a little 53 glimmer of light is before me, I begin to feel its significance just

1 now. Then there is the other great problem about eating and 2 drinking. That is a great problem indeed. It is not so useless a thing 3 as we generally think. I have come to the conclusion that the 4 insistence which we make now about eating and drinking is most 5 curious and is just going against what the Shastras required, that is 6 to say, we come to grief by neglecting the proper purity of the food 7 we eat and drink; we have lost the true spirit of it.

8 There are several other questions which I want to bring 9 before you and show how these problems can be solved, how to 10 work out the ideas; but unfortunately the meeting could not come to 11 order until very late, and I do not wish to detain you any longer 12 now. I will, therefore, keep my ideas about caste and other things 13 for a future occasion.

1 Now, one word more and I will finish about these spiritual 2 ideas. Religion for a long time has come to be static in India. What 3 we want is to make it dynamic. I want it to be brought into the life
4 of everybody. Religion, as it always has been in the past, must enter 5 the palaces of kings as well as the homes of the poorest peasants in 6 the land. Religion, the common inheritance, the universal birthright
7 of the race, must be brought free to the door of everybody. Religion 8 in India must be made as free and as easy of access as is God's air.
9 And this is the kind of work we have to bring about in India, but not 10 by getting up little sects and fighting on points of difference. Let us 11 preach where we all agree and leave the differences to remedy 12 themselves. As I have said to the Indian people again and again, if 13 there is the darkness of centuries in a room and we go into the 14 room and begin to cry, "Oh, it is dark, it is dark!", will the darkness 15 go? Bring in the light and the darkness will vanish at once. This is 16 the secret of reforming men. Suggest to them higher things; believe 17 in man first. Why start with the belief that man is degraded and 18 degenerated? I have never failed in my faith in man in any case, 19 even taking him at his worst. Wherever I had faith in man, though 20 at first the prospect was not always bright, yet it triumphed in the 21 long run. Have faith in man, whether he appears to you to be a very 22 learned one or a most ignorant one. Have faith in man, whether he 23 appears to be an angel or the very devil himself. Have faith in man 24 first, and then having faith in him, believe that if there are defects 25 in him, if he makes mistakes, if he embraces the crudest and the 26 vilest doctrines, believe that it is not from his real nature that they 27 come, but from the want of higher ideals. If a man goes towards 28 what is false, it is because he cannot get what is true. Therefore the 29 only method of correcting what is false is by supplying him with 30 what is true. Do this, and let him compare. You give him the truth, 31 and there your work is done. Let him compare it in his own mind 32 with what he has already in him; and, mark my words, if you have 33 really given him the truth, the false must vanish, light must dispel 34 darkness, and truth will bring the good out. This is the way if you 35 want to reform the country spiritually; this is the way, and not 36 fighting, not even telling people that what they are doing is bad. Put 37 the good before them, see how eagerly they take it, see how the 38 divine that never dies, that is always living in the human, comes up 39 awakened and stretches out its hand for all that is good, and all that 40 is glorious.

41 May He who is the Creator, the Preserver, and the Protector
42 of our race, the God of our forefathers, whether called by the name 43 of Vishnu, or Shiva, or Shakti, or Ganapati, whether He is 44 worshipped as Saguna or Nirguna, whether He is worshipped as 45 personal or as impersonal may He whom our forefathers knew and 46 addressed by the words, {Sanskrit}--"That which exists is One; 47 sages call Him by various names"--may He enter into us with His 48 mighty love, may He shower His blessings on us, may He make us 49 understand each other, may He make us work for each other with 50 real love, with intense love for truth, and may not the least desire 51 for our own personal fame, our own personal prestige, our own 52 personal advantage, enter into this great work of the spiritual 53 regeneration of India!

(Delivered at Lahore on the 9th November, 1897)

There is a sound which comes to us like a distant echo in the midst of the roaring torrents of the Upanishads, at times rising in proportion and volume, and yet, throughout the literature of the Vedanta, its voice, though clear, is not very strong. The main duty of the Upanishads seems to be to present before us the spirit and the aspect of the sublime, and yet behind this wonderful sublimity there come to us here and there glimpses of poetry as we read; {Sanskrit}--"There the sun shines not, nor the moon, nor the stars, what to speak of this fire?" As we listen to the heart-stirring poetry of these marvellous lines, we are taken, as it were, off from the world of the senses, off even from the world of intellect, and brought to that world which can never be comprehended, and yet which is always with us. There is behind even this sublimity another ideal following as its shadow, one more acceptable to mankind, one more of daily use, one that has to enter into every part of human life, which assumes proportion and volume later on, and is stated in full and determined language in the Puranas, and that is the ideal of Bhakti. The germs of Bhakti are there already; the germs are even in the Samhita; the germs a little more developed are in the Upanishads; but they are worked out in their details in the Puranas.

To understand Bhakti, therefore, we have got to understand these Puranas of ours. There have been great discussions of late as to their authenticity. Many a passage of uncertain meaning has been taken up and criticised. In many places it has been pointed out that the passages cannot stand the light of modern science and so forth. But, apart from all these discussions, apart from the scientific validity of the statements of the Puranas, apart from their valid or invalid geography, apart from their valid or invalid astronomy, and so forth, what we find for a certainty, traced out bit by bit almost in every one of these volumes, is this doctrine of Bhakti, illustrated, reillustrated, stated and restated, in the lives of saints and in the lives of kings. It seems to have been the duty of the Puranas to stand as illustrations for that great ideal of the beautiful, the ideal of Bhakti, and this, as I have stated, is so much nearer to the ordinary man. Very few indeed are there who can understand and appreciate, far less live and move, in the grandeur of the full blaze of the light of Vedanta, because the first step for the pure Vedantist is to be Abhihi, fearless. Weakness has got to go before a man dares to become a Vedantist, and we know how difficult that is. Even those who have given up all connection with the world, and have very few bondages to make them cowards, feel in the heart of their hearts how weak they are at moments, at times how soft they become, how cowed down; much more so is it with men who have so many bondages, and have to remain as slaves to so many hundred and thousand things, inside of themselves and outside of themselves, men every moment of whose life is dragging-down slavery. To them the Puranas come with the most beautiful message of Bhakti.

1 For them the softness and the poetry are spread out, for them
2 are told these wonderful and marvellous stories of a Dhruva and a 3 Prahlada, and of a thousand saints, and these illustrations are to 4 make it practical. Whether you believe in the scientific accuracy of 5 the Puranas or not, there is not one among you whose life has not 6 been influenced by the story of Prahlada, or that of Dhruva, or of 7 any one of these great Pauranika saints. We have not only to 8 acknowledge the power of the Puranas in our own day, but we 9 ought to be grateful to them as they gave us in the past a more 10 comprehensive and a better popular religion than what the 11 degraded later-day Buddhism was leading us to. This easy and 12 smooth idea of Bhakti has been written and worked upon, and we 13 have to embrace it in our everyday practical life, for we shall see as 14 we go on how the idea has been worked out until Bhakti becomes 15 the essence of love. So long as there shall be such a thing as 16 personal and material love, one cannot go behind the teachings of 17 the Puranas. So long as there shall be the human weakness of 18 leaning upon somebody for support, these Puranas, in some form or 19 other, must always exist. You can change their names; you can 20 condemn those that are already existing, but immediately you will 21 be compelled to write another Purana. If there arises amongst us a 22 sage who will not want these old Puranas, we shall find that his 23 disciples, within twenty years of his death, will make of his life 24 another Purana. That will be all the difference.

25 This is a necessity of the nature of man; for them only are 26 there no Puranas who have gone beyond all human weakness and 27 have become what is really wanted of a Paramahansa, brave and 28 bold souls, who have gone beyond the bondages of Maya, the 29 necessities even of nature--the triumphant, the conquerors, the 30 gods of the world. The ordinary man cannot do without a personal 31 God to worship; if he does not worship a God in nature, he has to 32 worship either a God in the shape of a wife, or a child, or a father, 33 or a friend, or a teacher, or somebody else; and the necessity is still 34 more upon women than men. The vibration of light may be 35 everywhere; it may be in dark places, since cats and another 36 animals perceive it, but for us the vibration must be in our plane to 37 become visible. We may talk, therefore, of an Impersonal Being and 38 so forth, but so long as we are ordinary mortals, God can be seen in 39 man alone. Our conception of God and our worship of God are 40 naturally, therefore, human. "This body, indeed, is the greatest 41 temple of God." So we find that men have been worshipped 42 throughout the ages, and although we may condemn or criticise 43 some of the extravagances which naturally follow, we find at once 44 that the heart is sound, that in spite of these extravagances, in spite 45 of this going into extremes, there is an essence, there is a true, firm 46 core, a backbone, to the doctrine that is preached. I am not asking 47 you to swallow without consideration any old stories, or any 48 unscientific jargon. I am not calling upon you to believe in all sorts 49 of Vamachari explanations that, unfortunately, have crept into some 50 of the Puranas, but what I mean is this, that there is an essence 51 which ought not to be lost, a reason for the existence of the 52 Puranas, and that is the teaching of Bhakti to make religion 53 practical, to bring religion from its high philosophical flights into

1 the everyday lives of our common human beings.

1 [The lecturer defended the use of material helps in Bhakti.
2 Would to God man did not stand where he is, but it is useless to 3 fight against existing facts; man is a material being now, however 4 he may talk about spirituality and all that. Therefore the material 5 man has to be taken in hand and slowly raised, until he becomes 6 spiritual. In these days it is hard for 99 per cent of us to understand 7 spirituality, much more so to talk about it. The motive powers that 8 are pushing us forward, and the efforts we are seeking to attain, 9 are all material. We can only work, in the language of Herbert 10 Spencer, in the line of least resistance, and the Puranas have the 11 good and common sense to work in the line of least resistance; and 12 the successes that have been attained by the Puranas have been 13 marvellous and unique. The ideal of Bhakti is of course spiritual, 14 but the way lies through matter and we cannot help it. Everything 15 that is conducive to the attainment of this spirituality in the 16 material world, therefore, is to be taken hold of and brought to the 17 use of man to evolve the spiritual being. Having pointed out that the 18 Shastras start by giving the right to study the Vedas to everybody, 19 without distinction of sex, caste, or creed, he claimed that if making 20 a material temple helps a man more to love God, welcome; if 21 making an image of God helps a man in attaining to this ideal of 22 love, Lord bless him and give him twenty such images if he pleases.
23 If anything helps him to attain to that ideal of spirituality, welcome, 24 so long as it is moral, because anything immoral will not help, but 25 will only retard. He traced the opposition to the use of images in 26 worship in India partly at least to Kabir, but on the other hand 27 showed that India has had great philosophers and founders of 28 religions who did not even believe in the existence of a Personal 29 God and boldly preached that to the people, but yet did not 30 condemn the use of images. At best they only said it was not a very 31 high form of worship, and there was not one of the Puranas in 32 which it was said that it was a very high form. Having referred 33 historically to the use of image-worship by the Jews, in their belief 34 that Jehovah resided in a chest, he condemned the practice of 35 abusing idol-worship merely because others said it was bad.
36 Though an image or any other material form could be used if it 37 helped to make a man spiritual, yet there was no one book in our 38 religion which did not very clearly state that it was the lowest form 39 of worship, because it was worship through matter. The attempt 40 that was made all over India to force this image-worship on 41 everybody, he had no language to condemn; what business had 42 anybody to direct and dictate to anyone what he should worship 43 and through what? How could any other man know through what he 44 would grow, whether his spiritual growth would be by worshipping 45 an image, by worshipping fire, or by worshipping even a pillar? That 46 was to be guided and directed by our own Gurus, and by the 47 relation between the Guru and the Shishya. That explained the rule 48 which Bhakti books laid down for what was called the Ishta, that 49 was to say, that each man had to take up his own peculiar form of 50 worship, his own way of going towards God, and that chosen ideal 51 was his Ishta Devata. He was to regard other forms of worship with 52 sympathy, but at the same time to practise his own form till he 53 reached the goal and came to the centre where no more material

1 helps were necessary for him. In this connection a word of warning
2 was necessary against a system prevalent in some parts of India, 3 what was called the Kula-Guru system, a sort of hereditary 4 Guruism. We read in the books that "He who knows the essence of 5 the Vedas, is sinless, and does not teach another for love of gold or 6 love of anything else, whose mercy is without any cause, who gives 7 as the spring which does not ask anything from the plants and 8 trees, for it is its nature to do good, and brings them out once more 9 into life, and buds, flowers, and leaves come out, who wants 10 nothing, but whose whole life is only to do good"--such a man could 11 be a Guru and none else. There was another danger, for a Guru was 12 not a teacher alone; that was a very small part of it. The Guru, as 13 the Hindus believed, transmitted spirituality to his disciples. To take 14 a common material example, therefore, if a man were not 15 inoculated with a good virus, he ran the risk of being inoculated 16 with what was bad and vile, so that by being taught by a bad Guru 17 there was the risk of learning something evil. Therefore it was 18 absolutely necessary that this idea of Kula-Guru should vanish from 19 India. Guruism must not be a trade; that must stop, it was against 20 the Shastras. No man ought to call himself a Guru and at the same 21 time help the present state of things under the Kula-Guru system.

22 Speaking of the question of food, the Swami pointed out that 23 the present-day insistence upon the strict regulations as to eating 24 was to a great extent superficial, and missed the mark they were 25 originally intended to cover. He particularly instanced the idea that 26 care should be exercised as to who was allowed to touch food, and 27 pointed out that there was a deep psychological significance in this, 28 but that in the everyday life of ordinary men it was a care difficult 29 or impossible to exercise. Here again the mistake was made of 30 insisting upon a general observance of an idea which was only 31 possible to one class, those who have entirely devoted their lives to 32 spirituality, whereas the vast majority of men were still unsatiated 33 with material pleasures, and until they were satiated to some extent 34 it was useless to think of forcing spirituality on them.

1 The highest form of worship that had been laid down by the 2 Bhakta was the worship of man. Really, if there were to be any sort 3 of worship, he would suggest getting a poor man, or six, or twelve, 4 as their circumstances would permit, every day to their homes, and 5 serving them, thinking that they were Narayanas. He had seen 6 charity in many countries and the reason it did not succeed was 7 that it was not done with a good spirit. "Here, take this, and go 8 away"--that was not charity, but the expression of the pride of the 9 heart, to gain the applause of the world, that the world might know 10 they were becoming charitable. Hindus must know that, according 11 to the Smritis, the giver was lower than the receiver, for the 12 receiver was for the time being God Himself. Therefore he would 13 suggest such a form of worship as getting some of these poor 14 Narayanas, or blind Narayanas, and hungry Narayanas into every 15 house every day, and giving them the worship they would give to an 16 image, feeding them and clothing them, and the next day doing the 17 same to others. He did not condemn any form of worship, but what 18 he went to say was that the highest form and the most necessary at 19 present in India was this form of Narayana worship.

20 In conclusion, he likened Bhakti to a triangle. The first angle 21 was that love knew no want, the second that love knew no fear.
22 Love for reward or service of any kind was the beggar's religion, 23 the shopkeeper's religion, with very little of real religion in it. Let 24 them not become beggars, because, in the first place, beggary was 25 the sign of atheism. "Foolish indeed is the man who living on the 26 banks of the Ganga digs a little well to drink water." So is the man 27 who begs of God material objects. The Bhakta should be ready to 28 stand up and say, "I do not want anything from you, Lord, but if you 29 need anything from me I am ready to give." Love knew no fear. Had 30 they not seen a weak, frail, little woman passing through a street, 31 and if a dog barked, she flew off into the next house? The next day 32 she was in the street, perhaps, with her child at her breast. And a 33 lion attacked her. Where was she then? In the mouth of the lion to 34 save her child. Lastly, love was unto love itself. The Bhakta at last 35 comes to this, that love itself is God and nothing else. Where should 36 man go to prove the existence of God? Love was the most visible of 37 all visible things. It was the force that was moving the sun, the 38 moon, and the stars, manifesting itself in men, women, and in 39 animals, everywhere and in everything. It was expressed in 40 material forces as gravitation and so on. It was everywhere, in 41 every atom, manifesting everywhere. It was that infinite love, the 42 only motive power of this universe, visible everywhere, and this was 43 God Himself.⁴

THE VEDANTA

(Delivered at Lahore on 12th November, 1897)

Two worlds there are in which we live, one the external, the other internal. Human progress has been made, from days of yore, almost in parallel lines along both these worlds. The search began in the external, and man at first wanted to get answers for all the deep problems from outside nature. Man wanted to satisfy his thirst for the beautiful and the sublime from all that surrounded him; he wanted to express himself and all that was within him in the language of the concrete; and grand indeed were the answers he got, most marvellous ideas of God and worship, and most rapturous expressions of the beautiful. Sublime ideas came from the external world indeed. But the other, opening out for humanity later, laid out before him a universe yet sublimer, yet more beautiful, and infinitely more expansive. In the Karma Kanda portion of the Vedas, we find the most wonderful ideas of religion inculcated, we find the most wonderful ideas about an overruling Creator, Preserver, and Destroyer of the universe presented before us in language sometimes the most soul-stirring. Most of you perhaps remember the most wonderful Shloka in the Rig-Veda Samhita where you get the description of chaos, perhaps the sublimest that has ever been attempted yet. In spite of all this, we find it is only a painting of the sublime outside, we find that yet it is gross, that something of matter yet clings to it. Yet we find that it is only the expression of the Infinite in the language of matter, in the language of the finite, it is the infinite of the muscles and not of the mind; it is the infinite of space and not of thought. Therefore in the second portion of Jnana Kanda, we find there is altogether a different procedure. The first was a search in external nature for the truths of the universe; it was an attempt to get the solution of the deep problems of life from the material world. {Sanskrit}--"Whose glory these Himalayas declare". This is a grand idea, but yet it was not grand enough for India. The Indian mind had to fall back, and the research took a different direction altogether; from the external the search came to the internal, from matter to mind. There arose the cry, "When a man dies, what becomes of him?" {Sanskrit}--"Some say that he exists, others that he is gone; say, O king of Death, what is the truth?" An entirely different procedure we find here. The Indian mind got all that could be had from the external world, but it did not feel satisfied with that; it wanted to search further, to dive into its own soul, and the final answer came.

The Upanishads, or the Vedanta, or the Aranyakas, or Rahasya is the name of this portion of the Vedas. Here we find at once that religion has got rid of all external formalities. Here we find at once that spiritual things are told not in the language of matter, but in the language of the spirit; the superfine in the language of the superfine. No more any grossness attaches to it, no more is there any compromise with things of worldly concern. Bold, brave, beyond the conception of the present day, stand the giant

1 minds of the sages of the Upanishads, declaring the noblest truths 2 that have ever been preached to humanity, without any 3 compromise, without any fear. This, my countrymen, I want to lay 4 before you. Even the Jnana Kanda of the Vedas is a vast ocean; 5 many lives are necessary to understand even a little of it. Truly has 6 it been said of the Upanishads by Ramanuja that they form the 7 head, the shoulders, the crest of the Vedas, and surely enough the 8 Upanishads have become the Bible of modern India. The Hindus 9 have the greatest respect for the Karma Kanda of the Vedas, but, 10 for all practical purposes, we know that for ages by Shruti has been 11 meant the Upanishads, and the Upanishads alone. We know that all 12 our great philosophers, whether Vyasa, Patanjali, or Gautama, and 13 even the father of all philosophy, the great Kapila himself, whenever 14 they wanted an authority for what they wrote, every one of them 15 found it in the Upanishads, and nowhere else, for therein are the 16 truths that remain for ever.

17 There are truths that are true only in a certain line, in a 18 certain direction, under certain circumstances, and for certain 19 times--those that are founded on the institutions of the times. There 20 are other truths which are based on the nature of man himself, and 21 which must endure so long as man himself endures. These are the 22 truths that alone can be universal, and in spite of all the changes 23 that have come to India, as to our social surroundings, our methods 24 of dress, our manner of eating, our modes of worship--these 25 universal truths of the Shrutis, the marvellous Vedantic ideas, stand 26 out in their own sublimity, immovable, unvanquishable, deathless, 27 and immortal. Yet the germs of all the ideas that were developed in 28 the Upanishads had been taught already in the Karma Kanda. The 29 idea of the cosmos which all sects of Vedantists had to take for 30 granted, the psychology which has formed the common basis of all 31 the Indian schools of thought, had there been worked out already 32 and presented before the world. A few words, therefore, about the 33 Karma Kanda are necessary before we begin the spiritual portion, 34 the Vedanta; and first of all I should like to explain the sense in 35 which I use the word Vedanta.

36 Unfortunately there is the mistaken notion in modern India 37 that the word Vedanta has reference only to the Advaita system; but 38 you must always remember that in modern India the three 39 Prasthanas are considered equally important in the study of all the 40 systems of religion. First of all there are the Revelations, the 41 Shrutis, by which I mean the Upanishads. Secondly, among our 42 philosophies, the Sutras of Vyasa have the greatest prominence on 43 account of their being the consummation of all the preceding 44 systems of philosophy. These systems are not contradictory to one 45 another, but one is based on another, and there is a gradual 46 unfolding of the theme which culminates in the Sutras of Vyasa.
47 Then, between the Upanishads and the Sutras, which are the 48 systematising of the marvellous truths of the Vedanta, comes in the 49 Gita, the divine commentary of the Vedanta.

50 The Upanishads, the Vyasa-Sutras, and the Gita, therefore, 51 have been taken up by every sect in India that wants to claim 52 authority for orthodoxy, whether dualist, or Vishishtadvaitist, or

1 Advaitist; the authorities of each of these are the three Prasthanas.
2 We find that a Shankaracharya, or a Ramanuja, or a Madhvacharya, 3 or a Vallabhacharya, or a Chaitanya--any one who wanted to 4 propound a new sect--had to take up these three systems and write 5 only a new commentary on them. Therefore it would be wrong to 6 confine the word Vedanta only to one system which has arisen out 7 of the Upanishads. All these are covered by the word Vedanta. The 8 Vishishtadvaitist has as much right to be called a Vedantist as the 9 Advaitist; in fact I will go a little further and say that what we really 10 mean by the word Hindu is really the same as Vedantist. I want you 11 to note that these three systems have been current in India almost 12 from time immemorial; for you must not believe that Shankara was 13 the inventor of the Advaita system. It existed ages before Shankara 14 was born; he was one of its last representatives. So with the 15 Vishishtadvaita system; it had existed ages before Ramanuja 16 appeared, as we already know from the commentaries he has 17 written; so with the dualistic systems that have existed side by side 18 with the others. And with my little knowledge, I have come to the 19 conclusion that they do not contradict each other.

20 Just as in the case of the six Darshanas, we find they are a 21 gradual unfolding of the grand principles whose music beginning 22 far back in the soft low notes, ends in the triumphant blast of the 23 Advaita, so also in these three systems we find the gradual working 24 up of the human mind towards higher and higher ideals till 25 everything is merged in that wonderful unity which is reached in 26 the Advaita system. Therefore these three are not contradictory. On 27 the other hand I am bound to tell you that this has been a mistake 28 committed by not a few. We find that an Advaitist teacher keeps 29 intact those texts which especially teach Advaitism, and tries to 30 interpret the dualistic or qualified non-dualistic texts into his own 31 meaning. Similarly we find dualistic teachers trying to read their 32 dualistic meaning into Advaitic texts. Our Gurus were great men, 33 yet there is a saying, "Even the faults of a Guru must be told". I am 34 of opinion that in this only they were mistaken. We need not go into 35 text-torturing, we need not go into any sort of religious dishonesty, 36 we need not go into any sort of grammatical twaddle, we need not 37 go about trying to put our own ideas into texts which were never 38 meant for them, but the work is plain and becomes easier, once you 39 understand the marvellous doctrine of Adhikarabheda.

40 It is true that the Upanishads have this one theme before 41 them: {Sanskrit}--"What is that knowing which we know everything 42 else?" In modern language, the theme of the Upanishads is to find 43 an ultimate unity of things. Knowledge is nothing but finding unity 44 in the midst of diversity. Every science is based upon this; all human 45 knowledge is based upon the finding of unity in the midst of 46 diversity; and if it is the task of small fragments of human 47 knowledge, which we call our sciences, to find unity in the midst of 48 a few different phenomena, the task becomes stupendous when the 49 theme before us is to find unity in the midst of this marvellously 50 diversified universe, where prevail unnumbered differences in 51 name and form, in matter and spirit--each thought differing from 52 every other thought, each form differing from every other form. Yet,

1 to harmonise these many planes and unending Lokas, in the midst
2 of this infinite variety to find unity, is the theme of the Upanishads.
3 On the other hand, the old idea of Arundhati Nyaya applies. To 4 show a man the fine star Arundhati, one takes the big and brilliant 5 nearest to it, upon which he is asked to fix his eyes first, and then it 6 becomes quite easy to direct his sight to Arundhati. This is the task 7 before us, and to prove my idea I have simply to show you the 8 Upanishads, and you will see it. Nearly every chapter begins with 9 dualistic teaching, Upasana. God is first taught as some one who is 10 the Creator of this universe, its Preserver, and unto whom 11 everything goes at last. He is one to be worshipped, the Ruler, the 12 Guide of nature, external and internal, yet appearing as if He were 13 outside of nature and external. One step further, and we find the 14 same teacher teaching that this God is not outside of nature, but 15 immanent in nature. And at last both ideas are discarded, and 16 whatever is real is He; there is no difference.
17 {Sanskrit}--"Svetaketu, That thou art." That Immanent One is at 18 last declared to be the same that is in the human soul. Here is no 19 compromise; here is no fear of others' opinions. Truth, bold truth, 20 has been taught in bold language, and we need not fear to preach 21 the truth in the same bold language today, and, by the grace of God, 22 I hope at least to be one who dares to be that bold preacher.

23 To go back to our preliminaries. There are first two things to 24 be understood--one, the psychological aspect common to all the 25 Vedantic schools, and the other, the cosmological aspect. I will first 26 take up the latter. Today we find wonderful discoveries of modern 27 science coming upon us like bolts from the blue, opening our eyes 28 to marvels we never dreamt of. But many of these are only re-29 discoveries of what had been found ages ago. It was only the other 30 day that modern science found that even in the midst of the variety 31 of forces there is unity. It has just discovered that what it calls heat, 32 magnetism, electricity, and so forth, are all convertible into one unit 33 force, and as such, it expresses all these by one name, whatever 34 you may choose to call it. But this has been done even in the 35 Samhita; old and ancient as it is, in it we meet with this very idea of 36 force I was referring to. All the forces, whether you call them 37 gravitation, or attraction, or repulsion, whether expressing 38 themselves as heat, or electricity, or magnetism, are nothing but 39 the variations of that unit energy. Whether they express themselves 40 as thought, reflected from Antahkarana, the inner organs of man, or 41 as action from an external organ, the unit from which they spring is 42 what is called Prana. Again, what is Prana? Prana is Spandana or 43 vibration. When all this universe shall have resolved back into its 44 primal state, what becomes of this infinite force? Do they think that 45 it becomes extinct? Of course not. If it became extinct, what would 46 be the cause of the next wave, because the motion is going in wave 47 forms, rising, falling, rising again, falling again? Here is the word 48 Srishti, which expresses the universe. Mark that the word does not 49 mean creation. I am helpless in talking English; I have to translate 50 the Sanskrit words as best as I can. It is Srishti, projection. At the 51 end of a cycle, everything becomes finer and finer and is resolved 52 back into the primal state from which it sprang, and there it 53 remains for a time quiescent, ready to spring forth again. That is 1 Srishti, projection. And what becomes of all these forces, the 2 Pranas? They are resolved back into the primal Prana, and this 3 Prana becomes almost motionless--not entirely motionless; and that 4 is what is described in the Vedic Sukta: "It vibrated without 5 vibrations"--Anidavatam. There are many technical phrases in the 6 Upanishads difficult to understand. For instance, take this word 7 Vata; many times it means air and many times motion, and often 8 people confuse one with the other. We must guard against that. And 9 what becomes of what you call matter? The forces permeate all 10 matter; they all dissolve into Akasha, from which they again come 11 out; this Akasha is the primal matter. Whether you translate it as 12 ether or anything else, the idea is that this Akasha is the primal 13 form of matter. This Akasha vibrates under the action of Prana, and 14 when the next Srishti is coming up, as the vibration becomes 15 quicker, the Akasha is lashed into all these wave forms which we 16 call suns, moons, and systems.

17 We read again: {Sanskrit}--"Everything in this universe has 18 been projected, Prana vibrating." You must mark the word Ejati, 19 because it comes from Eja--to vibrate. Nihsritam--projected.
20 Yadidam Kincha--whatever in this universe.

21 This is a part of the cosmological side. There are many details 22 working into it. For instance, how the process takes place, how 23 there is first ether, and how from the ether come other things, how 24 that ether begins to vibrate, and from that Vayu comes. But the one 25 idea is here that it is from the finer that the grosser has come.
26 Gross matter is the last to emerge and the most external, and this 27 gross matter had the finer matter before it. Yet we see that the 28 whole thing has been resolved into two, but there is not yet a final 29 unity. There is the unity of force, Prana; there is the unity of matter, 30 called Akasha. Is there any unity to be found among them again?
31 Can they be melted into one? Our modern science is mute here, it 32 has not yet found its way out; and if it is doing so, just as it has 33 been slowly finding the same old Prana and the same ancient 34 Akasha, it will have to move along the same lines.

35 The next unity is the omnipresent impersonal Being known by 36 its old mythological name as Brahma, the four-headed Brahma, and 37 psychologically called Mahat. This is where the two unite. What is 38 called your mind is only a bit of this Mahat caught in the trap of the 39 brain, and the sum total of all minds caught in the meshes of brains 40 is what you call Samashti, the aggregate, the universal. Analysis 41 had to go further; it was not yet complete. Here we were each one 42 of us, as it were, a microcosm, and the world taken altogether is the 43 macrocosm. But whatever is in the Vyashti, the particular, we may 44 safely conjecture that a similar thing is happening also outside. If 45 we had the power to analyse our own minds, we might safely 46 conjecture that the same thing is happening in the cosmic mind.
47 What is this mind is the question. In modern times, in Western 48 countries, as physical science is making rapid progress, as 49 physiology is step by step conquering stronghold after stronghold of 50 old religions, the Western people do not know where to stand, 51 because to their great despair, modern physiology at every step has 52 identified the mind with the brain. But we in India have known that 1 always. That is the first proposition the Hindu boy learns that the 2 mind is matter, only finer. The body is gross, and behind the body is 3 what we call the Sukshma Sharira, the fine body, or mind. This is 4 also material, only finer; and it is not the Atman.

5 I will not translate this word to you in English, because the 6 idea does not exist in Europe; it is untranslatable. The modern 7 attempt of German philosophers is to translate the word Atman by 8 the word "Self", and until that word is universally accepted, it is 9 impossible to use it. So, call it as Self or anything, it is our Atman.
10 This Atman is the real man behind. It is the Atman that uses the 11 material mind as its instrument, its Antahkarana, as is the 12 psychological term for the mind. And the mind by means of a series 13 of internal organs works the visible organs of the body. What is this 14 mind? It was only the other day that Western philosophers have 15 come to know that the eyes are not the real organs of vision, but 16 that behind these are other organs, the Indriyas, and if these are 17 destroyed, a man may have a thousand eyes, like Indra, but there 18 will be no sight for him. Ay, your philosophy starts with this 19 assumption that by vision is not meant the external vision. The real 20 vision belongs to the internal organs, the brain-centres inside. You 21 may call them what you like, but it is not that the Indriyas are the 22 eyes, or the nose, or the ears. And the sum total of all these 23 Indriyas plus the Manas, Buddhi, Chitta, Ahamkara, etc., is what is 24 called the mind, and if the modern physiologist comes to tell you 25 that the brain is what is called the mind, and that the brain is 26 formed of so many organs, you need not be afraid at all; tell him 27 that your philosophers knew it always; it is one of the very first 28 principles of your religion.

29 Well then, we have to understand now what is meant by this 30 Manas, Buddhi, Chitta, Ahamkara, etc. First of all, let us take 31 Chitta. It is the mind-stuff--a part of the Mahat--it is the generic 32 name for the mind itself, including all its various states. Suppose on 33 a summer evening, there is a lake, smooth and calm, without a 34 ripple on its surface. And suppose some one throws a stone into this 35 lake. What happens? First there is the action, the blow given to the 36 water; next the water rises and sends a reaction towards the stone, 37 and that reaction takes the form of a wave. First the water vibrates 38 a little, and immediately sends back a reaction in the form of a 39 wave. The Chitta let us compare to this lake, and the external 40 objects are like the stones thrown into it. As soon as it comes in 41 contact with any external object by means of these Indriyas--the 42 Indriyas must be there to carry these external objects inside--there 43 is a vibration, what is called Manas, indecisive. Next there is a 44 reaction, the determinative faculty, Buddhi, and along with this 45 Buddhi flashes the idea of Aham and the external object. Suppose 46 there is a mosquito sitting upon my hand. This sensation is carried 47 to my Chitta and it vibrates a little; this is the psychological Manas.
48 Then there is a reaction, and immediately comes the idea that I 49 have a mosquito on my hand and that I shall have to drive it off.
50 Thus these stones are thrown into the lake, but in the case of the 51 lake every blow that comes to it is from the external world, while in 52 the case of the lake of the mind, the blows may either come from

1 the external world or the internal world. This whole series is what 2 is called the Antahkarana.

3 Along with it, you ought to understand one thing more that 4 will help us in understanding the Advaita system later on. It is this.
5 All of you must have seen pearls and most of you know how pearls
6 are formed. A grain of sand enters into the shell of a pearl oyster, 7 and sets up an irritation there, and the oyster's body reacts towards 8 the irritation and covers the little particle with its own juice. That 9 crystallises and forms the pearl. So the whole universe is like that, 10 it is the pearl which is being formed by us. What we get from the 11 external world is simply the blow. Even to be conscious of that blow 12 we have to react, and as soon as we react, we really project a 13 portion of our own mind towards the blow, and when we come to 14 know of it, it is really our own mind as it has been shaped by the 15 blow. Therefore it is clear even to those who want to believe in a 16 hard and fast realism of an external world, which they cannot but 17 admit in these days of physiology--that supposing we represent the 18 external world by "x", what we really know is "x" plus mind, and 19 this mind-element is so great that it has covered the whole of that 20 "x" which has remained unknown and unknowable throughout; and, 21 therefore, if there is an external world, it is always unknown and 22 unknowable. What we know of it is as it is moulded, formed, 23 fashioned by our own mind. So with the internal world. The same 24 applies to our own soul, the Atman. In order to know the Atman we 25 shall have to know It through the mind; and, therefore, what little 26 we know of this Atman is simply the Atman plus the mind. That is to 27 say, the Atman covered over, fashioned, and moulded by the mind, 28 and nothing more. We shall return to this a little later, but we will 29 remember what has been told here.

30 The next thing to understand is this. The question arose that 31 this body is the name of one continuous stream of matter--every 32 moment we are adding material to it, and every moment material is 33 being thrown off by it--like a river continually flowing, vast masses 34 of water always changing places; yet all the same, we take up the 35 whole thing in imagination, and call it the same river. What do we 36 call the river? Every moment the water is changing, the shore is 37 changing, every moment the environment is changing, what is the 38 river then? It is the name of this series of changes. So with the 39 mind. That is the great Kshanika Vijnana Vada doctrine, most 40 difficult to understand, but most rigorously and logically worked out 41 in the Buddhistic philosophy; and this arose in India in opposition to 42 some part of the Vedanta. That had to be answered and we shall 43 see later on how it could only be answered by Advaitism and by 44 nothing else. We will see also how, in spite of people's curious 45 notions about Advaitism, people's fright about Advaitism, it is the 46 salvation of the world, because therein alone is to be found the 47 reason of things. Dualism and other isms are very good as means 48 of worship, very satisfying to the mind, and maybe, they have 49 helped the mind onward; but if man wants to be rational and 50 religious at the same time, Advaita is the one system in the world 51 for him. Well, now, we shall regard the mind as a similar river, 52 continually filling itself at one end and emptying itself at the other

1 end. Where is that unity which we call the Atman? The idea is this, 2 that in spite of this continuous change in the body, and in spite of 3 this continuous change in the mind, there is in us something that is 4 unchangeable, which makes our ideas of things appear 5 unchangeable. When rays of light coming from different quarters 6 fall upon a screen, or a wall, or upon something that is not 7 changeable, then and then alone it is possible for them to form a 8 unity, then and then alone it is possible for them to form one 9 complete whole. Where is this unity in the human organs, falling 10 upon which, as it were, the various ideas will come to unity and 11 become one complete whole? This certainly cannot be the mind 12 itself, seeing that it also changes. Therefore there must be 13 something which is neither the body nor the mind, something which 14 changes not, something permanent, upon which all our ideas, our 15 sensations fall to form a unity and a complete whole; and this is the 16 real soul, the Atman of man. And seeing that everything material, 17 whether you call it fine matter, or mind, must be changeful, seeing 18 that what you call gross matter, the external world, must also be 19 changeful in comparison to that--this unchangeable something 20 cannot be of material substance; therefore it is spiritual, that is to 21 say, it is not matter--it is indestructible, unchangeable.

22 Next will come another question: Apart from those old 23 arguments which only rise in the external world, the arguments in 24 support of design--who created this external world, who created 25 matter, etc.? The idea here is to know truth only from the inner 26 nature of man, and the question arises just in the same way as it 27 arose about the soul. Taking for granted that there is a soul, 28 unchangeable, in each man, which is neither the mind nor the body, 29 there is still a unity of idea among the souls, a unity of feeling, of 30 sympathy. How is it possible that my soul can act upon your soul, 31 where is the medium through which it can work, where is the 32 medium through which it can act? How is it I can feel anything 33 about your souls? What is it that is in touch both with your soul and 34 my soul? Therefore there is a metaphysical necessity of admitting 35 another soul, for it must be a soul which acts in contact with all the 36 different souls, and in and through matter--one Soul which covers 37 and interpenetrates all the infinite number of souls in the world, in 38 and through which they live, in and through which they sympathise, 39 and love, and work for one another. And this universal Soul is 40 Paramatman, the Lord God of the universe. Again, it follows that 41 because the soul is not made of matter, since it is spiritual, it cannot 42 obey the laws of matter, it cannot be judged by the laws of matter. It 43 is, therefore, unconquerable, birthless, deathless, and changeless.

44 {Sanskrit}

45 --"This Self, weapons cannot pierce, nor fire can burn, water 46 cannot wet, nor air can dry up. Changeless, all-pervading, 47 unmoving, immovable, eternal is this Self of man." We learn 48 according to the Gita and the Vedanta that this individual Self is 49 also Vibhu, and according to Kapila, is omnipresent. Of course there 50 are sects in India which hold that the Self is Anu, infinitely small; 51 but what they mean is Anu in manifestation; its real nature is Vibhu, 52 all-pervading.

1 There comes another idea, startling perhaps, yet a 2 characteristically Indian idea, and if there is any idea that is 3 common to all our sects, it is this. Therefore I beg you to pay 4 attention to this one idea and to remember it, for this is the very 5 foundation of everything that we have in India. The idea is this. You 6 have heard of the doctrine of physical evolution preached in the 7 Western world by the German and the English savants. It tells us 8 that the bodies of the different animals are really one; the 9 differences that we see are but different expressions of the same 10 series; that from the lowest worm to the highest and the most 11 saintly man it is but one--the one changing into the other, and so on, 12 going up and up, higher and higher, until it attains perfection. We 13 had that idea also. Declares our Yogi Patanjali--{Sanskrit}. One 14 species--the Jati is species--changes into another species--evolution; 15 Parinama means one thing changing into another, just as one 16 species changes into another. Where do we differ from the 17 Europeans? Patanjali says, Prakrityapurat," by the infilling of 18 nature". The European says, it is competition, natural and sexual 19 selection, etc. that forces one body to take the form of another. But 20 here is another idea, a still better analysis, going deeper into the 21 thing and saying, "By the infilling of nature". What is meant by this 22 infilling of nature? We admit that the amoeba goes higher and 23 higher until it becomes a Buddha; we admit that, but we are at the 24 same time as much certain that you cannot get an amount of work 25 out of a machine unless you have put it in some shape or other. The 26 sum total of the energy remains the same, whatever the forms it 27 may take. If you want a mass of energy at one end, you have got to 28 put it in at the other end; it may be in another form, but the amount 29 of energy that should be produced out of it must be the same.
30 Therefore, if a Buddha is the one end of the change, the very 31 amoeba must have been the Buddha also. If the Buddha is the 32 evolved amoeba, the amoeba was the involved Buddha also. If this 33 universe is the manifestation of an almost infinite amount of energy, 34 when this universe was in a state of Pralaya, it must have 35 represented the same amount of involved energy. It cannot have 36 been otherwise. As such, it follows that every soul is infinite. From 37 the lowest worm that crawls under our feet to the noblest and 38 greatest saints, all have this infinite power, infinite purity, and 39 infinite everything. Only the difference is in the degree of 40 manifestation. The worm is only manifesting just a little bit of that 41 energy, you have manifested more, another god-man has 42 manifested still more: that is all the difference. But that infinite 43 power is there all the same. Says Patanjali: {Sanskrit}--"Like the 44 peasant irrigating his field." Through a little corner of his field he 45 brings water from a reservoir somewhere, and perhaps he has got a 46 little lock that prevents the water from rushing into his field. When 47 he wants water, he has simply to open the lock, and in rushes the 48 water of its own power. The power has not to be added, it is already 49 there in the reservoir. So every one of us, every being, has as his 50 own background such a reservoir of strength, infinite power, infinite 51 purity, infinite bliss, and existence infinite--only these locks, these 52 bodies, are hindering us from expressing what we really are to the 53 fullest.

1 And as these bodies become more and more finely organised,
2 as the Tamoguna becomes the Rajoguna, and as the Rajoguna
3 becomes Sattvaguna, more and more of this power and purity 4 becomes manifest, and therefore it is that our people have been so 5 careful about eating and drinking, and the food question. It may be 6 that the original ideas have been lost, just as with our marriage-- 7 which, though not belonging to the subject, I may take as an 8 example. If I have another opportunity I will talk to you about these; 9 but let me tell you now that the ideas behind our marriage system 10 are the only ideas through which there can be a real civilisation.
11 There cannot be anything else. If a man or a woman were allowed 12 the freedom to take up any woman or man as wife or husband, if 13 individual pleasure, satisfaction of animal instincts, were to be 14 allowed to run loose in society, the result must be evil, evil children, 15 wicked and demoniacal. Ay, man in every country is, on the one 16 hand, producing these brutal children, and on the other hand 17 multiplying the police force to keep these brutes down. The 18 question is not how to destroy evil that way, but how to prevent the 19 very birth of evil. And so long as you live in society your marriage 20 certainly affects every member of it; and therefore society has the 21 right to dictate whom you shall marry, and whom you shall not. And 22 great ideas of this kind have been behind the system of marriage 23 here, what they call the astrological Jati of the bride and 24 bridegroom. And in passing I may remark that according to Manu a 25 child who is born of lust is not an Aryan. The child whose very 26 conception and whose death is according to the rules of the Vedas, 27 such is an Aryan. Yes, and less of these Aryan children are being 28 produced in every country, and the result is the mass of evil which 29 we call Kali Yuga. But we have lost all these ideals--it is true we 30 cannot carry all these ideas to the fullest length now--it is perfectly 31 true we have made almost a caricature of some of these great 32 ideas. It is lamentably true that the fathers and mothers are not 33 what they were in old times, neither is society so educated as it 34 used to be, neither has society that love for individuals that it used 35 to have. But, however faulty the working out may be, the principle 36 is sound; and if its application has become defective, if one method 37 has failed, take up the principle and work it out better; why kill the 38 principle? The same applies to the food question. The work and 39 details are bad, very bad indeed, but that does not hurt the 40 principle. The principle is eternal and must be there. Work it out 41 afresh and make a re-formed application.

42 This is the one great idea of the Atman which every one of 43 our sects in India has to believe. Only, as we shall find, the dualists 44 preach that this Atman by evil works becomes Sankuchita, i.e. all its 45 powers and its nature become contracted, and by good works again 46 that nature expands. And the Advaitist says that the Atman never 47 expands nor contracts, but seems to do so. It appears to have 48 become contracted. That is all the difference, but all have the one 49 idea that our Atman has all the powers already, not that anything 50 will come to It from outside, not that anything will drop into It from 51 the skies. Mark you, your Vedas are not inspired, but expired, not 52 that they came from anywhere outside, but they are the eternal 53 laws living in every soul. The Vedas are in the soul of the ant, in the 1 soul of the god. The ant has only to evolve and get the body of a 2 sage or a Rishi, and the Vedas will come out, eternal laws

3 expressing themselves. This is the one great idea to understand 4 that our power is already ours, our salvation is already within us.
5 Say either that it has become contracted, or say that it has been 6 covered with the veil of Maya, it matters little; the idea is there 7 already; you must have to believe in that, believe in the possibility 8 of everybody--that even in the lowest man there is the same 9 possibility as in the Buddha. This is the doctrine of the Atman.

10 But now comes a tremendous fight. Here are the Buddhists, 11 who equally analyse the body into a material stream and as equally 12 analyse the mind into another. And as for this Atman, they state that 13 It is unnecessary; so we need not assume the Atman at all. What 14 use of a substance, and qualities adhering to the substance? We say, 15 Gunas, qualities, and qualities alone. It is illogical to assume two 16 causes where one will explain the whole thing. And the fight went 17 on, and all the theories which held the doctrine of substance were 18 thrown to the ground by the Buddhists. There was a break-up all 19 along the line of those who held on to the doctrine of substance and 20 qualities, that you have a soul, and I have a soul, and every one has 21 a soul separate from the mind and body, and that each one is an 22 individual.

23 So far we have seen that the idea of dualism is all right; for 24 there is the body, there is then the fine body--the mind--there is this 25 Atman, and in and through all the Atmans is that Paramatman, God.
26 The difficulty is here that this Atman and Paramatman are both 27 called substance, to which the mind and body and so-called 28 substances adhere like so many qualities. Nobody has ever seen a 29 substance, none can ever conceive; what is the use of thinking of 30 this substance? Why not become a Kshanikavadin and say that 31 whatever exists is this succession of mental currents and nothing 32 more? They do not adhere to each other, they do not form a unit, 33 one is chasing the other, like waves in the ocean, never complete, 34 never forming one unit-whole. Man is a succession of waves, and 35 when one goes away it generates another, and the cessation of 36 these wave-forms is what is called Nirvana. You see that dualism is 37 mute before this; it is impossible that it can bring up any argument, 38 and the dualistic God also cannot be retained here. The idea of a 39 God that is omnipresent, and yet is a person who creates without 40 hands, and moves without feet, and so on, and who has created the 41 universe as a Kumbakara (potter) creates a Ghata (pot), the 42 Buddhist declares, is childish, and that if this is God, he is going to 43 fight this God and not worship it. This universe is full of misery; if it 44 is the work of a God, we are going to fight this God. And secondly, 45 this God is illogical and impossible, as all of you are aware. We need 46 not go into the defects of the "design theory", as all our Kshanikas 47 have shown them full well; and so this Personal God fell to pieces.

48 Truth, and nothing but truth, is the watchword of the 49 Advaitist. {Sanskrit}--"Truth alone triumphs, and not untruth.
50 Through truth alone the way to gods, Devayana, lies." Everybody 51 marches forward under that banner; ay, but it is only to crush the 52 weaker man's position by his own. You come with your dualistic

1 idea of God to pick a quarrel with a poor man who is worshipping 2 an image, and you think you are wonderfully rational, you can 3 confound him; but if he turns round and shatters your own Personal 4 God and calls that an imaginary ideal, where are you? You fall back 5 on faith and so on, or raise the cry of atheism, the old cry of a weak 6 man--whosoever defeats him is an atheist. If you are to be rational, 7 be rational all along the line, and if not, allow others the same 8 privilege which you ask for yourselves. How can you prove the 9 existence of this God? On the other hand, it can be almost 10 disproved. There is not a shadow of a proof as to His existence, and 11 there are very strong arguments to the contrary. How will you 12 prove His existence, with your God, and His Gunas, and an infinite 13 number of souls which are substance, and each soul an individual?
14 In what are you an individual? You are not as a body, for you know 15 today better than even the Buddhists of old knew that what may 16 have been matter in the sun has just now become matter in you, 17 and will go out and become matter in the plants; then where is your 18 individuality, Mr. So-and-so? The same applies to the mind. Where is 19 your individuality? You have one thought tonight and another 20 tomorrow. You do not think the same way as you thought when you 21 were a child; and old men do not think the same way as they did 22 when they were young. Where is your individuality then? Do not say 23 it is in consciousness, this Ahamkara, because this only covers a 24 small part of your existence. While I am talking to you, all my 25 organs are working and I am not conscious of it. If consciousness is 26 the proof of existence they do not exist then, because I am not 27 conscious of them. Where are you then with your Personal God 28 theories? How can you prove such a God?

29 Again, the Buddhists will stand up and declare--not only is it 30 illogical, but immoral, for it teaches man to be a coward and to seek 31 assistance outside, and nobody can give him such help. Here is the 32 universe, man made it; why then depend on an imaginary being 33 outside whom nobody ever saw, or felt, or got help from? Why then 34 do you make cowards of yourselves and teach your children that the 35 highest state of man is to be like a dog, and go crawling before this 36 imaginary being, saying that you are weak and impure, and that you 37 are everything vile in this universe? On the other hand, the 38 Buddhists may urge not only that you tell a lie, but that you bring a 39 tremendous amount of evil upon your children; for, mark you, this 40 world is one of hypnotisation. Whatever you tell yourself, that you 41 become. Almost the first words the great Buddha uttered were:
42 "What you think, that you are; what you will think, that you will be."
43 If this is true, do not teach yourself that you are nothing, ay, that 44 you cannot do anything unless you are helped by somebody who 45 does not live here, but sits above the clouds. The result will be that 46 you will be more and more weakened every day. By constantly 47 repeating, "we are very impure, Lord, make us pure", the result will 48 be that you will hypnotise yourselves into all sorts of vices. Ay, the 49 Buddhists say that ninety per cent of these vices that you see in 50 every society are on account of this idea of a Personal God; this is 51 an awful idea of the human being that the end and aim of this 52 expression of life, this wonderful expression of life, is to become 53 like a dog. Says the Buddhist to the Vaishnava, if your ideal, your

1 aim and goal is to go to the place called Vaikuntha where God lives, 2 and there stand before Him with folded hands all through eternity, 3 it is better to commit suicide than do that. The Buddhists may even 4 urge that, that is why he is going to create annihilation, Nirvana, to 5 escape this. I am putting these ideas before you as a Buddhist just 6 for the time being, because nowadays all these Advaitic ideas are 7 said to make you immoral, and I am trying to tell you how the other 8 side looks. Let us face both sides boldly and bravely.

9 We have seen first of all that this cannot be proved, this idea 10 of a Personal God creating the world; is there any child that can 11 believe this today? Because a Kumbhakara creates a Ghata, 12 therefore a God created the world! If this is so, then your 13 Kumbhakara is God also; and if any one tells you that He acts 14 without head and hands, you may take him to a lunatic asylum. Has 15 ever your Personal God, the Creator of the world to whom you cry 16 all your life, helped you--is the next challenge from modern science.

17 They will prove that any help you have had could have been 18 got by your own exertions, and better still, you need not have spent 19 your energy in that crying, you could have done it better without 20 that weeping and crying. And we have seen that along with this 21 idea of a Personal God comes tyranny and priestcraft. Tyranny and 22 priestcraft have prevailed wherever this idea existed, and until the 23 lie is knocked on the head, say the Buddhists, tyranny will not 24 cease. So long as man thinks he has to cower before a supernatural 25 being, so long there will be priests to claim rights and privileges 26 and to make men cower before them, while these poor men will 27 continue to ask some priest to act as interceder for them. You may 28 do away with the Brahmin, but mark me, those who do so will put 29 themselves in his place and will be worse, because the Brahmin has 30 a certain amount of generosity in him, but these upstarts are always 31 the worst of tyrannisers. If a beggar gets wealth, he thinks the 32 whole world is a bit of straw. So these priests there must be, so long 33 as this Personal God idea persists, and it will be impossible to think 34 of any great morality in society. Priestcraft and tyranny go hand in 35 hand. Why was it invented? Because some strong men in old times 36 got people into their hands and said, you must obey us or we will 37 destroy you. That was the long and short of it. {Sanskrit}--It is the 38 idea of the thunderer who kills every one who does not obey him.

39 Next the Buddhist says, you have been perfectly rational up 40 to this point, that everything is the result of the law of Karma. You 41 believe in an infinity of souls, and that souls are without birth or 42 death, and this infinity of souls and the belief in the law of Karma 43 are perfectly logical no doubt. There cannot be a cause without an 44 effect, the present must have had its cause in the past and will have 45 its effect in the future. The Hindu says the Karma is Jada (inert) and 46 not Chaitanya (Spirit), therefore some Chaitanya is necessary to 47 bring this cause to fruition. Is it so, that Chaitanya is necessary to 48 bring the plant to fruition? If I plant the seed and add water, no 49 Chaitanya is necessary. You may say there was some original 50 Chaitanya there, but the souls themselves were the Chaitanya, 51 nothing else is necessary. If human souls have it too, what necessity 52 is there for a God, as say the Jains, who, unlike the Buddhists,

1 believe in souls and do not believe in God. Where are you logical, 2 where are you moral? And when you criticise Advaitism and fear 3 that it will make for immorality, just read a little of what has been 4 done in India by dualistic sects. If there have been twenty thousand 5 Advaitist blackguards, there have also been twenty thousand 6 Dvaitist blackguards. Generally speaking, there will be more 7 Dvaitist blackguards, because it takes a better type of mind to 8 understand Advaitism, and Advaitists can scarcely be frightened 9 into anything. What remains for you Hindus, then? There is no help 10 for you out of the clutches of the Buddhists. You may quote the 11 Vedas, but he does not believe in them. He will say, "My Tripitakas 12 say otherwise, and they are without beginning or end, not even 13 written by Buddha, for Buddha says he is only reciting them; they 14 are eternal." And he adds, "Yours are wrong, ours are the true 15 Vedas, yours are manufactured by the Brahmin priests, therefore 16 out with them." How do you escape?

17 Here is the way to get out. Take up the first objection, the 18 metaphysical one, that substance and qualities are different. Says 19 the Advaitist, they are not. There is no difference between 20 substance and qualities. You know the old illustration, how the rope 21 is taken for the snake, and when you see the snake you do not see 22 the rope at all, the rope has vanished. Dividing the thing into 23 substance and quality is a metaphysical something in the brains of 24 philosophers, for never can they be in effect outside. You see 25 qualities if you are an ordinary man, and substance if you are a 26 great Yogi, but you never see both at the same time. So, Buddhists, 27 your quarrel about substance and qualities has been but a 28 miscalculation which does not stand on fact. But if substance is 29 unqualified, there can only be one. If you take qualities off from the 30 soul, and show that these qualities are in the mind really, 31 superimposed on the soul, then there can never be two souls for it 32 is qualification that makes the difference between one soul and 33 another. How do you know that one soul is different from the other?
34 Owing to certain differentiating marks, certain qualities. And where 35 qualities do not exist, how can there be differentiation? Therefore 36 there are not two souls, there is but One, and your Paramatman is 37 unnecessary, it is this very soul. That One is called Paramatman, 38 that very One is called Jivatman, and so on; and you dualists, such 39 as the Sankhyas and others, who say that the soul is Vibhu, 40 omnipresent, how can you make two infinities? There can be only 41 one. What else? This One is the one Infinite Atman, everything else 42 is its manifestation. There the Buddhist stops, but there it does not 43 end.

44 The Advaitist position is not merely a weak one of criticism.
45 The Advaitist criticises others when they come too near him, and 46 just throws them away, that is all; but he propounds his own 47 position. He is the only one that criticises, and does not stop with 48 criticism and showing books. Here you are. You say the universe is 49 a thing of continuous motion. In Vyashti (the finite) everything is 50 moving; you are moving, the table is moving, motion everywhere; it 51 is Samsara, continuous motion; it is Jagat. Therefore there cannot 52 be an individuality in this Jagat, because individuality means that

1 which does not change; there cannot be any changeful individuality,
2 it is a contradiction in terms. There is no such thing as individuality 3 in this little world of ours, the Jagat. Thought and feeling, mind and 4 body, men and animals and plants are in a continuous state of flux.
5 But suppose you take the universe as a unit whole; can it change or 6 move? Certainly not.

7 Motion is possible in comparison with something which is a 8 little less in motion or entirely motionless. The universe as a whole, 9 therefore, is motionless, unchangeable. You are therefore, an 10 individual then and then alone when you are the whole of it, when 11 the realisation of "I am the universe" comes. That is why the 12 Vedantist says that so long as there are two, fear does not cease. It 13 is only when one does not see another, does not feel another, when 14 it is all one--then alone fear ceases, then alone death vanishes, then 15 alone Samsara vanishes. Advaita teaches us, therefore, that man is 16 individual in being universal, and not in being particular. You are 17 immortal only when you are the whole. You are fearless and 18 deathless only when you are the universe; and then that which you 19 call the universe is the same as that you call God, the same that you 20 call existence, the same that you call the whole. It is the one 21 undivided Existence which is taken to be the manifold world which 22 we see, as also others who are in the same state of mind as we.
23 People who have done a little better Karma and get a better state of 24 mind, when they die, look upon it as Svarga and see Indras and so 25 forth. People still higher will see it, the very same thing, as Brahma-26 Loka, and the perfect ones will neither see the earth nor the 27 heavens, nor any Loka at all. The universe will have vanished, and 28 Brahman will be in its stead.

29 Can we know this Brahman? I have told you of the painting of 30 the Infinite in the Samhita. Here we shall find another side shown, 31 the infinite internal. That was the infinite of the muscles. Here we 32 shall have the Infinite of thought. There the Infinite was attempted 33 to be painted in language positive; here that language failed and 34 the attempt has been to paint it in language negative. Here is this 35 universe, and even admitting that it is Brahman, can we know it?
36 No! No! You must understand this one thing again very clearly.
37 Again and again this doubt will come to you: If this is Brahman, how 38 can we know it? {Sanskrit} --"By what can the knower be known?"
39 How can the knower be known? The eyes see everything; can they 40 see themselves? They cannot. The very fact of knowledge is a 41 degradation. Children of the Aryans, you must remember this, for 42 herein lies a big story. All the Western temptations that come to 43 you, have their metaphysical basis on that one thing--there is 44 nothing higher than sense-knowledge. In the East, we say in our 45 Vedas that this knowledge is lower than the thing itself, because it 46 is always a limitation. When you want to know a thing, it 47 immediately becomes limited by your mind. They say, refer back to 48 that instance of the oyster making a pearl and see how knowledge 49 is limitation, gathering a thing, bringing it into consciousness, and 50 not knowing it as a whole. This is true about all knowledge, and can 51 it be less so about the Infinite? Can you thus limit Him who is the 52 substance of all knowledge, Him who is the Sakshi, the witness,

1 without whom you cannot have any knowledge, Him who has no 2 qualities, who is the Witness of the whole universe, the Witness in 3 our own souls? How can you know Him? By what means can you
4 bind Him up? Everything, the whole universe, is such a false
5 attempt. This infinite Atman is, as it were, trying to see His own 6 face, and all, from the lowest animals to the highest of gods, are 7 like so many mirrors to reflect Himself in, and He is taking up still 8 others, finding them insufficient, until in the human body He comes 9 to know that it is the finite of the finite, all is finite, there cannot be 10 any expression of the Infinite in the finite. Then comes the 11 retrograde march, and this is what is called renunciation, Vairagya.
12 Back from the senses, back! Do not go to the senses is the 13 watchword of Vairagya. This is the watchword of all morality, this is 14 the watchword of all well-being; for you must remember that with 15 us the universe begins in Tapasya, in renunciation, and as you go 16 back and back, all the forms are being manifested before you, and 17 they are left aside one after the other until you remain what you 18 really are. This is Moksha or liberation.

19 This idea we have to understand: {Sanskrit}--"How to know 20 the knower?" The knower cannot be known, because if it were 21 known, it will not be the knower. If you look at your eyes in a mirror, 22 the reflection is no more your eyes, but something else, only a 23 reflection. Then if this Soul, this Universal, Infinite Being which you 24 are, is only a witness, what good is it? It cannot live, and move 25 about, and enjoy the world, as we do. People cannot understand 26 how the witness can enjoy. "Oh," they say, "you Hindus have 27 become quiescent, and good for nothing, through this doctrine that 28 you are witnesses!" First of all, it is only the witness that can enjoy.
29 If there is a wrestling match, who enjoys it, those who take part in 30 it, or those who are looking on--the outsiders? The more and more 31 you are the witness of anything in life, the more you enjoy it. And 32 this is Ananda; and, therefore, infinite bliss can only be yours when 33 you have become the witness of this universe; then alone you are a 34 Mukta Purusha. It is the witness alone that can work without any 35 desire, without any idea of going to heaven, without any idea of 36 blame, without any idea of praise. The witness alone enjoys, and 37 none else.

38 Coming to the moral aspect, there is one thing between the 39 metaphysical and the moral aspect of Advaitism; it is the theory of 40 Maya. Everyone of these points in the Advaita system requires 41 years to understand and months to explain. Therefore you will 42 excuse me if I only just touch them en passant. This theory of Maya 43 has been the most difficult thing to understand in all ages. Let me 44 tell you in a few words that it is surely no theory, it is the 45 combination of the three ideas Desha-Kala-Nimitta--space, time, 46 and causation--and this time and space and cause have been further 47 reduced into Nama-Rupa. Suppose there is a wave in the ocean.
48 The wave is distinct from the ocean only in its form and name, and 49 this form and this name cannot have any separate existence from 50 the wave; they exist only with the wave. The wave may subside, but 51 the same amount of water remains, even if the name and form that 52 were on the wave vanish for ever. So this Maya is what makes the 1 difference between me and you, between all animals and man, 2 between gods and men. In fact, it is this Maya that causes the 3 Atman to be caught, as it were, in so many millions of beings, and 4 these are distinguishable only through name and form. If you leave 5 it alone, let name and form go, all this variety vanishes for ever, and 6 you are what you really are. This is Maya.

7 It is again no theory, but a statement of facts. When the 8 realist states that this table exists, what he means is, that this table 9 has an independent existence of its own, that it does not depend on 10 the existence of anything else in the universe, and if this whole 11 universe be destroyed and annihilated, this table will remain just as 12 it is now. A little thought will show you that it cannot be so.
13 Everything here in the sense-world is dependent and 14 interdependent, relative and correlative, the existence of one 15 depending on the other. There are three steps, therefore, in our 16 knowledge of things; the first is that each thing is individual and 17 separate from every other; and the next step is to find that there is 18 a relation and correlation between all things; and the third is that 19 there is only one thing which we see as many. The first idea of God 20 with the ignorant is that this God is somewhere outside the 21 universe, that is to say, the conception of God is extremely human; 22 He does just what a man does, only on a bigger and higher scale.
23 And we have seen how that idea of God is proved in a few words to 24 be unreasonable and insufficient. And the next idea is the idea of a 25 power we see manifested everywhere. This is the real Personal God 26 we get in the Chandi, but, mark me, not a God that you make the 27 reservoir of all good qualities only. You cannot have two Gods, God 28 and Satan; you must have only one and dare to call Him good and 29 bad. Have only one and take the logical consequences. We read in 30 the Chandi: "We salute Thee, O Divine Mother, who lives in every 31 being as peace. We salute Thee, O Divine Mother, who lives in all 32 beings as purity." At the same time we must take the whole 33 consequence of calling Him the All-formed. "All this is bliss, O 34 Gargi; wherever there is bliss there is a portion of the Divine." You 35 may use it how you like. In this light before me, you may give a poor 36 man a hundred rupees, and another man may forge your name, but 37 the light will be the same for both. This is the second stage. And the 38 third is that God is neither outside nature nor inside nature, but 39 God and nature and soul and universe are all convertible terms. You 40 never see two things; it is your metaphysical words that have 41 deluded you. You assume that you are a body and have a soul, and 42 that you are both together. How can that be? Try in your own mind.
43 If there is a Yogi among you, he knows himself as Chaitanya, for 44 him the body has vanished. An ordinary man thinks of himself as a 45 body; the idea of spirit has vanished from him; but because the 46 metaphysical ideas exist that man has a body and a soul and all 47 these things, you think they are all simultaneously there. One thing 48 at a time. Do not talk of God when you see matter; you see the 49 effect and the effect alone, and the cause you cannot see, and the 50 moment you can see the cause, the effect will have vanished. Where 51 is the world then, and who has taken it off?

52 "One that is present always as consciousness, the bliss

1 absolute, beyond all bounds, beyond all compare, beyond all 2 qualities, ever-free, limitless as the sky, without parts, the absolute, 3 the perfect--such a Brahman, O sage, O learned one, shines in the 4 heart of the Jnani in Samadhi. (Vivekachudamani, 408)

5 "Where all the changes of nature cease for ever, who is 6 thought beyond all thoughts, who is equal to all yet having no equal, 7 immeasurable, whom the Vedas declare, who is the essence in what 8 we call our existence, the perfect--such a Brahman, O Sage, O
9 learned one, shines in the heart of the Jnani in Samadhi. (Ibid.,409)

10 "Beyond all birth and death, the Infinite One, incomparable, 11 like the whole universe deluged in water in Mahapralaya--water 12 above, water beneath, water on all sides, and on the face of that 13 water not a wave, not a ripple--silent and calm, all visions have died 14 out, all fights and quarrels and the war of fools and saints have 15 ceased for ever--such a Brahman, O sage, O learned one, shines in 16 the heart of the Jnani in Samadhi." (Ibid., 410)

17 That also comes, and when that comes the world has 18 vanished.

19 We have seen then that this Brahman, this Reality is unknown 20 and unknowable, not in the sense of the agnostic, but because to 21 know Him would be a blasphemy, because you are He already. We 22 have also seen that this Brahman is not this table and yet is this 23 table. Take off the name and form, and whatever is reality is He. He 24 is the reality in everything.

25 "Thou art the woman, thou the man, thou art the boy, and the 26 girl as well, thou the old man supporting thyself on a stick, thou art 27 all in all in the universe." That is the theme of Advaitism. A few 28 words more. Herein lies, we find, the explanation of the essence of 29 things. We have seen how here alone we can take a firm stand 30 against all the onrush of logic and scientific knowledge. Here at 31 least reason has a firm foundation, and, at the same time, the 32 Indian Vedantist does not curse the preceding steps; he looks back 33 and he blesses them, and he knows that they were true, only 34 wrongly perceived, and wrongly stated.

35 They were the same truth, only seen through the glass of 36 Maya, distorted it may be--yet truth, and nothing but truth. The 37 same God whom the ignorant man saw outside nature, the same 38 whom the little-knowing man saw as interpenetrating the universe, 39 and the same whom the sage realises as his own Self, as the whole 40 universe itself--all are One and the same Being, the same entity 41 seen from different standpoints, seen through different glasses of 42 Maya, perceived by different minds, and all the difference was 43 caused by that. Not only so, but one view must lead to the other.
44 What is the difference between science and common knowledge?
45 Go out into the streets in the dark, and if something unusual is 46 happening there, ask one of the passers-by what is the cause of it.
47 It is ten to one that he will tell you it is a ghost causing the 48 phenomenon. He is always going after ghosts and spirits outside, 49 because it is the nature of ignorance to seek for causes outside of 50 effects. If a stone falls, it has been thrown by a devil or a ghost, 51 says the ignorant man, but the scientific man says it is the law of 1 nature, the law of gravitation.

2 What is the fight between science and religion everywhere?
3 Religions are encumbered with such a mass of explanations which 4 come from outside--one angel is in charge of the sun, another of the 5 moon, and so on ad infinitum. Every change is caused by a spirit, 6 the one common point of agreement being that they are all outside 7 the thing. Science means that the cause of a thing is sought out by 8 the nature of the thing itself. As step by step science is progressing, 9 it has taken the explanation of natural phenomena out of the hands 10 of spirits and angels. Because Advaitism has done likewise in 11 spiritual matters, it is the most scientific religion. This universe has 12 not been created by any extra-cosmic God, nor is it the work of any 13 outside genius. It is self-creating, self-dissolving, self-manifesting, 14 One Infinite Existence, the Brahman. Tattvamasi Shvetaketo--"That 15 thou art, O Shvetaketu!"

16 Thus you see that this, and this alone, and none else, can be 17 the only scientific religion. And with all the prattle about science 18 that is going on daily at the present time in modern half-educated 19 India, with all the talk about rationalism and reason that I hear 20 every day, I expect that whole sects of you will come over and dare 21 to be Advaitists, and dare to preach it to the world in the words of 22 Buddha, {Sanskrit}--"For the good of many, for the happiness of 23 many." If you do not, I take you for cowards. If you cannot get over 24 your cowardice, if your fear is your excuse, allow the same liberty 25 to others, do not try to break up the poor idol-worshipper, do not 26 call him a devil, do not go about preaching to every man that does 27 not agree entirely with you. Know first, that you are cowards 28 yourselves, and if society frightens you, if your own superstitions of 29 the past frighten you so much, how much more will these 30 superstitions frighten and bind down those who are ignorant? That 31 is the Advaita position. Have mercy on others. Would to God that 32 the whole world were Advaitists tomorrow, not only in theory, but in 33 realisation. But if that cannot be, let us do the next best thing; let us 34 take the ignorant by the hand, lead them always step by step just as 35 they can go, and know that every step in all religious growth in 36 India has been progressive. It is not from bad to good, but from 37 good to better.

38 Something more has to be told about the moral relation. Our 39 boys blithely talk nowadays; they learn from somebody--the Lord 40 knows from whom--that Advaita makes people immoral, because if 41 we are all one and all God, what need of morality will there be at 42 all! In the first place, that is the argument of the brute, who can 43 only be kept down by the whip. If you are such brutes, commit 44 suicide rather than pass for human beings who have to be kept down 45 by the whip. If the whip is taken away, you will all be demons! You 46 ought all to be killed if such is the case. There is no help for you; 47 you must always be living under this whip and rod, and there is no 48 salvation, no escape for you.

49 In the second place, Advaita and Advaita alone explains 50 morality. Every religion preaches that the essence of all morality is 51 to do good to others. And why? Be unselfish. And why should I?
52 Some God has said it? He is not for me. Some texts have declared

1 it? Let them; that is nothing to me; let them all tell it. And if they do, 2 what is it to me? Each one for himself, and somebody take the 3 hindermost--that is all the morality in the world, at least with many.
4 What is the reason that I should be moral? You cannot explain it 5 except when you come to know the truth as given in the Gita: "He 6 who sees everyone in himself, and himself in everyone, thus seeing 7 the same God living in all, he, the sage, no more kills the Self by the 8 self." Know through Advaita that whomsoever you hurt, you hurt 9 yourself; they are all you. Whether you know it or not, through all 10 hands you work, through all feet you move, you are the king 11 enjoying in the palace, you are the beggar leading that miserable 12 existence in the street; you are in the ignorant as well as in the 13 learned, you are in the man who is weak, and you are in the strong; 14 know this and be sympathetic. And that is why we must not hurt 15 others. That is why I do not even care whether I have to starve, 16 because there will be millions of mouths eating at the same time, 17 and they are all mine. Therefore I should not care what becomes of 18 me and mine, for the whole universe is mine, I am enjoying all the 19 bliss at the same time; and who can kill me or the universe? Herein 20 is morality. Here, in Advaita alone, is morality explained. The others 21 teach it, but cannot give you its reason. Then, so far about 22 explanation.

23 What is the gain? It is strength. Take off that veil of hypnotism 24 which you have cast upon the world, send not out thoughts and 25 words of weakness unto humanity. Know that all sins and all evils 26 can be summed up in that one word, weakness. It is weakness that 27 is the motive power in all evil doing; it is weakness that is the 28 source of all selfishness; it is weakness that makes men injure 29 others; it is weakness that makes them manifest what they are not 30 in reality. Let them all know what they are; let them repeat day and 31 night what they are. Soham. Let them suck it in with their mothers' 32 milk, this idea of strength--I am He, I am He. This is to be heard 33 first--{Sanskrit} etc. And then let them think of it, and out of that 34 thought, out of that heart will proceed works such as the world has 35 never seen. What has to be done? Ay, this Advaita is said by some to 36 be impracticable; that is to say, it is not yet manifesting itself on the 37 material plane. To a certain extent that is true, for remember the 38 saying of the Vedas:

39 {Sanskrit}

40 "Om, this is the Brahman; Om, this is the greatest reality; he 41 who knows the secret of this Om, whatever he desires that he gets."
42 Ay, therefore first know the secret of this Om, that you are the Om;
43 know the secret of this Tattvamasi, and then and then alone 44 whatever you want shall come to you. If you want to be great 45 materially, believe that you are so. I may be a little bubble, and you 46 may be a wave mountain-high, but know that for both of us the 47 infinite ocean is the background, the infinite Brahman is our 48 magazine of power and strength, and we can draw as much as we 49 like, both of us, I the bubble and you the mountain-high wave.
50 Believe, therefore, in yourselves. The secret of Advaita is: Believe in 51 yourselves first, and then believe in anything else. In the history of 52 the world, you will find that only those nations that have believed in

1 themselves have become great and strong. In the history of each 2 nation, you will always find that only those individuals who have 3 believed in themselves have become great and strong. Here, to 4 India, came an Englishman who was only a clerk, and for want of 5 funds and other reasons he twice tried to blow his brains out; and 6 when he failed, he believed in himself, he believed that he was born 7 to do great things; and that man became Lord Clive, the founder of 8 the Empire. If he had believed the Padres and gone crawling all his 9 life--"O Lord, I am weak, and I am low"--where would he have been?
10 In a lunatic asylum. You also are made lunatics by these evil 11 teachings. I have seen, all the world over, the bad effects of these 12 weak teachings of humility destroying the human race. Our children 13 are brought up in this way, and is it a wonder that they become 14 semi-lunatics?

15 This is teaching on the practical side. Believe, therefore, in 16 yourselves, and if you want material wealth, work it out; it will 17 come to you. If you want to be intellectual, work it out on the 18 intellectual plane, and intellectual giants you shall be. And if you 19 want to attain to freedom, work it out on the spiritual plane, and 20 free you shall be and shall enter into Nirvana, the Eternal Bliss. But 21 one defect which lay in the Advaita was its being worked out so 22 long on the spiritual plane only, and nowhere else; now the time has 23 come when you have to make it practical. It shall no more be a 24 Rahasya, a secret, it shall no more live with monks in cave and 25 forests, and in the Himalayas; it must come down to the daily, 26 everyday life of the people; it shall be worked out in the palace of 27 the king, in the cave of the recluse; it shall be worked out in the 28 cottage of the poor, by the beggar in the street, everywhere;
29 anywhere it can be worked out. Therefore do not fear whether you 30 are a woman or a Shudra, for this religion is so great, says Lord 31 Krishna, that even a little of it brings a great amount of good.

32 Therefore, children of the Aryans, do not sit idle; awake, 33 arise, and stop not till the goal is reached. The time has come when 34 this Advaita is to be worked out practically. Let us bring it down 35 from heaven unto the earth; this is the present dispensation. Ay, the 36 voices of our forefathers of old are telling us to bring it down from 37 heaven to the earth. Let your teachings permeate the world, till 38 they have entered into every pore of society, till they have become 39 the common property of everybody, till they have become part and 40 parcel of our lives, till they have entered into our veins and tingle 41 with every drop of blood there.

42 Ay, you may be astonished to hear that as practical Vedantists 43 the Americans are better than we are. I used to stand on the 44 seashore at New York and look at the immigrants coming from 45 different countries--crushed, downtrodden, hopeless, unable to look 46 a man in the face, with a little bundle of clothes as all their 47 possession, and these all in rags; if they saw a policeman they were 48 afraid and tried to get to the other side of the foot-path. And, mark 49 you, in six months those very men were walking erect, well clothed, 50 looking everybody in the face; and what made this wonderful 51 difference? Say, this man comes from Armenia or somewhere else 52 where he was crushed down beyond all recognition, where

1 everybody told him he was a born slave and born to remain in a low 2 state all his life, and where at the least move on his part he was 3 trodden upon. There everything told him, as it were, "Slave! you are 4 a slave, remain so. Hopeless you were born, hopeless you must 5 remain." Even the very air murmured round him, as it were, "There 6 is no hope for you; hopeless and a slave you must remain", while 7 the strong man crushed the life out of him. And when he landed in 8 the streets of New York, he found a gentleman, well-dressed, 9 shaking him by the hand; it made no difference that the one was in 10 rags and the other well-clad. He went a step further and saw a 11 restaurant, that there were gentlemen dining at a table, and he was 12 asked to take a seat at the corner of the same table. He went about 13 and found a new life, that there was a place where he was a man 14 among men. Perhaps he went to Washington, shook hands with the 15 President of the United States, and perhaps there he saw men 16 coming from distant villages, peasants, and ill-clad, all shaking 17 hands with the President. Then the veil of Maya slipped away from 18 him. He is Brahman, he who has been hypnotised into slavery and 19 weakness is once more awake, and he rises up and finds himself a 20 man in a world of men. Ay, in this country of ours, the very birth-21 place of the Vedanta, our masses have been hypnotised for ages 22 into that state. To touch them is pollution, to sit with them is 23 pollution! Hopeless they were born, hopeless they must remain!
24 And the result is that they have been sinking, sinking, sinking, and 25 have come to the last stage to which a human being can come. For 26 what country is there in the world where man has to sleep with the 27 cattle? And for this, blame nobody else, do not commit the mistake 28 of the ignorant. The effect is here and the cause is here too. We are 29 to blame. Stand up, be bold, and take the blame on your own 30 shoulders. Do not go about throwing mud at others; for all the 31 faults you suffer from, you are the sole and only cause.

32 Young men of Lahore, understand this, therefore, this great 33 sin, hereditary and national, is on our shoulders. There is no hope 34 for us. You may make thousands of societies, twenty thousand 35 political assemblages, fifty thousand institutions. These will be of no 36 use until there is that sympathy, that love, that heart that thinks for 37 all; until Buddha's heart comes once more into India, until the 38 words of the Lord Krishna are brought to their practical use, there 39 is no hope for us. You go on imitating the Europeans and their 40 societies and their assemblages, but let me tell you a story, a fact 41 that I saw with my own eyes.

42 A company of Burmans was taken over to London by some 43 persons here, who turned out to be Eurasians. They exhibited these 44 people in London, took all the money, and then took these Burmans 45 over to the Continent, and left them there for good or evil. These 46 poor people did not know a word of any European language, but the 47 English Consul in Austria sent them over to London. They were 48 helpless in London, without knowing anyone. But an English lady 49 got to know of them, took these foreigners from Burma into her 50 own house, gave them her own clothes, her bed, and everything, 51 and then sent the news to the papers. And, mark you, the next day 52 the whole nation was, as it were, roused. Money poured in, and

1 these people were helped out and sent back to Burma. On this sort 2 of sympathy are based all their political and other institutions; it is 3 the rock-foundation of love, for themselves at least. They may not 4 love the world; and the Burmans may be their enemies, but in 5 England, it goes without saying, there is this great love for their 6 own people, for truth and justice and charity to the stranger at the 7 door. I should be the most ungrateful man if I did not tell you how 8 wonderfully and how hospitably I was received in every country in 9 the West. Where is the heart here to build upon? No sooner do we 10 start a little joint-stock company than we try to cheat each other, 11 and the whole thing comes down with a crash. You talk of imitating 12 the English and building up as big a nation as they are. But where 13 are the foundations? Ours are only sand, and, therefore, the 14 building comes down with a crash in no time.

15 Therefore, young men of Lahore, raise once more that mighty 16 banner of Advaita, for on no other ground can you have that 17 wonderful love until you see that the same Lord is present 18 everywhere. Unfurl that banner of love! "Arise, awake, and stop not 19 till the goal is reached." Arise, arise once more, for nothing can be 20 done without renunciation. If you want to help others, your little 21 self must go. In the words of the Christians--you cannot serve God 22 and Mammon at the same time. Have Vairagya. Your ancestors gave 23 up the world for doing great things. At the present time there are 24 men who give up the world to help their own salvation. Throw away 25 everything, even your own salvation, and go and help others. Ay, 26 you are always talking bold words, but here is practical Vedanta 27 before you. Give up this little life of yours. What matters it if you die 28 of starvation--you and I and thousands like us--so long as this nation 29 lives? The nation is sinking, the curse of unnumbered millions is on 30 our heads--those to whom we have been giving ditch-water to drink 31 when they have been dying of thirst and while the perennial river of 32 water was flowing past, the unnumbered millions whom we have 33 allowed to starve in sight of plenty, the unnumbered millions to 34 whom we have talked of Advaita and whom we have hated with all 35 our strength, the unnumbered millions for whom we have invented 36 the doctrine of Lokachara (usage), to whom we have talked 37 theoretically that we are all the same and all are one with the same 38 Lord, without even an ounce of practice. "Yet, my friends, it must be 39 only in the mind and never in practice!" Wipe off this blot. "Arise 40 and awake." What matters it if this little life goes? Everyone has to 41 die, the saint or the sinner, the rich or the poor. The body never 42 remains for anyone. Arise and awake and be perfectly sincere. Our 43 insincerity in India is awful; what we want is character, that 44 steadiness and character that make a man cling on to a thing like 45 grim death.

46 "Let the sages blame or let them praise, let Lakshmi come 47 today or let her go away, let death come just now or in a hundred 48 years; he indeed is the sage who does not make one false step from 49 the right path." Arise and awake, for the time is passing and all our 50 energies will be frittered away in vain talking. Arise and awake, let 51 minor things, and quarrels over little details and fights over little 52 doctrines be thrown aside, for here is the greatest of all works,

1 here are the sinking millions. When the Mohammedans first came 2 into India, what a great number of Hindus were here; but mark, 3 how today they have dwindled down! Every day they will become 4 less and less till they wholly disappear. Let them disappear, but with 5 them will disappear the marvellous ideas, of which, with all their 6 defects and all their misrepresentations, they still stand as 7 representatives. And with them will disappear this marvellous
8 Advaita, the crest-jewel of all spiritual thought. Therefore, arise, 9 awake, with your hands stretched out to protect the spirituality of 10 the world. And first of all, work it out for your own country. What 11 we want is not so much spirituality as a little of the bringing down 12 of the Advaita into the material world. First bread and then religion.
13 We stuff them too much with religion, when the poor fellows have 14 been starving. No dogmas will satisfy the cravings of hunger. There 15 are two curses here: first our weakness, secondly, our hatred, our 16 dried-up hearts. You may talk doctrines by the millions, you may 17 have sects by the hundreds of millions; ay, but it is nothing until you 18 have the heart to feel. Feel for them as your Veda teaches you, till 19 you find they are parts of your own bodies, till you realise that you 20 and they, the poor and the rich, the saint and the sinner, are all 21 parts of One Infinite Whole, which you call Brahman.

22 Gentlemen, I have tried to place before you a few of the most 23 brilliant points of the Advaita system, and now the time has come 24 when it should be carried into practice, not only in this country but 25 everywhere. Modern science and its sledge-hammer blows are 26 pulverising the porcelain foundations of all dualistic religions 27 everywhere. Not only here are the dualists torturing texts till they 28 will extend no longer--for texts are not India-rubber--it is not only 29 here that they are trying to get into the nooks and corners to 30 protect themselves; it is still more so in Europe and America. And 31 even there something of this idea will have to go from India. It has 32 already got there. It will have to grow and increase and save their 33 civilisations too. For in the West the old order of things is vanishing, 34 giving way to a new order of things, which is the worship of gold, 35 the worship of Mammon. Thus this old crude system of religion was 36 better than the modern system, namely--competition and gold. No 37 nation, however strong, can stand on such foundations, and the 38 history of the world tells us that all that had such foundations are 39 dead and gone. In the first place we have to stop the incoming of 40 such a wave in India. Therefore preach the Advaita to every one, so 41 that religion may withstand the shock of modern science. Not only 42 so, you will have to help others; your thought will help out Europe 43 and America. But above all, let me once more remind you that here 44 is need of practical work, and the first part of that is that you should 45 go to the sinking millions of India, and take them by the hand, 46 remembering the words of the Lord Krishna:

47 {Sanskrit}

48 "Even in this life they have conquered relative existence 49 whose minds are firm-fixed on the sameness of everything, for God 50 is pure and the same to all; therefore, such are said to be living in 51 God."

At Khetri on 20th December 1897, Swami Vivekananda delivered a lecture on Vedantism in the hall of the Maharaja's bungalow in which he lodged with his disciples. The Swami was introduced by the Raja, who was the president of the meeting; and he spoke for more than an hour and a half. The Swami was at his best, and it was a matter of regret that no shorthand writer was present to report this interesting lecture at length. The following is a summary from notes taken down at the time:

Two nations of yore, namely the Greek and the Aryan, placed in different environments and circumstances--the former, surrounded by all that was beautiful, sweet, and tempting in nature, with an invigorating climate, and the latter, surrounded on every side by all that was sublime, and born and nurtured in a climate which did not allow of much physical exercise--developed two peculiar and different ideals of civilisation. The study of the Greeks was the outer infinite, while that of the Aryans was the inner infinite; one studied the macrocosm, and the other the microcosm. Each had its distinct part to play in the civilisation of the world. Not that one was required to borrow from the other, but if they compared notes both would be the gainers. The Aryans were by nature an analytical race. In the sciences of mathematics and grammar wonderful fruits were gained, and by the analysis of mind the full tree was developed. In Pythagoras, Socrates, Plato, and the Egyptian neo-Platonists, we can find traces of Indian thought.

The Swami then traced in detail the influence of Indian thought on Europe and showed how at different periods Spain, Germany, and other European countries were greatly influenced by it. The Indian prince, Dara-Shuko, translated the Upanishads into Persian, and a Latin translation of the same was seen by Schopenhauer, whose philosophy was moulded by these. Next to him, the philosophy of Kant also shows traces of the teachings of the Upanishads. In Europe it is the interest in comparative philology that attracts scholars to the study of Sanskrit, though there are men like Deussen who take interest in philosophy for its own sake. The Swami hoped that in future much more interest would be taken in the study of Sanskrit. He then showed that the word "Hindu" in former times was full of meaning, as referring to the people living beyond the Sindhu or the Indus; it is now meaningless, representing neither the nation nor their religion, for on this side of the Indus, various races professing different religions live at the present day.

The Swami then dwelt at length on the Vedas and stated that they were not spoken by any person, but the ideas were evolving slowly and slowly until they were embodied in book form, and then that book became the authority. He said that various religions were embodied in books: the power of books seemed to be infinite. The Hindus have their Vedas, and will have to hold on to them for

1 thousands of years more, but their ideas about them are to be 2 changed and built anew on a solid foundation of rock. The Vedas, he 3 said, were a huge literature. Ninety-nine per cent of them were 4 missing; they were in the keeping of certain families, with whose 5 extinction the books were lost. But still, those that are left now 6 could not be contained even in a large hall like that. They were 7 written in language archaic and simple; their grammar was very 8 crude, so much so that it was said that some part of the Vedas had 9 no meaning.

10 He then dilated on the two portions of the Vedas--the Karma 11 Kanda and the Jnana Kanda. The Karma Kanda, he said, were the 12 Samhitas and the Brahmanas. The Brahmanas dealt with sacrifices.
13 The Samhitas were songs composed in Chhandas known as 14 Anushtup, Trishtup, Jagati, etc. Generally they praised deities such 15 as Varuna or Indra; and the question arose who were these deities; 16 and if any theories were raised about them, they were smashed up 17 by other theories, and so on it went.

18 The Swami then proceeded to explain different ideas of 19 worship. With the ancient Babylonians, the soul was only a double, 20 having no individuality of its own and not able to break its 21 connection with the body. This double was believed to suffer hunger 22 and thirst, feelings and emotions like those of the old body. Another 23 idea was that if the first body was injured the double would be 24 injured also; when the first was annihilated, the double also 25 perished; so the tendency grew to preserve the body, and thus 26 mummies, tombs, and graves came into existence. The Egyptians, 27 the Babylonians, and the Jews never got any farther than this idea 28 of the double; they did not reach to the idea of the Atman beyond.

29 Prof. Max Muller's opinion was that not the least trace of 30 ancestral worship could be found in the Rig-Veda. There we do not 31 meet with the horrid sight of mummies staring stark and blank at 32 us. There the gods were friendly to man; communion between the 33 worshipper and worshipped was healthy. There was no moroseness, 34 no want of simple joy, no lack of smiles or light in the eyes. The 35 Swami said that dwelling on the Vedas he even seemed to hear the 36 laughter of the gods. The Vedic Rishis might not have had finish in 37 their expression, but they were men of culture and heart, and we 38 are brutes in comparison to them. Swamiji then recited several 39 Mantras in confirmation of what he had just said: "Carry him to the 40 place where the Fathers live, where there is no grief or sorrow" etc.
41 Thus the idea arose that the sooner the dead body was cremated
42 the better. By degrees they came to know that there was a finer 43 body that went to a place where there was all joy and no sorrow. In 44 the Semitic type of religion there was tribulation and fear; it was 45 thought that if a man saw God, he would die. But according to the 46 Rig-Veda, when a man saw God face to face then began his real life.

47 Now the questions came to be asked: What were these gods?
48 Sometimes Indra came and helped man; sometimes Indra drank too
49 much Soma. Now and again, adjectives such as all-powerful, all-50 pervading, were attributed to him; the same was the case with 51 Varuna. In this way it went on, and some of these Mantras depicting 52 the characteristics of these gods were marvellous, and the 1 language was exceedingly grand. The speaker here repeated the 2 famous Nasadiya Sukta which describes the Pralaya state and in 3 which occurs the idea of "Darkness covering darkness", and asked 4 if the persons that described these sublime ideas in such poetic 5 thought were uncivilised and uncultured, then what should we call 6 ourselves. It was not for him, Swamiji said, to criticise or pass any 7 judgment on those Rishis and their gods--Indra or Varuna. All this 8 was like a panorama, unfolding one scene after another, and behind 9 them all as a background stood out {Sanskrit}--"That which exists 10 is One; sages call It variously." The whole thing was most mystical, 11 marvellous, and exquisitely beautiful. It seemed even yet quite 12 unapproachable--the veil was so thin that it would rend, as it were, 13 at the least touch and vanish like a mirage.

14 Continuing, he said that one thing seemed to him quite clear 15 and possible that the Aryans too, like the Greeks, went to outside 16 nature for their solution, that nature tempted them outside, led 17 them step by step to the outward world, beautiful and good. But 18 here in India anything which was not sublime counted for nothing.
19 It never occurred to the Greeks to pry into the secrets after death.
20 But here from the beginning was asked again and again, "What am 21 I? What will become of me after death?" There the Greek thought-- 22 the man died and went to heaven. What was meant by going to 23 heaven? It meant going outside of everything; there was nothing 24 inside, everything was outside; his search was all directed outside, 25 nay, he himself was, as it were, outside himself. And when he went 26 to a place which was very much like this world minus all its 27 sorrows, he thought he had got everything that was desirable and 28 was satisfied; and there all ideas of religion stopped. But this did 29 not satisfy the Hindu mind. In its analysis, these heavens were all 30 included within the material universe. "Whatever comes by 31 combination", the Hindus said, "dies of annihilation". They asked 32 external nature, "Do you know what is soul?" and nature answered, 33 "No". "Is there any God?" Nature answered, "I do not know". Then 34 they turned away from nature. They understood that external 35 nature, however great and grand, was limited in space and time.
36 Then there arose another voice; new sublime thoughts dawned in 37 their minds. That voice said--"Neti, Neti", "Not this, not this". All the 38 different gods were now reduced into one; the suns, moons, and 39 stars--nay, the whole universe--were one, and upon this new ideal 40 the spiritual basis of religion was built.

41 {Sanskrit}

42 --"There the sun doth not shine, neither the moon, nor stars, 43 nor lightning, what to speak of this fire. He shining, everything doth 44 shine. Through Him everything shineth." No more is there that 45 limited, crude, personal idea; no more is there that little idea of God 46 sitting in judgment; no more is that search outside, but henceforth 47 it is directed inside. Thus the Upanishads became the Bible of 48 India. It was a vast literature, these Upanishads, and all the schools 49 holding different opinions in India came to be established on the 50 foundation of the Upanishads.

51 The Swami passed on to the dualistic, qualified monistic, and 52 Advaitic theories, and reconciled them by saying that each one of 1 these was like a step by which one passed before the other was 2 reached; the final evolution to Advaitism was the natural outcome, 3 and the last step was "Tattvamasi". He pointed out where even the 4 great commentators Shankaracharya, Ramanujacharya, and 5 Madhvacharya had committed mistakes. Each one believed in the 6 Upanishads as the sole authority, but thought that they preached 7 one thing, one path only. Thus Shankaracharya committed the 8 mistake in supposing that the whole of the Upanishads taught one 9 thing, which was Advaitism, and nothing else; and wherever a 10 passage bearing distinctly the Dvaita idea occurred, he twisted and 11 tortured the meaning to make it support his own theory. So with 12 Ramanuja and Madhvacharya when pure Advaitic texts occurred. It 13 was perfectly true that the Upanishads had one thing to teach, but 14 that was taught as a going up from one step to another. Swamiji 15 regretted that in modern India the spirit of religion is gone; only the 16 externals remain. The people are neither Hindus nor Vedantists.

17 They are merely don't-touchists; the kitchen is their temple and 18 Handi Bartans (cooking pots) are their Devata (object of worship).
19 This state of things must go. The sooner it is given up the better for 20 our religion. Let the Upanishads shine in their glory, and at the 21 same time let not quarrels exist amongst different sects.

22 As Swamiji was not keeping good health, he felt exhausted at 23 this stage of his speech; so he took a little rest for half an hour, 24 during which time the whole audience waited patiently to hear the 25 rest of the lecture. He came out and spoke again for half an hour, 26 and explained that knowledge was the finding of unity in diversity, 27 and the highest point in every science was reached when it found 28 the one unity underlying all variety. This was as true in physical 29 science as in the spiritual.

2 THE INFLUENCE OF INDIAN SPIRITUAL THOUGHT IN 3 ENGLAND
4

5 The Swami Vivekananda presided over a meeting at which 6 the Sister Nivedita (Miss M.E. Noble) delivered a lecture on "The 7 Influence of Indian Spiritual Thought in England" on 11th March, 8 1898, at the Star Theatre, Calcutta. Swami Vivekananda on rising 9 to introduce Miss Noble spoke as follows:

10
11 LADIES AND GENTLEMEN,

12 When I was travelling through the Eastern parts of Asia, one 13 thing especially struck me--that is the prevalence of Indian spiritual 14 thought in Eastern Asiatic countries. You may imagine the surprise 15 with which I noticed written on the walls of Chinese and Japanese 16 temples some well-known Sanskrit Mantras, and possibly it will 17 please you all the more to know that they were all in old Bengali 18 characters, standing even in the present day as a monument of 19 missionary energy and zeal displayed by our forefathers of Bengal.

1 Apart from these Asiatic countries, the work of India's 2 spiritual thought is so widespread and unmistakable that even in 3 Western countries, going deep below the surface, I found traces of 4 the same influence still present. It has now become a historical fact 5 that the spiritual ideas of the Indian people travelled towards both 6 the East and the West in days gone by. Everybody knows now how 7 much the world owes to India's spirituality, and what a potent factor 8 in the present and past of humanity have been the spiritual powers 9 of India. These are things of the past. I find another most 10 remarkable phenomenon, and that is that the most stupendous 11 powers of civilisation, and progress towards humanity and social 12 progress, have been effected by that wonderful race--I mean the 13 Anglo-Saxon. I may go further and tell you that had it not been for 14 the power of the Anglo-Saxons we should not have met here today 15 to discuss, as we are doing, the influence of our Indian spiritual 16 thought. And coming back to our own country, coming from the 17 West to the East, I see the same Anglo-Saxon powers working here 18 with all their defects, but retaining their peculiarly characteristic 19 good features, and I believe that at last the grand result is 20 achieved. The British idea of expansion and progress is forcing us 21 up, and let us remember that the civilisation of the West has been 22 drawn from the fountain of the Greeks, and that the great idea of 23 Greek civilisation is that of expression. In India we think--but 24 unfortunately sometimes we think so deeply that there is no power 25 left for expression. Gradually, therefore, it came to pass that our 26 force of expression did not manifest itself before the world, and 27 what is the result of that? The result is this--we worked to hide 28 everything we had. It began first with individuals as a faculty of 29 hiding, and it ended by becoming a national habit of hiding--there is 30 such a lack of expression with us that we are now considered a 31 dead nation. Without expression, how can we live? The backbone of 32 Western civilisation is--expansion and expression. This side of the 33 work of the Anglo-Saxon race in India, to which I draw your 34 attention, is calculated to rouse our nation once more to express 35 itself, and it is inciting it to bring out its hidden treasures before the 36 world by using the means of communication provided by the same 37 mighty race. The Anglo-Saxons have created a future for India, and 38 the space through which our ancestral ideas are now ranging is 39 simply phenomenal. Ay, what great facilities had our forefathers 40 when they delivered their message of truth and salvation? Ay, how 41 did the great Buddha preach the noble doctrine of universal 42 brotherhood? There were even then great facilities here, in our 43 beloved India, for the attainment of real happiness, and we could 44 easily send our ideas from one end of the world to the other. Now 45 we have reached even the Anglo-Saxon race. This is the kind of 46 interaction now going on, and we find that our message is heard, 47 and not only heard but is being responded to. Already England has 48 given us some of her great intellects to help us in our mission.
49 Every one has heard and is perhaps familiar with my friend Miss 50 Muller, who is now here on this platform. This lady, born of a very 51 good family and well educated, has given her whole life to us out of 52 love for India, and has made India her home and her family. Every 53 one of you is familiar with the name of that noble and distinguished

1 Englishwoman who has also given her whole life to work for the 2 good of India and India's regeneration--I mean Mrs. Besant. Today, 3 we meet on this platform two ladies from America who have the 4 same mission in their hearts; and I can assure you that they also 5 are willing to devote their lives to do the least good to our poor 6 country. I take this opportunity of reminding you of the name of one 7 of our countrymen--one who has seen England and America, one in 8 whom I have great confidence, and whom I respect and love, and 9 who would have been present here but for an engagement 10 elsewhere--a man working steadily and silently for the good of our 11 country, a man of great spirituality--I mean Mr. Mohini Mohan 12 Chatterji. And now England has sent us another gift in Miss 13 Margaret Noble, from whom we expect much. Without any more 14 words of mine I introduce to you Miss Noble, who will now address 15 you.

16 After Sister Nivedita had finished her interesting lecture, the 17 Swami rose and said:

18 I have only a few words to say. We have an idea that we 19 Indians can do something, and amongst the Indians we Bengalis 20 may laugh at this idea; but I do not. My mission in life is to rouse a 21 struggle in you. Whether you are an Advaitin, whether you are a 22 qualified monist or dualist, it does not matter much. But let me 23 draw your attention to one thing which unfortunately we always 24 forget: that is--"O man, have faith in yourself." That is the way by 25 which we can have faith in God. Whether you are an Advaitist or a 26 dualist, whether you are a believer in the system of Yoga or a 27 believer in Shankaracharya, whether you are a follower of Vyasa or 28 Vishvamitra, it does not matter much. But the thing is that on this 29 point Indian thought differs from that of all the rest of the world.
30 Let us remember for a moment that, whereas in every other 31 religion and in every other country, the power of the soul is entirely 32 ignored--the soul is thought of as almost powerless, weak, and 33 inert--we in India consider the soul to be eternal and hold that it 34 will remain perfect through all eternity. We should always bear in 35 mind the teachings of the Upanishads.

1 Remember your great mission in life. We Indians, and 2 especially those of Bengal, have been invaded by a vast amount of 3 foreign ideas that are eating into the very vitals of our national 4 religion. Why are we so backward nowadays? Why are ninety-nine 5 per cent of us made up of entirely foreign ideas and elements? This 6 has to be thrown out if we want to rise in the scale of nations. If we 7 want to rise, we must also remember that we have many things to 8 learn from the West. We should learn from the West her arts and 9 her sciences. From the West we have to learn the sciences of 10 physical nature, while on the other hand the West has to come to us 11 to learn and assimilate religion and spiritual knowledge. We Hindus 12 must believe that we are the teachers of the world. We have been 13 clamouring here for getting political rights and many other such 14 things. Very well. Rights and privileges and other things can only 15 come through friendship, and friendship can only be expected 16 between two equals. When one of the parties is a beggar, what 17 friendship can there be? It is all very well to speak so, but I say that 18 without mutual co-operation we can never make ourselves strong 19 men. So, I must call upon you to go out to England and America, not 20 as beggars but as teachers of religion. The law of exchange must be 21 applied to the best of our power. If we have to learn from them the 22 ways and methods of making ourselves happy in this life, why, in 23 return, should we not give them the methods and ways that would 24 make them happy for all eternity? Above all, work for the good of 25 humanity. Give up the so-called boast of your narrow orthodox life.
26 Death is waiting for every one, and mark you this--the most 27 marvellous historical fact--that all the nations of the world have to 28 sit down patiently at the feet of India to learn the eternal truths 29 embodied in her literature. India dies not. China dies not. Japan 30 dies not. Therefore, we must always remember that our backbone is 31 spirituality, and to do that we must have a guide who will show the 32 path to us, that path about which I am talking just now. If any of you 33 do not believe it, if there be a Hindu boy amongst us who is not 34 ready to believe that his religion is pure spirituality, I do not call 35 him a Hindu. I remember in one of the villages of Kashmir, while 36 talking to an old Mohammedan lady, I asked her in a mild voice, 37 "What religion is yours?" She replied in her own language, "Praise 38 the Lord! By the mercy of God, I am a Mussalman." And then I 39 asked a Hindu, "What is your religion?" He plainly replied, "I am a 40 Hindu." I remember that grand word of the Katha Upanishad-- 41 Shraddha or marvellous faith. An instance of Shraddha can be 42 found in the life of Nachiketa. To preach the doctrine of Shraddha 43 or genuine faith is the mission of my life. Let me repeat to you that 44 this faith is one of the potent factors of humanity and of all 45 religions. First, have faith in yourselves. Know that though one may 46 be a little bubble and another may be a mountain-high wave, yet 47 behind both the bubble and the wave there is the infinite ocean.
48 Therefore there is hope for every one. There is salvation for every 49 one. Every one must sooner or later get rid of the bonds of Maya.
50 This is the first thing to do. Infinite hope begets infinite aspiration.
51 If that faith comes to us, it will bring back our national life as it was 52 in the days of Vyasa and Arjuna--the days when all our sublime
53 doctrines of humanity were preached. Today we are far behindhand

1 in spiritual insight and spiritual thoughts. India had plenty of 2 spirituality, so much so that her spiritual greatness made India the 3 greatest nation of the then existing races of the world; and if 4 traditions and hopes are to be believed, those days will come back 5 once more to us, and that depends upon you. You, young men of 6 Bengal, do not look up to the rich and great men who have money.
7 The poor did all the great and gigantic work of the world. You, poor 8 men of Bengal, come up, you can do everything, and you must do 9 everything. Many will follow your example, poor though you are. Be 10 steady, and, above all, be pure and sincere to the backbone. Have 11 faith in your destiny. You, young men of Bengal, are to work out the 12 salvation of India. Mark that, whether you believe it or not, do not 13 think that it will be done today or tomorrow. I believe in it as I 14 believe in my own body and my own soul. Therefore my heart goes 15 to you--young men of Bengal. It depends upon you who have no 16 money; because you are poor, therefore you will work. Because you 17 have nothing, therefore you will be sincere. Because you are 18 sincere, you will be ready to renounce all. That is what I am just 19 now telling you. Once more I repeat this to you. This is your mission 20 in life, this is my mission in life. I do not care what philosophy you 21 take up; only I am ready to prove here that throughout the whole of 22 India, there runs a mutual and cordial string of eternal faith in the 23 perfection of humanity, and I believe in it myself. And let that faith 24 be spread over the whole land.

SANNYASA: ITS IDEAL AND PRACTICE

A parting Address was given to Swamiji by the junior Sannyasins of the Math (Belur), on the eve of his leaving for the West for the second time. The following is the substance of Swamiji's reply as entered in the Math Diary on 19th June 1899:

This is not the time for a long lecture. But I shall speak to you in brief about a few things which I should like you to carry into practice. First, we have to understand the ideal, and then the methods by which we can make it practical. Those of you who are Sannyasins must try to do good to others, for Sannyasa means that. There is no time to deliver a long discourse on "Renunciation", but I shall very briefly characterise it as "the love of death". Worldly people love life. The Sannyasin is to love death. Are we to commit suicide then? Far from it. For suicides are not lovers of death, as it is often seen that when a man trying to commit suicide fails, he never attempts it for a second time. What is the love of death then? We must die, that is certain; let us die then for a good cause. Let all our actions--eating, drinking, and everything that we do--tend towards the sacrifice of our self. You nourish the body by eating. What good is there in doing that if you do not hold it as a sacrifice to the well-being of others? You nourish your minds by reading books. There is no good in doing that unless you hold it also as a sacrifice to the whole world. For the whole world is one; you are rated a very insignificant part of it, and therefore it is right for you that you should serve your millions of brothers rather than aggrandise this little self.

"With hands and feet everywhere, with eyes, heads, and mouths everywhere, with ears everywhere in the universe, That exists pervading all." (Gita, XIII, 13.)

Thus you must die a gradual death. In such a death is heaven, all good is stored therein--and in its opposite is all that is diabolical and evil.

Then as to the methods of carrying the ideals into practical life. First, we have to understand that we must not have any impossible ideal. An ideal which is too high makes a nation weak and degraded. This happened after the Buddhistic and the Jain reforms. On the other hand, too much practicality is also wrong. If you have not even a little imagination, if you have no ideal to guide you, you are simply a brute. So we must not lower our ideal, neither are we to lose sight of practicality. We must avoid the two extremes. In our country, the old idea is to sit in a cave and meditate and die. To go ahead of others in salvation is wrong. One must learn sooner or later than one cannot get salvation if one does not try to seek the salvation of his brothers. You must try to combine in your life immense idealism with immense practicality. You must be prepared to go into deep meditation now, and the next moment you must be ready to go and cultivate these fields (Swamiji said, pointing to the meadows of the Math). You must be prepared to explain the difficult

1 intricacies of the Shastras now, and the next moment to go and sell 2 the produce of the fields in the market. You must be prepared for all 3 menial services, not only here, but elsewhere also.

4 The next thing to remember is that the aim of this institution
5 is to make men. You must not merely learn what the Rishis taught.
6 Those Rishis are gone, and their opinions are also gone with them.
7 You must be Rishis yourselves. You are also men as much as the 8 greatest men that were ever born--even our Incarnations. What can 9 mere book-learning do? What can meditation do even? What can 10 the Mantras and Tantras do? You must stand on your own feet. You 11 must have this new method--the method of man-making. The true 12 man is he who is strong as strength itself and yet possesses a 13 woman's heart. You must feel for the millions of beings around you, 14 and yet you must be strong and inflexible and you must also possess 15 obedience; though it may seem a little paradoxical--you must 16 possess these apparently conflicting virtues. If your superior orders 17 you to throw yourself into a river and catch a crocodile, you must 18 first obey and then reason with him. Even if the order be wrong, 19 first obey and then contradict it. The bane of sects, especially in 20 Bengal, is that if any one happens to have a different opinion, he 21 immediately starts a new sect, he has no patience to wait. So you 22 must have a deep regard for your Sangha. There is no place for 23 disobedience here. Crush it out without mercy. No disobedient 24 members here, you must turn them out. There must not be any 25 traitors in the camp. You must be free as the air, and as obedient as 26 this plant and the dog.

2 WHAT HAVE I LEARNT?

3 (Delivered at Dacca, 30th March, 1901)
4

5 At Dacca Swamiji delivered two lectures in English. The first 6 was on "What have I learnt?" and the second one was "The Religion 7 we are born in". The following is translated from a report in Bengali 8 by a disciple, and it contains the substance of the first lecture:

9 First of all, I must express my pleasure at the opportunity 10 afforded me of coming to Eastern Bengal to acquire an intimate 11 knowledge of this part of the country, which I hitherto lacked in 12 spite of my wanderings through many civilised countries of the 13 West, as well as my gratification at the sight of the majestic rivers, 14 wide fertile plains, and picturesque villages in this, my own country 15 of Bengal, which I had not the good fortune of seeing for myself 16 before. I did not know that there was everywhere in my country of 17 Bengal--on land and water--so much beauty and charm. But this 18 much has been my gain that after seeing the various countries of 19 the world I can now much more appreciate the beauties of my own 20 land.

21 In the same way also, in search of religion, I had travelled 22 among various sects--sects which had taken up the ideals of foreign 23 nations as their own, and I had begged at the door of others, not 24 knowing then that in the religion of my country, in our national 25 religion, there was so much beauty and grandeur. It is now many 26 years since I found Hinduism to be the most perfectly satisfying 27 religion in the world. Hence I feel sad at heart when I see existing 28 among my own countrymen, professing a peerless faith, such a 29 widespread indifference to our religion--though I am very well 30 aware of the unfavourable materialistic conditions in which they 31 pass their lives owing to the diffusion of European modes of 32 thoughts in this, our great motherland.

1 There are among us at the present day certain reformers who 2 want to reform our religion or rather turn it topsy-turvy with a view 3 to the regeneration of the Hindu nation. There are, no doubt, some 4 thoughtful people among them, but there are also many who follow 5 others blindly and act most foolishly, not knowing what they are 6 about. This class of reformers is very enthusiastic in introducing 7 foreign ideas into our religion. They have taken hold of the word 8 "idolatry", and aver that Hinduism is not true, because it is 9 idolatrous. They never seek to find out what this so-called "idolatry" 10 is, whether it is good or bad; only taking their cue from others, they 11 are bold enough to shout down Hinduism as untrue. There is 12 another class of men among us who is intent upon giving some 13 slippery scientific explanations for any and every Hindu custom, 14 rite, etc., and who are always talking of electricity, magnetism, air 15 vibration, and all that sort of thing. Who knows but they will 16 perhaps some day define God Himself as nothing but a mass of 17 electric vibrations! However, Mother bless them all! She it is who is 18 having Her work done in various ways through multifarious natures 19 and tendencies.

20 In contradistinction to these, there is that ancient class who 21 say, "I do not know, I do not care to know or understand all these 22 your hair-splitting ratiocinations; I want God, I want the Atman, I 23 want to go to that Beyond, where there is no universe, where there 24 is no pleasure or pain, where dwells the Bliss Supreme"; who say, "I 25 believe in salvation by bathing in the holy Ganga with faith", who 26 say, "whomsoever you may worship with singleness of faith and 27 devotion as the one God of the universe, in whatsoever form as 28 Shiva, Rama, Vishnu, etc., you will get Moksha"; to that sturdy 29 ancient class I am proud to belong.

30 Then there is a sect who advises us to follow God and the 31 world together. They are not sincere, they do not express what they 32 feel in their hearts. What is the teaching of the Great 33 Ones?--"Where there is Rama, there is no Kama; where there is 34 Kama, there Rama is not. Night and day can never exist together." 35 The voice of the ancient sages proclaims to us, "If you desire to 36 attain God, you will have to renounce Kama-Kanchana (lust and 37 possession). The Samsara is unreal, hollow, void of substance.
38 Unless you give it up, you can never reach God, try however you 39 may. If you cannot do that, own that you are weak, but by no means 40 lower the Ideal. Do not cover the corrupting corpse with leaves of 41 gold!" So according to them, if you want to gain spirituality, to 42 attain God, the first thing that you have to do is to give up this 43 playing "hide-and-seek with your ideas", this dishonesty, this "theft 44 within the chamber of thought".

45 What have I learnt? What have I learnt from this ancient sect?
46 I have learnt:

47 {Sanskrit}

48 --"Verily, these three are rare to obtain and come only through 49 the grace of God--human birth, desire to obtain Moksha, and the 50 company of the great-souled ones." The first thing needed is 51 Manushyatva, human birth, because it only is favourable to the

1 attainment of Mukti. The next is Mumukshutva. Though our means 2 of realisation vary according to the difference in sects and 3 individuals--though different individuals can lay claim to their 4 special rights and means to gain knowledge, which vary according 5 to their different stations in life--yet it can be said in general 6 without fear of contradiction that without this Mumukshuta, 7 realisation of God is impossible. What is Mumukshutva? It is the 8 strong desire for Moksha--earnest yearning to get out of the sphere 9 of pain and pleasure--utter disgust for the world. When that intense 10 burning desire to see God comes, then you should know that you 11 are entitled to the realisation of the Supreme.

12 Then another thing is necessary, and that is the coming in 13 direct contact with the Mahapurushas, and thus moulding our lives 14 in accordance with those of the great-souled ones who have 15 reached the Goal. Even disgust for the world and a burning desire 16 for God are not sufficient. Initiation by the Guru is necessary. Why?
17 Because it is the bringing of yourself into connection with that 18 great source of power which has been handed down through 19 generations from one Guru to another, in uninterrupted succession.
20 The devotee must seek and accept the Guru or spiritual preceptor 21 as his counsellor, philosopher, friend, and guide. In short, the Guru 22 is the sine qua non of progress in the path of spirituality. Whom 23 then shall I accept as my Guru? {Sanskrit}--"He who is versed in 24 the Vedas, without taint, unhurt by desire, he who is the best of the 25 knowers of Brahman." Shrotriya--he who is not only learned in the 26 Shastras, but who knows their subtle secrets, who has realised 27 their true import in his life. "Reading merely the various scriptures, 28 they have become only parrots, and not Pandits. He indeed has 29 become a Pandit who has gained Prema (Divine Love) by reading 30 even one word of the Shastras." Mere book-learned Pandits are of 31 no avail. Nowadays, everyone wants to be a Guru; even a poor 32 beggar wants to make a gift of a lakh of rupees! Then the Guru
33 must be without a touch of taint; and he must be Akamahata-- 34 unhurt by any desire--he should have no other motive except that of 35 purely doing good to others, he should be an ocean of mercy-- 36 without-reason and not impart religious teaching with a view to 37 gaining name or fame, or anything pertaining to selfish interest.
38 And he must be the intense knower of Brahman, that is, one who 39 has realised Brahman even as tangibly as an Amalaka-fruit in the 40 palm of the hand. Such is the Guru, says the Shruti. When spiritual 41 union is established with such a Guru, then comes realisation of 42 God--then god-vision becomes easy of attainment.

43 After initiation there should be in the aspirant after Truth, 44 Abhyasa or earnest and repeated attempt at practical application of 45 the Truth by prescribed means of constant meditation upon the 46 Chosen Ideal. Even if you have a burning thirst for God, or have 47 gained the Guru, unless you have along with it Abhyasa, unless you 48 practise what you have been taught, you cannot get realisation.
49 When all these are firmly established in you, then you will reach the 50 Goal.

51 Therefore, I say unto you, as Hindus, as descendants of the 52 glorious Aryans, do not forget the great ideal of our religion, that

1 great ideal of the Hindus, which is, to go beyond this Samsara--not 2 only to renounce the world, but to give up heaven too; ay, not only 3 to give up evil, but to give up good too; and thus to go beyond all, 4 beyond this phenomenal existence, and ultimately realise the Sat-
5 Chit-Ananda Brahman--the Absolute Existence-Knowledge-Bliss, 6 which is Brahman.

THE RELIGION WE ARE BORN IN

At an open-air meeting convened at Dacca, on the 31st March, 1901, the Swamiji spoke in English for two hours on the above subject before a vast audience. The following is a translation of the lecture from a Bengali report of a disciple:

In the remote past, our country made gigantic advances in spiritual ideas. Let us, today, bring before our mind's eye that ancient history. But the one great danger in meditating over long-past greatness is that we cease to exert ourselves for new things, and content ourselves with vegetating upon that by-gone ancestral glory and priding ourselves upon it. We should guard against that. In ancient times there were, no doubt, many Rishis and Maharshis who came face to face with Truth. But if this recalling of our ancient greatness is to be of real benefit, we too must become Rishis like them. Ay, not only that, but it is my firm conviction that we shall be even greater Rishis than any that our history presents to us. In the past, signal were our attainments--I glory in them, and I feel proud in thinking of them. I am not even in despair at seeing the present degradation, and I am full of hope in picturing to my mind what is to come in the future. Why? Because I know the seed undergoes a complete transformation, ay, the seed as seed is seemingly destroyed before it develops into a tree. In the same way, in the midst of our present degradation lies, only dormant for a time, the potentiality of the future greatness of our religion, ready to spring up again, perhaps more mighty and glorious than ever before.

Now let us consider what are the common grounds of agreement in the religion we are born in. At first sight we undeniably find various differences among our sects. Some are Advaitists, some are Vishishtadvaitists, and others are Dvaitists. Some believe in Incarnations of God, some in image-worship, while others are upholders of the doctrine of the Formless. Then as to customs also, various differences are known to exist. The Jats are not outcasted even if they marry among the Mohammedans and Christians. They can enter into any Hindu temple without hindrance. In many villages in the Punjab, one who does not eat swine will hardly be considered a Hindu. In Nepal, a Brahmin can marry in the four Varnas; while in Bengal, a Brahmin cannot marry even among the subdivisions of his own caste. So on and so forth. But in the midst of all these differences we note one point of unity among all Hindus, and it is this, that no Hindu eats beef. In the same way, there is a great common ground of unity underlying the various forms and sects of our religion.

First, in discussing the scriptures, one fact stands out prominently--that only those religions which had one or many scriptures of their own as their basis advanced by leaps and bounds and survive to the present day notwithstanding all the persecution and repression hurled against them. The Greek religion, with all its beauty, died out in the absence of any scripture to support it; but

1 the religion of the Jews stands undiminished in its power, being 2 based upon the authority of the Old Testament. The same is the 3 case with the Hindu religion, with its scripture, the Vedas, the 4 oldest in the world. The Vedas are divided into the Karma Kanda
5 and the Jnana Kanda. Whether for good or for evil, the Karma 6 Kanda has fallen into disuse in India, though there are some 7 Brahmins in the Deccan who still perform Yajnas now and then with 8 the sacrifice of goats; and also we find here and there, traces of the 9 Vedic Kriya Kanda in the Mantras used in connection with our 10 marriage and Shraddha ceremonies, etc. But there is no chance of 11 its being rehabilitated on its original footing.

12 Kumarila Bhatta once tried to do so, but he was not 13 successful in his attempt.

14 The Jnana Kanda of the Vedas comprises the Upanishads and 15 is known by the name of Vedanta, the pinnacle of the Shrutis, as it 16 is called. Wherever you find the Acharyas quoting a passage from 17 the Shrutis, it is invariably from the Upanishads. The Vedanta is 18 now the religion of the Hindus. If any sect in India wants to have its 19 ideas established with a firm hold on the people it must base them 20 on the authority of the Vedanta. They all have to do it, whether they 21 are Dvaitists or Advaitists. Even the Vaishnavas have to go to 22 Gopalatapini Upanishad to prove the truth of their own theories. If 23 a new sect does not find anything in the Shrutis in confirmation of 24 its ideas, it will go even to the length of manufacturing a new 25 Upanishad, and making it pass current as one of the old original 26 productions. There have been many such in the past.

27 Now as to the Vedas, the Hindus believe that they are not 28 mere books composed by men in some remote age. They hold them 29 to be an accumulated mass of endless divine wisdom, which is 30 sometimes manifested and at other times remains unmanifested.
31 Commentator Sayanacharya says somewhere in his works
32 {Sanskrit}--"Who created the whole universe out of the knowledge 33 of the Vedas". No one has ever seen the composer of the Vedas, and 34 it is impossible to imagine one. The Rishis were only the 35 discoverers of the Mantras or Eternal Laws; they merely came face 36 to face with the Vedas, the infinite mine of knowledge, which has 37 been there from time without beginning.

38 Who are these Rishis? Vatsyayana says, "He who has attained 39 through proper means the direct realisation of Dharma, he alone 40 can be a Rishi even if he is a Mlechchha by birth." Thus it is that in 41 ancient times, Vasishtha, born of an illegitimate union, Vyasa, the 42 son of a fisherwoman, Narada, the son of a maidservant with 43 uncertain parentage, and many others of like nature attained to 44 Rishihood. Truly speaking, it comes to this then, that no distinction 45 should be made with one who has realised the Truth. If the persons 46 just named all became Rishis, then, O ye Kulin Brahmins of the 47 present day, how much greater Rishis you can become! Strive after 48 that Rishihood, stop not till you have attained the goal, and the 49 whole world will of itself bow at your feet! Be a Rishi--that is the 50 secret of power.

1 This Veda is our only authority, and everyone has the right to 2 it.

3 {Sanskrit}

4 --Thus says the Shukla Yajur Veda (XXVI.2). Can you show any 5 authority from this Veda of ours that everyone has not the right to 6 it? The Puranas, no doubt, say that a certain caste has the right to 7 such and such a recension of the Vedas, or a certain caste has no 8 right to study them, or that this portion of the Vedas is for the Satya 9 Yuga and that portion is for the Kali Yuga. But, mark you, the Veda 10 does not say so; it is only your Puranas that do so. But can the 11 servant dictate to the master? The Smritis, Puranas, Tantras--all 12 these are acceptable only so far as they agree with the Vedas; and 13 wherever they are contradictory, they are to be rejected as 14 unreliable. But nowadays we have put the Puranas on even a higher 15 pedestal than the Vedas! The study of the Vedas has almost 16 disappeared from Bengal. How I wish that day will soon come when 17 in every home the Veda will be worshipped together with 18 Shalagrama, the household Deity, when the young, the old, and the 19 women will inaugurate the worship of the Veda!

20 I have no faith in the theories advanced by Western savants 21 with regard to the Vedas. They are today fixing the antiquity of the 22 Vedas at a certain period, and again tomorrow upsetting it and 23 bringing it one thousand years forward, and so on. However, about 24 the Puranas, I have told you that they are authoritative only in so 25 far as they agree with the Vedas, otherwise not. In the Puranas we 26 find many things which do not agree with the Vedas. As for 27 instance, it is written in the Puranas that some one lived ten 28 thousand years, another twenty thousand years, but in the Vedas 29 we find: {Sanskrit}--"Man lives indeed a hundred years." Which are 30 we to accept in this case? Certainly the Vedas. Notwithstanding 31 statements like these, I do not depreciate the Puranas. They contain 32 many beautiful and illuminating teachings and words of wisdom on 33 Yoga, Bhakti, Jnana, and Karma; those, of course, we should accept.
34 Then there are the Tantras. The real meaning of the word Tantra is 35 Shastra, as for example, Kapila Tantra. But the word Tantra is 36 generally used in a limited sense. Under the sway of kings who took 37 up Buddhism and preached broadcast the doctrine of Ahimsa, the 38 performances of the Vedic Yaga-Yajnas became a thing of the past, 39 and no one could kill any animal in sacrifice for fear of the king. But 40 subsequently amongst the Buddhists themselves--who were 41 converts from Hinduism--the best parts of these Yaga-Yajnas were 42 taken up, and practised in secret. From these sprang up the 43 Tantras. Barring some of the abominable things in the Tantras, such 44 as the Vamachara etc., the Tantras are not so bad as people are 45 inclined to think. There are many high and sublime Vedantic 46 thoughts in them. In fact, the Brahmana portions of the Vedas were 47 modified a little and incorporated into the body of the Tantras. All 48 the forms of our worship and the ceremonials of the present day, 49 comprising the Karma Kanda, are observed in accordance with the 50 Tantras.

51 Now let us discuss the principles of our religion a little.
52 Notwithstanding the differences and controversies existing among 1 our various sects, there are in them, too, several grounds of unity.

2 First, almost all of them admit the existence of three things--three 3 entities--Ishvara, Atman, and the Jagat. Ishvara is He who is 4 eternally creating, preserving and destroying the whole universe.
5 Excepting the Sankhyas, all the others believe in this. Then the 6 doctrine of the Atman and the reincarnation of the soul; it maintains 7 that innumerable individual souls, having taken body after body 8 again and again, go round and round in the wheel of birth and 9 death according to their respective Karmas; this is Samsaravada, or 10 as it is commonly called the doctrine of rebirth. Then there is the 11 Jagat or universe without beginning and without end. Though some 12 hold these three as different phases of one only, and some others as 13 three distinctly different entities, and others again in various other 14 ways, yet they are all unanimous in believing in these three.

15 Here I should ask you to remember that Hindus, from time 16 immemorial, knew the Atman as separate from Manas, mind. But 17 the Occidentals could never soar beyond the mind. The West knows 18 the universe to be full of happiness, and as such, it is to them a 19 place where they can enjoy the most; but the East is born with the 20 conviction that this Samsara, this ever-changing existence, is full of 21 misery, and as such, it is nothing, nothing but unreal, not worth 22 bartering the soul for its ephemeral joys and possessions. For this 23 very reason, the West is ever especially adroit in organised action, 24 and so also the East is ever bold in search of the mysteries of the 25 internal world.

26 Let us, however, turn now to one or two other aspects of 27 Hinduism. There is the doctrine of the Incarnations of God. In the 28 Vedas we find mention of Matsya Avatara, the Fish Incarnation only.
29 Whether all believe in this doctrine or not is not the point; the real 30 meaning, however, of this Avataravada is the worship of Man--to see 31 God in man is the real God-vision. The Hindu does not go through 32 nature to nature's God--he goes to the God of man through Man.

33 Then there is image-worship. Except the five Devatas who are 34 to be worshipped in every auspicious Karma as enjoined in our 35 Shastras, all the other Devatas are merely the names of certain 36 states held by them. But again, these five Devatas are nothing but 37 the different names of the one God only. This external worship of 38 images has, however, been described in all our Shastras as the 39 lowest of all the low forms of worship. But that does not mean that 40 it is a wrong thing to do. Despite the many iniquities that have 41 found entrance into the practices of image-worship as it is in vogue 42 now, I do not condemn it. Ay, where would I have been if I had not 43 been blessed with the dust of the holy feet of that orthodox, image-44 worshipping Brahmin!

45 Those reformers who preach against image-worship, or what 46 they denounce as idolatry--to them I say, "Brothers, if you are fit to 47 worship God-without-form discarding all external help, do so, but 48 why do you condemn others who cannot do the same? A beautiful, 49 large edifice, the glorious relic of a hoary antiquity has, out of 50 neglect or disuse, fallen into a dilapidated condition; accumulations 51 of dirt and dust may be lying everywhere within it, maybe, some 52 portions are tumbling down to the ground. What will you do to it?

1 Will you take in hand the necessary cleansing and repairs and thus 2 restore the old, or will you pull the whole edifice down to the 3 ground and seek to build another in its place, after a sordid modern 4 plan whose permanence has yet to be established? We have to 5 reform it, which truly means to make ready or perfect by necessary 6 cleansing and repairs, not by demolishing the whole thing. There 7 the function of reform ends. When the work of renovating the old is 8 finished, what further necessity does it serve? Do that if you can, if 9 not, hands off!" The band of reformers in our country wants, on the 10 contrary, to build up a separate sect of their own. They have, 11 however, done good work; may the blessings of God be showered 12 on their heads! But why should you, Hindus, want to separate 13 yourselves from the great common fold? Why should you feel 14 ashamed to take the name of Hindu, which is your greatest and 15 most glorious possession? This national ship of ours, ye children of 16 the Immortals, my countrymen, has been plying for ages, carrying 17 civilisation and enriching the whole world with its inestimable 18 treasures. For scores of shining centuries this national ship of ours 19 has been ferrying across the ocean of life, and has taken millions of 20 souls to the other shore, beyond all misery. But today it may have 21 sprung a leak and got damaged, through your own fault or 22 whatever cause it matters not. What would you, who have placed 23 yourselves in it, do now? Would you go about cursing it and 24 quarrelling among yourselves! Would you not all unite together and 25 put your best efforts to stop the holes? Let us all gladly give our 26 hearts' blood to do this; and if we fail in the attempt, let us all sink 27 and die together, with blessings and not curses on our lips.

28 And to the Brahmins I say, "Vain is your pride of birth and 29 ancestry. Shake it off. Brahminhood, according to your Shastras, 30 you have no more now, because you have for so long lived under 31 Mlechchha kings. If you at all believe in the words of your own 32 ancestors, then go this very moment and make expiation by 33 entering into the slow fire kindled by Tusha (husks), like that old 34 Kumarila Bhatta, who with the purpose of ousting the Buddhists 35 first became a disciple of the Buddhists and then defeating them in 36 argument became the cause of death to many, and subsequently 37 entered the Tushanala to expiate his sins. If you are not bold 38 enough to do that, then admit your weakness and stretch forth a 39 helping hand, and open the gates of knowledge to one and all, and 40 give the downtrodden masses once more their just and legitimate 41 rights and privileges."

REPORTS IN AMERICAN NEWSPAPERS

INDIA: HER RELIGION AND CUSTOMS

(Salem Evening News, August 29, 1893)

In spite of the warm weather of yesterday afternoon, a goodly number of members of the Thought and Work club, with guests, gathered in Wesley chapel to meet Swami Vive Kanonda, a Hindoo monk, now travelling in this country, and to listen to an informal address from that gentleman, principally upon the religion of the Hindoos as taught by their Vedar or sacred books. He also spoke of caste, as simply a social division and in no way dependent upon their religion.

The poverty of the majority of the masses was strongly dwelt upon. India with an area much smaller than the United States, contains twenty three hundred millions [sic] of people, and of these, three hundred millions [sic] earn wages, averaging less than fifty cents per month. In some instances the people in whole districts of the country subsist for months and even years, wholly upon flowers, produced by a certain tree which when boiled are edible.

In other districts the men eat rice only, the women and children must satisfy their hunger with the water in which the rice is cooked. A failure of the rice crop means famine. Half the people live upon one meal a day, the other half know not whence the next meal will come. According to Swami Vive Kyonda, the need of the people of India is not more religion, or a better one, but as he expresses it, "practicality", and it is with the hope of interesting the American people in this great need of the suffering, starving millions that he has come to this country.

He spoke at some length of the condition of his people and their religion. In course of his speech he was frequently and closely questioned by Dr. F. A. Gardner and Rev. S. F. Nobbs of the Central Baptist Church. He said the missionaries had fine theories there and started in with good ideas, but had done nothing for the industrial condition of the people. He said Americans, instead of sending out missionaries to train them in religion, would better send some one out to give them industrial education.

Asked whether it was not a fact that Christians assisted the people of India in times of distress, and whether they did not assist in a practical way by training schools, the speaker replied that they did it sometimes, but really it was not to their credit for the law did not allow them to attempt to influence people at such times.

He explained the bad condition of woman in India on the ground that Hindoo men had such respect for woman that it was thought best not to allow her out. The Hindoo women were held in such high esteem that they were kept in seclusion. He explained the old custom of women being burned on the death of their

1 husbands, on the ground that they loved them so that they could not
2 live without the husband. They were one in marriage and must be 3 one in death.

4 He was asked about the worship of idols and the throwing
5 themselves in front of the juggernaut car, and said one must not 6 blame the Hindoo people for the car business, for it was the act of 7 fanatics and mostly of lepers.

8 The speaker explained his mission in his country to be to 9 organise monks for industrial purposes, that they might give the 10 people the benefit of this industrial education and thus elevate 11 them and improve their condition.

12 This afternoon Vive Kanonda will speak on the children of 13 India to any children or young people who may be pleased to listen 14 to him at 166 North street, Mrs. Woods kindly offering her garden 15 for that purpose. In person he is a fine looking man, dark but 16 comely, dressed in a long robe of a yellowish red colour confined at 17 the waist with a cord, and wearing on his head a yellow turban.
18 Being a monk he has no caste, and may eat and drink with anyone.

21
22 Rajah Swami Vivi Rananda of India was the guest of the 23 Thought and Work Club of Salem yesterday afternoon in the Wesley 24 church.

25 A large number of ladies and gentlemen were present and 26 shook hands, American fashion, with the distinguished monk. He 27 wore an orange colored gown, with red sash, yellow turban, with 28 the end hanging down on one side, which he used for a 29 handkerchief, and congress shoes.

30 He spoke at some length of the condition of his people and 31 their religion. In course of his speech he was frequently and closely 32 questioned by Dr. F. A. Gardner and Rev. S. F. Nobbs of the Central 33 Baptist church. He said the missionaries had fine theories there and 34 started in with good ideas, but had done nothing for the industrial 35 condition of the people. He said Americans, instead of sending out 36 missionaries to train them in religion, would better send someone 37 out to give them industrial education.

38 Speaking at some length of the relations of men and women, 39 he said the husbands of India never lied and never persecuted, and 40 named several other sins they never committed.

41 Asked whether it was not a fact that Christians assisted the 42 people of India in times of distress, and whether they did not assist 43 in a practical way by training schools, the speaker replied that they 44 did it sometimes, but really it was not to their credit, for the law did 45 not allow them to attempt to influence people at such times.

46 He explained the bad condition of women in India on the 47 ground that Hindoo men had such respect for woman that it was 48 thought best not to allow her out. The Hindoo women were held in

1 such high esteem that they were kept in seclusion. He explained 2 the old custom of women being burned on the death of their 3 husbands, on the ground that they loved them so that they could not 4 live without the husband. They were one in marriage and must be 5 one in death.

6 He was asked about the worship of idols and the throwing
7 themselves in front of the juggernaut car, and said one must not 8 blame the Hindoo people for the car business, for it was the act of 9 fanatics and mostly of lepers.

10 As for the worship of idols he said he had asked Christians 11 what they thought of when they prayed, and some said they thought 12 of the church, others of G-O-D. Now his people thought of the 13 images. For the poor people idols were necessary. He said that in 14 ancient times, when their religion first began, women were 15 distinguished for spiritual genius and great strength of mind. In 16 spite of this, as he seemed to acknowledge, the women of the 17 present day had degenerated. They thought of nothing but eating 18 and drinking, gossip and scandal.

19 The speaker explained his mission in his country to be to 20 organise monks for industrial purposes, that they might give the 21 people the benefit of this industrial education and thus to elevate 22 them and improve their condition.

25
26 The learned Monk from India who is spending a few days in 27 this city, will speak in the East Church Sunday evening at 7-30.
28 Swami (Rev.) Viva Kananda preached in the Episcopal church at 29 Annisquam last Sunday evening, by invitation of the pastor and 30 Professor Wright of Harvard, who has shown him great kindness.

31 On Monday night he leaves for Saratoga, where he will 32 address the Social Science association. Later on he will speak 33 before the Congress in Chicago. Like all men who are educated in 34 the higher Universities of India, Viva Kananda speaks English easily 35 and correctly. His simple talk to the children on Tuesday last 36 concerning the games, schools, customs and manners of children in 37 India was valuable and most interesting. His kind heart was 38 touched by the statement of a little miss that her teacher had 39 "licked her so hard that she almost broke her finger." . . . As Viva 40 Kananda, like all monks, must travel over his land preaching the 41 religion of truth, chastity and the brotherhood of man, no great 42 good could pass unnoticed, or terrible wrong escape his eyes. He is 43 extremely generous to all persons of other faiths, and has only kind 44 words for those who differ from him.

47
48 Rajah Swami Vivi Rananda of India spoke at the East church

1 Sunday evening, on the religion of India and the poor of his native 2 land. A good audience assembled, but it was not so large as the 3 importance of the subject or the interesting speaker deserved. The 4 monk was dressed in his native costume, and spoke about forty 5 minutes. The great need of India today, which is not the India of 6 fifty years ago, is, he said, missionaries to educate the people
7 industrially and socially and not religiously. The Hindoos have all 8 the religion they want, and the Hindoo religion is the most ancient 9 in the world. The monk is a very pleasant speaker and held the 10 close attention of his audience.

13
14 . . . The platform was next occupied by Vive Kananda, a Monk 15 of Madras, Hindoostan, who preached throughout India. He is 16 interested in social science and is an intelligent and interesting 17 speaker. He spoke on Mohammedan rule in India.

18 The program for today embraces some very interesting 19 topics, especially the paper on "Bimetallism", by Col. Jacob Greene 20 of Hartford. Vive Kananda will again speak, this time on the Use of 21 Silver in India.

22 23 HINDUS AT THE FAIR

24 (Boston Evening Transcript, September 30, 1893)

25
26 Chicago, Sept. 23:

27 There is a room at the left of the entrance to the Art Palace 28 marked "No. 1--keep out." To this the speakers at the Congress of 29 Religions all repair sooner or later, either to talk with one another 30 or with President Bonney, whose private office is in one corner of 31 the apartment. The folding doors are jealously guarded from the 32 general public, usually standing far enough apart to allow peeping 33 in. Only delegates are supposed to penetrate the sacred precincts, 34 but it is not impossible to obtain an "open sesame", and thus to 35 enjoy a brief opportunity of closer relations with the distinguished 36 guests than the platform in the Hall of Columbus affords.

37 The most striking figure one meets in this anteroom is Swami 38 Vivekananda, the Brahmin monk. He is a large, well-built man, with 39 the superb carriage of the Hindustanis, his face clean shaven, 40 squarely moulded regular features, white teeth, and with well-41 chiselled lips that are usually parted in a benevolent smile while he 42 is conversing. His finely poised head is crowned with either a lemon 43 colored or a red turban, and his cassock (not the technical name for 44 this garment), belted in at the waist and falling below the knees, 45 alternates in a bright orange and rich crimson. He speaks excellent 46 English and replied readily to any questions asked in sincerity.

47 Along with his simplicity of manner there is a touch of 48 personal reserve when speaking to ladies, which suggests his

1 chosen vocation. When questioned about the laws of his order, he 2 has said, "I can do as I please, I am independent. Sometimes I live
3 in the Himalaya Mountains, and sometimes in the streets of cities. I 4 never know where I will get my next meal, I never keep money with 5 me. I come here by subscription." Then looking round at one or two 6 of his fellow-countrymen who chanced to be standing near he 7 added, "They will take care of me," giving the inference that his 8 board bill in Chicago is attended to by others. When asked if he was 9 wearing his usual monk's costume, he said, "This is a good dress; 10 when I am home I am in rags, and I go barefooted. Do I believe in 11 caste? Caste is a social custom; religion has nothing to do with it; 12 all castes will associate with me."

13 It is quite apparent, however, from the deportment, the 14 general appearance of Mr. Vivekananda that he was born among 15 high castes--years of voluntary poverty and homeless wanderings 16 have not robbed him of his birthright of gentleman; even his family 17 name is unknown; he took that of Vivekananda in embracing a 18 religious career, and "Swami" is merely the title of reverend 19 accorded to him. He cannot be far along in the thirties, and looks as 20 if made for this life and its fruition, as well as for meditation on the 21 life beyond. One cannot help wondering what could have been the 22 turning point with him.

23 "Why should I marry," was his abrupt response to a comment 24 on all he had renounced in becoming a monk, "when I see in every 25 woman only the divine Mother? Why do I make all these sacrifices?
26 To emancipate myself from earthly ties and attachments so that 27 there will be no re-birth for me. When I die I want to become at 28 once absorbed in the divine, one with God. I would be a Buddha."

29 Vivekananda does not mean by this that he is a Buddhist. No 30 name or sect can label him. He is an outcome of the higher 31 Brahminism, a product of the Hindu spirit, which is vast, dreamy, 32 self-extinguishing, a Sanyasi or holy man.

33 He has some pamphlets that he distributes, relating to his 34 master, Paramhansa Ramakrishna, a Hindu devotee, who so 35 impressed his hearers and pupils that many of them became 36 ascetics after his death. Mozoomdar also looked upon this saint as 37 his master, but Mozoomdar works for holiness in the world, in it but 38 not of it, as Jesus taught.

39 Vivekananda's address before the parliament was broad as 40 the heavens above us, embracing the best in all religions, as the 41 ultimate universal religion--charity to all mankind, good works for 42 the love of God, not for fear of punishment or hope of reward. He is 43 a great favourite at the parliament, from the grandeur of his 44 sentiments and his appearance as well. If he merely crosses the 45 platform he is applauded, and this marked approval of thousands he 46 accepts in a childlike spirit of gratification, without a trace of 47 conceit. It must be a strange experience too for this humble young 48 Brahmin monk, this sudden transition from poverty and self-49 effacement to affluence and aggrandizement. When asked if he 50 knew anything of those brothers in the Himalayas so firmly believed 51 in by the Theosophists, he answered with the simple statement, "I

1 have never met one of them," as much as to imply, "There may be 2 such persons, but though I am at home in the Himalayas, I have yet 3 to come across them."

4 5 AT THE PARLIAMENT OF RELIGIONS

6 (The Dubuque, Iowa, Times, September 29, 1893)

7 8 WORLD'S FAIR, Sept. 28.--(Special.)--The Parliament of 9 religions reached a point where sharp acerbities develop. The thin 10 veil of courtesy was maintained, of course, but behind it was ill 11 feeling. Rev. Joseph Cook criticised the Hindoos sharply and was 12 more sharply criticised in turn. He said that to speak of a universe 13 that was not created is almost unpardonable nonsense, and the 14 Asiatics retorted that a universe which had a beginning is a self-15 evident absurdity. Bishop J. P. Newman, firing at long range from 16 the banks of the Ohio, declared that the Orientals have insulted all 17 the Christians of the United States by their misrepresentations of 18 the missionaries, and the orientals, with their provokingly calm and 19 supercilious smile, replied that this was simply the bishop's 20 ignorance.

21 22 BUDDHIST PHILOSOPHY

23
24 In response to the question direct, three learned Buddhists
25 gave us in remarkably plain and beautiful language their bed-rock 26 belief about God, man and matter.

27 [Following this is a summary of Dharmapala's paper on "The 28 World's Debt to Buddha", which he prefaced, as we learn from 29 another source, by singing a Singhalese song of benediction. The 30 article then continues:]

31 His [Dharmapala's] peroration was as pretty a thing as a 32 Chicago audience ever heard. Demosthenes never exceeded it.

33 34 CANTANKEROUS REMARKS

35
36 Swami Vivekananda, the Hindoo monk, was not so fortunate.
37 He was out of humor, or soon became so, apparently. He wore an 38 orange robe and a pale yellow turban and dashed at once into a 39 savage attack on Christian nations in these words: "We who have 40 come from the east have sat here day after day and have been told 41 in a patronising way that we ought to accept Christianity because 42 Christian nations are the most prosperous. We look about us and we 43 see England the most prosperous Christian nation in the world, 44 with her foot on the neck of 250,000,000 Asiatics. We look back into 45 history and see that the prosperity of Christian Europe began with 46 Spain. Spain's prosperity began with the invasion of Mexico.
47 Christianity wins its prosperity by cutting the throats of its fellow

1 men. At such a price the Hindoo will not have prosperity."

2 And so they went on, each succeeding speaker getting more 3 cantankerous, as it were.

4
5 (Outlook, October 7, 1893)

6
7 . . . The subject of Christian work in India calls Vivekananda, 8 in his brilliant priestly orange, to his feet. He criticises the work of 9 Christian missions. It is evident that he has not tried to understand 10 Christianity, but neither, as he claims, have its priests made any 11 effort to understand his religion, with its ingrained faiths and race-12 prejudices of thousands of years' standing. They have simply come, 13 in his view, to throw scorn on his most sacred beliefs, and to 14 undermine the morals and spirituality of the people he has been set 15 to teach.

19 But the most impressive figures of the Parliament were the 20 Buddhist priest, H. Dharmapala of Ceylon, and the Hindoo monk, 21 Suami Vivekananda. "If theology and dogma stand in your way in 22 search of truth," said the former incisively, "put them aside. Learn 23 to think without prejudice, to love all beings for love's sake, to 24 express your convictions fearlessly, to lead a life of purity, and the 25 sunlight of truth will illuminate you." But eloquent as were many of 26 the brief speeches at this meeting, whose triumphant enthusiasm 27 rightly culminated in the superb rendering by the Apollo Club of the 28 Hallelujah chorus, no one expressed so well the spirit of the 29 Parliament, its limitations and its finest influence, as did the Hindoo 30 monk. I copy his address in full, but I can only suggest its effect 31 upon the audience, for he is an orator by divine right, and his 32 strong intelligent face in its picturesque setting of yellow and 33 orange was hardly less interesting than these earnest words and 34 the rich, rhythmical utterance he gave them. . . . [After quoting the 35 greater part of Swamiji's Final Address, the article continues:]

36 Perhaps the most tangible result of the congress was the 37 feeling it aroused in regard to foreign missions. The impertinence 38 of sending half-educated theological students to instruct the wise 39 and erudite Orientals was never brought home to an English-40 speaking audience more forcibly. It is only in the spirit of tolerance 41 and sympathy that we are at liberty to touch their faith, and the 42 exhorters who possess these qualities are rare. It is necessary to 43 realise that we have quite as much to learn from the Buddhists as 44 they from us, and that only through harmony can the highest 45 influence be exerted.

48 [To a request of the New York World of October 1, 1893, for 1 "a sentiment or expression regarding the significance of the great 2 meeting" from each representative, Swamiji replied with a 3 quotation from the Gita and one from Vyasa:]

4 "I am He that am in every religion--like the thread that passes 5 through a string of pearls." "Holy, perfect and pure men are seen in 6 all creeds, therefore they all lead to the same truth--for how can 7 nectar be the outcome of poison?"

8 9 PERSONAL TRAITS

10 (Critic, October 7, 1893)

11 12 . . . It was an outgrowth of the Parliament of Religions, which 13 opened our eyes to the fact that the philosophy of the ancient 14 creeds contains much beauty for the moderns. When we had once 15 clearly perceived this, our interest in their exponents quickened, 16 and with characteristic eagerness we set out in pursuit of 17 knowledge. The most available means of obtaining it, after the close 18 of the Parliament, was through the addresses and lectures of Swami 19 Vivekananda, who is still in this city [Chicago]. His original purpose 20 in coming to this country was to interest Americans in the starting 21 of new industries among the Hindoos, but he has abandoned this 22 for the present, because he finds that, as "the Americans are the 23 most charitable people in the world," every man with a purpose 24 comes here for assistance in carrying it out. When asked about the 25 relative condition of the poor here and in India, he replied that our 26 poor would be princes there, and that he had been taken through 27 the worst quarter of the city only to find it, from the standpoint of 28 his knowledge, comfortable and even pleasant.

29 A Brahmin of the Brahmins, Vivekananda gave up his rank to 30 join the brotherhood of monks, where all pride of caste is 31 voluntarily relinquished. And yet he bears the mark of race upon his 32 person. His culture, his eloquence, and his fascinating personality 33 have given us a new idea of Hindoo civilization. He is an interesting 34 figure, his fine, intelligent, mobile face in its setting of yellows, and 35 his deep, musical voice prepossessing one at once in his favor. So it 36 is not strange that he has been taken up by the literary clubs, has 37 preached and lectured in churches, until the life of Buddha and the 38 doctrines of his faith have grown familiar to us. He speaks without 39 notes, presenting his facts and his conclusions with the greatest 40 art, the most convincing sincerity; and rising at times to a rich, 41 inspiring eloquence. As learned and cultivated, apparently, as the 42 most accomplished Jesuit, he has also something Jesuitical in the 43 character of his mind; but though the little sarcasms thrown into his 44 discourses are as keen as a rapier, they are so delicate as to be lost 45 on many of his hearers. Nevertheless his courtesy is unfailing, for 46 these thrusts are never pointed so directly at our customs as to be 47 rude. At present he contents himself with enlightening us in regard 48 to his religion and the words of its philosophers. He looks forward 49 to the time when we shall pass beyond idolatry--now necessary in 50 his opinion to the ignorant classes--beyond worship, even, to a

1 knowledge of the presence of God in nature, of the divinity and 2 responsibility of man. "Work out your own salvation," he says with 3 the dying Buddha; "I cannot help you. No man can help you. Help 4 yourself."

7 REINCARNATION

8 (Evanston Index, October 7, 1893)

9
10 At the Congregational Church, during the past week, there 11 have been given a course of lectures which in nature much 12 resembled the Religious Parliament which has just been completed.
13 The lecturers were Dr. Carl von Bergen of Sweden, and Suami
14 Vivekananda, the Hindu monk. . . . Suami Vivekananda is a 15 representative from India to the Parliament of Religions. He has 16 attracted a great deal of attention on account of his unique attire in 17 Mandarin colors, by his magnetic presence and by his brilliant 18 oratory and wonderful exposition of Hindu philosophy. His stay in 19 Chicago has been a continual ovation. The course of lectures was 20 arranged to cover three evenings.

21 [The lectures of Saturday and Tuesday evenings are listed 22 without comment; then the article continues:]

23 On Thursday evening Oct. 5, Dr. von Bergen spoke on 24 "Huldine Beamish, the Founder of the King's Daughters of 25 Sweden," and "Reincarnation" was the subject treated by the Hindu 26 monk. The latter was very interesting; the views being those that 27 are not often heard in this part of the world. The doctrine of 28 reincarnation of the soul, while comparatively new and little 29 understood in this country, is well-known in the east, being the 30 foundation of nearly all the religions of those people. Those that do 31 not use it as dogma, do not say anything against it. The main point 32 to be decided in regard to the doctrine is, as to whether we have 33 had a past. We know that we have a present and feel sure of a 34 future. Yet how can there be a present without a past? Modern 35 science has proved that matter exists and continues to exist.
36 Creation is merely a change in appearance. We are not sprung out 37 of nothing. Some regard God as the common cause of everything 38 and judge this a sufficient reason for existence. But in everything 39 we must consider the phenomena; whence and from what matter 40 springs. The same arguments that prove there is a future prove that 41 there is a past. It is necessary that there should be causes other 42 than God's will. Heredity is not able to give sufficient cause. Some 43 say that we are not conscious of a former existence. Many cases 44 have been found where there are distinct reminiscences of a past.
45 And here lies the germ of the theory. Because the Hindu is kind to 46 dumb animals many believe that we believe in the reincarnation of 47 souls in lower orders. They are not able to conceive of kindness to 48 dumb animals being other than the result of superstition. An 49 ancient Hindu priest defines religion as anything that lifts one up.
50 Brutality is driven out, humanity gives way to divinity. The theory of 1 incarnation does not confine man to this small earth. His soul can 2 go to other, higher earths where he will be a loftier being,

3 possessing, instead of five senses, eight, and continuing in this way 4 he will at length approach the acme of perfection, divinity, and will 5 be allowed to drink deep of oblivion in the "Islands of the Blest".

6 7 HINDU CIVILISATION 8

9 [Although the lecture at Streator on October 9 was well 10 attended, the Streator Daily Free Press of October 9 ran the 11 following somewhat dreary review:]

12 The lecture of this celebrated Hindoo at the Opera House, 13 Saturday night, was very interesting. By comparative philology, he 14 sought to establish the long admitted relationship between the 15 Aryan races and their descendants in the new world. He mildly 16 defended the caste system of India which keeps three-fourths of the 17 people in utter and humiliating subjection, and boasted that the 18 India of today was the same India that had watched for centuries 19 the meteoric nations of the world flash across the horizon and sink 20 into oblivion. In common with the people, he loves the past. He lives 21 not for self, but for God. In his country a premium is placed on 22 beggary and tramps, though not so distinguished in his lecture.
23 When the meal is prepared, they wait for some man to come along 24 who is first served, then the animals, the servants, the man of the 25 house and lastly the woman of the household. Boys are taken at 10 26 years of age and are kept by professors for a period of ten to twenty 27 years, educated and sent forth to resume their former occupations 28 or to engage in a life of endless wandering, preaching, and praying, 29 taking along only that which is given them to eat and wear, but 30 never touching money. Vivekananda is of the latter class. Men 31 approaching old age withdraw from the world, and after a period of 32 study and prayer, when they feel themselves sanctified, they also go 33 forward spreading the gospel. He observed that leisure was 34 necessary for intellectual development and scored Americans for 35 not educating the Indians whom Columbus found in a state of 36 savagery. In this he exhibited a lack of knowledge of conditions.

37 His talk was lamentably short and much was left unsaid of 38 seeming greater importance than much that was said.⁵

39 40 AN INTERESTING LECTURE

41 (Wisconsin State Journal, November 21, 1893)

42
43 The lecture at the Congregational Church [Madison] last 44 night by the celebrated Hindoo monk, Vivekananda, was an

1 ⁵ It is clear from the above report that the American Press, for 2 one reason or another, did not always give Swamiji an enthusiastic 3 reception.
4

1 extremely interesting one, and contained much of sound philosophy
2 and good religion. Pagan though he be, Christianity may well follow 3 many of his teachings. His creed is as wide as the universe, taking 4 in all religions, and accepting truth wherever it may be found.
5 Bigotry and superstition and idle ceremony, he declared, have no
6 place in "the religions of India".

7 8 THE HINDOO RELIGION

9 (Minneapolis Star, November 25, 1893)

10 11 "Brahminism" in all its subtle attraction, because of its 12 embodiment of ancient and truthful principles, was the subject 13 which held an audience in closest attention last evening at the First 14 Unitarian Church [Minneapolis], while Swami Vive Kananda
15 expounded the Hindoo faith. It was an audience which included 16 thoughtful women and men, for the lecturer had been invited by the 17 "Peripatetics," and among the friends who shared the privilege with 18 them were ministers of varied denominations, as well as students 19 and scholars. Vive Kananda is a Brahmin priest, and he occupied 20 the platform in his native garb, with caftan on head, orange colored 21 coat confined at the waist with a red sash, and red nether 22 garments.

23 He presented his faith in all sincerity, speaking slowly and 24 clearly, convincing his hearers by quietness of speech rather than 25 by rapid action. His words were carefully weighed, and each 26 carried its meaning direct. He offered the simplest truths of the 27 Hindoo religion, and while he said nothing harsh about Christianity, 28 he touched upon it in such a manner as to place the faith of Brahma 29 before all. The all-pervading thought and leading principle of the 30 Hindoo religion is the inherent divinity of the soul; the soul is 31 perfect, and religion is the manifestation of divinity already existing 32 in man. The present is merely a line of demarkation between the 33 past and future, and of the two tendencies in man, if the good 34 preponderates he will move to a higher sphere, if the evil has 35 power, he degenerates. These two are continually at work within 36 him; what elevates him is virtue, that which degenerates is evil.

37 Kananda will speak at the First Unitarian Church tomorrow 38 morning.

39
40 (Des Moines News, November 28, 1893)

41
42 Swami Vivekananda, the talented scholar from the far-off 43 India, spoke at the Central church last night [November 27]. He 44 was a representative of his country and creed at the recent 45 parliament of religions assembled in Chicago during the world's 46 fair. Rev. H. O. Breedon introduced the speaker to the audience. He 47 arose and after bowing to his audience, commenced his lecture, the 48 subject of which was "Hindoo Religion". His lecture was not 49 confined to any line of thought but consisted more of some of his own philosophical views relative to his religion and others. He holds that one must embrace all the religions to become the perfect Christian. What is not found in one religion is supplied by another. They are all right and necessary for the true Christian. When you send a missionary to our country he becomes a Hindoo Christian and I a Christian Hindoo. I have often been asked in this country if I am going to try to convert the people here. I take this for an insult. I do not believe in this idea of conversion.⁶ To-day we have a sinful man; tomorrow according to your idea he is converted and by and by attains unto holiness. Whence comes this change? How do you explain it? The man has not a new soul for the soul must die. You say he is changed by God. God is perfect, all powerful and is purity itself. Then after this man is converted he is that same God minus the purity he gave that man to become holy. There is in our country two words which have an altogether different meaning than they do in this country. They are "religion" and "sect". We hold that religion embraces all religions. We tolerate everything but intolerance. Then there is that word "sect". Here it embraces those sweet people who wrap themselves up in their mantle of charity and say, "We are right; you are wrong." It reminds me of the story of the two frogs. A frog was born in a well and lived its whole life in that well. One day a frog from the sea fell in that well and they commenced to talk about the sea. The frog whose home was in the well asked the visitor how large the sea was, but was unable to get an intelligent answer. Then the at home frog jumped from one corner of the well to another and asked his visitor if the sea was that large.

He said yes. The frog jumped again and said, "Is the sea that large?" and receiving an affirmative reply, he said to himself, "This frog must be a liar; I will put him out of my well." That is the way with these sects. They seek to eject and trample those who do not believe as they do.

THE HINDOO MONK

(Appeal-Avalanche, January 16, 1894)

Swami Vive Kananda, the Hindoo monk, who is to lecture at the Auditorium [Memphis] tonight, is one of the most eloquent men who has ever appeared on the religious or lecture platform in this country. His matchless oratory, deep penetration into things occult, his cleverness in debate, and great earnestness captured the closest attention of the world's thinking men at the World's Fair Parliament of Religion, and the admiration of thousands of people who have since heard him during his lecture tour through many of the states of the Union.

In conversation he is a most pleasant gentleman; his choice of ⁶ Although in spots, as will be seen, the reporter woefully failed to follow Swamiji's argument regarding conversion, he captured enough of it to enable the reader who is familiar with Swamiji's thought to comprehend his meaning.

1 words are the gems of the English language, and his general 2 bearing ranks him with the most cultured people of Western 3 etiquette and custom. As a companion he is a most charming man, 4 and as a conversationalist he is, perhaps, not surpassed in the 5 drawing-rooms of any city in the Western World. He speaks English 6 not only distinctly, but fluently, and his ideas, as new as sparkling, 7 drop from his tongue in a perfectly bewildering overflow of 8 ornamental language.

9 Swami Vive Kananda, by his inherited religion or early 10 teachings, grew up a Brahmin, but becoming converted to the 11 Hindoo religion he sacrificed his rank and became a Hindoo priest, 12 or as known in the country of oriental ideality, a sanyasin. He had 13 always been a close student of the wonderful and mysterious works 14 of nature as drawn from God's high conception, and with years 15 spent as both a student and teacher in the higher colleges of that 16 eastern country, he acquired a knowledge that has given him a 17 worldwide reputation as one of the most thoughtful scholars of the 18 age.

19 His wonderful first address before the members of the 20 World's Fair Parliament stamped him at once as a leader in that 21 great body of religious thinkers. During the session he was 22 frequently heard in defence of his religion, and some of the most 23 beautiful and philosophical gems that grace the English language 24 rolled from his lips there in picturing the higher duties that man 25 owed to man and to his Creator. He is an artist in thought, an 26 idealist in belief and a dramatist on the platform.

27 Since his arrival in Memphis he has been guest of Mr. Hu L.
28 Brinkley, where he has received calls day and evening from many in 29 Memphis who desired to pay their respects to him. He is also an 30 informal guest at the Tennessee Club and was a guest at the 31 reception given by Mrs. S. R. Shepherd, Saturday evening. Col. R.
32 B. Snowden gave a dinner at his home at Annesdale in honor of the 33 distinguished visitor on Sunday, where he met Assistant Bishop 34 Thomas F. Gailor, Rev. Dr. George Patterson and a number of other 35 clergymen.

36 Yesterday afternoon he lectured before a large and 37 fashionable audience composed of the members of the Nineteenth 38 Century Club in the rooms of the club in the Randolph Building.
39 Tonight he will be heard at the Auditorium on "Hindooism".

40 41 PLEA FOR TOLERANCE

42 (Memphis Commercial, January 17, 1894)

43
44 An audience of fair proportions gathered last night at the 45 Auditorium to greet the celebrated Hindu monk, Swami Vive 46 Kananda, in his lecture on Hinduism.

47 He was introduced in a brief but informing address by Judge 48 R. J. Morgan, who gave a sketch of the development of the great 49 Aryan race, from which development have come the Europeans and

1 the Hindus alike, so tracing a racial kinship between the people of 2 America and the speaker who was to address them.

3 The eminent Oriental was received with liberal applause, and 4 heard with attentive interest throughout. He is a man of fine 5 physical presence, with regular bronze features and form of fine 6 proportions. He wore a robe of pink silk, fastened at the waist with 7 a black sash, black trousers and about his head was gracefully 8 draped a turban of yellow India silk. His delivery is very good, his 9 use of English being perfect as regards choice of words and 10 correctness of grammar and construction. The only inaccuracy of 11 pronunciation is in the accenting of words at times upon a wrong 12 syllable. Attentive listeners, however, probably lost few words, and 13 their attention was well rewarded by an address full of original 14 thought, information and broad wisdom. The address might fitly be 15 called a plea for universal tolerance, illustrated by remarks
16 concerning the religion of India. This spirit, he contended, the spirit 17 of tolerance and love, is the central inspiration of all religions which 18 are worthy, and this, he thinks, is the end to be secured by any form 19 of faith.

20 His talk concerning Hinduism was not strictly circumstantial.
21 His attempt was rather to give an analysis of its spirit than a story 22 of its legends or a picture of its forms. He dwelt upon only a few of 23 the distinctive creedal or ritual features of his faith, but these he 24 explained most clearly and perspicuously. He gave a vivid account 25 of the mystical features of Hinduism, out of which the so often 26 misinterpreted theory of reincarnation has grown. He explained 27 how his religion ignored the differentiations of time, how, just as all 28 men believe in the present and the future of the soul, so the faith of 29 Brahma believes in its past. He made it clear, too, how his faith 30 does not believe in "original sin," but bases all effort and aspiration 31 on the belief of the perfectibility of humanity. Improvement and 32 purification, he contends, must be based upon hope. The 33 development of man is a return to an original perfection. This 34 perfection must come through the practice of holiness and love.
35 Here he showed how his own people have practiced these qualities, 36 how India has been a land of refuge for the oppressed, citing the 37 instance of the welcome given by the Hindus to the Jews when Titus 38 sacked Jerusalem and destroyed the Temple.

39 In a graphic way he told that the Hindus do not lay much 40 stress upon forms. Sometimes every member of the family will 41 differ in their adherence to sects, but all will worship God by 42 worshipping the spirit of love which is His central attribute. The 43 Hindus, he says, hold that there is good in all religions, that all 44 religions are embodiments of man's inspiration for holiness, and 45 being such, all should be respected. He illustrated this by a citation 46 from the Vedas [?], in which varied religions are symbolised as the 47 differently formed vessels with which different men came to bring 48 water from a spring. The forms of the vessels are many, but the 49 water of truth is what all seek to fill their vessels with. God knows 50 all forms of faith, he thinks, and will recognize his own name no 51 matter what it is called, or what may be the fashion of the homage 52 paid him.

1 The Hindus, he continued, worship the same God as the 2 Christians. The Hindu trinity of Brahma, Vishnu, Siva is merely an 3 embodiment of God the creator, the preserver and the destroyer.
4 That the three are considered three instead of one is simply a 5 corruption due to the fact that general humanity must have its 6 ethics made tangible. So likewise the material images of Hindu 7 gods are simply symbols of divine qualities.

8 He told, in explanation of the Hindu doctrine of incarnation, 9 the story of Krishna, who was born by immaculate conception and 10 the story of whom greatly resembles the story of Jesus. The 11 teaching of Krishna, he claims, is the doctrine of love for its own 12 sake, and he expressed [it] by the words "If the fear of the Lord is 13 the beginning of religion, the love of God is its end."

14 His entire lecture cannot be sketched here, but it was a 15 masterly appeal for brotherly love, and an eloquent defense of a 16 beautiful faith. The conclusion was especially fine, when he 17 acknowledged his readiness to accept Christ but must also bow to 18 Krishna and to Buddha; and when, with a fine picture of the cruelty 19 of civilization, he refused to hold Christ responsible for the crimes 20 of progress.

21 22 MANNERS AND CUSTOMS IN INDIA

23 (Appeal-Avalanche, January 21, 1894)

24
25 Swami Vive Kananda, the Hindoo monk, delivered a lecture at 26 La Salette Academy [Memphis] yesterday afternoon. Owing to the 27 pouring rain, a very small audience was present.

28 The subject discussed was "Manners and Customs in India."
29 Vive Kananda is advancing theories of religious thought which find 30 ready lodgement in the minds of some of the most advanced 31 thinkers of this as well as other cities of America.

32 His theory is fatal to the orthodox belief, as taught by the 33 Christian teachers. It has been the supreme effort of Christian 34 America to enlighten the beclouded minds of heathen India, but it 35 seems that the oriental splendor of Kananda's religion has eclipsed 36 the beauty of the old-time Christianity, as taught by our parents, 37 and will find a rich field in which to thrive in the minds of some of 38 the better educated of America.

39 This is a day of "fads," and Kananda seems to be filling a 40 "long felt want." He is, perhaps, one of the most learned men of his 41 country, and possesses a wonderful amount of personal magnetism, 42 and his hearers are charmed by his eloquence. While he is liberal in 43 his views, he sees very little to admire in the orthodox Christianity.
44 Kananda has received more marked attention in Memphis than 45 almost any lecturer or minister that has ever visited the city.

46 If a missionary to India was as cordially received as the 47 Hindoo monk is here the work of spreading the gospel of Christ in 48 heathen lands would be well advanced. His lecture yesterday 49 afternoon was an interesting one from a historic point of view. He is

1 thoroughly familiar with the history and traditions of his native 2 country, from very ancient history up to the present, and can 3 describe the various places and objects of interest there with grace 4 and ease.

5 During his lecture he was frequently interrupted by questions 6 propounded by the ladies in the audience, and he answered all 7 queries without the least hesitancy, except when one of the ladies 8 asked a question with the purpose of drawing him out into a 9 religious discussion. He refused to be led from the original subject 10 of his discourse and informed the interrogator that at another time 11 he would give his views on the "transmigration of the soul," etc.

12 In the course of his remarks he said that his grandfather was 13 married when he was 3 years old and his father married at 18, but 14 he had never married at all. A monk is not forbidden to marry, but if 15 he takes a wife she becomes a monk with the same powers and 16 privileges and occupies the same social position as her husband.⁷

17 In answer to a question, he said there were no divorces in 18 India for any cause, but if, after 14 years of married life, there were 19 no children in the family, the husband was allowed to marry another 20 with the wife's consent, but if she objected he could not marry 21 again. His description of the ancient mausoleums and temples were 22 beautiful beyond comparison, and goes to show that the ancients 23 possessed scientific knowledge far superior to the most expert 24 artisans of the present day.

25 Swami Vivi Kananda will appear at the Y.M.H.A. Hall to-night
26 for the last time in this city. He is under contract with the "Slayton 27 Lyceum Bureau," of Chicago, to fill a three-years' engagement in 28 this country. He will leave tomorrow for Chicago, where he has an 29 engagement for the night of the 25th.

33 Last evening a good sized audience had the privilege of 34 seeing and listening to the famous Hindu Monk of the Brahmo 35 Samaj, Swami Vive Kananda, as he lectured at the Unitarian 36 Church under the auspices of the Unity Club. He appeared in native 37 costume and made with his handsome face and stalwart figure a 38 distinguished appearance. His eloquence held the audience in rapt 39 attention and brought out applause at frequent intervals. He spoke 40 of the "Manners and Customs of India" and presented the subject in 41 the most perfect English. He said they did not call their country 42 India nor themselves Hindus. Hindostan was the name of the 43 country and they were Brahmans. In ancient times they spoke

1 ⁷ It is quite unlikely that Swamiji made this remark attributed to 2 him regarding the marriage of monks. This must have been an 3 aberration on the part of the reporter, for, as is well known, if a 4 Sannyasin takes a wife he is considered by the Hindu society to be a 5 fallen person and beyond the pale.
6

1 Sanscrit. In that language the reason and meaning of a word was 2 explained and made quite evident but now that is all gone. Jupiter 3 in Sanscrit meant "Father in Heaven." All the languages of northern 4 India were now practically the same, but if he should go into the 5 southern part of that country he could not converse with the people.
6 In the words father, mother, sister, brother, etc.; the Sanscrit gave 7 very similar pronunciations. This and other facts lead him to think 8 we all come from the common stock, Aryans. Nearly all branches of 9 this race have lost their identity.

10 There were four castes, the priests, the landlords and military 11 people, the trades people and the artisans, laborers and servants.
12 In the first three castes the boys at the ages of ten, eleven and 13 thirteen respectively are placed in the hands of professors of 14 universities and remain with them until thirty, twenty-five and 15 twenty years old, respectively. . . . In ancient times both boys and 16 girls were instructed, but now only the boys are favored. An effort, 17 however, is being made to rectify the long-existing wrong. A good 18 share of the philosophy and laws of the land is the work of women 19 during the ancient times, before barbarians started to rule the land.
20 In the eyes of the Hindu the woman now has her rights. She holds 21 her own and has the law on her side.

22 When the student returns from college he is allowed to marry 23 and have a household. Husband and wife must bear the work and 24 both have their rights. In the military caste the daughters 25 oftentimes can choose their husbands, but in all other cases all 26 arrangements are made by the parents. There is a constant effort 27 now being made to remedy infant marriage. The marriage 28 ceremony is very beautiful, each touches the heart of the other and 29 they swear before God and the assemblage that they will prove 30 faithful to each other. No man can be a priest until he marries.
31 When a man attends public worship he is always attended by his 32 wife. In his worship the Hindu performs five ceremonies, worship of 33 his God, of his forefathers, of the poor, of the dumb animals, and of 34 learning. As long as a Hindu has anything in the house a guest must 35 never want. When he is satisfied then the children, then father and 36 mother partake. They are the poorest nation in the world, yet 37 except in times of famine no one dies of hunger. Civilization is a 38 great work. But in comparison the statement is made that in 39 England one in every 400 is a drunkard, while in India the 40 proportion is one to every million. A description was given of the 41 ceremony of burning the dead. No publicity is made except in the 42 case of some great nobleman. After a fifteen days' fast gifts are 43 given by the relatives in behalf of the forefathers to the poor or for 44 the formation of some institution. On moral matters they stand head 45 and shoulders above all other nations.

46 HINDOO PHILOSOPHY

47 (Detroit Free Press, February 16, 1894)

48
49
50 The second lecture of the Hindoo monk, Swami Vive

1 Kananda, was given last evening at the Unitarian church to a large 2 and very appreciative audience. The expectation of the audience
3 that the speaker would enlighten them regarding "Hindoo 4 Philosophy," as the lecture was entitled, was gratified to only a 5 limited extent. Allusions were made to the philosophy of Buddha, 6 and the speaker was applauded when he said that Buddhism was 7 the first missionary religion of the world, and that it had secured 8 the largest number of converts without the shedding of a drop of 9 blood; but he did not tell his audience anything about the religion or 10 philosophy of Buddha. He made a number of cute little jabs at the 11 Christian religion, and alluded to the trouble and misery that had 12 been caused by its introduction into heathen countries, but he 13 skilfully avoided any comparison between the social condition of the 14 people in his own land and that of the people to whom he was 15 speaking. In a general way he said the Hindoo philosophers taught 16 from a lower truth to a higher; whereas, a person accepting a 17 newer Christian doctrine is asked and expected to throw his former 18 belief all away and accept the newer in its entirety. "It is an idle 19 dream when all of us will have the same religious views," said he.
20 "No emotion can be produced except by clashing elements acting 21 upon the mind. It is the revulsion of change, the new light, the 22 presentation of the new to the old, that elicits sensation."

23 [As the first lecture had antagonised some people, the Free
24 Press reporter was very cautious. Fortunately, however, the Detroit 25 Tribune consistently upheld Swamiji, and thus in its report of 26 February 16 we get some idea of his lecture on "Hindu Philosophy," 27 although the Tribune reporter seems to have taken somewhat 28 sketchy notes:]

29
30 (Detroit Tribune, February 16, 1894)

31
32 The Brahman monk, Swami Vive Kananda, again lectured last 33 evening at the Unitarian church, his topic being "Hindu 34 Philosophy." The speaker dealt for a time with general philosophy 35 and metaphysics, but said that he would devote the lecture to that 36 part pertaining to religion. There is a sect that believes in a soul, 37 but are agnostic in relation to God. Buddahism [sic] was a great 38 moral religion, but they could not live long without believing in a 39 god. Another sect known as the giants [Jains] believe in the soul, 40 but not in the moral government of the country. There were several 41 millions of this sect in India. Their priests and monks tie a 42 handkerchief over their faces believing if their hot breath comes in 43 contact with man or beast death will ensue.

44 Among the orthodox, all believe in the revelation. Some think 45 every word in the Bible comes directly from God. The stretching of 46 the meaning of a word would perhaps do in most religions, but in 47 that of the Hindus they have the Sanscrit, which always retains the 48 full meaning and reasons of the world.

49 The distinguished Oriental thought there was a sixth sense 50 far greater than any of the five we know we possess. It was the 1 truth of revelation. A man may read all the books on religion in the 2 world and yet be the greatest blackguard in the country. Revelation 3 means later reports of spiritual discoveries.

4 The second position some take is a creation without 5 beginning or end. Suppose there was a time when the world did not 6 exist; what was God doing then? To the Hindus the creation was 7 only one of forms. One man is born with a healthy body, is of good 8 family and grows up a godly man. Another is born with a maimed 9 and crooked body and develops into a wicked man and pays the 10 penalty. Why must a just and holy god create one with so many 11 advantages and the other with disadvantages? The person has no 12 choice. The evildoer has a consciousness of his guilt. The difference 13 between virtue and vice was expounded. If God willed all things 14 there would be an end to all science. How far can man go down? Is 15 it possible for man to go back to brute again?

16 Kananda was glad he was a Hindu. When Jerusalem was 17 destroyed by the Romans several thousand [Jews] settled in India.
18 When the Persians were driven from their country by the Arabs 19 several thousand found refuge in the same country and none were 20 molested. The Hindus believe all religions are true, but theirs 21 antedates all others. Missionaries are never molested by the 22 Hindus. The first English missionaries were prevented from landing 23 in that country by English and it was a Hindu that interceded for 24 them and gave them the first hand. Religion is that which believes 25 in all. Religion was compared to the blind men and the elephant.
26 Each man felt of a special part and from it drew his conclusions of 27 what an elephant was. Each was right in his way and yet all were 28 needed to form a whole. Hindu philosophers say "truth to truth, 29 lower truth to higher." It is an idle dream of those who think that all 30 will at some time think alike, for that would be the death of religion.
31 Every religion breaks up into little sects, each claiming to be the 32 true one and all the others wrong. Persecution is unknown in 33 Buddahism. They sent out the first missionaries and are the only 34 ones who can say they have converted millions without the 35 shedding of a single drop of blood. Hindus, with all their faults and 36 superstitions, never persecute. The speaker wanted to know how it 37 was the christians allowed such iniquities as are everywhere 38 present in christian countries.

39 40 MIRACLES

41 (Evening News, February 17, 1894)

42
43 "I cannot comply with the request of The News to work a 44 miracle in proof of my religion," said Vive Kananda to a 45 representative of this paper, after being shown The News editorial 46 on the subject. "In the first place, I am no miracle worker, and in 47 the second place the pure Hindoo religion I profess is not based on 48 miracles. We do not recognize such a thing as miracles. There are 49 wonders wrought beyond our five senses, but they are operated by 50 some law. Our religion has nothing to do with them. Most of the 1 strange things which are done in India and reported in the foreign 2 papers are sleight-of-hand tricks or hypnotic illusions. They are not 3 the performances of the wise men. These do not go about the 4 country performing their wonders in the market places for pay.

5 They can be seen and known only by those who seek to know the 6 truth, and not moved by childish curiosity."

8 THE DIVINITY OF MAN

9 (Detroit Free Press, February 18, 1894)

11 Swami Vive Kananda, Hindoo philosopher and priest, 12 concluded his series of lectures, or rather, sermons, at the 13 Unitarian church last night, speaking on "The Divinity of God" [sic].⁸ 14 In spite of the bad weather, the church was crowded almost to the 15 doors half an hour before the eastern brother--as he likes to be 16 called--appeared. All professions and business occupations were 17 represented in the attentive audience--lawyers, judges, ministers of 18 the gospel, merchants, rabbi--not to speak of the many ladies who 19 have by their repeated attendance and rapt attention shown a 20 decided inclination to shower adulation upon the dusky visitor 21 whose drawing-room attraction is as great as his ability in the 22 rostrum.

23 The lecture last night was less descriptive than preceding 24 ones, and for nearly two hours Vive Kananda wove a metaphysical 25 texture on affairs human and divine, so logical that he made 26 science appear like common sense. It was a beautiful logical 27 garment that he wove, replete with as many bright colors and as 28 attractive and pleasing to contemplate as one of the many-hued 29 fabrics made by hand in his native land and scented with the most 30 seductive fragrance of the Orient. This dusky gentleman uses 31 poetical imagery as an artist uses colors, and the hues are laid on 32 just where they belong, the result being somewhat bizarre in effect, 33 and yet having a peculiar fascination. Kaleidoscopic were the 34 swiftly succeeding logical conclusions, and the deft manipulator 35 was rewarded for his efforts from time to time by enthusiastic 36 applause.

37 The lecture was prefaced with the statement that the speaker 38 had been asked many questions. A number of these he preferred to 39 answer privately, but three he had selected, for reasons which 40 would appear, to answer from the pulpit. They were:⁹

41 "Do the people of India throw their children into the jaws of 42 the crocodiles?"

43 "Do they kill themselves beneath the wheels of the 44 juggernaut?"

1 ⁸ ?Actually the subject was "The Divinity of Man".

2
3 ⁹ ?This and the next four paragraphs appear in Vol. IV of the 4 Complete Works under the heading, "Is India a Benighted Country?"
5

1 "Do they burn widows with their husbands?"

2 The first question the lecturer treated in the vein that an 3 American abroad would answer inquiries about Indians running 4 around in the streets of New York and similar myths which are even 5 to-day entertained by many persons on the continent. The 6 statement was too ludicrous to give a serious response to it. When 7 asked by certain well-meaning but ignorant people why they gave 8 only female children to the crocodiles, he could only ironically reply 9 that probably it was because they were softer and more tender and 10 could be more easily masticated by the inhabitants of the rivers in 11 the benighted country. Regarding the juggernaut legend the 12 lecturer explained the old practice in the sacred city and remarked 13 that possibly a few in their zeal to grasp the rope and participate in 14 the drawing of the car slipped and fell and were so destroyed. Some 15 such mishaps had been exaggerated into the distorted version from 16 which the good people of other countries shrank with horror. Vive 17 Kananda denied that the people burned widows. It was true, 18 however, that widows had burned themselves. In the few cases 19 where this had happened, they had been urged not to do so by the 20 priests and holy men who were always opposed to suicide. Where 21 the devoted widows insisted, stating that they desired to 22 accompany their husbands in the transformation that had taken 23 place, they were obliged to submit to the fiery test. That is, they 24 thrust their hands within the flames and if they permitted them to 25 be consumed no further opposition was placed in the way of the 26 fulfilment of their desires. But India is not the only country where 27 women who have loved have followed immediately the loved one 28 through the realms of immortality; suicide in such cases have 29 occurred in every land. It is an uncommon bit of fanaticism in any 30 country; as unusual in India as elsewhere. No, the speaker 31 repeated, the people do not burn women in India; nor have they 32 ever burned witches.

33 Proceeding to the lecture proper, Vive Kananda proceeded to 34 analyze the physical, mental and soul attributes of life. The body is 35 but a shell; the mind something that acts but a brief and fantastic 36 part; while the soul has distinct individuality in itself. To realize the 37 infinity of self is to attain "freedom" which is the Hindoo word for 38 "salvation." By a convincing manner of argument the lecturer 39 showed that every soul is something independent, for if it were 40 dependent, it could not acquire immortality. He related a story from 41 the old legends of his country to illustrate the manner in which the 42 realization of this may come to the individual. A lioness leaping 43 towards a sheep in the act gave birth to a cub. The lioness died and 44 the cub was given suck by the sheep and for many years thought 45 itself a sheep and acted like one. But one day another lion appeared 46 and led the first lion to a lake where he looked in and saw his 47 resemblance to the other lion. At that he roared and realized the 48 full majesty of self. Many people are like the lion masquerading as a 49 sheep and get into a corner, call themselves sinners and demean 50 themselves in every imaginable fashion, not yet seeing the 51 perfection and divinity which lies in self. The ego of man and 52 woman is the soul. If the soul is independent, how then can it be

1 isolated from the infinite whole? Just as the great sun shines on a 2 lake and numberless reflections are the result, so the soul is distinct 3 like each reflection, although the great source is recognized and 4 appreciated. The soul is sexless. When it has realized the condition 5 of absolute freedom, what could it have to do with sex which is 6 physical? In this connection the lecturer delved deeply into the 7 water of Swedenborgian philosophy, or religion, and the connection 8 between the conviction of the Hindoo and the spiritual expressions 9 of faith on the part of the more modern holy man was fully 10 apparent. Swedenborg seemed like a European successor of an 11 early Hindoo priest, clothing in modern garb an ancient conviction; 12 a line of thought that the greatest of French philosophers and 13 novelists [Balzac?] saw fit to embody in his elevating tale of the 14 perfect soul. Every individual has in himself perfection. It lies 15 within the dark recesses of his physical being. To say that a man 16 has become good because God gave him a portion of His perfection 17 is to conceive the Divine Being as God minus just so much 18 perfection as he has imparted to a person on this earth. The 19 inexorable law of science proves that the soul is individual and must 20 have perfection within itself, the attainment of which means 21 freedom, not salvation, and the realization of individual infinity.
22 Nature! God! Religion! It is all one.

23 The religions are all good. A bubble of air in a glass of water 24 strives to join with the mass of air without; in oil, vinegar and other 25 materials of differing density its efforts are less or more retarded 26 according to the liquid. So the soul struggles through various 27 mediums for the attainment of its individual infinity. One religion is 28 best adapted to a certain people because of habits of life, 29 association, hereditary traits and climatic influences. Another 30 religion is suited to another people for similar reasons. All that is, is 31 best seemed to be the substance of the lecturer's conclusions. To 32 try abruptly to change a nation's religion would be like a man who 33 sees a river flowing from the Alps. He criticizes the way it has 34 taken. Another man views the mighty stream descending from the 35 Himalayas, a stream that has been running for generations and 36 thousands of years, and says that it has not taken the shortest and 37 best route. The Christian pictures God as a personal being seated 38 somewhere above us. The Christian cannot necessarily be happy in 39 Heaven unless he can stand on the edge of the golden streets and 40 from time to time gaze down into the other place and see the 41 difference. Instead of the golden rule, the Hindoo believes in the 42 doctrine that all non-self is good and all self is bad, and through this 43 belief the attainment of the individual infinity and the freedom of 44 the soul at the proper time will be fulfilled. How excessively vulgar, 45 stated Vive Kananda, was the golden rule! Always self! always self!
46 was the Christian creed. To do unto others as you would be done 47 by! It was a horrible, barbarous, savage creed, but he did not desire 48 to decry the Christian creed, for those who are satisfied with it to 49 them it is well adapted. Let the great stream flow on, and he is a 50 fool who would try to change its course, when nature will work out 51 the solution. Spiritualist (in the true acceptance of the word) and 52 fatalist, Vive Kananda emphasized his opinion that all was well and 53 he had no desire to convert Christians. They were Christians; it was

1 well. He was a Hindoo; that, also, was well. In his country different 2 creeds were formulated for the needs of people of different grades 3 of intelligence, all this marking the progress of spiritual evolution.
4 The Hindoo religion was not one of self; ever egotistical in its 5 aspirations, ever holding up promises of reward or threats of 6 punishment. It shows to the individual he may attain infinity by non-7 self. This system of bribing men to become Christians, alleged to 8 have come from God, who manifested Himself to certain men on 9 earth, is atrocious. It is horribly demoralizing and the Christian 10 creed, accepted literally, has a shameful effect upon the moral 11 natures of the bigots who accept it, retarding the time when the 12 infinity of self may be attained.

13 [The Tribune reporter, perhaps the same who had earlier 14 heard "giants" for "Jains," this time heard "bury" for "burn"; but 15 otherwise, with the exception of Swamiji's statements regarding the 16 golden rule, he seems to have reported more or less accurately:]

17
18 (Detroit Tribune, February 18, 1894)

19
20 Swami Vive Kananda at the Unitarian Church last night
21 declared that widows were never buried [burned] alive in India 22 through religion or law, but the act in all cases had been voluntary 23 on the part of the women. The practice had been forbidden by one 24 emperor, but it had gradually grown again until a stop was put to it 25 by the English government. Fanatics existed in all religions, the 26 Christian as well as the Hindu. Fanatics in India had been known to 27 hold their hands over their heads in penance for so long a time that 28 the arm had gradually grown stiff in that position, and so remained 29 ever after. So, too, men had made a vow to stand still in one 30 position. These persons would in time lose all control of the lower 31 limbs and never after be able to walk. All religions were true, and 32 the people practiced morality, not because of any divine command, 33 but because of its own good. Hindus, he said, did not believe in 34 conversion, calling it perversion. Associations, surroundings and 35 educations were responsible for the great number of religions, and 36 how foolish it was for an exponent of one religion to declare that 37 another man's belief was wrong. It was as reasonable as a man 38 from Asia coming to America and after viewing the course of the 39 Mississippi to say to it: "You are running entirely wrong. You will 40 have to go back to the starting place and commence it all over 41 again." It would be just as foolish for a man in America to visit the 42 Alps and after following the course of a river to the German Sea to 43 inform it that its course was too tortuous and that the only remedy 44 would be to flow as directed. The golden rule, he declared, was as 45 old as the earth itself and to it could be traced all rules of morality 46 [sic]. Man is a bundle of selfishness. He thought the hell fire theory 47 was all nonsense. There could not be perfect happiness when it was 48 known that suffering existed. He ridiculed the manner some 49 religious persons have while praying. The Hindu, he said, closed his 50 eyes and communed with the inner spirit, while some Christians he 51 had seen had seemed to stare at some point as if they saw God

1 seated upon his heavenly throne. In the matter of religion there
2 were two extremes, the bigot and the atheist. There was some good 3 in the atheist, but the bigot lived only for his own little self. He 4 thanked some anonymous person who had sent him a picture of the 5 heart of Jesus. This he thought a manifestation of bigotry. Bigots 6 belong to no religion. They are a singular phenomena [sic].

7 8 THE LOVE OF GOD

9 (Detroit Tribune, February 21, 1894)

10
11 The First Unitarian Church was crowded last night to hear 12 Vive Kananda. The audience was composed of people who came 13 from Jefferson Avenue and the upper part of Woodward Avenue.
14 Most of it was ladies who seemed deeply interested in the address 15 and applauded several remarks of the Brahman with much 16 enthusiasm.

17 The love that was dwelt upon by the speaker was not the love
18 that goes with passion, but a pure and holy love that one in India 19 feels for his God. As Vive Kananda stated at the commencement of 20 his address the subject was "The Love the Indian Feels for His 21 God." But he did not preach to his text. The major portion of his 22 address was an attack on the Christian religion. The religion of the 23 Indian and the love of his God was the minor portion. The points in 24 his address were illustrated with several applicable anecdotes of 25 famous people in the history. The subjects of the anecdotes were 26 renowned Mogul emperors of his native land and not of the native 27 Hindu kings.

28 The professors of religion were divided into two classes by 29 the lecturer, the followers of knowledge and the followers of 30 devotion. The end in the life of the followers of knowledge was 31 experience. The end in the life of the devotee was love.

32 Love, he said, was a sacrifice. It never takes, but it always 33 gives. The Hindu never asks anything of his God, never prayed for 34 salvation and a happy hereafter, but instead lets his whole soul go 35 out to his God in an entrancing love. That beautiful state of 36 existence could only be gained when a person felt an overwhelming 37 want of God. Then God came in all of His fullness.

38 There were three different ways of looking at God. One was 39 to look upon Him as a mighty personage and fall down and worship 40 His might. Another was to worship Him as a father. In India the 41 father always punished the children and an element of fear was 42 mixed with the regard and love for a father. Still another way to 43 think of God was as a mother. In India a mother was always truly 44 loved and revered. That was the Indian's way of looking at their 45 God.

46 Kananda said that a true lover of God would be so wrapt up in 47 his love that he would have no time to stop and tell members of 48 another sect that they were following the wrong road to secure the 49 God, and strive to bring him to his way of thinking.

1
2 (Detroit Journal)
3

4 If Vive Kananda, the Brahmin monk, who is delivering a 5 lecture course in this city could be induced to remain for a week 6 longer, the largest hall in Detroit would not hold the crowds which 7 would be anxious to hear him. He has become a veritable fad, as 8 last evening every seat in the Unitarian church was occupied, and 9 many were compelled to stand throughout the entire lecture.

10 The speaker's subject was, "The Love of God". His definition 11 of love was "something absolutely unselfish; that which has no 12 thought beyond the glorification and adoration of the object upon 13 which our affections are bestowed." Love, he said, is a quality 14 which bows down and worships and asks nothing in return. Love of 15 God, he thought, was different. God is not accepted, he said, 16 because we really need him, except for selfish purposes. His lecture 17 was replete with story and anecdote, all going to show the selfish 18 motive underlying the motive of love for God. The Songs of Solomon 19 were cited by the lecturer as the most beautiful portion of the 20 Christian Bible and yet he had heard with deep regret that there 21 was a possibility of their being removed. "In fact," he declared, as a 22 sort of clinching argument at the close, "the love of God appears to 23 be based upon a theory of 'What can I get out of it?' Christians are 24 so selfish in their love that they are continually asking God to give 25 them something, including all manner of selfish things. Modern 26 religion is, therefore, nothing but a mere hobby and fashion and 27 people flock to church like a lot of sheep."

28
29 THE WOMEN OF INDIA

30 (Detroit Free Press, March 25, 1894)
31

32 Kananda lectured last night at the Unitarian church on "The 33 Women of India." The speaker reverted to the women of ancient 34 India, showing in what high regard they are held in the holy books, 35 where women were prophetesses. Their spirituality then was 36 admirable. It is unfair to judge women in the east by the western 37 standard. In the west woman is the wife; in the east she is the 38 mother. The Hindoos worship the idea of mother, and even the 39 monks are required to touch the earth with their foreheads before 40 their mothers. Chastity is much esteemed.

41 The lecture was one of the most interesting Kananda has 42 delivered and he was warmly received.

43 (Detroit Evening News, March 25, 1894)
44

45 Swami Vive Kananda lectured at the Unitarian Church last 46 night on "The Women of India, Past, Medieval and the Present." He 47 stated that in India the woman was the visible manifestation of God 48 and that her whole life was given up to the thought that she was a

1 mother, and to be a perfect mother she must be chaste. No mother 2 in India ever abandoned her offspring, he said, and defied any one 3 to prove the contrary. The girls of India would die if they, like 4 American girls, were obliged to expose half their bodies to the 5 vulgar gaze of young men. He desired that India be judged from the 6 standard of that country and not from this.

7
8 (Tribune, April 1, 1894)

9
10 While Swami Kananda was in Detroit he had a number of 11 conversations, in which he answered questions regarding the 12 women of India. It was the information he thus imparted that 13 suggested a public lecture from him on this subject. But as he 14 speaks without notes, some of the points he made in private 15 conversation did not appear in his public address. Then his friends 16 were in a measure disappointed. But one of his lady listeners has 17 put on paper some of the things he told in his afternoon talks, and it 18 is now for the first time given to the press:

19 To the great tablelands of the high Himalaya mountains first 20 came the Aryans, and there to this day abides the pure type of 21 Brahman, a people which we westerners can but dream of. Pure in 22 thought, deed and action, so honest that a bag of gold left in a 23 public place would be found unharmed twenty years after; so 24 beautiful that, to use Kananda's own phrase, "to see a girl in the 25 fields is to pause and marvel that God could made anything so 26 exquisite." Their features are regular, their eyes and hair dark, and 27 their skin the color which would be produced by the drops which 28 fell from a pricked finger into a glass of milk. These are the Hindus 29 in their pure type, untainted and untrammelled.

30 As to their property laws, the wife's dowry belongs to her 31 exclusively, never becoming the property of the husband. She can 32 sell or give away without his consent. The gifts from any one to 33 herself, including those of the husband, are hers alone, to do with 34 as she pleases.

35 Woman walks abroad without fear; she is as free as perfect 36 trust in those about her can render her. There is no zenana in the 37 Himalayas, and there is a part of India which the missionaries 38 never reach. These villages are most difficult of access. These 39 people, untouched by Mahometan influence, can but be reached by 40 wearisome and toilsome climbing, and are unknown to Mahometan 41 and Christian alike.

42 43 INDIA'S FIRST INHABITANTS

44 In the forest of India are found races of wild people--very 45 wild, even to cannibalism. These are the original Indians and never 46 were Aryan or Hindu.

47 As the Hindus settled in the country proper and spread over 48 its vast area, corruptions of many kinds found home among them.
49 The sun was scorching and the men exposed to it were dark in 1 color.

2 Five generations are but needed to change the transparent
3 glow of the white complexion of the dwellers of the Himalaya
4 Mountains to the bronzed hue of the Hindu of India.

5 Kananda has one brother very fair and one darker than 6 himself. His father and mother are fair. The women are apt to be, 7 the cruel etiquette of the Zenana established for protection from 8 the Mohammedans keeping them within doors, fairer. Kananda is 9 thirty-one years old.

10

11 A CLIP AT AMERICAN MEN

12 Kananda asserts with an amused twinkle in his eye that 13 American men amuse him. They profess to worship woman, but in 14 his opinion they simply worship youth and beauty. They never fall in 15 love with wrinkles and gray hair. In fact he is under a strong 16 impression that American men once had a trick--inherited, to be 17 sure--of burning of their old women. Modern history calls this the 18 burning of witches. It was men who accused and condemned 19 witches, and it was usually the old age of the victim that led her to 20 the stake. So it is seen that burning women alive is not exclusively a 21 Hindu custom. He thought that if it were remembered that the 22 Christian church burned old women at the stake, there would be 23 less horror expressed regarding the burning of Hindu widows.

24

25 BURNINGS COMPARED

26 The Hindu widow went to her death agony amid feasting and 27 song, arrayed in her costliest garments and believing for the most 28 part that such an act meant the glories of Paradise for herself and 29 family. She was worshipped as a martyr and her name was 30 enshrined among the family records.

31 However horrible the rite appears to us, it is a bright picture 32 compared to the burning of the Christian witch who, considered a 33 guilty thing from the first, was thrown in a stifling dungeon, 34 tortured cruelly to extort confession, subjected to an infamous trial, 35 dragged amid jeering to the stake and consoled amid her sufferings 36 by the bystander's comfort that the burning of her body was but the 37 symbol for hell's everlasting fires, in which her soul would suffer 38 even greater torment.

39

40 MOTHERS ARE SACRED

41 Kananda says the Hindu is taught to worship the principle of 42 motherhood. The mother outranks the wife. The mother is holy. The 43 motherhood of God is more in his mind than the fatherhood.

44 All women, whatever the caste, are exempt from corporal 45 punishment. Should a woman murder, her head is spared. She may 46 be placed astride a donkey facing his tail. Thus riding through the 47 streets a drummer shouts her crime, after which she is free, her 48 humiliation being deemed sufficient punishment to serve as a

1 preventive for further crime.

2 Should she care to repent, there are religious houses open to 3 her, where she can become purified or she can at her own option at 4 once enter the class of monks and so become a holy woman.

5 The question was put to Mr. Kananda whether the freedom 6 thus allowed in the joining the monks without a superior over them 7 did not tend to hypocrisy among the order, as he claims, of the 8 purest of Hindu philosophers. Kananda assented, but explained that 9 there is no one between the people and the monk. The monk has 10 broken down all caste. A Brahmin will not touch the low-caste 11 Hindu but let him or her become a monk and the mightiest will 12 prostrate himself before the low-caste monk.

13 The people are obliged to take care of the monk, but only as 14 long as they believe in his sincerity. Once condemned for hypocrisy 15 he is called a liar and falls to the depths of mendicancy--a mere 16 wandering beggar--inspiring no respect.

17 18 OTHER THOUGHTS

19 A woman has the right of way with even a prince. When the 20 studious Greeks visited Hindustan to learn of the Hindu, all doors 21 were open to them, but when the Mohammedan with his sword and 22 the Englishman with his bullets came their doors were closed. Such 23 guests were not welcomed. As Kananda deliciously words it: "When 24 the tiger comes we close our doors until he has passed by."

25 The United States, says Kananda, has inspired him with 26 hopes for great possibilities in the future, but our destiny, as that of 27 the world, rests not in the lawmakers of today, but in the women.
28 Mr. Kananda's words: "The salvation of your country depends upon 29 its women."

30 31 BUDDHISTIC INDIA

32 (Delivered at the Shakespeare Club, Pasadena, California, on 33 February 2, 1900)
34

35 Buddhistic India is our subject tonight. Almost all of you, 36 perhaps, have read Edwin Arnold's poem on the life of Buddha, and 37 some of you, perhaps, have gone into the subject with more 38 scholarly interest, as in English, French and German, there is quite 39 a lot of Buddhistic literature. Buddhism itself is the most interesting 40 of subjects, for it is the first historical outburst of a world religion.
41 There have been great religions before Buddhism arose, in India 42 and elsewhere, but, more or less, they are confined within their 43 own races. The ancient Hindus or ancient Jews or ancient Persians, 44 every one of them had a great religion, but these religions were 45 more or less racial. With Buddhism first begins that peculiar 46 phenomenon of religion boldly starting out to conquer the world.
47 Apart from its doctrines and the truths it taught and the message it 48 had to give, we stand face to face with one of the tremendous

1 cataclysms of the world. Within a few centuries of its birth, the 2 barefooted, shaven-headed missionaries of Buddha had spread over 3 all the then known civilised world, and they penetrated even 4 further--from Lapland on the one side to the Philippine Islands on 5 the other. They had spread widely within a few centuries of the 6 Buddha's birth; and in India itself, the religion of Buddha had at one 7 time nearly swallowed up two-thirds of the population.

8 The whole of India was never Buddhistic. It stood outside.
9 Buddhism had the same fate as Christianity had with the Jews; the 10 majority of the Jews stood aloof. So the old Indian religion lived on.
11 But the comparison stops here. Christianity, though it could not get 12 within its fold all the Jewish race, itself took the country. Where the 13 old religion existed--the religion of the Jews--that was conquered by 14 Christianity in a very short time and the old religion was dispersed, 15 and so the religion of the Jews lives a sporadic life in different parts 16 of the world. But in India this gigantic child was absorbed, in the 17 long run, by the mother that gave it birth, and today the very name 18 of Buddha is almost unknown all over India. You know more about 19 Buddhism than ninety-nine per cent of the Indians. At best, they of 20 India only know the name--"Oh, he was a great prophet, a great 21 Incarnation of God"--and there it ends. The island of Ceylon remains 22 to Buddha, and in some parts of the Himalayan country, there are 23 some Buddhists yet. Beyond that there are none. But [Buddhism]
24 has spread over all the rest of Asia.

25 Still, it has the largest number of followers of any religion, 26 and it has indirectly modified the teachings of all the other 27 religions. A good deal of Buddhism entered into Asia Minor. It was 28 a constant fight at one time whether the Buddhists would prevail or 29 the later sects of Christians. The [Gnostics] and the other sects of 30 early Christians were more or less Buddhistic in their tendencies, 31 and all these got fused up in that wonderful city of Alexandria, and 32 out of the fusion under Roman law came Christianity. Buddhism in 33 its political and social aspect is even more interesting than its 34 [doctrines] and dogmas; and as the first outburst of the tremendous 35 world-conquering power of religion, it is very interesting also.

36 I am mostly interested in this lecture in India as it has been 37 affected by Buddhism; and to understand Buddhism and its rise a 38 bit, we have to get a few ideas about India as it existed when this 39 great prophet was born.

40 There was already in India a vast religion with an organised 41 scripture--the Vedas; and these Vedas existed as a mass of 42 literature and not a book--just as you find the Old Testament, the 43 Bible. Now, the Bible is a mass of literature of different ages; 44 different persons are the writers, and so on. It is a collection. Now, 45 the Vedas are a vast collection. I do not know whether, if the texts 46 were all found--nobody has found all the texts, nobody even in India 47 has seen all the books--if all the books were known, this room would 48 contain them. It is a huge mass of literature, carried down from 49 generation to generation from God, who gave the scriptures. And 50 the idea about the scriptures in India became tremendously
51 orthodox. You complain of your orthodoxies in book-worship. If you 52 get the Hindus' idea, where will you be? The Hindus think the 1 Veda are the direct knowledge of God, that God has created the 2 whole universe in and through the Veda, and that the whole

3 universe exists because it is in the Veda. The cow exists outside 4 because the word "cow" is in the Veda; man exists outside because 5 of the word in the Veda. Here you see the beginning of that theory 6 which later on Christians developed and expressed in the text: "In 7 the beginning was the Word and the Word was with God." It is the 8 old, ancient theory of India. Upon that is based the whole idea of 9 the scriptures. And mind, every word is the power of God. The word 10 is only the external manifestation on the material plane. So, all this 11 manifestation is just the manifestation on the material plane; and 12 the Word is the Veda, and Sanskrit is the language of God. God 13 spoke once. He spoke in Sanskrit, and that is the divine language.
14 Every other language, they consider, is no more than the braying of 15 animals; and to denote that they call every other nation that does 16 not speak Sanskrit [Mlechchhas], the same word as the barbarians 17 of the Greeks. They are braying, not talking, and Sanskrit is the 18 divine language.

19 Now, the Veda were not written by anybody; they were 20 eternally coexistent with God. God is infinite. So is knowledge, and 21 through this knowledge is created the world. Their idea of ethics is 22 [that a thing is good] because the law says so. Everything is 23 bounded by that book--nothing [can go] beyond that, because the 24 knowledge of God--you cannot get beyond that. That is Indian 25 orthodoxy.

26 In the latter part of the Veda, you see the highest, the 27 spiritual. In the early portions, there is the crude part. You quote a 28 passage from the Veda--"That is not good," you say. "Why?" "There 29 is a positive evil injunction"--the same as you see in the Old 30 Testament. There are numbers of things in all old books, curious 31 ideas, which we would not like in our present day. You say: "This 32 doctrine is not at all good; why, it shocks my ethics!" How did you 33 get your idea? [Merely] by your own thought? Get out! If it is 34 ordained by God, what right have you to question? When the Veda 35 say, "Do not do this; this is immoral," and so on, no more have you 36 the right to question at all. And that is the difficulty. if you tell a 37 Hindu, "But our Bible does not say so," [he will reply] "Oh, your 38 Bible! it is a babe of history. What other Bible could there be except 39 the Veda? What other book could there be? All knowledge is in 40 God. Do you mean to say that He teaches by two or more Bibles?
41 His knowledge came out in the Veda. Do you mean to say that He 42 committed a mistake, then? Afterwards, He wanted to do something 43 better and taught another Bible to another nation? You cannot bring 44 another book that is as old as Veda. Everything else--it was all 45 copied after that." They would not listen to you. And the Christian 46 brings the Bible. They say: "That is fraud. God only speaks once, 47 because He never makes mistakes."

48 Now, just think of that. That orthodoxy is terrible. And if you 49 ask a Hindu that he is to reform his society and do this and that, he 50 says: "Is it in the books? If it is not, I do not care to change. You 51 wait. In five [hundred] years more you will find this is good." If you 52 say to him, "This social institution that you have is not right," he

1 says, "How do you know that?" Then he says, "Our social 2 institutions in this matter are the better. Wait five [hundred] years
3 and your institutions will die. The test is the survival of the fittest.
4 You live, but there is not one community in the world which lives 5 five hundred years together. Look here! We have been standing all 6 the time." That is what they would say. Terrible orthodoxy! And 7 thank God I have crossed that ocean.

8 This was the orthodoxy of India. What else was there?
9 Everything was divided, the whole society, as it is today, though in a 10 much more rigorous form then--divided into castes. There is 11 another thing to learn. There is a tendency to make castes just 12 [now] going on here in the West. And I myself--I am a renegade. I 13 have broken everything. I do not believe in caste, individually. It has 14 very good things in it. For myself, Lord help me! I would not have 15 any caste, if He helps me. You understand what I mean by caste, 16 and you are all trying to make it very fast. It is a hereditary trade 17 [for] the Hindu. The Hindu said in olden times that life must be 18 made easier and smoother. And what makes everything alive?
19 Competition. Hereditary trade kills. You are a carpenter? Very good, 20 your son can be only a carpenter. What are you? A blacksmith?
21 Blacksmithing becomes a caste; your children will become 22 blacksmiths. We do not allow anybody else to come into that trade, 23 so you will be quiet and remain there. You are a military man, a 24 fighter? Make a caste. You are a priest? Make a caste. The 25 priesthood is hereditary. And so on. Rigid, high power! That has a 26 great side, and that side is [that] it really rejects competition. It is 27 that which has made the nation live while other nations have died-- 28 that caste. But there is a great evil: it checks individuality. I will 29 have to be a carpenter because I am born a carpenter; but I do not 30 like it. That is in the book, and that was before Buddha was born. I 31 am talking to you of India as it was before Buddha. And you are 32 trying today what you call socialism! Good things will come; but in 33 the long run you will be a [blight] upon the race. Freedom is the 34 watchword. Be free! A free body, a free mind, and a free soul! That 35 is what I have felt all my life; I would rather be doing evil freely 36 than good under bondage.

37 Well, these things that they are crying for now in the West, 38 they have done ages before there. Land has been nationalised . . .
39 by thousands all these things. There is blame upon this hide-bound 40 caste. The Indian people are intensely socialistic. But, beyond that, 41 there is a wealth of individualism. They are as tremendously 42 individualistic--that is to say, after laying down all these minute 43 regulations. They have regulated how you should eat, drink, sleep, 44 die! Everything is regulated there; from early morning to when you 45 go to bed and sleep, you are following regulations and law. Law, 46 law. Do you wonder that a nation should [live] under that? Law is 47 death. The more of the law in a country, the worse for that country.
48 [But to be an individual] we go to the mountains, where there is no 49 law, no government. The more of law you make, the more of police 50 and socialism, the more of blackguards there are. Now this 51 tremendous regulation of law [is] there. As soon as a child is born, 52 he knows that he is born a slave: slave to his caste, first; slave to his

1 nation, next. Slave, slave, slave. Every action--his drinking and his 2 eating. He must eat under a regular method; this prayer with the 3 first morsel, this prayer with the second, that prayer with the third, 4 and that prayer when he drinks water. Just think of that! Thus, from 5 day to day, it goes on and on.

6 But they were thinkers. They knew that this would not lead to 7 real greatness. So they left a way out for them all. After all, they 8 found out that all these regulations are only for the world and the 9 life of the world. As soon as you do not want money [and] you do 10 not want children--no business for this world--you can go out 11 entirely free. Those that go out thus were called Sannyasins--people 12 who have given up. They never organised themselves, nor do they 13 now; they are a free order of men and women who refuse to marry, 14 who refuse to possess property, and they have no law--not even the 15 Vedas bind them. They stand on [the] top of the Vedas. They are [at] 16 the other pole [from] our social institutions. They are beyond caste.
17 They have grown beyond. They are too big to be bound by these 18 little regulations and things. Only two things [are] necessary for 19 them: they must not possess property and they must not marry. If 20 you marry, settle down, or possess property, immediately the 21 regulations will be upon you; but if you do not do either of these 22 two, you are free. They were the living gods of the race, and ninety-23 nine per cent of our great men and women were to be found among 24 them.

25 In every country, real greatness of the soul means 26 extraordinary individuality, and that individuality you cannot get in 27 society. It frets and fumes and wants to burst society. If society 28 wants to keep it down, that soul wants to burst society into pieces.
29 And they made an easy channel. They say: "Well, once you get out 30 of society, then you may preach and teach everything that you like.
31 We only worship you from a distance. So there were the 32 tremendous, individualistic men and women, and they are the 33 highest persons in all society. If one of those yellow-clad shaven-34 heads comes, the prince even dare not remain seated in his 35 presence; he must stand. The next half hour, one of these 36 Sannyasins might be at the door of one of the cottages of the 37 poorest subjects, glad to get only a piece of bread. And he has to 38 mix with all grades; now he sleeps with a poor man in his cottage; 39 tomorrow [he] sleeps on the beautiful bed of a king. One day he 40 dines on gold plates in kings' palaces; the next day, he has not any 41 food and sleeps under a tree. Society looks upon these men with 42 great respect; and some of them, just to show their individuality, 43 will try to shock the public ideas. But the people are never shocked 44 so long as they keep to these principles: perfect purity and no 45 property.

46 These men, being very individualistic, they are always trying 47 new theories and plans--visiting in every country. They must think 48 something new; they cannot run in the old groove. Others are all 49 trying to make us run in the old groove, forcing us all to think alike.
50 But human nature is greater than any human foolishness. Our 51 greatness is greater than our weakness; the good things are 52 stronger than the evil things. Supposing they succeeded in making

1 us all think in the same groove, there we would be--no more 2 thought to think; we would die.

3 Here was a society which had almost no vitality, its members 4 pressed down by iron chains of law. They were forced to help each 5 other. There, one was under regulations [that were] tremendous: 6 regulations even how to breathe; how to wash face and hands; how 7 to bathe; how to brush the teeth; and so on, to the moment of death.
8 And beyond these regulations was the wonderful individualism of 9 the Sannyasin. There he was. And every day a new sect was rising 10 amongst these strong, individualistic men and women. The ancient 11 Sanskrit books tell about their standing out--of one woman who was 12 a very quaint, queer old thing; sometimes [she was] criticised, but 13 always people were afraid of her, obeying her quietly. So, there 14 were those great men and women of olden times.

15 And within this society so oppressed by regulations, the 16 power was in the hands of the priests. In the social scale, the 17 highest caste is [that of] the priest, and that being a business--I do 18 not know any other word, that is why I use the word "priest." It is 19 not in the same sense as in this country, because our priest is not a 20 man who teaches religion or philosophy. The business of a priest is 21 to perform all these minute details of regulations which have been 22 laid down. The priest is the man who helps in these regulations. He 23 marries you; to your funeral he comes to pray. So at all the 24 ceremonies performed upon a man or a woman, the priest must be 25 there. In society the ideal is marriage.

26 [Everyone] must marry. It is the rule. Without marriage, man 27 is not able to perform any religious ceremony; he is only half a man; 28 [he] is not competent to officiate--even the priest himself cannot 29 officiate as priest, except he marries. Half a man is unfit within 30 society.

31 Now, the power of the priests increased tremendously. . . .
32 The general policy of our national law-givers was to give the priests 33 this honour. They also had the same socialistic plan [you are] just 34 ready to [try] that checked them from getting money. What [was] 35 the motive? Social honour. Mind you, the priest in all countries is 36 the highest in the social scale, so much so in India that the poorest 37 Brahmin is greater than the greatest king in the country, by birth.
38 He is the nobleman in India. But the law does not allow him ever to 39 become rich. The law grinds him down to poverty--only, it gives him 40 this honour. He cannot do a thousand things; and the higher is the 41 caste in the social scale, the more restricted are its enjoyments. The 42 higher the caste, the less the number of kinds of food that man can 43 eat, the less the amount of food that man may eat, the less the 44 number of occupations [he may] engage in. To you, his life would be 45 only a perpetual train of hardships--nothing more than that. It is a 46 perpetual discipline in eating, drinking, and everything; and all 47 [penalties] which are required from the lower caste are required 48 from the higher ten times more. The lowest man tells a lie; his fine 49 is one dollar. A Brahmin, he must pay, say, a hundred dollars--[for] 50 he knows better.

51 But this was a grand organisation to start with. Later on, the

1 time came when they, these priests, began to get all the power in 2 their hands; and at last they forgot the secret of their power:
3 poverty. They were men whom society fed and clad so that they 4 might simply learn and teach and think. Instead of that, they began 5 to spread out their hands to clutch at the riches of society. They 6 became "money-grabbers"--to use your word--and forgot all these 7 things.

8 Then there was the second caste, the kingly caste, the 9 military. Actual power was in their hands. Not only so--they have 10 produced all of our great thinkers, and not the Brahmins. It is 11 curious. All our great prophets, almost without exception, belong to 12 the kingly caste. The great man Krishna was also of that caste; 13 Rama, he also, and all our great philosophers, almost all [sat] on 14 the throne; thence came all the great philosophers of renunciation.
15 From the throne came the voice that always cried, "Renounce."
16 These military people were the kings; and they [also] were the 17 philosophers; they were the speakers in the Upanishads. In their 18 brains and in their thought, they were greater than the priests, they 19 were more powerful, they were the kings--and yet the priests got all 20 the power and tried to tyrannise over them. And so that was going 21 on: political competition between the two castes, the priests and 22 the kings.

23 Another phenomenon is there. Those of you that have been to 24 hear the first lecture already know that in India there are two great 25 races: one is called the Aryan; the other, the non-Aryan. It is the 26 Aryan race that has the three castes; but the whole of the rest are 27 dubbed with one name, Shudras--no caste. They are not Aryans at 28 all. (Many people came from outside of India, and they found the 29 Shudras [there], the aborigines of the country). However it may be, 30 these vast masses of non-Aryan people and the mixed people among 31 them, they gradually became civilised and they began to scheme for 32 the same rights as the Aryans. They wanted to enter their schools 33 and their colleges; they wanted to take the sacred thread of the 34 Aryans; they wanted to perform the same ceremonies as the 35 Aryans, and wanted to have equal rights in religion and politics like 36 the Aryans. And the Brahmin priest, he was the great antagonist of 37 such claims. You see, it is the nature of priests in every country-- 38 they are the most conservative people, naturally. So long as it is a 39 trade, it must be; it is to their interest to be conservative. So this 40 tide of murmur outside the Aryan pale, the priests were trying to 41 check with all their might. Within the Aryan pale, there was also a 42 tremendous religious ferment, and [it was] mostly led by this 43 military caste.

44 There was already the sect of Jains [who are a] conservative 45 [force] in India [even] today. It is a very ancient sect. They declared 46 against the validity of the scriptures of the Hindus, the Vedas. They 47 wrote some books themselves, and they said: "Our books are the 48 only original books, the only original Vedas, and the Vedas that now 49 are going on under that name have been written by the Brahmins to 50 dupe the people." And they also laid the same plan. You see, it is 51 difficult for you to meet the arguments of the Hindus about the 52 scriptures. They also claimed [that] the world has been created

1 through those books. And they were written in the popular
2 language. The Sanskrit, even then, had ceased to be a spoken 3 language--[it had] just the same relation [to the spoken language] 4 as Latin has to modern Italian. Now, they wrote all their books in 5 Pali; and when a Brahmin said, "Why, your books are in Pali!" they 6 said, "Sanskrit is a language of the dead."

7 In their methods and manners they were different. For, you 8 see, these Hindu scriptures, the Vedas, are a vast mass of 9 accumulation--some of them crude--until you come to where religion 10 is taught, only the spiritual. Now, that was the portion of the Vedas 11 which these sects all claimed to preach. Then, there are three steps 12 in the ancient Vedas: first, work; second, worship; third, knowledge.
13 When a man purifies himself by work and worship, then God is 14 within that man. He has realised He is already there. He only can 15 have seen Him because the mind has become pure. Now, the man 16 can become purified by work and worship. That is all. Salvation is 17 already there. We don't know it. Therefore, work, worship, and 18 knowledge are the three steps. By work, they mean doing good to 19 others. That has, of course, something in it, but mostly, as to the 20 Brahmins, work means to perform these elaborate ceremonials: 21 killing of cows and killing of bulls, killing of goats and all sorts of 22 animals, that are taken fresh and thrown into the fire, and so on.
23 "Now" declared the Jains, "that is no work at all, because injuring 24 others can never be any good work"; and they said, "This is the 25 proof that your Vedas are false Vedas, manufactured by the priests, 26 because you do not mean to say that any good book will order us [to 27 be] killing animals and doing these things. You do not believe it. So 28 all this killing of animals and other things that you see in the Vedas, 29 they have been written by the Brahmins, because they alone are 30 benefited. It is the priest only [who] pockets the money and goes 31 home. So, therefore, it is all priestcraft."

1 It was one of their doctrines that there cannot be any God:
2 "The priests have invented God, that the people may believe in God
3 and pay them money. All nonsense! there is no God. There is nature 4 and there are souls, and that is all. Souls have got entangled into 5 this life and got round them the clothing of man you call a body.
6 Now, do good work." But from that naturally came the doctrine that 7 everything that is matter is vile. They are the first teachers of 8 asceticism. If the body is the result of impurity, why, therefore the 9 body is vile. If a man stands on one leg for some time--"All right, it 10 is a punishment." If the head comes up bump against a 11 wall--"Rejoice, it is a very good punishment." Some of the great 12 founders of the [Franciscan Order]--one of them St. Francis--were 13 going to a certain place to meet somebody; and St. Francis had one 14 of his companions with him, and he began to talk as to whether [the 15 person] would receive them or not, and this man suggested that 16 possibly he would reject them. Said St. Francis: "That is not 17 enough, brother, but if, when we go and knock at the door, the man 18 comes and drives us away, that is not enough. But if he orders us to 19 be bound and gives us a thorough whipping, even that is not 20 enough. And then, if he binds us hand and foot and whips us until 21 we bleed at every pore and throws us outside in the snow, that 22 would be enough."

23 These [same] ascetic ideas prevailed at that time. These Jains 24 were the first great ascetics; but they did some great work. "Don't 25 injure any and do good to all that you can, and that is all the 26 morality and ethics, and that is all the work there is, and the rest is 27 all nonsense--the Brahmins created that. Throw it all away." And 28 then they went to work and elaborated this one principle all 29 through, and it is a most wonderful ideal: how all that we call ethics 30 they simply bring out from that one great principle of non-injury 31 and doing good.

32 This sect was at least five hundred years before Buddha, and 33 he was five hundred and fifty years before Christ.¹⁰ Now the whole 34 of the animal creation they divide into five sections: the lowest have 35 only one organ, that of touch; the next one, touch and taste; the 36 next, touch, taste and hearing; the next, touch, taste, hearing and 37 sight. And the next, the five organs. The first two, the one-organ 38 and the two-organ, are invisible to the naked eye, and they are 39 everywhere in the water. A terrible thing, killing these [low forms of 40 life]. This bacteriology has come into existence in the modern world 41 only in the last twenty years and theretofore nobody knew anything 42 about it. They said, the lowest organs are only one-organ, touch; 43 nothing else. The next greater [were] also invisible. And they all 44 knew that if you boiled water these animals were all killed. So these 45 monks, if they died of thirst, they would never kill these animals by 46 drinking water. But if [a monk] stands at your door and you give 47 him a little boiled water, the sin is on you of killing the animals--and 48 he will get the benefit. They carry these ideas to ludicrous 49 extremes. For instance, in rubbing the body--if he bathes--he will

1 ¹⁰ ?The dates of the Jaina Buddha were not known accurately in 2 those days.
3

1 have to kill numbers of animalcules; so he never bathes. He gets 2 killed himself; he says that is all right. Life has no care for him; he 3 will get killed and save life.

4 These Jains were there. There were various other sects of 5 ascetics; and while this was going on, on the one hand, there was 6 the political jealousy between the priests and the kings. And then 7 these different dissatisfied sects [were] springing up everywhere.
8 And there was the greater problem: the vast multitudes of people 9 wanting the same rights as the Aryans, dying of thirst while the 10 perennial stream of nature went flowing by them, and no right to 11 drink a drop of water.

12 And that man was born--the great man Buddha. Most of you 13 know about him, his life. And in spite of all the miracles and stories 14 that generally get fastened upon any great man, in the first place, 15 he is one of the most historical prophets of the world. Two are very 16 historical: one, the most ancient, Buddha, and the other, 17 Mohammed, because both friends and foes are agreed about them.
18 So we are perfectly sure that there were such persons. As for the 19 other persons, we have only to take for granted what the disciples 20 say--nothing more. Our Krishna--you know, the Hindu prophet--he is 21 very mythological. A good deal of his life, and everything about him, 22 is written only by his disciples; and then there seem to be, 23 sometimes, three or four men, who all loom into one. We do not 24 know so clearly about many of the prophets; but as to this man, 25 because both friends and foes write of him, we are sure that there 26 was such a historical personage. And if we analyse through all the 27 fables and reports of miracles and stories that generally are heaped 28 upon a great man in this world, we find an inside core; and all 29 through the account of that man, he never did a thing for himself-- 30 never! How do you know that? Because, you see, when fables are 31 fastened upon a man, the fables must be tinged with that man's 32 general character. Not one fable tried to impute any vice or any 33 immorality to the man. Even his enemies have favourable accounts.

34 When Buddha was born, he was so pure that whosoever 35 looked at his face from a distance immediately gave up the 36 ceremonial religion and became a monk and became saved. So the 37 gods held a meeting. They said, "We are undone." Because most of 38 the gods live upon the ceremonials. These sacrifices go to the gods 39 and these sacrifices were all gone. The gods were dying of hunger 40 and [the reason for] it was that their power was gone. So the gods 41 said: "We must, anyhow, put this man down. He is too pure for our 42 life". And then the gods came and said: "Sir, we come to ask you 43 something. We want to make a great sacrifice and we mean to make 44 a huge fire, and we have been seeking all over the world for a pure 45 spot to light the fire on and could not find it, and now we have 46 found it. If you will lie down, on your breast we will make the huge 47 fire." "Granted," he says, "go on." And the gods built the fire high 48 upon the breast of Buddha, and they thought he was dead, and he 49 was not. And then they went about and said, "We are undone." And 50 all the gods began to strike him. No good. They could not kill him.
51 From underneath the voice comes: "Why [are you] making all these 52 vain attempts?" "Whoever looks upon you becomes purified and is

1 saved, and nobody is going to worship us." "Then, your attempt is 2 vain, because purity can never be killed." This fable was written by 3 his enemies, and yet throughout the fable the only blame that 4 attaches to Buddha is that he was so great a teacher of purity.

5 About his doctrines, some of you know a little. It is his 6 doctrines that appeal to many modern thinkers whom you call 7 agnostics. He was a great preacher of the brotherhood of mankind: 8 "Aryan or non-Aryan, caste or no caste, and sects or no sects, every 9 one has a same right to God and to religion and to freedom. Come 10 in all of you." But as to other things, he was very agnostic. "Be 11 practical." There came to him one day five young men, Brahmin 12 born, quarrelling about a question. They came to him to ask him the 13 way to truth. And one said: "My people teach this, and this is the 14 way to truth." The other said: "I have been taught this, and this is 15 the only way to truth." "Which is the right way, sir?" "Well, you say 16 your people taught this is truth and is the way to God?" "Yes." "But 17 did you see God?" "No, sir." "Your father?" "No, sir." "Your 18 grandfather?" "No, sir." "None of them saw God?" "No." "Well, and 19 your teachers--neither [any] of them saw God?" "No." And he asked 20 the same to the others. They all declared that none had seen God.
21 "Well," said Buddha, "in a certain village came a young man 22 weeping and howling and crying: 'Oh, I love her so! oh my, I love 23 her so!' And then the villagers came; and the only thing he said was 24 he loved her so. 'Who is she that you love?' 'I do not know.' 'Where 25 does she live?' 'I do not know'--but he loved her so. 'How does she 26 look?' 'That I do not know; but oh, I love her so.'" Then asked 27 Buddha: "Young man, what would you call this young man?" "Why, 28 sir, he was a fool!" And they all declared: "Why, sir, that young man 29 was certainly a fool, to be crying and all that about a woman, to say 30 he loved her so much and he never saw her or knew that she 31 existed or anything?" "Are you not the same? You say that this God 32 your father or your grandfather never saw, and now you are 33 quarrelling upon a thing which neither you nor your ancestors ever 34 knew, and you are trying to cut each other's throats about it." Then 35 the young men asked: "What are we to do?" "Now, tell me: did your 36 father ever teach that God is ever angry?" "No, sir." "Did your 37 father ever teach that God is evil?" "No, sir; He is always pure." 38 "Well, now, if you are pure and good and all that, do you not think 39 that you will have more chance to come near to that God than by 40 discussing all this and trying to cut each other's throats? Therefore, 41 say I: be pure and be good; be pure and love everyone." And that 42 was [all].

43 You see that non-killing of animals and charity towards 44 animals was an already existing doctrine when he was born; but it 45 was new with him--the breaking down of caste, that tremendous 46 movement. And the other thing that was new: he took forty of his 47 disciples and sent them all over the world, saying, "Go ye; mix with 48 all races and nations and preach the excellent gospel for the good 49 of all, for the benefit of all." And of course, he was not molested by 50 the Hindus. He died at a ripe old age. All his life he was a most 51 stern man: he never yielded to weakness. I do not believe many of 52 his doctrines; of course, I do not. I believe that the Vedantism of the 1 old Hindus is much more thoughtful, is a grander philosophy of life.

2 I like his method of work, but what I like [most] in that man is that, 3 among all the prophets of mankind, here was a man who never had 4 any cobwebs in his brain, and [who was] sane and strong. When 5 kingdoms were at his feet, he was still the same man, maintaining, 6 "I am a man amongst men."

7 Why, the Hindus, they are dying to worship somebody. You 8 will find, if you live long enough, I will be worshipped by our people.
9 If you go there to teach them something, before you die you will be 10 worshipped. Always trying to worship somebody. And living in that 11 race, the world-honoured Buddha, he died always declaring that he 12 was but man. None of his adulators could draw from him one 13 remark that he was anything different from any other man.

14 Those last dying words of his always thrilled through my 15 heart. He was old, he was suffering, he was near his death, and 16 then came the despised outcaste--he lives on carrion, dead animals; 17 the Hindus would not allow them to come into cities--one of these 18 invited him to a dinner and he came with his disciples, and the poor 19 Chanda, he wanted to treat this great teacher according to what he 20 thought would be best; so he had a lot of pig's flesh and a lot of rice 21 for him, and Buddha looked at that. The disciples were all 22 [hesitating], and the Master said: "Well, do not eat, you will be 23 hurt." But he quietly sat down and ate. The teacher of equality must 24 eat the [outcaste] Chanda's dinner, even the pig's flesh. He sat 25 down and ate it.

26 He was already dying. He found death coming on, and he 27 said, "Spread for me something under this tree, for I think the end 28 is near." And he was there under the tree, and he laid himself down; 29 he could not sit up any more. And the first thing he did, he said: "Go 30 to that Chanda and tell him that he has been one of my greatest 31 benefactors; for his meal, I am going to Nirvana." And then several 32 men came to be instructed, and a disciple said, "Do not go near 33 now, the Master is passing away." And as soon as he heard it, the 34 Lord said, "Let them come in." And somebody else came and the 35 disciples would not [let them enter]. Again they came, and then the 36 dying Lord said: "And O, thou Ananda, I am passing away. Weep not 37 for me. Think not for me. I am gone. Work out diligently your own 38 salvation. Each one of you is just what I am. I am nothing but one of 39 you. What I am today is what I made myself. Do you struggle and 40 make yourselves what I am. . . ."

41 These are the memorable words of Buddha: "Believe not 42 because an old book is produced as an authority. Believe not 43 because your father said [you should] believe the same. Believe not 44 because other people like you believe it. Test everything, try 45 everything, and then believe it, and if you find it for the good of 46 many, give it to all." And with these words, the Master passed away.

47 See the sanity of the man. No gods, no angels, no demons-- 48 nobody. Nothing of the kind. Stern, sane, every brain-cell perfect 49 and complete, even at the moment of death. No delusion. I do not 50 agree with many of his doctrines. You may not. But in my opinion-- 51 oh, if I had only one drop of that strength! The sanest philosopher

1 the world ever saw. Its best and its sanest teacher. And never that 2 man bent before even the power of the tyrannical Brahmins. Never 3 that man bent. Direct and everywhere the same: weeping with the 4 miserable, helping the miserable, singing with the singing, strong 5 with the strong, and everywhere the same sane and able man.

6 And, of course, with all this I can [not] understand his 7 doctrine. You know he denied that there was any soul in man--that 8 is, in the Hindu sense of the word. Now, we Hindus all believe that 9 there is something permanent in man, which is unchangeable and 10 which is living through all eternity. And that in man we call Atman, 11 which is without beginning and without end. And [we believe] that 12 there is something permanent in nature [and that we call Brahman, 13 which is also without beginning and without end]. He denied both 14 of these. He said there is no proof of anything permanent. It is all a 15 mere mass of change; a mass of thought in a continuous change is 16 what you call a mind. . . . The torch is leading the procession. The 17 circle is a delusion. [Or take the example of a river.] It is a 18 continuous river passing on; every moment a fresh mass of water 19 passing on. So is this life; so is all body, so is all mind.

20 Well, I do not understand this doctrine--we Hindus never 21 understood it. But I can understand the motive behind that. Oh, the 22 gigantic motive! The Master says that selfishness is the great curse 23 of the world; that we are selfish and that therein is the curse. There 24 should be no motive for selfishness. You are [like a river] passing 25 [on]--a continuous phenomenon. Have no God; have no soul; stand 26 on your feet and do good for good's sake--neither for fear of 27 punishment nor for [the sake of] going anywhere. Stand sane and 28 motiveless. The motive is: I want to do good, it is good to do good.
29 Tremendous! Tremendous! I do not sympathise with his 30 metaphysics at all; but my mind is jealous when I think of the moral 31 force. Just ask your minds which one of you can stand for one hour, 32 able and daring like that man. I cannot for five minutes. I would 33 become a coward and want a support. I am weak--a coward. And I 34 warm to think of this tremendous giant. We cannot approach that 35 strength. The world never saw [anything] compared to that 36 strength. And I have not yet seen any other strength like that. We 37 are all born cowards. If we can save ourselves [we care about 38 nothing else]. Inside is the tremendous fear, the tremendous 39 motive, all the time. Our own selfishness makes us the most arrant 40 cowards; our own selfishness is the great cause of fear and 41 cowardice. And there he stood: "Do good because it is good; ask no 42 more questions; that is enough. A man made to do good by a fable, 43 a story, a superstition--he will be doing evil as soon as the 44 opportunity comes. That man alone is good who does good for 45 good's sake, and that is the character of the man."

46 "And what remains of man?" was asked of the Master.
47 "Everything--everything. But what is in the man? Not the body not 48 the soul, but character. And that is left for all ages. All that have 49 passed and died, they have left for us their characters, eternal 50 possessions for the rest of humanity; and these characters are 51 working--working all through." What of Buddha? What of Jesus of 52 Nazareth? The world is full of their characters. Tremendous 1 doctrine!

2 Let us come down a little--we have not come to the subject at 3 all. (Laughter) I must add not a few words more this evening. . .

4 And then, what he did. His method of work: organisation. The 5 idea that you have today of church is his character. He left the 6 church. He organised these monks and made them into a body.
7 Even the voting by ballot is there five hundred and sixty years 8 before Christ. Minute organisation. The church was left and 9 became a tremendous power, and did great missionary work in 10 India and outside India. Then came, three hundred years after, two 11 hundred years before Christ, the great emperor Asoka, as he has 12 been called by your Western historians, the divinest of monarchs, 13 and that man became entirely converted to the ideas of Buddha, 14 and he was the greatest emperor of the world at that time. His 15 grandfather was a contemporary of Alexander, and since 16 Alexander's time, India had become more intimately connected with 17 Greece. . . . Every day in Central Asia some inscription or other is 18 being found. India had forgotten all about Buddha and Asoka and 19 everyone. But there were pillars, obelisks, columns, with ancient 20 letters which nobody could read. Some of the old Mogul emperors 21 declared they would give millions for anybody to read those; but 22 nobody could. Within the last thirty years those have been read; 23 they are all written in Pali.

24 The first inscription is: ". . ."

25 And then he writes this inscription, describing the terror and 26 the misery of war; and then he became converted to religion. Then 27 said he: "Henceforth let none of my descendants think of acquiring 28 glory by conquering other races. If they want glory, let them help 29 other races; let them send teachers of sciences and teachers of 30 religion. A glory won by the sword is no glory at all." And next you 31 find how he is sending missionaries even to Alexandria. . . . You 32 wonder that you find all over that part of the country sects rising 33 immediately, called Theraputae, Essenes, and all those-extreme 34 vegetarians, and so on. Now this great Emperor Asoka built 35 hospitals for men and for animals. The inscriptions show they are 36 ordering hospitals, building hospitals for men and for animals. That 37 is to say, when an animal gets old, if I am poor and cannot keep it 38 any longer, I do not shoot it down for mercy. These hospitals are 39 maintained by public charity. The coasting traders pay so much 40 upon every hundredweight they sell, and all that goes to the 41 hospital; so nobody is touched. If you have a cow that is old-- 42 anything--and do not want to keep it, send it to the hospital; they 43 keep it, even down to rats and mice and anything you send. Only, 44 our ladies try to kill these animals sometimes, you know. They go in 45 large numbers to see them and they bring all sorts of cakes; the 46 animals are killed many times by this food. He claimed that the 47 animals should be as much under the protection of the government 48 as man. Why should animals be allowed to be killed? [There] is no 49 reason. But he says, before prohibiting the killing of animals for 50 food even, [people] must be provided with all sorts of vegetables.
51 So he sent and collected all kinds of vegetables and planted them in 52 India; and then, as soon as these were introduced, the order was:

1 henceforth, whosoever kills an animal will be punished. A 2 government is to be a government; the animals must be protected 3 also. What business has a man to kill a cow, a goat, or any other 4 animal for food?

5 Thus Buddhism was and did become a great political power in 6 India. Gradually it also fell to pieces--after all, this tremendous 7 missionary enterprise. But to their credit it must be said, they never 8 took up the sword to preach religion. Excepting the Buddhist 9 religion, there is not one religion in the world which could not make 10 one step without bloodshed--not one which could get a hundred 11 thousand converts just by brain power alone. No, no. All through.
12 And this is just what you are going to do in the Philippines. That is 13 your method. Make them religious by the sword. That is what your 14 priests are preaching. Conquer and kill them that they may get 15 religion. A wonderful way of preaching religion!

16 You know how this great emperor Asoka was converted. This 17 great emperor in his youth was not so good. [He had a brother.]
18 And the two brothers quarrelled and the other brother defeated this 19 one, and the emperor in vengeance wanted to kill him. The emperor 20 got the news that he had taken shelter with a Buddhist monk. Now, 21 I have told you how our monks are very holy; no one would come 22 near them. The emperor himself came. He said, "Deliver the man to 23 me." Then the monk preached to him: "Vengeance is bad. Disarm 24 anger with love. Anger is not cured by anger, nor hatred by hatred.
25 Dissolve anger by love. Cure hatred by love. Friend, if for one evil 26 thou returnest another, thou curest not the first evil, but only add 27 one evil more to the world." The emperor said: "That is all right, 28 fool that you are. Are you ready to give your life--to give your life for 29 that man?" "Ready, sir." And he came out. And the emperor drew his 30 sword, and he said: "Get ready." And just [as he] was going to 31 strike, he looked at the face of the man. There was not a wink in 32 those eyes. The emperor stopped, and he said: "Tell me, monk, 33 where did you learn this strength, poor beggar, not to wink?" And 34 then he preached again. "Go on, monk," he said, "That is nice," he 35 said. Accordingly, he [fell under] the charm of the Master--Buddha's 36 charm.

37 There have been three things in Buddhism: the Buddha 38 himself, his law, his church. At first it was so simple. When the 39 Master died, before his death, they said: "What shall we do with 40 you?" "Nothing." "What monuments shall we make over you?" He 41 said: "Just make a little heap if you want, or just do not do 42 anything." By and by, there arose huge temples and all the 43 paraphernalia. The use of images was unknown before then. I say 44 they were the first to use images. There are images of Buddha and 45 all the saints, sitting about and praying. All this paraphernalia went 46 on multiplying with this organisation. Then these monasteries 47 became rich. The real cause of the downfall is here. Monasticism is 48 all very good for a few; but when you preach it in such a fashion 49 that every man or every woman who has a mind immediately gives 50 up social life, when you find over the whole of India monasteries, 51 some containing a hundred thousand monks, sometimes twenty 52 thousand monks in one building--huge, gigantic buildings, these

1 monasteries, scattered all over India and, of course, centres of 2 learning, and all that--who were left to procreate progeny, to 3 continue the race? Only the weaklings. All the strong and vigorous 4 minds went out. And then came national decay by the sheer loss of 5 vigour.

6 I will tell you of this marvellous brotherhood. It is great. But 7 theory and idea is one thing and actual working is another thing.
8 The idea is very great: practising non-resistance and all that, but if 9 all of us go out in the street and practise non-resistance, there 10 would be very little left in this city. That is to say, the idea is all 11 right, but nobody has yet found a practical solution [as to] how to 12 attain it.

13 There is something in caste, so far as it means blood; such a 14 thing as heredity there is, certainly. Now try to [understand]--why 15 do you not mix your blood with the Negroes, the American Indians?
16 Nature will not allow you. Nature does not allow you to mix your 17 blood with them. There is the unconscious working that saves the 18 race. That was the Aryan's caste. Mind you, I do not say that they 19 are not equal to us. They must have the same privileges and 20 advantages, and everything; but we know that if certain races mix 21 up, they become degraded. With all the strict caste of the Aryan 22 and non-Aryan, that wall was thrown down to a certain extent, and 23 hordes of these outlandish races came in with all their queer 24 superstitions and manners and customs. Think of this: not decency 25 enough to wear clothes, eating carrion, etc. But behind him came 26 his fetish, his human sacrifice, his superstition, his diabolism. He 27 kept it behind, [he remained] decent for a few years. After that he 28 brought all [these] things out in front. And that was degrading to 29 the whole race. And then the blood mixed; [intermarriages] took 30 place with all sorts of unmixable races. Then race fell down. But, in 31 the long run, it proved good. If you mix up Negroes and American 32 Indians surely this civilisation will fall down. But hundreds and 33 hundreds years after, out of this mixture will come a gigantic race 34 once more, stronger than ever; but, for the time being, you will 35 have to suffer. The Hindus believe--that is a peculiar belief, I think; 36 and I do not know, I have nothing to say to the contrary, I have not 37 found anything to the contrary--they believe there was only one 38 civilised race: the Aryan. Until he gives his blood, no other race can 39 be civilised. No teaching will do. The Aryan gives his blood to a 40 race, and then it becomes civilised. Teaching alone will not do. He 41 would be an example in your country: would you give your blood to 42 the Negro race? Then he would get higher culture.

43 The Hindu loves caste. I may have a little taint of that 44 superstition--I do not know. I love the Master's ideal. Great! But, for 45 me, I do not think that the working was very practical; and that was 46 one of the great causes that led to the downfall of the Indian nation, 47 in the long run. But then it brought about this tremendous fusion.
48 Where so many different races are all fusing, mingling--one man 49 white like you, or yellow, while another man as black as I am, and 50 all grades between these two extremes, and each race keeping 51 their customs, manners, and everything--in the long run a fusion is 52 taking place, and out of this fusion surely will come a tremendous

1 upheaval; but, for the time being, the giant must sleep. That is the 2 effect of all such fusion.

3 When Buddhism went down that way, there came the 4 inevitable reaction. There is but one entity in the whole world. It is 5 a unit world. The diversity is only eye-service. It is all one. The idea 6 of unity and what we call monism--without duality--is the idea in 7 India. This doctrine has been always in India; [it was] brought 8 forward whenever materialism and skepticism broke down 9 everything. When Buddhism broke down everything by introducing 10 all sorts of foreign barbarians into India--their manners and 11 customs and things--there was a reaction, and that reaction was led 12 by a young monk [Shankaracharya]. And [instead] of preaching new 13 doctrines and always thinking new thoughts and making sects, he 14 brought back the Vedas to life: and modern Hinduism has thus an 15 admixture of ancient Hinduism, over which the Vedantists 16 predominate. But, you see, what once dies never comes back to life, 17 and those ceremonials of [Hinduism] never came back to life. You 18 will be astonished if I tell you that, according to the old 19 ceremonials, he is not a good Hindu who does not eat beef. On 20 certain occasions he must sacrifice a bull and eat it. That is 21 disgusting now. However they may differ from each other in India, 22 in that they are all one--they never eat beef. The ancient sacrifices 23 and the ancient gods, they are all gone; modern India belongs to 24 the spiritual part of the Vedas.

25 Buddhism was the first sect in India. They were the first to 26 say: "Ours is the only path. Until you join our church, you cannot be 27 saved." That was what they said: "It is the correct path." But, being 28 of Hindu blood they could not be such stony-hearted sectarians as 29 in other countries. There will be salvation for you: nobody will go 30 wrong for ever. No, no. [There was] too much of Hindu blood in 31 them for that. The heart was not so stony as that. But you have to 32 join them.

33 But the Hindu idea, you know, is not to join anybody.
34 Wherever you are, that is a point from which you can start to the 35 centre. All right. It--Hinduism--has this advantage: its secret is 36 that doctrines and dogmas do not mean anything; what you are is 37 what matters. If you talk all the best philosophies the world ever 38 produced, [but] if you are a fool in your behaviour, they do not 39 count; and if in your behaviour you are good, you have more 40 chances. This being so, the Vedantist can wait for everybody.
41 Vedantism teaches that there is but one existence and one thing
42 real, and that is God. It is beyond all time and space and causation 43 and everything. We can never define Him. We can never say what 44 He is except [that] He is Absolute Existence, Absolute Knowledge, 45 Absolute Blissfulness. He is the only reality. Of everything He is 46 the reality; of you and me, of the wall and of [everything]
47 everywhere. It is His knowledge upon which all our knowledge 48 depends: it is His blissfulness upon which depends our pleasure;
49 and he is the only reality. And when man realises this, he knows 50 that "I am the only reality, because I am He--what is real in me is 51 He also". So that when a man is perfectly pure and good and 52 beyond all grossness, he finds, as Jesus found: "I and my Father are 1 one." The Vedantist has patience to wait for everybody. Wherever 2 you are, this is the highest: "I and my Father are one." Realise it. If 3 an image helps, images are welcome. If worshipping a great man

4 helps you, worship him. If worshipping Mohammed helps you, go 5 on. Only be sincere; and if you are sincere, says Vedantism, you are 6 sure to be brought to the goal. None will be left. Your heart, which 7 contains all truth, will unfold itself chapter after chapter, till you 8 know the last truth, that "I and my Father are one." And what is 9 salvation? To live with God. Where? Anywhere. Here this moment.
10 One moment in infinite time is quite as good as any other moment.
11 This is the old doctrine of the Vedas, you see. This was revived.
12 Buddhism died out in India. It left its mark on their charity, its 13 animals, etc. in India; and Vedantism is reconquering India from 14 one end to the other.

ADDRESSES ON BHAKTI-YOGA

The Preparation

The best definition given of Bhakti-Yoga is perhaps embodied in the verse: "May that love undying which the non-discriminating have for the fleeting objects of the senses never leave this heart of mine--of me who seek after Thee!" We see what a strong love men, who do not know any better, have for sense-objects, for money, dress, their wives, children, friends, and possessions. What a tremendous clinging they have to all these things! So in the above prayer the sage says, "I will have that attachment, that tremendous clinging, only to Thee." This love, when given to God, is called Bhakti. Bhakti is not destructive; it teaches us that no one of these faculties we have has been given in vain, that through them is the natural way to come to liberation. Bhakti does not kill out our tendencies, it does not go against nature, but only gives it a higher and more powerful direction. How naturally we love objects of the senses! We cannot but do so, because they are so real to us. We do not ordinarily see anything real about higher things, but when a man has seen something real beyond the senses, beyond the universe of senses, the idea is that he can have a strong attachment, only it should be transferred to the object beyond the senses, which is God. And when the same kind of love that has before been given to sense objects is given to God, it is called Bhakti. According to the sage Ramanuja, the following are the preparations for getting the intense love.

1 The first is Viveka. It is a very curious thing, especially to the 2 people of the West. It means, according to Ramanuja, 3 "discrimination of food". Food contains all the energies that go to 4 make up the forces of our body and mind; it has been transferred, 5 and conserved, and given new directions in my body, but my body
6 and mind have nothing essentially different from the food that I ate.
7 Just as the force and matter we find in the material world become 8 body and mind in us, so, essentially, the difference between body 9 and mind and the food we eat is only in manifestation. It being so, 10 that out of the material particles of our food we construct the 11 instrument of thought, and that from the finer forces lodged in 12 these particles we manufacture thought itself, it naturally follows, 13 that both this thought and the instrument will be modified by the 14 food we take. There are certain kinds of food that produce a certain 15 change in the mind; we see it every day. There are other sorts 16 which produce a change in the body, and in the long run have a 17 tremendous effect on the mind. It is a great thing to learn; a good 18 deal of the misery we suffer is occasioned by the food we take. You 19 find that after a heavy and indigestible meal it is very hard to 20 control the mind; it is running, running all the time. There are 21 certain foods which are exciting; if you eat such food, you find that 22 you cannot control the mind. It is obvious that after drinking a large 23 quantity of wine, or other alcoholic beverage, a man finds that his 24 mind would not be controlled; it runs away from his control.

25 According to Ramanuja, there are three things in food we 26 must avoid. First, there is Jati, the nature, or species of the food, 27 that must be considered. All exciting food should be avoided, as 28 meat, for instance; this should not be taken because it is by its very 29 nature impure. We can get it only by taking the life of another. We 30 get pleasure for a moment, and another creature has to give up its 31 life to give us that pleasure. Not only so, but we demoralise other 32 human beings. It would be rather better if every man who eats 33 meat killed the animals himself; but, instead of doing so, society 34 gets a class of persons to do that business for them, for doing 35 which, it hates them. In England no butcher can serve on a jury, the 36 idea being that he is cruel by nature. Who makes him cruel?
37 Society. If we did not eat beef and mutton, there would be no 38 butchers. Eating meat is only allowable for people who do very hard 39 work, and who are not going to be Bhaktas; but if you are going to 40 be Bhaktas, you should avoid meat. Also, all exciting foods, such as 41 onions, garlic, and all evil-smelling food, as "sauerkraut". Any food 42 that has been standing for days, till its condition is changed, any 43 food whose natural juices have been almost dried up, any food that 44 is malodorous, should be avoided.

45 The next thing that is to be considered as regards food is 46 still more intricate to Western minds--it is what is called Ashraya, 47 i.e. the person from whom it comes. This is rather a mysterious 48 theory of the Hindus. The idea is that each man has a certain aura 49 round him, and whatever thing he touches, a part of his character, 50 as it were, his influence, is left on it. It is supposed that a man's 51 character emanates from him, as it were, like a physical force, and 52 whatever he touches is affected by it. So we must take care who

1 touches our food when it is cooked; a wicked or immoral person 2 must not touch it. One who wants to be a Bhakta must not dine with 3 people whom he knows to be very wicked, because their infection
4 will come through the food.

5 The other form of purity to be observed is Nimatta, or 6 instruments. Dirt and dust must not be in food. Food should not be 7 brought from the market and placed on the table unwashed. We 8 must be careful also about the saliva and other secretions. The lips 9 ought never, for instance, to be touched with the fingers. The 10 mucous membrane is the most delicate part of the body, and all 11 tendencies are conveyed very easily by the saliva. Its contact, 12 therefore, is to be regarded as not only offensive, but dangerous.
13 Again, we must not eat food, half of which has been eaten by 14 someone else. When these things are avoided in food, it becomes 15 pure, and in a pure mind is a constant memory of God.

16 Let me tell you the same thing as explained by another 17 commentator, Shankaracharya, who takes quite another view. This 18 word for food, in Sanskrit, is derived from the root, meaning to 19 gather. Ahara means "gathered in". What is his explanation? He 20 says, the passage that when food is pure the mind will become pure 21 really means that lest we become subject to the senses we should 22 avoid the following: First as to attachment; we must not be 23 extremely attached to anything excepting God. See everything, do 24 everything, but be not attached. As soon as extreme attachment 25 comes, a man loses himself, he is no more master of himself, he is a 26 slave. If a woman is tremendously attached to a man, she becomes 27 a slave to that man. There is no use in being a slave. There are 28 higher things in this world than becoming a slave to a human being.
29 Love and do good to everybody, but do not become a slave. In the 30 first place, attachment degenerates us, individually, and in the 31 second place, makes us extremely selfish. Owing to this failing, we 32 want to injure others to do good to those we love. A good many of 33 the wicked deeds done in this world are really done through 34 attachment to certain persons. So all attachment excepting that for 35 good works should be avoided; but love should be given to 36 everybody. Then as to jealousy. There should be no jealousy in 37 regard to objects of the senses; jealousy is the root of all evil, and a 38 most difficult thing to conquer. Next, delusion. We always take one 39 thing for another, and act upon that, with the result that we bring 40 misery upon ourselves. We take the bad for the good. Anything that 41 titillates our nerves for a moment we think as the highest good, and 42 plunge into it immediately, but find, when it is too late, that it has 43 given us a tremendous blow. Every day, we run into this error, and 44 we often continue in it all our lives. When the senses, without being 45 extremely attached, without jealousy, or without delusion, work in 46 the world, such work or collection of impressions is called pure 47 food, according to Shankaracharya. When pure food is taken, the 48 mind is able to take in objects and think about them without 49 attachment, jealousy or delusion; then the mind becomes pure, and 50 then there is constant memory of God in that mind.

51 It is quite natural for one to say that Shankara's meaning is 52 the best, but I wish to add that one should not neglect Ramanuja's

1 interpretation either. It is only when you take care of the real 2 material food that the rest will come. It is very true that mind is the 3 master, but very few of us are not bound by the senses. We are all 4 controlled by matter; and as long as we are so controlled, we must 5 take material aids; and then, when we have become strong, we can 6 eat or drink anything we like. We have to follow Ramanuja in taking 7 care about food and drink; at the same time we must also take care
8 about our mental food. It is very easy to take care about material 9 food, but mental work must go along with it; then gradually our 10 spiritual self will become stronger and stronger, and the physical 11 self less assertive. Then will food hurt you no more. The great 12 danger is that every man wants to jump at the highest ideal, but 13 jumping is not the way. That ends only in a fall. We are bound down 14 here, and we have to break our chains slowly. This is called Viveka, 15 discrimination.

16 The next is called Vimoka, freedom from desires. He who 17 wants to love God must get rid of extreme desires; desire nothing 18 except God. This world is good so far as it helps one to go to the 19 higher world. The objects of the senses are good so far as they help 20 us to attain higher objects. We always forget that this world is a 21 means to an end, and not an end itself. If this were the end we 22 should be immortal here in our physical body; we should never die.
23 But we see people every moment dying around us, and yet, 24 foolishly, we think we shall never die; and from that conviction we 25 come to think that this life is the goal. That is the case with ninety-26 nine per cent of us. This notion should be given up at once. This 27 world is good so far as it is a means to perfect ourselves; and as 28 soon as it has ceased to be so, it is evil. So wife, husband, children, 29 money and learning, are good so long as they help us forward; but 30 as soon as they cease to do that, they are nothing but evil. If the 31 wife help us to attain God, she is a good wife; so with a husband or 32 a child. If money help a man to do good to others, it is of some 33 value; but if not, it is simply a mass of evil, and the sooner it is got 34 rid of, the better.

35 The next is Abhyasa, practice. The mind should always go 36 towards God. No other things have any right to withhold it. It 37 should continuously think of God, though this is a very hard task; 38 yet it can be done by persistent practice. What we are now is the 39 result of our past practice. Again, practice makes us what we shall 40 be. So practise the other way; one sort of turning round has 41 brought us this way, turn the other way and get out of it as soon as 42 you can. Thinking of the senses has brought us down here--to cry 43 one moment, to rejoice the next, to be at the mercy of every breeze, 44 slave to everything. This is shameful, and yet we call ourselves 45 spirits. Go the other way, think of God; let the mind not think of any 46 physical or mental enjoyment, but of God alone. When it tries to 47 think of anything else, give it a good blow, so that it may turn round 48 and think of God. As oil poured from one vessel to another falls in 49 an unbroken line, as chimes coming from a distance fall upon the 50 ear as one continuous sound, so should the mind flow towards God 51 in one continuous stream. We should not only impose this practice 52 on the mind, but the senses too should be employed. Instead of 1 hearing foolish things, we must hear about God; instead of talking 2 foolish words, we must talk about God. Instead of reading foolish

3 books, we must read good ones which tell of God.

4 The greatest aid to this practice of keeping God in memory 5 is, perhaps, music. The Lord says to Narada, the great teacher of 6 Bhakti, "I do not live in heaven, nor do I live in the heart of the Yogi, 7 but where My devotees sing My praise, there am I". Music has such 8 tremendous power over the human mind; it brings it to 9 concentration in a moment. You will find the dull, ignorant, low, 10 brute-like human beings, who never steady their mind for a moment 11 at other times, when they hear attractive music, immediately 12 become charmed and concentrated. Even the minds of animals, 13 such as dogs, lions, cats, and serpents, become charmed with 14 music.

15 The next is Kriya, work--doing good to others. The memory 16 of God will not come to the selfish man. The more we come out and 17 do good to others, the more our hearts will be purified, and God will 18 be in them. According to our scriptures, there are five sorts of 19 work, called the fivefold sacrifice. First, study. A man must study 20 every day something holy and good. Second, worship of God, 21 angels, or saints, as it may be. Third, our duty to our forefathers.
22 Fourth, our duty to human beings. Man has no right to live in a 23 house himself, until he builds for the poor also, or for anybody who 24 needs it. The householder's house should be open to everybody that 25 is poor and suffering; then he is a real householder. If he builds a 26 house only for himself and his wife to enjoy, he will never be a lover 27 of God. No man has the right to cook food only for himself; it is for 28 others, and he should have what remains. It is a common practice 29 in India that when the season's produce first comes into the market, 30 such as strawberries or mangoes, a man buys some of them and 31 gives to the poor. Then he eats of them; and it is a very good 32 example to follow in this country. This training will make a man 33 unselfish, and at the same time, be an excellent object-lesson to his 34 wife and children. The Hebrews in olden times used to give the first 35 fruits to God. The first of everything should go to the poor; we have 36 only a right to what remains. The poor are God's representatives; 37 anyone that suffers is His representative. Without giving, he who 38 eats and enjoys eating, enjoys sin. Fifth, our duty to the lower 39 animals. It is diabolical to say that all animals are created for men 40 to be killed and used in any way man likes. It is the devil's gospel, 41 not God's. Think how diabolical it is to cut them up to see whether a 42 nerve quivers or not, in a certain part of the body. I am glad that in 43 our country such things are not countenanced by the Hindus, 44 whatever encouragement they may get from the foreign 45 government they are under. One portion of the food cooked in a 46 household belongs to the animals also. They should be given food 47 every day; there ought to be hospitals in every city in this country 48 for poor, lame, or blind horses, cows, dogs, and cats, where they 49 should be fed and taken care of.

50 Then there is Kalyana, purity, which comprises the following:
51 Satya, truthfulness. He who is true, unto him the God of truth 52 comes. Thought, word, and deed should be perfectly true. Next

1 Arjava, straightforwardness, rectitude. The word means, to be 2 simple, no crookedness in the heart, no double-dealing. Even if it is 3 a little harsh, go straightforward, and not crookedly. Daya, pity, 4 compassion. Ahimsa, not injuring any being by thought, word, or 5 deed. Dana, charity. There is no higher virtue than charity. The 6 lowest man is he whose hand draws in, in receiving; and he is the 7 highest man whose hand goes out in giving. The hand was made to 8 give always. Give the last bit of bread you have even if you are 9 starving. You will be free in a moment if you starve yourself to 10 death by giving to another. Immediately you will be perfect, you will 11 become God. People who have children are bound already. They 12 cannot give away. They want to enjoy their children, and they must 13 pay for it. Are there not enough children in the world? It is only 14 selfishness which says, "I'll have a child for myself."

15 The next is Anavasada-not desponding, cheerfulness.
16 Despondency is not religion, whatever else it may be. By being 17 pleasant always and smiling, it takes you nearer to God, nearer 18 than any prayer. How can those minds that are gloomy and dull 19 love? If they talk of love, it is false; they want to hurt others. Think 20 of the fanatics; they make the longest faces, and all their religion is 21 to fight against others in word and act. Think of what they have 22 done in the past, and of what they would do now if they were given 23 a free hand. They would deluge the whole world in blood tomorrow 24 if it would bring them power. By worshipping power and making 25 long faces, they lose every bit of love from their hearts. So the man 26 who always feels miserable will never come to God. It is not 27 religion, it is diabolism to say, "I am so miserable." Every man has 28 his own burden to bear. If you are miserable, try to be happy, try to 29 conquer it.

30 God is not to be reached by the weak. Never be weak. You 31 must be strong; you have infinite strength within you. How else will 32 you conquer anything? How else will you come to God? At the same 33 time you must avoid excessive merriment, Uddharsha, as it is 34 called. A mind in that state never becomes calm; it becomes fickle.
35 Excessive merriment will always be followed by sorrow. Tears and 36 laughter are near kin. People so often run from one extreme to the 37 other. Let the mind be cheerful, but calm. Never let it run into 38 excesses, because every excess will be followed by a reaction.

39 These, according to Ramanuja, are the preparations for 40 Bhakti.

42 THE FIRST STEPS

44 The philosophers who wrote on Bhakti defined it as extreme 45 love for God. Why a man should love God is the question to be 46 solved; and until we understand that, we shall not be able to grasp 47 the subject at all. There are two entirely different ideals of life. A 48 man of any country who has any religion knows that he is a body 49 and a spirit also. But there is a great deal of difference as to the 50 goal of human life.

1 In Western countries, as a rule, people lay more stress on 2 the body aspect of man; those philosophers who wrote on Bhakti in 3 India laid stress on the spiritual side of man; and this difference 4 seems to be typical of the Oriental and Occidental nations. It is so 5 even in common language. In England, when speaking of death it is 6 said, a man gave up his ghost; in India, a man gave up his body. The 7 one idea is that man is a body and has a soul; the other that man is 8 a soul and has a body. More intricate problems arise out of this. It 9 naturally follows that the ideal which holds that man is a body and 10 has a soul lays all the stress on the body. If you ask why man lives, 11 you will be told it is to enjoy the senses, to enjoy possessions and 12 wealth. He cannot dream of anything beyond even if he is told of it; 13 his idea of a future life would be a continuation of this enjoyment.
14 He is very sorry that it cannot continue all the time here, but he has 15 to depart; and he thinks that somehow or other he will go to some 16 place where the same thing will be renewed. He will have the same 17 enjoyments, the same senses, only heightened and strengthened.
18 He wants to worship God, because God is the means to attain this 19 end. The goal of his life is enjoyment of sense-objects, and he comes 20 to know there is a Being who can give him a very long lease of 21 these enjoyments, and that is why he worships God.

22 On the other hand the Indian idea is that God is the goal of 23 life; there is nothing beyond God, and the sense-enjoyments are 24 simply something through which we are passing now in the hope of 25 getting better things. Not only so; it would be disastrous and 26 terrible if man had nothing but sense-enjoyments. In our everyday 27 life we find that the less the sense-enjoyments, the higher the life of 28 the man. Look at the dog when he eats. No man ever ate with the 29 same satisfaction. Observe the pig giving grunts of satisfaction as 30 he eats; it is his heaven, and if the greatest archangel came and 31 looked on, the pig would not even notice him. His whole existence is 32 in his eating. No man was ever born who could eat that way. Think 33 of the power of hearing in lower animals, the power of seeing; all 34 their senses are highly developed. Their enjoyment of the senses is 35 extreme; they become simply mad with delight and pleasure. And 36 the lower the man also, the more delight he finds in the senses. As 37 he gets higher, the goal becomes reason and love. In proportion as 38 these faculties develop, he loses the power of enjoying the senses.

39 For illustration's sake, if we take for granted that a certain 40 amount of power is given to man, and that that can be spent either 41 on the body, or the mind, or the spirit, then all the powers spent on 42 any one of these leaves just so much less to be expended on the 43 others. The ignorant or savage races have much stronger sensual 44 faculties than the civilised races, and this is, in fact, one of the 45 lessons we learn from history that as a nation becomes civilised the 46 nerve organisation becomes finer, and they become physically 47 weaker. Civilise a savage race, and you will find the same thing; 48 another barbarian race comes up and conquers it. It is nearly 49 always the barbarian race that conquers. We see then that if we 50 desire only to have sense-enjoyments all the time, we degrade 51 ourselves to the brute state. A man does not know what he is asking 52 for when he says, he wants to go to a place where his sense-

1 enjoyments will be intensified; that he can only have by going down 2 to the brutes.

3 So with men desiring a heaven full of sense-pleasures. They 4 are like swine wallowing in the mire of the senses, unable to see 5 anything beyond. This sense-enjoyment is what they want, and the 6 loss of it is the loss of heaven to them. These can never be Bhaktas 7 in the highest sense of the word; they can never be true lovers of 8 God. At the same time, though this lower ideal be followed for a 9 time, it will also in course of time change, each man will find that 10 there is something higher, of which he did not know, and so this 11 clinging to life and to things of the senses will gradually die away.
12 When I was a little boy at school, I had a fight with another 13 schoolfellow about some sweetmeats, and he being the stronger
14 boy snatched them from my hand. I remember the feeling I had; I 15 thought that boy was the most wicked boy ever born, and that as 16 soon as I grew strong enough I would punish him; there was no
17 punishment sufficient for his wickedness. We have both grown up 18 now, and we are fast friends. This world is full of babies to whom 19 eating and drinking, and all these little cakes are everything. They 20 will dream of these cakes, and their idea of future life is where 21 these cakes will be plentiful. Think of the American Indian who 22 believes that his future life will be in a place which is a very good 23 hunting ground. Each one of us has an ideal of heaven just as we 24 want it to be; but in course of time, as we grow older and see 25 higher things, we catch higher glimpses beyond. But let us not 26 dispense with our ideas of future life in the ordinary way of modern 27 times, by not believing in anything--that is destruction. The agnostic 28 who thus destroys everything is mistaken; the Bhakta sees higher.
29 The agnostic does not want to go to heaven, because he has none; 30 while the Bhakta does not want to go to heaven, because he thinks 31 it is child's play. What he wants is God.

32 What can be a higher end than God? God Himself is the 33 highest goal of man; see Him, enjoy Him. We can never conceive 34 anything higher, because God is perfection. We cannot conceive of 35 any higher enjoyment than that of love, but this word love has 36 different meanings. It does not mean the ordinary selfish love of the 37 world; it is blasphemy to call that love. The love for our children 38 and our wives is mere animal love; that love which is perfectly 39 unselfish is the only love, and that is of God. It is a very difficult 40 thing to attain to. We are passing through all these different loves-- 41 love of children, father, mother, and so forth. We slowly exercise the 42 faculty of love; but in the majority of cases we never learn anything 43 from it, we become bound to one step, to one person. In some cases 44 men come out of this bondage. Men are ever running after wives 45 and wealth and fame in this world; sometimes they are hit very 46 hard on the head, and they find out what this world really is. No one 47 in this world can really love anything but God. Man finds out that 48 human love is all hollow. Men cannot love though they talk of it. The 49 wife says she loves her husband and kisses him; but as soon as he 50 dies, the first thing she thinks about is the bank account, and what 51 she shall do the next day. The husband loves the wife; but when she 52 becomes sick and loses her beauty, or becomes haggard, or makes

1 a mistake, he ceases to care for her. All the love of the world is 2 hypocrisy and hollowness.

3 A finite subject cannot love, nor a finite object be loved.
4 When the object of the love of a man is dying every moment, and 5 his mind is also constantly changing as he grows, what eternal love 6 can you expect to find in the world? There cannot be any real love
7 but in God: why then all these loves? These are mere stages. There 8 is a power behind impelling us forward, we do not know where to 9 seek for the real object, but this love is sending us forward in 10 search of it. Again and again we find out our mistake. We grasp 11 something, and find it slips through our fingers, and then we grasp 12 something else. Thus on and on we go, till at last comes light; we 13 come to God, the only One who loves. His love knows no change
14 and is ever ready to take us in. How long would any of you bear 15 with me if I injured you? He in whose mind is no anger, hatred, or 16 envy, who never loses his balance, dies, or is born, who is he but 17 God? But the path of God is long and difficult, and very few people 18 attain Him. We are all babies struggling. Millions of people make a 19 trade of religion. A few men in a century attain to that love of God, 20 and the whole country becomes blessed and hallowed. When a son 21 of God appears, a whole country becomes blessed. It is true that 22 few such are born in any one century in the whole world, but all 23 should strive to attain that love of God. Who knows but you or I may 24 be the next to attain? Let us struggle therefore.

25 We say that a wife loves her husband. She thinks that her 26 whole soul is absorbed in him: a baby comes, and half of it goes out 27 to the baby, or more. She herself will feel that the same love of 28 husband does not exist now. So with the father. We always find that 29 when more intense objects of love come to us, the previous love 30 slowly vanishes. Children at school think that some of their 31 schoolfellows are the dearest beings that they have in life, or their 32 fathers or mothers are so; then comes the husband or wife, and 33 immediately the old feeling disappears, and the new love becomes 34 uppermost. One star arises, another bigger one comes, and then a 35 still bigger one, and at last the sun comes, and all the lesser lights 36 vanish. That sun is God. The stars are the smaller loves. When that 37 Sun bursts upon him, a man becomes mad, what Emerson calls "a 38 God-intoxicated man". Man becomes transfigured into God, 39 everything is merged in that one ocean of love. Ordinary love is 40 mere animal attraction. Otherwise why is the distinction between 41 the sexes? If one kneels before an image, it is dreadful idolatry; but 42 if one kneels before husband or wife, it is quite permissible!

43 The world presents to us manifold stages of love. We have 44 first to clear the ground. Upon our view of life the whole theory of 45 love will rest. To think that this world is the aim and end of life is 46 brutal and degrading. Any man who starts in life with that idea 47 degenerates himself. He will never rise higher, he will never catch 48 this glimpse from behind, he will always be a slave to the senses.
49 He will struggle for the dollar that will get him a few cakes to eat.
50 Better die than live that life. Slaves of this world, slaves of the 51 senses, let us rouse ourselves; there is something higher than this 52 sense-life. Do you think that man, the Infinite Spirit was born to be

1 a slave to his eyes, his nose, and his ears? There is an Infinite, 2 Omniscient Spirit behind that can do everything, break every bond;
3 and that Spirit we are, and we get that power through love. This is 4 the ideal we must remember. We cannot, of course, get it in a day.
5 We may fancy that we have it, but it is a fancy after all; it is a long,
6 long way off. We must take man where he stands, and help him
7 upwards. Man stands in materialism; you and I are materialists.
8 Our talking about God and Spirit is good; but it is simply the vogue 9 in our society to talk thus: we have learnt it parrot-like and repeat 10 it. So we have to take ourselves where we are as materialists, and 11 must take the help of matter and go on slowly until we become real 12 spiritualists, and feel ourselves spirits, understand the spirit, and 13 find that this world which we call the infinite is but a gross external 14 form of that world which is behind.

15 But something besides that is necessary. You read in the 16 Sermon on the Mount, "Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye 17 shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you." The difficulty is, 18 who seeks, and who wants? We all say we know God. One man 19 writes a book to disprove God, another to prove Him. One man 20 thinks it his duty to prove Him all his life; another, to disprove Him, 21 and he goes about to teach man there is no God. What is the use of 22 writing a book either to prove or disprove God? What does it matter 23 to most people whether there is a God or not? The majority of men 24 work just like a machine with no thought of God and feeling no 25 need of Him. Then one day comes Death and says, "Come." The 26 man says, "Wait a little, I want a little more time. I want to see my 27 son grow a little bigger." But Death says, "Come at once." So it goes 28 on. So goes poor John. What shall we say to poor John? He never 29 found anything in which God was the highest; perhaps he was a pig 30 in the past, and he is much better as a man. But there are some 31 who get a little awakening. Some misery comes, someone whom we 32 love most dies, that upon which we had bent our whole soul, that 33 for which we had cheated the whole world and perhaps our own 34 brother, that vanishes, and a blow comes to us. Perhaps a voice 35 comes in our soul and asks, "What after this?" Sometimes death 36 comes without a blow, but such cases are few. Most of us, when 37 anything slips through our fingers, say, "What next?" How we cling 38 to the senses! You have heard of a drowning man clutching at a 39 straw; a man will clutch at a straw first, and when it fails, he will 40 say someone must help him. Still people must, as the English 41 phrase goes, "sow their wild oats", before they can rise to higher 42 things.

43 Bhakti is a religion. Religion is not for the many, that is 44 impossible. A sort of knee-drill, standing up and sitting down, may 45 be suited for the many; but religion is for the few. There are in 46 every country only a few hundreds who can be, and will be 47 religious. The others cannot be religious, because they will not be 48 awakened, and they do not want to be. The chief thing is to want 49 God. We want everything except God, because our ordinary wants 50 are supplied by the external world; it is only when our necessities 51 have gone beyond the external world that we want a supply from 52 the internal, from God. So long as our needs are confined within the 1 narrow limits of this physical universe, we cannot have any need for 2 God; it is only when we have become satiated with everything there

3 that we look beyond for a supply. It is only when the need is there 4 that the demand will come. Have done with this child's play of the 5 world as soon as you can, and then you will feel the necessity of 6 something beyond the world, and the first step in religion will come.

7 There is a form of religion which is fashionable. My friend
8 has much furniture in her parlour; it is the fashion to have a 9 Japanese vase, so she must have one even if it costs a thousand 10 dollars. In the same way she will have a little religion and join a 11 church. Bhakti is not for such. That is not want. Want is that 12 without which we cannot live. We want breath, we want food, we 13 want clothes; without them we cannot live. When a man loves a 14 woman in this world, there are times when he feels that without her 15 he cannot live, although that is a mistake. When a husband dies, the 16 wife thinks she cannot live without him; but she lives all the same.
17 This is the secret of necessity: it is that without which we cannot 18 live; either it must come to us or we die. When the time comes that 19 we feel the same about God, or in other words, we want something 20 beyond this world, something above all material forces, then we 21 may become Bhaktas. What are our little lives when for a moment 22 the cloud passes away, and we get one glimpse from beyond, and 23 for that moment all these lower desires seem like a drop in the 24 ocean? Then the soul grows, and feels the want of God, and must 25 have Him.

26 The first step is: What do we want? Let us ask ourselves this 27 question every day, do we want God? You may read all the books in 28 the universe, but this love is not to be had by the power of speech, 29 not by the highest intellect, not by the study of various sciences. He 30 who desires God will get Love, unto him God gives Himself. Love is 31 always mutual, reflective. You may hate me, and if I want to love 32 you, you repulse me. But if I persist, in a month or a year you are 33 bound to love me. It is a well-known psychological phenomenon. As 34 the loving wife thinks of her departed husband, with the same love 35 we must desire the Lord, and then we will find God, and all books 36 and the various sciences would not be able to teach us anything. By 37 reading books we become parrots; no one becomes learned by 38 reading books. If a man reads but one word of love, he indeed 39 becomes learned. So we want first to get that desire.

40 Let us ask ourselves each day, "Do we want God?" When we 41 begin to talk religion, and especially when we take a high position 42 and begin to teach others, we must ask ourselves the same 43 question. I find many times that I don't want God, I want bread 44 more. I may go mad if I don't get a piece of bread; many ladies will 45 go mad if they don't get a diamond pin, but they do not have the 46 same desire for God; they do not know the only Reality that is in the 47 universe. There is a proverb in our language--If I want to be a 48 hunter, I'll hunt the rhinoceros; if I want to be a robber, I'll rob the 49 king's treasury. What is the use of robbing beggars or hunting ants?
50 So if you want to love, love God. Who cares for these things of the 51 world? This world is utterly false; all the great teachers of the world 52 found that out; there is no way out of it but through God. He is the 1 goal of our life; all ideas that the world is the goal of life are 2 pernicious. This world and this body have their own value, a 3 secondary value, as a means to an end; but the world should not be 4 the end.

5 Unfortunately, too often we make the world the end and God 6 the means. We find people going to church and saying, "God, give 7 me such and such; God, heal my disease." They want nice healthy 8 bodies; and because they hear that someone will do this work for 9 them, they go and pray to Him. It is better to be an atheist than to 10 have such an idea of religion. As I have told you, this Bhakti is the 11 highest ideal; I don't know whether we shall reach it or not in 12 millions of years to come, but we must make it our highest ideal, 13 make our senses aim at the highest. If we cannot get to the end, we 14 shall at last come nearer to it. We have slowly to work through the 15 world and the senses to reach God.

16 17 THE TEACHER OF SPIRITUALITY

18
19 Every soul is destined to be perfect, and every being, in the 20 end, will attain to that state. Whatever we are now is the result of 21 whatever we have been or thought in the past; and whatever we 22 shall be in the future will be the result of what we do or think now.
23 But this does not preclude our receiving help from outside; the 24 possibilities of the soul are always quickened by some help from 25 outside, so much so that in the vast majority of cases in the world, 26 help from outside is almost absolutely necessary. Quickening 27 influence comes from outside, and that works upon our own 28 potentialities; and then the growth begins, spiritual life comes, and 29 man becomes holy and perfect in the end. This quickening impulse 30 which comes from outside cannot be received from books; the soul 31 can receive impulse only from another soul, and from nothing else.
32 We may study books all our lives, we may become very intellectual, 33 but in the end we find we have not developed at all spiritually. It 34 does not follow that a high order of intellectual development always 35 shows an equivalent development of the spiritual side of man; on 36 the other hand, we find cases almost every day where the intellect 37 has become very highly developed at the expense of the spirit.

38 Now in intellectual development we can get much help from 39 books, but in spiritual development, almost nothing. In studying 40 books, sometimes we are deluded into thinking that we are being 41 spiritually helped; but if we analyse ourselves, we shall find that 42 only our intellect has been helped, and not the spirit. That is the 43 reason why almost everyone of us can speak most wonderfully on 44 spiritual subjects, but when the time of action comes, we find 45 ourselves so woefully deficient. It is because books cannot give us 46 that impulse from outside. To quicken the spirit, that impulse must 47 come from another soul.

48 That soul from which this impulse comes is called the Guru, 49 the teacher; and the soul to which the impulse is conveyed is called 50 the disciple, the student. In order to convey this impulse, in the first 1 place, the soul from which it comes must possess the power of 2 transmitting it, as it were, to another; and in the second place, the 3 object to which it is transmitted must be fit to receive it. The seed 4 must be a living seed, and the field must be ready ploughed; and 5 when both these conditions are fulfilled, a wonderful growth of 6 religion takes place. "The speaker of religion must be wonderful, so 7 must the hearer be"; and when both of these are really wonderful, 8 extraordinary, then alone will splendid spiritual growth come, and 9 not otherwise. These are real teachers, and these are the real 10 students. Besides these, the others are playing with spirituality--just 11 having a little intellectual struggle, just satisfying a little curiosity-- 12 but are standing only on the outward fringes of the horizon of 13 religion. There is some value in that; real thirst for religion may 14 thus be awakened; all comes in course of time. It is a mysterious 15 law of nature that as soon as the field is ready the seed must come, 16 as soon as the soul wants religion, the transmitter of religious 17 force must come. "The seeking sinner meeteth the seeking Saviour."

18 When the power that attracts in the receiving soul is full and ripe, 19 the power which answers to that attraction must come.

20 But there are great dangers in the way. There is the danger 21 to the receiving soul of mistaking its momentary emotion for real 22 religious yearning. We find that in ourselves. Many times in our 23 lives, somebody dies whom we loved; we receive a blow; for a 24 moment we think that this world is slipping between our fingers, 25 and that we want something higher, and that we are going to be 26 religious. In a few days that wave passes away, and we are left 27 stranded where we were. We oftentimes mistake such impulses for 28 real thirst after religion, but so long as these momentary emotions 29 are thus mistaken, that continuous, real want of the soul will not 30 come, and we shall not find the "transmitter".

31 So when we complain that we have not got the truth, and 32 that we want it so much, instead of complaining, our first duty 33 ought to be to look into our own souls and find whether we really 34 want it. In the vast majority of cases we shall find that we are not 35 fit; we do not want; there was no thirst after the spiritual.

36 There are still more difficulties for the "transmitter". There 37 are many who, though immersed in ignorance, yet, in the pride of 38 their hearts, think they know everything, and not only do not stop 39 there, but offer to take others on their shoulders, and thus "the 40 blind leading the blind, they both fall into the ditch". The world is 41 full of these; everyone wants to be a teacher, every beggar wants to 42 make a gift of a million dollars. Just as the latter is ridiculous, so are 43 these teachers.

44 How are we to know a teacher then? In the first place, the 45 sun requires no torch to make it visible. We do not light a candle to 46 see the sun. When the sun rises, we instinctively become aware of 47 its rising; and when a teacher of men comes to help us, the soul will 48 instinctively know that it has found the truth. Truth stands on its 49 own evidences; it does not require any other testimony to attest it; 50 it is self-effulgent. It penetrates into the inmost recesses of our 51 nature, and the whole universe stands up and says, "This is Truth."
52 These are the very great teachers, but we get help from the lesser

1 ones also; and as we ourselves are not always sufficiently intuitive 2 to be certain of our judgment of the man from whom we receive,
3 there ought to be certain tests. There are certain conditions 4 necessary in the taught, and also the teacher.

5 The conditions necessary in the taught are purity, a real
6 thirst after knowledge, and perseverance. No impure soul can be 7 religious; that is the one great condition; purity in every way is 8 absolutely necessary. The other condition is a real thirst after 9 knowledge. Who wants ? That is the old question. We get whatever 10 we want--that is an old, old law. He who wants, gets. To want 11 religion is a very difficult thing, not so easy as we generally think.
12 Then we always forget that religion does not consist in hearing 13 talks, or in reading books, but it is a continuous struggle, a 14 grappling with our own nature, a continuous fight till the victory is 15 achieved. It is not a question of one or two days, of years, or of 16 lives, but it may be hundreds of lifetimes, and we must be ready for 17 that. It may come immediately, or it may not come in hundreds of 18 lifetimes; and we must be ready for that. The student who sets out 19 with such a spirit finds success.

20 In the teacher we must first see that he knows the secret of 21 the scriptures. The whole world reads scriptures--Bibles, Vedas, 22 Korans, and others; but they are only words, external arrangement, 23 syntax, the etymology, the philosophy, the dry bones of religion. The 24 teacher may be able to find what is the age of any book, but words 25 are only the external forms in which things come. Those who deal 26 too much in words and let the mind run always in the force of words 27 lose the spirit. So the teacher must be able to know the spirit of the 28 scriptures. The network of words is like a huge forest in which the 29 human mind loses itself and finds no way out. The various methods 30 of joining words, the various methods of speaking a beautiful 31 language, the various methods of explaining the dicta of the 32 scriptures, are only for the enjoyment of the learned. They do not 33 attain perfection; they are simply desirous to show their learning, 34 so that the world may praise them and see that they are learned 35 men. You will find that no one of the great teachers of the world 36 went into these various explanations of texts; on their part there is 37 no attempt at "text-torturing", no saying, "This word means this, 38 and this is the philological connection between this and that word."
39 You study all the great teachers the world has produced, and you 40 will see that no one of them goes that way. Yet they taught, while 41 others, who have nothing to teach, will take a word and write a 42 three-volume book on its origin and use. As my Master used to say, 43 what would you think of men who went into a mango orchard and 44 busied themselves in counting leaves, the size of twigs, the number 45 of branches, and so forth, while only one of them had the sense to 46 begin to eat the mangoes? So leave this counting of leaves and 47 twigs and this note-taking to others. That work has its own value in 48 its proper place, but not here in the spiritual realm. Men never 49 become spiritual through such work; you have never once seen a 50 strong spiritual man among these "leaf-counters". Religion is the 51 highest aim of man, the highest glory, but it does not require "leaf-52 counting". If you want to be a Christian, it is not necessary to know

1 whether Christ was born in Jerusalem or Bethlehem or just the 2 exact date on which he pronounced the Sermon on the Mount; you 3 only require to feel the Sermon on the Mount. It is not necessary to 4 read two thousand words on when it was delivered.

5 All that is for the enjoyment of the learned. Let them have it;
6 say amen to that. Let us eat the mangoes.

7 The second condition in the teacher is that he must be 8 sinless. The question was once asked me in England by a friend, 9 "Why should we look to the personality of a teacher? We have only 10 to judge of what he says, and take that up." Not so. If a man wants 11 to teach me something of dynamics or chemistry or any other 12 physical science, he may be of any character; he can still teach 13 dynamics or any other science. For the knowledge that the physical 14 sciences require is simply intellectual and depends on intellectual 15 strength; a man can have in such a case a gigantic intellectual 16 power without the least development of his soul. But in the spiritual 17 sciences it is impossible from first to last that there can be any 18 spiritual light in that soul which is impure. What can such a soul 19 teach? It knows nothing. Spiritual truth is purity. "Blessed are the 20 pure in heart, for they shall see God". In that one sentence is the 21 gist of all religions. If you have learnt that, all that has been said in 22 the past and all that it is possible to say in the future, you have 23 known; you need not look into anything else, for you have all that is 24 necessary in that one sentence; it could save the world, were all the 25 other scriptures lost. A vision of God, a glimpse of the beyond never 26 comes until the soul is pure. Therefore in the teacher of spirituality, 27 purity is the one thing indispensable; we must see first what he is, 28 and then what he says. Not so with intellectual teachers; there we 29 care more for what he says than what he is. With the teacher of 30 religion we must first and foremost see what he is, and then alone 31 comes the value of the words, because he is the transmitter. What 32 will he transmit, if he has not that spiritual power in him? To give a 33 simile: If a heater is hot, it can convey heat vibrations, but if not, it 34 is impossible to do so. Even so is the case with the mental 35 vibrations of the religious teacher which he conveys to the mind of 36 the taught. It is a question of transference, and not of stimulating 37 only our intellectual faculties. Some power, real and tangible, goes 38 out from the teacher and begins to grow in the mind of the taught.
39 Therefore the necessary condition is that the teacher must be true.

40 The third condition is motive. We should see that he does not 41 teach with any ulterior motive, for name, or fame, or anything else, 42 but simply for love, pure love for you. When spiritual forces are 43 transmitted from the teacher to the taught, they can only be 44 conveyed through the medium of love; there is no other medium 45 that can convey them. Any other motive, such as gain or name, 46 would immediately destroy the conveying medium; therefore all 47 must be done through love. One who has known God can alone be a 48 teacher. When you see that in the teacher these conditions are 49 fulfilled, you are safe; if they are not fulfilled, it is unwise to accept 50 him. There is a great risk, if he cannot convey goodness, of his 51 conveying wickedness sometimes. This must be guarded against; 52 therefore it naturally follows that we cannot be taught by anybody

1 and everybody.

2 The preaching of sermons by brooks and stones may be true
3 as a poetical figure but no one can preach a single grain of truth 4 until he has it in himself. To whom do the brooks preach sermons?
5 To that human soul only whose lotus of life has already opened.
6 When the heart has been opened, it can receive teaching from the 7 brooks or the stones--it can get some religious teaching from all 8 these; but the unopened heart will see nothing but brooks and 9 rolling stones. A blind man may come to a museum, but he comes 10 and goes only; if he is to see, his eyes must first be opened. This 11 eye-opener of religion is the teacher. With the teacher, therefore, 12 our relationship is that of ancestor and descendant; the teacher is 13 the spiritual ancestor, and the disciple is the spiritual descendant. It 14 is all very well to talk of liberty and independence, but without 15 humility, submission, veneration, and faith, there will not be any 16 religion. It is a significant fact that where this relation still exists 17 between the teacher and the taught, there alone gigantic spiritual 18 souls grow; but in those who have thrown it off religion is made into 19 a diversion. In nations and churches where this relation between 20 teacher and taught is not maintained spirituality is almost an 21 unknown quantity. It never comes without that feeling; there is no 22 one to transmit and no one to be transmitted to, because they are 23 all independent. Of whom can they learn? And if they come to learn, 24 they come to buy learning. Give me a dollar's worth of religion; 25 cannot I pay a dollar for it? Religion cannot be got that way!

26 There is nothing higher and holier than the knowledge which 27 comes to the soul transmitted by a spiritual teacher. If a man has 28 become a perfect Yogi it comes by itself, but it cannot be got in 29 books. You may go and knock your head against the four corners of 30 the world, seek in the Himalayas, the Alps, the Caucasus, the 31 Desert of Gobi or Sahara, or the bottom of the sea, but it will not 32 come until you find a teacher. Find the teacher, serve him as a child, 33 open your heart to his influence, see in him God manifested. Our 34 attention should be fixed on the teacher as the highest 35 manifestation of God; and as the power of attention concentrates 36 there, the picture of the teacher as man will melt away; the frame 37 will vanish, and the real God will be left there. Those that come to 38 truth with such a spirit of veneration and love--for them the Lord of 39 truth speaks the most wonderful words. "Take thy shoes from off 40 thy feet, for the place whereon thou standest is holy ground".
41 Wherever His name is spoken, that place is holy. How much more 42 so is a man who speaks His name, and with what veneration ought 43 we to approach a man out of whom come spiritual truths! This is 44 the spirit in which we are to be taught. Such teachers are few in 45 number, no doubt, in this world, but the world is never altogether 46 without them. The moment it is absolutely bereft of these, it will 47 cease to be, it will become a hideous hell and will just drop. These 48 teachers are the fair flowers of human life and keep the world
49 going; it is the strength that is manifested from these hearts of life 50 that keeps the bounds of society intact.

51 Beyond these is another set of teachers, the Christs of the 52 world. These Teachers of all teachers represent God Himself in the 1 form of man. They are much higher; they can transmit spirituality 2 with a touch, with a wish, which makes even the lowest and most 3 degraded characters saints in one second. Do you not read of how 4 they used to do these things? They are not the teachers about 5 whom I was speaking; they are the Teachers of all teachers, the 6 greatest manifestations of God to man; we cannot see God and they 7 are the only beings we are bound to worship.

8 No man hath "seen" God but as He is manifested in the Son.
9 We cannot see God. If we try to see Him, we make a hideous
10 caricature of God. There is an Indian story that an ignorant man 11 was asked to make an image of the God Shiva, and after days of 12 struggle he made an image of a monkey. So whenever we attempt 13 to make an image of God, we make a caricature of Him, because we 14 cannot understand Him as anything higher than man so long as we 15 are men. The time will come when we transcend our human nature
16 and know Him as He is; but so long as we are men we must worship
17 Him in man. Talk as we may, try as we may, we cannot see God 18 except as a man. We may deliver great intellectual speeches, 19 become very great rationalists, and prove that these tales of God as 20 all nonsense, but let us come to practical common sense. What is 21 behind this remarkable intellect? Zero, nothing, simply so much 22 froth. When next you hear a man delivering great intellectual 23 lectures against this worship of God, get hold of him and ask him 24 what is his idea of God, what he means by "omnipotence", and 25 "omniscience", and "omnipresent love", and so forth, beyond the 26 spelling of the words. He means nothing, he cannot formulate an 27 idea, he is no better than the man in the street who has not read a 28 single book. That man in the street, however, is quiet and does not 29 disturb the world, while the other man's arguments cause 30 disturbance. He has no actual perception, and both are on the same 31 plane.

32 Religion is realisation, and you must make the sharpest 33 distinction between talk and realisation. What you perceive in your 34 soul is realisation. Man has no idea of the Spirit, he has to think of 35 it with the forms he has before him. He has to think of the blue 36 skies, or the expansive fields, or the sea, or something huge. How 37 else can you think of God? So what are you doing in reality? You are 38 talking of omnipresence, and thinking of the sea. Is God the sea? A 39 little more common sense is required. Nothing is so uncommon as 40 common sense, the world is too full of talk. A truce to all this frothy 41 argument of the world. We are by our present constitution limited 42 and bound to see God as man. If the buffaloes want to worship God, 43 they will see Him as a huge buffalo. If a fish wants to worship God, 44 it will have to think of Him as a big fish. You and I, the buffalo, the 45 fish, each represents so many different vessels. All these go to the 46 sea to be filled with water according to the shape of each vessel. In 47 each of these vessels is nothing but water. So with God. When men 48 see Him, they see Him as man, and the animals as animal--each 49 according to his ideal. That is the only way you can see Him; you 50 have to worship Him as man, because there is no other way out of 51 it. Two classes of men do not worship God as man--the human brute 52 who has no religion, and the Paramahansa (highest Yogi) who has

1 gone beyond humanity, who has thrown off his mind and body and 2 gone beyond the limits of nature. All nature has become his Self. He 3 has neither mind nor body, and can worship God as God, as can a 4 Jesus or a Buddha. They do not worship God as man. The other 5 extreme is the human brute. You know how extremes look alike.
6 Similar is the case with the extreme of ignorance and the other 7 extreme of knowledge; neither of these worships anybody. The 8 extremely ignorant do not worship God, not being developed 9 enough to feel the need for so doing. Those that have attained the 10 highest knowledge also do not worship God--having realised and 11 become one with God. God never worships God. Between these two 12 poles of existence, if anyone tells you he is not going to worship 13 God as man, take care of him. He is an irresponsible talker, he is 14 mistaken; his religion is for frothy thinkers, it is intellectual 15 nonsense.

16 Therefore it is absolutely necessary to worship God as man, 17 and blessed are those races which has such a "God-man" to 18 worship. Christians have such a God-man in Christ; therefore cling 19 close to Christ; never give up Christ. That is the natural way to see 20 God; see God in man. All our ideas of God are concentrated there.
21 The great limitation Christians have is that they do not heed other 22 manifestations of God besides Christ. He was a manifestation of 23 God; so was Buddha; so were some others, and there will be 24 hundreds of others. Do not limit God to anywhere. Pay all the 25 reverence that you think is due to God, to Christ; that is the only 26 worship we can have. God cannot be worshipped; He is the 27 immanent Being of the universe. It is only to His manifestation as 28 man that we can pray. It would be a very good plan, when 29 Christians pray, to say, "in the name of Christ". It would be wise to 30 stop praying to God, and only pray to Christ. God understands 31 human failings and becomes a man to do good to humanity.
32 "Whenever virtue subsides and immorality prevails, then I come to 33 help mankind", says Krishna. He also says, "Fools, not knowing that 34 I, the Omnipotent and Omnipresent God of the universe, have taken 35 this human form, deride Me and think that cannot be." Their minds 36 have been clouded with demoniacal ignorance, so they cannot see 37 in Him the Lord of the universe. These great Incarnations of God 38 are to be worshipped. Not only so, they alone can be worshipped; 39 and on the days of their birth, and on the days when they went out 40 of this world, we ought to pay more particular reverence to them. In 41 worshipping Christ I would rather worship Him just as He desires; 42 on the day of His birth I would rather worship him by fasting than 43 by feasting--by praying. When these are thought of, these great 44 ones, they manifest themselves in our souls, and they make us like 45 unto them. Our whole nature changes, and we become like them.

46 But you must not mix up Christ or Buddha with hobgoblins 47 flying through the air and all that sort of nonsense. Sacrilege!
48 Christ coming into a spiritualistic seance to dance! I have seen that 49 pretence in this country. It is not in that way that these 50 manifestations of God come. The very touch of one of them will be 51 manifest upon a man; when Christ touches, the whole soul of man 52 will change, that man will be transfigured just as He was. His whole

1 life will be spiritualised; from every pore of his body spiritual power 2 will emanate. What were the great powers of Christ in miracles and 3 healing, in one of his character? They were low, vulgar things that 4 He could not help doing because He was among vulgar beings.
5 Where was this miracle-making done? Among the Jews; and the 6 Jews did not take Him. Where was it not done? In Europe. The 7 miracle-making went to the Jews, who rejected Christ, and the 8 Sermon on the Mount to Europe, which accepted Him. The human 9 spirit took on what was true and rejected what was spurious. The 10 great strength of Christ is not in His miracles or His healing. Any 11 fool could do those things. Fools can heal others, devils can heal 12 others. I have seen horrible demoniacal men do wonderful miracles.
13 They seem to manufacture fruits out of the earth. I have known 14 fools and diabolical men tell the past, present, and future. I have 15 seen fools heal at a glance, by the will, the most horrible diseases.
16 These are powers, truly, but often demoniacal powers. The other is 17 the spiritual power of Christ which will live and always has lived--an 18 almighty, gigantic love, and the words of truth which He preached.
19 The action of healing men at a glance is forgotten, but His saying, 20 "Blessed are the pure in heart", that lives today. These words are a 21 gigantic magazine of power--inexhaustible. So long as the human 22 mind lasts, so long as the name of God is not forgotten, these words 23 will roll on and on and never cease to be. These are the powers 24 Jesus taught, and the powers He had. The power of purity; that is a 25 definite power. So in worshipping Christ, in praying to Him, we 26 must always remember what we are seeking. Not those foolish 27 things of miraculous display, but the wonderful powers of the Spirit, 28 which make man free, give him control over the whole of nature, 29 take from him the badge of slavery, and show God unto him.

31 THE NEED OF SYMBOLS

32
33 Bhakti is divided into two portions. One is called Vaidhi, 34 formal or ceremonial; the other portion is called Mukhya, supreme.
35 The word Bhakti covers all the ground between the lowest form of 36 worship and the highest form of life. All the worship that you have 37 seen in any country in the world, or in any religion, is regulated by 38 love. There is a good deal that is simple ceremony; there is also a 39 good deal which, though not ceremony, is still not love, but a lower 40 state. Yet these ceremonies are necessary. The external part of 41 Bhakti is absolutely necessary to help the soul onward. Man makes 42 a great mistake when he thinks that he can at once jump to the 43 highest state. If a baby thinks he is going to be an old man in a day, 44 he is mistaken; and I hope you will always bear in mind this one 45 ideal, that religion is neither in books, nor in intellectual consent, 46 nor in reasoning. Reasoning, theories, documents, doctrines, books, 47 religious ceremonies, are all helps to religion: religion itself 48 consists in realisation. We all say, "There is a God." Have you seen 49 God? That is the question. You hear a man say, "There is a God in 50 heaven." You ask him if he has seen Him, and if he says he has, you 51 would laugh at him and say he is a maniac. With most people 52 religion is a sort of intellectual assent and goes no further than a

1 document. I would not call it religion. It is better to be an atheist 2 than to have that sort of religion. Religion does not depend on our 3 intellectual assent or dissent. You say there is a soul. Have you seen 4 the soul? How is it we all have souls and do not see them? You have 5 to answer the question and find out the way to see the soul. If not, it 6 is useless to talk of religion. If any religion is true, it must be able to 7 show us the soul and show us God and the truth in ourselves. If you 8 and I fight for all eternity about one of these doctrines or 9 documents, we shall never come to any conclusion. People have 10 been fighting for ages, and what is the outcome? Intellect cannot 11 reach there at all. We have to go beyond the intellect; the proof of 12 religion is in direct perception. The proof of the existence of this 13 wall is that we see it; if you sat down and argued about its existence 14 or non-existence for ages, you could never come to any conclusion; 15 but directly you see it, it is enough. If all the men in the world told 16 you it did not exist, you would not believe them, because you know 17 that all the evidence of your own eyes is superior to that of all the 18 doctrines and documents in the world.

19 To be religious, you have first to throw books overboard. The 20 less you read of books, the better for you; do one thing at a time. It 21 is a tendency in Western countries, in these modern times, to make 22 a hotchpotch of the brain; all sorts of unassimilated ideas run riot in 23 the brain and form a chaos without ever obtaining a chance to 24 settle down and crystallize into a definite shape. In many cases it 25 becomes a sort of disease, but this is not religion. Then some want 26 a sensation. Tell them about ghosts and people coming from the 27 North Pole or any other remote place, with wings or in any other 28 form, and that they are invisibly present and watching over them, 29 and make them feel uncanny, then they are satisfied and go home; 30 but within twenty-four hours they are ready for a fresh sensation.
31 This is what some call religion. This is the way to the lunatic 32 asylum, and not to religion. The Lord is not to be reached by the 33 weak, and all these weird things tend to weakness. Therefore go 34 not near them; they only make people weak, bring disorder to the 35 brain, weaken the mind, demoralise the soul, and a hopeless 36 muddle is the result. You must bear in mind that religion does not 37 consist in talk, or doctrine, or books, but in realisation; it is not 38 learning, but being. Everybody knows, "Do not steal", but what of 39 it? That man has really known who has not stolen. Everybody 40 knows, "Do not injure others", but of what value is it? Those who 41 have not done so have realised it, they know it and have built their 42 character on it. Religion is realising; and I will call you a 43 worshipper of God when you have become able to realise the Idea.
44 Before that it is the spelling of the word, and no more. It is this 45 power of realisation that makes religion. No amount of doctrines or 46 philosophies or ethical books, that you may have stuffed into your 47 brain, will matter much, only what you are and what you have 48 realised. So we have to realise religion, and this realisation of 49 religion is a long process. When men hear of something very high 50 and wonderful, they all think they will get that, and never stop for a 51 moment to consider that they will have to work their way up to it; 52 they all want to jump there. If it is the highest, we are for it. We 53 never stop to consider whether we have the power, and the result is

1 that we do not do anything. You cannot take a man with a pitchfork 2 and push him up there; we all have to work up gradually. Therefore 3 the first part of religion is Vaidhi Bhakti, the lower phase of 4 worship.

5 What are these lower phases of worship? They are various.
6 In order to attain to the state where we can realise, we must pass 7 through the concrete--just as you see children learn through the 8 concrete first--and gradually come to the abstract. If you tell a baby 9 that five times two is ten, it will not understand; but if you bring ten 10 things and show how five times two is ten, it will understand.
11 Religion is a long, slow process. We are all of us babies here; we 12 may be old, and have studied all the books in the universe, but we 13 are all spiritual babies. We have learnt the doctrines and dogmas, 14 but realised nothing in our lives. We shall have to begin now in the 15 concrete, through forms and words, prayers and ceremonies; and of 16 these concrete forms there will be thousands; one form need not be 17 for everybody. Some may be helped by images, some may not. Some 18 require an image outside, others one inside the brain. The man who 19 puts it inside says, "I am a superior man. When it is inside it is all 20 right; when it is outside, it is idolatry, I will fight it." When a man 21 puts an image in the form of a church or a temple, he thinks it is 22 holy; but when it is in a human form, he objects to it!

23 So there are various forms through which the mind will take 24 this concrete exercise; and then, step by step, we shall come to the 25 abstract understanding, abstract realisation. Again, the same form 26 is not for everyone; there is one form that will suit you, and another 27 will suit somebody else, and so on. All forms, though leading to the 28 same goal, may not be for all of us. Here is another mistake we 29 generally make. My ideal does not suit you; and why should I force 30 it on you? My fashion of building churches or reading hymns does 31 not suit you; why should I force it on you? Go into the world and 32 every fool will tell you that his form is the only right one, that every 33 other form is diabolical, and he is the only chosen man ever born in 34 the universe. But in fact, all these forms are good and helpful. Just 35 as there are certain varieties in human nature, so it is necessary 36 that there should be an equal number of forms in religion; and the 37 more there are, the better for the world. If there are twenty forms 38 of religion in the world, it is very good; if there are four hundred, so 39 much the better--there will be the more to choose from. So we 40 should rather be glad when the number of religions and religious 41 ideas increase and multiply, because they will then include every 42 man and help mankind more. Would to God that religions multiplied 43 until every man had his own religion, quite separate from that of 44 any other! This is the idea of the Bhakti-Yogi.

45 The final idea is that my religion cannot be yours, or yours 46 mine. Although the goal and the aim are the same, yet each one has 47 to take a different road, according to the tendencies of his mind; 48 and although these roads are various, they must all be true, 49 because they lead to the same goal. It cannot be that one is true 50 and the rest not. The choosing of one's own road is called in the 51 language of Bhakti, Ishta, the chosen way.

52 Then there are words. All of you have heard of the power of 1 words, how wonderful they are! Every book--the Bible, the Koran, 2 and the Vedas--is full of the power of words. Certain words have 3 wonderful power over mankind. Again, there are other forms, 4 known as symbols. Symbols have great influence on the human 5 mind. But great symbols in religion were not created indefinitely.

6 We find that they are the natural expressions of thought. We think 7 symbolically. All our words are but symbols of the thought behind, 8 and different people have come to use different symbols without 9 knowing the reason why. It was all behind, and these symbols are 10 associated with the thoughts; and as the thought brings the symbol 11 outside, so the symbol, on the contrary, can bring the thought 12 inside. So one portion of Bhakti tells about these various subjects of 13 symbols and words and prayers. Every religion has prayers, but one 14 thing you must bear in mind--praying for health or wealth is not 15 Bhakti, it is all Karma or meritorious action. Praying for any 16 physical gain is simply Karma, such as a prayer for going to heaven 17 and so forth. One that wants to love God, to be a Bhakta, must 18 discard all such prayers. He who wants to enter the realms of light 19 must first give up this buying and selling, this "shopkeeping" 20 religion, and then enter the gates. It is not that you do not get what 21 you pray for; you get everything, but such praying is a beggar's 22 religion. "Foolish indeed is he who, living on the banks of the 23 Ganga, digs a little well for water. A fool indeed is the man who, 24 coming to a mine of diamonds, seeks for glass beads." This body 25 will die some time, so what is the use of praying for its health again 26 and again? What is there in health and wealth? The wealthiest man 27 can use and enjoy only a little portion of his wealth. We can never 28 get all the things of this world; and if not, who cares? This body will 29 go, who cares for these things? If good things come, welcome; if 30 they go away, let them go. Blessed are they when they come, and 31 blessed are they when they go. We are striving to come into the 32 presence of the King of kings. We cannot get there in a beggar's 33 dress. Even if we wanted to enter the presence of an emperor, 34 should we be admitted? Certainly not. We should be driven out. This 35 is the Emperor of emperors, and in these beggar's rags we cannot 36 enter. Shopkeepers never have admission there; buying and selling 37 have no place there. As you read in the Bible, Jesus drove the 38 buyers and sellers out of the Temple. Do not pray for these little 39 things. If you seek only bodily comforts, where is the difference 40 between man and animals? Think yourselves a little higher than 41 that.

42 So it goes without saying that the first task in becoming a 43 Bhakta is to give up all desires of heaven and other things. The 44 question is how to get rid of these desires. What makes men 45 miserable? Because they are slaves, bound by laws, puppets in the 46 hand of nature, tumbled about like playthings. We are continually 47 taking care of this body that anything can knock down; and so we 48 are living in a constant state of fear. I have read that a deer has to 49 run on the average sixty or seventy miles every day, because it is 50 frightened. We ought to know that we are in a worse plight than the 51 deer. The deer has some rest, but we have none. If the deer gets 52 grass enough it is satisfied, but we are always multiplying our 53 wants. We have become so unhinged and unnatural that nothing

1 natural will satisfy us. We are always grasping after morbid things, 2 must have unnatural excitement--unnatural food, drink, 3 surroundings, and life. As to fear, what are our lives but bundles of 4 fear? The deer has only one class of fear, such as that from tigers, 5 wolves, etc. Man has the whole universe to fear.

6 How are we to free ourselves from this is the question.
7 Utilitarians say, "Don't talk of God and hereafter; we don't know 8 anything of these things, let us live happily in this world." I would 9 be the first to do so if we could, but the world will not allow us. As 10 long as you are a slave of nature, how can you? The more you 11 struggle, the more enveloped you become. You have been devising 12 plans to make you happy, I do not know for how many years, but 13 each year things seem to grow worse. Two hundred years ago in 14 the old world people had few wants; but if their knowledge 15 increased in arithmetical progression, their wants increased in 16 geometrical progression. We think that in salvation at least our 17 desires will be fulfilled, so we desire to go to heaven. This eternal, 18 unquenchable thirst! Always wanting something! When a man is a 19 beggar, he wants money. When he has money, he wants other 20 things, society; and after that, something else. Never at rest. How 21 are we to quench this? If we get to heaven, it will only increase 22 desire. If a poor man gets rich, it does not quench his desires, it is 23 only like throwing butter on the fire, increasing its bright flames.
24 Going to heaven means becoming intensely richer, and then desire 25 comes more and more. We read of many human things in heaven in 26 the different Bibles of the world; they are not always very good 27 there; and after all, this desire to go to heaven is a desire after 28 enjoyment. This has to be given up. It is too little, too vulgar a thing 29 for you to think of going to heaven. It is just the same as thinking, I 30 will become a millionaire and lord it over people. There are many of 31 these heavens, but through them you cannot gain the right to enter 32 the gates of religion and love.

33 34 THE CHIEF SYMBOLS 35

36 There are two Sanskrit words, Pratika and Pratima. Pratika 37 means coming towards, nearing. In all countries you find various 38 grades of worship. In this country, for instance, there are people 39 who worship images of saints, there are people who worship
40 certain forms and symbols. Then there are people who worship 41 different beings who are higher than men, and their number is 42 increasing very rapidly--worshippers of departed spirits. I read that 43 there are something like eight millions of them here. Then there are 44 other people who worship certain beings of higher grade--the 45 angels, the gods, and so forth. Bhakti-Yoga does not condemn any 46 one of these various grades, but they are all classed under one 47 name, Pratika. These people are not worshipping God, but Pratika, 48 something which is near, a step towards God. This Pratika worship 49 cannot lead us to salvation and freedom; it can only give us certain 50 particular things for which we worship them. For instance, if a man 51 worships his departed ancestors or departed friends, he may get

1 certain powers or certain information from them. Any particular gift 2 that is got from these objects of worship is called Vidya, particular 3 knowledge; but freedom, the highest aim, comes only by worship of 4 God Himself. Some Orientalists think, in expounding the Vedas, that 5 even the Personal God Himself is a Pratika. The Personal God may 6 be a Pratika, but the Pratikas are neither the Personal nor 7 Impersonal God. They cannot be worshipped as God. So it would be 8 a great mistake if people thought that by worshipping these 9 different Pratikas, either as angels, or ancestors, or Mahatmas (holy 10 men, saints), etc., or departed spirits, they could ever reach to 11 freedom. At best they can only reach to certain powers, but God 12 alone can make us free. But because of that they are not to be 13 condemned, their worship produces some result. The man who does 14 not understand anything higher may get some power, some 15 enjoyment, by the worship of these Pratikas; and after a long 16 course of experience, when he will be ready to come to freedom, he 17 will of his own accord give up the Pratikas.

18 Of these various Pratikas the most prevalent form is the 19 worship of departed friends. Human nature--personal love, love for 20 our friends--is so strong in us that when they die, we wish to see 21 them once more--clinging on to their forms. We forget that these 22 forms while living were constantly changing, and when they die, we 23 think they become constant, and that we shall see them so. Not only 24 so, but if I have a friend or a son who has been a scoundrel, as soon 25 as he dies, I begin to think he is the saintliest person in existence;
26 he becomes a god. There are people in India who, if a baby dies, do 27 not burn it, but bury it and build a temple over it; and that little 28 baby becomes the god of that temple. This is a very prevalent form 29 of religion in many countries, and there are not wanting 30 philosophers who think this has been the origin of all religions. Of 31 course they cannot prove it.

32 We must remember, however, that this worship of Pratikas 33 can never bring us to salvation or to freedom.

34 Secondly, it is very dangerous. The danger is that these 35 Pratikas, "nearing-stages", so far as they lead us on to a further 36 stage, are all right; but the chances are ninety-nine to one that we 37 shall stick to the Pratikas all our lives. It is very good to be born in a 38 church, but it is very bad to die there. To make it clearer, it is very 39 good to be born in a certain sect and have its training--it brings out 40 our higher qualities; but in the vast majority of cases we die in that 41 little sect, we never come out or grow. That is the great danger of 42 all these worships of Pratikas. One says that these are all the stages 43 which one has to pass, but one never gets out of them; and when 44 one becomes old, one still sticks to them. If a young man does not 45 go to church, he ought to be condemned. But if an old man goes to 46 church, he also ought to be condemned; he has no business with 47 this child's play any more; the church should have been merely a 48 preparation for something higher. What business has he any more 49 with forms and Pratikas and all the preliminaries?

50 Book worship is another strong form of this Pratika, the 51 strongest form. You find in every country that the book becomes the 52 God. There are sects in my country who believe that God incarnates

1 and becomes man, but even God incarnate as man must conform to 2 the Vedas, and if His teachings do not so conform, they will not take 3 Him. Buddha is worshipped by the Hindus, but if you say to them, 4 "If you worship Buddha, why don't you take His teachings?" they 5 will say, because they, the Buddhists, deny the Vedas. Such is the 6 meaning of book worship. Any number of lies in the name of a 7 religious book are all right. In India if I want to teach anything new, 8 and simply state it on my own authority, as what I think, nobody will 9 come to listen to me; but if I take some passage from the Vedas, 10 and juggle with it, and give it the most impossible meaning, murder 11 everything that is reasonable in it, and bring out my own ideas as 12 the ideas that were meant by the Vedas, all the fools will follow me 13 in a crowd. Then there are men preaching a sort of Christianity that 14 would frighten the ordinary Christian out of his wits; but they say, 15 "This is what Jesus Christ meant", and many come round them.
16 People do not want anything new, if it is not in the Vedas or the 17 Bible. It is a case of nerves: when you hear a new and striking 18 thing, you are startled; it is constitutional. It is much more so with 19 thoughts. The mind has been running in ruts, and to take up a new 20 idea is too much of a strain; so the idea has to be put near the ruts, 21 and then we slowly take it. It is a good policy, but bad morality.
22 Think of the mass of incongruities that reformers, and what you call 23 the liberal preachers, pour into society today. According to 24 Christian Scientists, Jesus was a great healer; according to the 25 Spiritualists, He was a great psychic; according to the 26 Theosophists, He was a Mahatma. All these have to be deduced 27 from the same text. There is a text in the Vedas which says, 28 "Existence (Sat) alone existed, O beloved, nothing else existed in 29 the beginning". Many different meanings are given to the word Sat 30 in this text. The Atomists say the word meant "atoms", and out of 31 these atoms the world has been produced. The Naturalists say it 32 meant "nature", and out of nature everything has come. The 33 Shunyavadins (maintainers of the Void) say it meant "nothing", 34 "zero", and out of nothing everything has been produced. The 35 Theists say it meant "God", and the Advaitists say it was "Absolute 36 Existence", and all refer to the same text as their authority.

37 These are the defects of book worship. But there is, on the 38 other hand, a great advantage in it; it gives strength. All religious 39 sects have disappeared excepting those that have a book. Nothing 40 seems to kill them.

41 Some of you have heard of the Parsees. They were the 42 ancient Persians, and at one time there were about a hundred 43 millions of them. The majority of them were conquered by the 44 Arabs, and converted to Mohammedanism. A handful fled from their 45 persecutors with their book, which is still preserving them. A book 46 is the most tangible form of God. Think of the Jews; if they had not 47 had a book, they would have simply melted into the world. But that 48 keeps them up; the Talmud keeps them together, in spite of the 49 most horrible persecution. One of the great advantages of a book is 50 that it crystallises everything in tangible and convenient form, and 51 is the handiest of all idols. Just put a book on an altar and everyone 52 sees it; a good book everybody reads. I am afraid I may be

1 considered partial. But, in my opinion books have produced more
2 evil than good. They are accountable for many mischievous
3 doctrines. Creeds all come from books, and books are alone
4 responsible for the persecution and fanaticism in the world. Books 5 in modern times are making liars everywhere. I am astonished at 6 the number of liars abroad in every country.

7 The next thing to be considered is the Pratima, or image, the 8 use of images. All over the world you will find images in some form 9 or other. With some, it is in the form of man, which is the best form.
10 If I wanted to worship an image I would rather have it in the form 11 of a man than of an animal, or building, or any other form. One sect 12 thinks a certain form is the right sort of image, and another thinks 13 it is bad. The Christian thinks that when God came in the form of a 14 dove it was all right, but if He comes in the form of a fish, as the 15 Hindus say, it is very wrong and superstitious. The Jews think if an 16 idol be made in the form of a chest with two angels sitting on it, and 17 a book on it, it is all right, but if it is in the form of a man or a 18 woman, it is awful. The Mohammedans think that when they pray, if 19 they try to form a mental image of the temple with the Caaba, the 20 black stone in it, and turn towards the west, it is all right, but if you 21 form the image in the shape of a church, it is idolatry. This is the 22 defect of image-worship. Yet all these seem to be necessary stages.

23 In this matter it is of supreme importance to think what we 24 ourselves believe. What we have realised, is the question. What 25 Jesus, or Buddha, or Moses did is nothing to us, unless we too do it 26 for ourselves. It would not satisfy our hunger to shut ourselves up 27 in a room and think of what Moses ate, nor would what Moses 28 thought save us. My ideas are very radical on these points.
29 Sometimes I think that I am right when I agree with all the ancient 30 teachers, at other times I think they are right when they agree with 31 me. I believe in thinking independently. I believe in becoming 32 entirely free from the holy teachers; pay all reverence to them, but 33 look at religion as an independent research. I have to find my light, 34 just as they found theirs. Their finding the light will not satisfy us at 35 all. You have to become the Bible, and not to follow it, excepting as 36 paying reverence to it as a light on the way, as a guide-post, a mark: 37 that is all the value it has. But these images and other things are 38 quite necessary. You may try to concentrate your mind, or even to 39 project any thought. You will find that you naturally form images in 40 your mind. You cannot help it. Two sorts of persons never require 41 any image--the human animal who never thinks of any religion, and 42 the perfected being who has passed through these stages. Between 43 these two points all of us require some sort of ideal, outside and 44 inside. It may be in the form of a departed human being, or of a 45 living man or woman. This is clinging to personality and bodies, and 46 is quite natural. We are prone to concretise. How could we be here 47 if we did not concretise? We are concreted spirits, and so we find 48 ourselves here on this earth. Concretisation has brought us here, 49 and it will take us out. Going after things of the senses has made us 50 human beings, and we are bound to worship personal beings, 51 whatever we may say to the contrary. It is very easy to say "Don't be 52 personal"; but the same man who says so is generally most

1 personal. His attachment for particular men and women is very 2 strong; it does not leave him when they die, he wants to follow them 3 beyond death. That is idolatry; it is the seed, the very cause of 4 idolatry; and the cause being there it will come out in some form. Is 5 it not better to have a personal attachment to an image of Christ or 6 Buddha than to an ordinary man or woman? In the West, people say 7 that it is bad to kneel before images, but they can kneel before a 8 woman, and say, "You are my life, the light of my eyes, my soul."
9 That is worse idolatry. What is this talk about my soul, my life? It 10 will soon go away. It is only sense-attachment. It is selfish love 11 covered by a mass of flowers. Poets give it a good name and throw 12 lavender-water and all sorts of attractive things over it. Is it not 13 better to kneel before a statue of Buddha or the Jina conqueror and 14 say, "Thou art my life"? I would rather do that.

15 There is another sort of Pratika which is not recognised in 16 Western countries, but is taught in our books. This teaches the 17 worship of mind as God. Anything that is worshipped as God is a 18 stage, a nearing, as it were. An example of this is the method of 19 showing the fine star known as Arundhati, near the group Pleiades.
20 One is shown a big star near to it, and when he has fixed his 21 attention on this and has come to know it, he is shown a finer and 22 still nearer star; and when he has fixed his attention on that, he is 23 led up to Arundhati. So all these various Pratikas and Pratimas lead 24 to God. The worship of Buddha and of Christ constitute a Pratika, a 25 drawing near to the worship of God. But this worship of Buddha
26 and of Christ will not save a man, he must go beyond them to Him
27 who manifested Himself as Jesus Christ, for God alone can give us 28 freedom. There are even some philosophers who say these should 29 be regarded as God; they are not Pratikas, but God Himself.
30 However, we can take all these different Pratikas, these different 31 stages of approach, and not be hurt by them; but if we think while 32 we are worshipping them that we are worshipping God, we are 33 mistaken. If a man worships Jesus Christ, and thinks he will be 34 saved by that, he is mistaken entirely. If a man thinks that by 35 worshipping an idol or the ghosts of spirits of the departed he will 36 be saved, he is entirely mistaken. We may worship anything by 37 seeing God in it, if we can forget the idol and see God there. We 38 must not project any image upon God. But we may fill any image 39 with that Life which is God. Only forget the image, and you are 40 right enough-for "Out of Him comes everything". He is everything.
41 We may worship a picture as God, but not God as the picture. God 42 in the picture is right, but the picture as God is wrong. God in the 43 image is perfectly right. There is no danger there. This is the real 44 worship of God. But the image-God is a mere Pratika.

45 The next great thing to consider in Bhakti is the "word", the 46 Namashakti, the power of the name. The whole universe is 47 composed of name and form. Whatever we see is either a 48 compound of name and form, or simply name with form which is a 49 mental image. So, after all, there is nothing that is not name and 50 form. We all believe God to be without form or shape, but as soon 51 as we begin to think of Him, He acquires both name and form. The 52 Chitta is like the calm lake, thoughts being like waves upon this

1 Chitta--and name and form are the normal ways in which these 2 waves arise; no wave can rise without name and form. The uniform 3 cannot be thought of; it is beyond thought; as soon as it becomes 4 thought and matter, it must have name and form. We cannot 5 separate these. It is said in many books that God created the 6 universe out of the Word. Shabdabrahman, in Sanskrit, is the 7 Christian theory of the Word. An old Indian theory, it was taken to 8 Alexandria by Indian preachers and was planted there. Thus the 9 idea of the Word and the Incarnation became fixed there.

10 There is deep meaning in the thought that God created 11 everything out of the Word. God Himself being formless, this is the 12 best way to describe the projection of forms, or the creation. The 13 Sanskrit word for creation is Srishti, projection. What is meant by 14 "God created things out of nothing"? The universe is projected out 15 of God. He becomes the universe, and it all returns to Him, and 16 again it proceeds forth, and again returns. Through all eternity it 17 will go on in that way. We have seen that the projection of anything 18 in the mind cannot be without name and form. Suppose the mind to 19 be perfectly calm, entirely without thought; nevertheless, as soon 20 as thought begins to rise it will immediately take name and form.
21 Every thought has a certain name and a certain form. In the same 22 way the very fact of creation, the very fact of projection is eternally 23 connected with name and form. Thus we find that every idea that 24 man has, or can have, must be connected with a certain name or 25 word as its counterpart. This being so, it is quite natural to suppose 26 that this universe is the outcome of mind, just as your body is the 27 outcome of your idea--your idea, as it were, made concrete and 28 externalised. If it be true, moreover, that the whole universe is built 29 on the same plan, then, if you know the manner in which one atom 30 is built, you can understand how the whole universe is built. If it is 31 true that in you, the body forms the gross part outside and the mind 32 forms the fine part inside, and both are eternally inseparable, then, 33 when you cease to have the body, you will cease to have the mind 34 also. When a man's brain is disturbed, his ideas also get disturbed, 35 because they are but one, the finer and the grosser parts. There are 36 not two such things as matter and mind.

37 As in a high column of air there are dense and rarefied 38 strata of one and the same element air, so it is with the body; it is 39 one thing throughout, layer on layer, from grosser to finer. Again, 40 the body is like the finger nails. As these continue growing even 41 when they are cut, so from our subtle ideas grows body after body.
42 The finer a thing the more persistent it is; we find that always. The 43 grosser it is the less persistent. Thus, form is the grosser and name 44 the finer state of a single manifesting power called thought. But 45 these three are one; it is the Unity and the Trinity, the three 46 degrees of existence of the same thing. Finer, the more condensed, 47 and most condensed. Wherever the one is, the others are there 48 also. Wherever name is, there is form and thought.

49 It naturally follows that if the universe is built upon the same 50 plan as the body, the universe also must have the same divisions of 51 form, name, and thought. The "thought" is the finest part of the 52 universe, the real motive power. The thought behind our body is

1 called soul, and the thought behind the universe is called God. Then 2 after that is the name, and last of is the form which we see and feel.
3 For instance, you are a particular person, a little universe in this 4 universe, a body with a particular form; then behind that a name, 5 John or Jane, and behind that again a thought; similarly there is this 6 whole universe, and behind that is the name, what is called the 7 "Word" in all religions, and behind that is God. The universal 8 thought is Mahat, as the Sankhyas call it, universal consciousness.
9 What is that name? There must be some name. The world is 10 homogeneous, and modern science shows beyond doubt that each 11 atom is composed of the same material as the whole universe. If 12 you know one lump of clay you know the whole universe. Man is the 13 most representative being in the universe, the microcosm, a small 14 universe in himself. So in man we find there is the form, behind that 15 the name, and behind that the thought, the thinking being. So this 16 universe must be on exactly the same plan. The question is: What is 17 that name? According to the Hindus that word is Om. The old 18 Egyptians also believed that. The Katha Upanishad says, "That, 19 seeking which a man practises Brahmacharya, I will tell you in 20 short what that is, that is Om. . . . This is Brahman, the Immutable 21 One, and is the highest; knowing this Immutable One, whatever one 22 desires one gets."

23 This Om stands for the name of the whole universe, or God.
24 Standing midway between the external world and God, it 25 represents both. But then we can take the universe piecemeal, 26 according to the different senses, as touch, as colour, as taste, and 27 in various other ways. In each case we can make of this universe 28 millions of universes from different standpoints, each of which will 29 be a complete universe by itself, and each one will have a name, 30 and a form, and a thought behind. These thoughts behind are 31 Pratikas. Each of them has a name. These names of sacred symbols 32 are used in Bhakti-Yoga. They have almost infinite power. Simply by 33 repetition of these words we can get anything we desire, we can 34 come to perfection. But two things are necessary. "The teacher 35 must be wonderful, so also must be the taught", says the Katha 36 Upanishad. Such a name must come from a person to whom it has 37 descended through right succession. From master to disciple, the 38 spiritual current has been coming from ancient times, bearing its 39 power. The person from whom such a word comes is called a Guru, 40 and the person to whom it goes is called Shishya, the disciple.
41 When the word has been received in the regular way, and when it 42 has been repeated, much advance has been made in Bhakti-Yoga.
43 Simply by the repetition of that word will come even the highest 44 state of Bhakti. "Thou hast so many names. Thou understandest 45 what is meant by them, all these names are Thine, and in each is 46 Thine infinite power; there is neither time nor place for repeating 47 these names, for all times and places are holy. Thou art so easy, 48 Thou art so merciful, how unfortunate am I, that I have no love for 49 Thee!"

51 THE ISHTA

52 The theory of Ishta, which I briefly referred to before, is a

1 subject requiring careful attention because with a proper 2 understanding of this, all the various religions of the world can be 3 understood. The word Ishta is derived from the root Ish, to desire, 4 choose. The ideal of all religions, all sects, is the same--the attaining 5 of liberty and cessation of misery. Wherever you find religion, you 6 find this ideal working in one form or other. Of course in lower 7 stages of religion it is not so well expressed; but still, well or ill-8 expressed, it is the one goal to which every religion approaches. All 9 of us want to get rid of misery; we are struggling to attain to 10 liberty--physical, mental, spiritual. This is the whole idea upon 11 which the world is working. Though the goal is one and the same, 12 there may be many ways to reach it; and these ways are 13 determined by the peculiarities of our nature. One man's nature is 14 emotional, another's intellectual, another's active, and so forth.
15 Again, in the same nature there may be many subdivisions. Take for 16 instance love, with which we are specially concerned in this subject 17 of Bhakti. One man's nature has a stronger love for children; 18 another has it for wife, another for mother, another for father, 19 another for friends. Another by nature has love for country, and a 20 few love humanity in the broadest sense; they are of course very 21 few, although everyone of us talks of it as if it were the guiding 22 motive power of our lives. Some few sages have experienced it. A 23 few great souls among mankind feel this universal love, and let us 24 hope that this world will never be without such men.

25 We find that even in one subject there are so many different 26 ways of attaining to its goal. All Christians believe in Christ; but 27 think, how many different explanations they have of him. Each 28 church sees him in a different light, from different standpoints. The 29 Presbyterian's eyes are fixed upon that one scene in Christ's life 30 when he went to the money-changers; he looks on him as a fighter.
31 If you ask a Quaker, perhaps he will say, "He forgave his enemies."
32 The Quaker takes that view, and so on. If you ask a Roman Catholic, 33 what point of Christ's life is the most pleasing to him, he, perhaps, 34 will say, "When he gave the keys to Peter". Each sect is bound to 35 see him in its own way.

36 It follows that there will be many divisions and sub-divisions 37 even of the same subject. Ignorant persons take one of these 38 subdivisions and take their stand upon it, and they not only deny 39 the right of every other man to interpret the universe according to 40 his own light, but dare to say that others are entirely wrong, and 41 they alone are right. If they are opposed, they begin to fight. They 42 say that they will kill any man who does not believe as they believe, 43 just as the Mohammedans do. These are people who think they are 44 sincere, and who ignore all others. But what is the position we want 45 to take in this Bhakti-Yoga? Not only that we would not tell others 46 that they are wrong, but that we would tell them that they are 47 right--all of these who follow their own ways. That way, which your 48 nature makes it absolutely necessary for you to take, is the right 49 way. Each one of us is born with a peculiarity of nature as the result 50 of our past existence. Either we call it our own reincarnated past 51 experience or a hereditary past; whatever way we may put it, we 52 are the result of the past--that is absolutely certain, through

1 whatever channels that past may have come. It naturally follows 2 that each one of us is an effect, of which our past has been the 3 cause; and as such, there is a peculiar movement, a peculiar train, 4 in each one of us; and therefore each one will have to find way for 5 himself.

6 This way, this method, to which each of us is naturally 7 adapted, is called the "chosen way". This is the theory of Ishta, and 8 that way which is ours we call our own Ishta. For instance, one 9 man's idea of God is that He is the omnipotent Ruler of the 10 universe. His nature is perhaps such. He is an overbearing man 11 who wants to rule everyone; he naturally finds God an omnipotent 12 Ruler. Another man, who was perhaps a schoolmaster, and severe, 13 cannot see any but a just God, a God of punishment, and so on.
14 Each one sees God according to his own nature; and this vision, 15 conditioned by our own nature, is our Ishta. We have brought 16 ourselves to a position where we can see that vision of God, and 17 that alone; we cannot see any other vision. You will perhaps 18 sometimes think of the teaching of a man that is the best and fits 19 you exactly, and the next day you ask one of your friends to go and 20 hear him; but he comes away with the idea that it was the worst 21 teaching he had ever heard. He is not wrong, and it is useless to 22 quarrel with him. The teaching was all right, but it was not fitted to 23 that man. To extend it a little further, we must understand that truth 24 seen from different standpoints can be truth, and yet not the same 25 truth.

26 This would seem at first to be a contradiction in terms, but 27 we must remember that an absolute truth is only one, while relative 28 truths are necessarily various. Take your vision of this universe, for 29 instance. This universe, as an absolute entity, is unchangeable, and 30 unchanged, and the same throughout. But you and I and everybody 31 else hear and see, each one his own universe. Take the sun. The sun 32 is one; but when you and I and a hundred other people stand at 33 different places and look at it, each one of us sees a different sun.
34 We cannot help it. A very little change of place will change a man's 35 whole vision of the sun. A slight change in the atmosphere will 36 make again a different vision. So, in relative perception, truth 37 always appears various. But the Absolute Truth is only one.
38 Therefore we need not fight with others when we find they are 39 telling something about religion which is not exactly according to 40 our view of it. We ought to remember that both of us may be true, 41 though apparently contradictory. There may be millions of radii 42 converging towards the same centre in the sun. The further they 43 are from the centre, the greater is the distance between any two.
44 But as they all meet at the centre, all difference vanishes. There is 45 such a centre, which is the absolute goal of mankind. It is God. We 46 are the radii. The distances between the radii are the constitutional 47 limitations through which we alone can catch the vision of God.
48 While standing on this plane, we are bound each one of us to have a 49 different view of the Absolute Reality; and as such, all views are 50 true, and no one of us need quarrel with another. The only solution 51 lies in approaching the centre. If we try to settle our differences by 52 argument or quarrelling, we shall find that we can go on for

1 hundreds of years without coming to a conclusion. History proves 2 that. The only solution is to march ahead and go towards the 3 centre; and the sooner we do that the sooner our differences will 4 vanish.

5 This theory of Ishta, therefore, means allowing a man to 6 choose his own religion. One man should not force another to 7 worship what he worships. All attempts to herd together human 8 beings by means of armies, force, or arguments, to drive them pell-9 mell into the same enclosure and make them worship the same God 10 have failed, and will fail always, because it is constitutionally 11 impossible to do so. Not only so, there is the danger of arresting 12 their growth. You scarcely meet any man or woman who is not 13 struggling for some sort of religion; and how many are satisfied, or 14 rather how few are satisfied! How few find anything! And why?
15 Simply because most of them go after impossible tasks. They are 16 forced into these by the

1 dictation of others. For instance, when I am a child, my 2 father puts a book into my hand which says God is such and such.
3 What business has he to put that into my mind? How does he know
4 what way I would develop? And being ignorant of my constitutional 5 development, he wants to force his ideas on my brain, with the 6 result that my growth is stunted. You cannot make a plant grow in 7 soil unsuited to it. A child teaches itself. But you can help it to go 8 forward in its own way. What you can do is not of the positive 9 nature, but of the negative. You can take away the obstacles, but 10 knowledge comes out of its own nature. Loosen the soil a little, so 11 that it may come out easily. Put a hedge around it; see that it is not 12 killed by anything, and there your work stops. You cannot do 13 anything else. The rest is a manifestation from within its own 14 nature. So with the education of a child; a child educates itself. You 15 come to hear me, and when you go home, compare what you have 16 learnt, and you will find you have thought out the same thing; I have 17 only given it expression. I can never teach you anything: you will 18 have to teach yourself, but I can help you perhaps in giving 19 expression to that thought.

20 So in religion--more so--I must teach myself religion. What 21 right has my father to put all sorts of nonsense into my head? What 22 right has my master or society to put things into my head? Perhaps 23 they are good, but they may not be my way. Think of the appalling 24 evil that is in the world today, of the millions and millions of 25 innocent children perverted by wrong ways of teaching. How many 26 beautiful things which would have become wonderful spiritual 27 truths have been nipped in the bud by this horrible idea of a family 28 religion, a social religion, a national religion, and so forth. Think of 29 what a mass of superstition is in your head just now about your 30 childhood's religion, or your country's religion, and what an amount 31 of evil it does, or can do. Man does not know

1 what a potent power lies behind each thought and action.
2 The old saying is true that, "Fools rush in where angels fear to 3 tread." This should be kept in view from the very first. How? By this 4 belief in Ishta. There are so many ideals; I have no right to say what 5 shall be your ideal, to force any ideal on you. My duty should be to 6 lay before you all the ideals I know of and enable you to see by your 7 own constitution what you like best, and which is most fitted to you.
8 Take up that one which suits you best and persevere in it. This is 9 your Ishta, your special ideal.

10 We see then that a congregational religion can never be. The 11 real work of religion must be one's own concern. I have an idea of 12 my own, I must keep it sacred and secret, because I know that it 13 need not be your idea. Secondly, why should I create a disturbance 14 by wanting to tell everyone what my idea is? Other people would 15 come and fight me. They cannot do so if I do not tell them; but if I 16 go about telling them what my ideas are, they will all oppose me. So 17 what is the use of talking about them? This Ishta should be kept 18 secret, it is between you and God. All theoretical portions of 19 religion can be preached in public and made congregational, but 20 higher religion cannot be made public. I cannot get ready my 21 religious feelings at a moment's notice. What is the result of this 22 mummery and mockery? It is making a joke of religion, the worst of 23 blasphemy. The result is what you find in the churches of the 24 present day. How can human beings stand this religious drilling? It 25 is like soldiers in a barrack. Shoulder arms, kneel down, take a 26 book, all regulated exactly. Five minutes of feeling, five minutes of 27 reason, five minutes of prayer, all arranged beforehand. These 28 mummeries have driven out religion. Let the churches preach 29 doctrines, theories, philosophies to their hearts' content, but when 30 it comes to worship, the real practical part of religion, it should be 31 as Jesus says,

1 "When thou prayest, enter into thy closet, and when thou
2 hast shut thy door, pray to thy Father which is in secret."

3 This is the theory of Ishta. It is the only way to make religion 4 meet practically the necessities of different constitutions, to avoid 5 quarrelling with others, and to make real practical progress in 6 spiritual life. but I must warn you that you do not misconstrue my 7 words into the formation of secret societies. If there were a devil, I 8 would look for him within a secret society--as the invention of secret 9 societies. They are diabolical schemes. The Ishta is sacred, not 10 secret. But in what sense? Why should I not speak of my Ishta to 11 others? Because it is my own most holy thing. It may help others, 12 but how do I know that it will not rather hurt them? There may be a 13 man whose nature is such that he cannot worship a Personal God, 14 but can only worship as an Impersonal God his own highest Self.
15 Suppose I leave him among you, and he tells you that there is no 16 Personal God, but only God as the Self in you or me. You will be 17 shocked. His idea is sacred, but not secret. There never was a great 18 religion or a great teacher that formed secret societies to preach 19 God's truths. There are no such secret societies in India. Such 20 things are purely Western in idea, and merely foisted upon India.
21 We never knew anything about them. Why indeed should there be 22 secret societies in India? In Europe, people were not allowed to talk 23 a word about religion that did not agree with the views of the 24 Church. So they were forced to go about amongst the mountains in 25 hiding and form secret societies, that they might follow their own 26 kind of worship. There was never a time in India when a man was 27 persecuted for holding his own views on religion. There were never 28 secret religious societies in India, so any idea of that sort you must 29 give up at once. These secret societies always degenerate into the 30 most horrible things. I have seen enough of this world to know what 31 evil they cause, and how easily they slide into free love societies 32 and ghost societies, how men play into the hands of other men or 33 women, and how their future possibilities of growth in thought and 34 act are destroyed, and so on. Some of you may be displeased with 35 me for talking in this way, but I must tell you the truth. Perhaps only 36 half a dozen men and women will follow me in all my life; but they 37 will be real men and women, pure and sincere, and I do not want a 38 crowd. What can crowds do? The history of the world was made by 39 a few dozens, whom you can count on your fingers, and the rest 40 were a rabble. All these secret societies and humbugs make men 41 and women impure, weak, and narrow; and the weak have no will, 42 and can never work. Therefore have nothing to do with them. All 43 this false love of mystery should be knocked on the head the first 44 time it comes into your mind. No one who is the least bit impure 45 will ever become religious. Do not try to cover festering sores with 46 masses of roses. Do you think you can cheat God? None can. Give 47 me a straightforward man or woman; but Lord save me from 48 ghosts, flying angels, and devils. Be common, everyday, nice people.

49 There is such a thing as instinct in us, which we have in 50 common with the animals, a reflex mechanical movement of the 51 body. There is again a higher form of guidance, which we call 52 reason, when the intellect obtains facts and then generalises them.

1 There is a still higher form of knowledge which we call inspiration, 2 which does not reason, but knows thing by flashes. That is the 3 highest form of knowledge. But how shall we know it from instinct?
4 That is the great difficulty. Everyone comes to you, nowadays, and 5 says he is inspired, and puts forth superhuman claims. How are we 6 to distinguish between inspiration and deception? In the first place, 7 inspiration must not contradict reason. The old man does not 8 contradict the child, he is the development of the child. What we 9 call inspiration is the development of reason. The way to intuition is 10 through reason. Instinctive movements of your body do not oppose 11 reason. As you cross a street, how instinctively you move your body 12 to save yourself from the cars. Does your mind tell you it was 13 foolish to save your body that way? It does not. Similarly, no 14 genuine inspiration ever contradicts reason. Where it does it is no 15 inspiration. Secondly, inspiration must be for the good of one and 16 all, and not for name or fame, or personal gain. It should always be 17 for the good of the world, and perfectly unselfish. When these tests 18 are fulfilled, you are quite safe to take it as inspiration. You must 19 remember that there is not one in a million that is inspired, in the 20 present state of the world. I hope their number will increase. We 21 are now only playing with religion. With inspiration we shall begin 22 to have religion. Just as St. Paul says, "For now we see through a 23 glass darkly, but then face to face." But in the present state of the 24 world they are few and far between who attain to that state; yet 25 perhaps at no other period were such false claims made to 26 inspiration, as now. It is said that women have intuitive faculties, 27 while men drag themselves slowly upward by reason. Do not 28 believe it. There are just as many inspired men as women, though 29 women have perhaps more claim to peculiar forms of hysteria and 30 nervousness. You had better die as an unbeliever than be played 31 upon by cheats and jugglers. The power of reasoning was given you 32 for use. Show then that you have used it properly. Doing so, you will 33 be able to take care of higher things.

34 We must always remember that God is Love. "A fool indeed 35 is he who, living on the banks of the Ganga, seeks to dig a little well 36 for water. A fool indeed is the man who, living near a mine of 37 diamonds, spends his life in searching for beads of glass." God is 38 that mine of diamonds. We are fools indeed to give up God for 39 legends of ghosts or flying hobgoblins. It is a disease, a morbid 40 desire. It degenerates the race, weakens the nerves and the brain, 41 living in incessant morbid fear of hobgoblins, or stimulating the 42 hunger for wonders; all these wild stories about them keep the 43 nerves at an unnatural tension--a slow and sure degeneration of the 44 race. It is degeneration to think of giving up God, purity, holiness, 45 and spirituality, to go after all this nonsense! Reading other men's 46 thought! If I must read everyone else's thoughts for five minutes at 47 a time I shall go crazy. Be strong and stand up and seek the God of 48 Love. This is the highest strength. What power is higher than the 49 power of purity? Love and purity govern the world. This love of God 50 cannot be reached by the weak; therefore, be not weak, either 51 physically, mentally, morally or spiritually. The Lord alone is true.
52 Everything else is untrue; everything else should be rejected for the 53 sake of the Lord. Vanity of vanities, all is vanity. Serve the Lord and 1 Him alone.

THE RAMAYANA

(Delivered at the Shakespeare Club, Pasadena, California, January 31, 1900)

There are two great epics in the Sanskrit language, which are very ancient. Of course, there are hundreds of other epic poems. The Sanskrit language and literature have been continued down to the present day, although, for more than two thousand years, it has ceased to be a spoken language. I am now going to speak to you of the two most ancient epics, called the Ramayana and the Mahabharata. They embody the manners and customs, the state of society, civilisation, etc., of the ancient Indians. The oldest of these epics is called Ramayana, "The Life of Rama". There was some poetical literature before this--most of the Vedas, the sacred books of the Hindus, are written in a sort of metre--but this book is held by common consent in India as the very beginning of poetry.

The name of the poet or sage was Valmiki. Later on, a great many poetical stories were fastened upon that ancient poet; and subsequently, it became a very general practice to attribute to his authorship very many verses that were not his. Notwithstanding all these interpolations, it comes down to us as a very beautiful arrangement, without equal in the literatures of the world.

There was a young man that could not in any way support his family. He was strong and vigorous and, finally, became a highway robber; he attacked persons in the street and robbed them, and with that money he supported his father, mother, wife, and children. This went on continually, until one day a great saint called Narada was passing by, and the robber attacked him.

1 The sage asked the robber, "Why are you going to rob me? It
2 is a great sin to rob human beings and kill them. What do you incur
3 all this sin for?" The robber said, "Why, I want to support my family 4 with this money." "Now", said the sage, "do you think that they take 5 a share of your sin also?" "Certainly they do," replied the robber.
6 "Very good," said the sage, "make me safe by tying me up here,
7 while you go home and ask your people whether they will share 8 your sin in the same way as they share the money you make." The 9 man accordingly went to his father, and asked, "Father, do you 10 know how I support you?" He answered, "No, I do not." "I am a 11 robber, and I kill persons and rob them." "What! you do that, my 12 son? Get away! You outcast!" He then went to his mother and asked 13 her, "Mother, do you know how I support you?" "No," she replied.
14 "Through robbery and murder." "How horrible it is!" cried the 15 mother. "But, do you partake in my sin?" said the son. "Why should 16 I? I never committed a robbery," answered the mother. Then, he 17 went to his wife and questioned her, "Do you know how I maintain 18 you all?" "No," she responded. "Why, I am a highwayman," he 19 rejoined, "and for years have been robbing people; that is how I 20 support and maintain you all. And what I now want to know is, 21 whether you are ready to share in my sin." "By no means. You are 22 my husband, and it is your duty to support me."

23 The eyes of the robber were opened. "That is the way of the 24 world--even my nearest relatives, for whom I have been robbing, 25 will not share in my destiny." He came back to the place where he 26 had bound the sage, unfastened his bonds, fell at his feet, 27 recounted everything and said, "Save me! What can I do?" The sage 28 said, "Give up your present course of life. You see that none of your 29 family really loves you, so give up all these delusions. They will 30 share your prosperity; but the moment you have nothing, they will 31 desert you. There is none who will share in your evil, but they will 32 all share in your good. Therefore worship Him who alone stands by 33 us whether we are doing good or evil. He never leaves us, for love 34 never drags down, knows no barter, no selfishness."

35 Then the sage taught him how to worship. And this man left 36 everything and went into a forest. There he went on praying and 37 meditating until he forgot himself so entirely that the ants came 38 and built ant-hills around him, and he was quite unconscious of it.
39 After many years had passed, a voice came saying, "Arise, O sage!"
40 Thus aroused he exclaimed, "Sage? I am a robber!" "No more 41 'robber'," answered the voice, "a purified sage art thou. Thine old 42 name is gone. But now, since thy meditation was so deep and great 43 that thou didst not remark even the ant-hills which surrounded 44 thee, henceforth, thy name shall be Valmiki--'he that was born in 45 the ant-hill'." So, he became a sage.

46 And this is how he became a poet. One day as this sage, 47 Valmiki, was going to bathe in the holy river Ganga, he saw a pair 48 of doves wheeling round and round, and kissing each other. The 49 sage looked up and was pleased at the sight, but in a second an 50 arrow whisked past him and killed the male dove. As the dove fell 51 down on the ground, the female dove went on whirling round and 52 round the dead body of its companion in grief. In a moment the poet

1 became miserable, and looking round, he saw the hunter. "Thou art 2 a wretch," he cried, "without the smallest mercy! Thy slaying hand 3 would not even stop for love!" "What is this? What am I saying?" the 4 poet thought to himself, "I have never spoken in this sort of way 5 before." And then a voice came: "Be not afraid. This is poetry that is 6 coming out of your mouth. Write the life of Rama in poetic language 7 for the benefit of the world." And that is how the poem first began.
8 The first verse sprang out of pity from the mouth of Valmiki, the 9 first poet. And it was after that, that he wrote the beautiful 10 Ramayana, "The Life of Rama".

11 There was an ancient Indian town called Ayodhya--and it 12 exists even in modern times. The province in which it is still located 13 is called Oudh, and most of you may have noticed it in the map of 14 India. That was the ancient Ayodhya. There, in ancient times, 15 reigned a king called Dasharatha. He had three queens, but the 16 king had not any children by them. And like good Hindus, the king 17 and the queens, all went on pilgrimages fasting and praying, that 18 they might have children and, in good time, four sons were born.
19 The eldest of them was Rama.

20 Now, as it should be, these four brothers were thoroughly 21 educated in all branches of learning. To avoid future quarrels there 22 was in ancient India a custom for the king in his own lifetime to 23 nominate his eldest son as his successor, the Yuvaraja, young king, 24 as he is called.

25 Now, there was another king, called Janaka, and this king 26 had a beautiful daughter named Sita. Sita was found in a field; she 27 was a daughter of the Earth, and was born without parents. The 28 word "Sita" in ancient Sanskrit means the furrow made by a plough.
29 In the ancient mythology of India you will find persons born of one 30 parent only, or persons born without parents, born of sacrificial fire, 31 born in the field, and so on--dropped from the clouds as it were. All 32 those sorts of miraculous birth were common in the mythological 33 lore of India.

34 Sita, being the daughter of the Earth, was pure and 35 immaculate. She was brought up by King Janaka. When she was of 36 a marriageable age, the king wanted to find a suitable husband for 37 her.

38 There was an ancient Indian custom called Svayamvara, by 39 which the princesses used to choose husbands. A number of princes 40 from different parts of the country were invited, and the princess in 41 splendid array, with a garland in her hand, and accompanied by a 42 crier who enumerated the distinctive claims of each of the royal 43 suitors, would pass in the midst of those assembled before her, and 44 select the prince she liked for her husband by throwing the garland 45 of flowers round his neck. They would then be married with much 46 pomp and grandeur.

47 There were numbers of princes who aspired for the hand of 48 Sita; the test demanded on this occasion was the breaking of a huge 49 bow, called Haradhanu. All the princes put forth all their strength to 50 accomplish this feat, but failed. Finally, Rama took the mighty bow 51 in his hands and with easy grace broke it in twain. Thus Sita

1 selected Rama, the son of King Dasharatha for her husband, and 2 they were wedded with great rejoicings. Then, Rama took his bride 3 to his home, and his old father thought that the time was now come 4 for him to retire and appoint Rama as Yuvaraja. Everything was 5 accordingly made ready for the ceremony, and the whole country 6 was jubilant over the affair, when the younger queen Kaikeyi was 7 reminded by one of her maidservants of two promises made to her 8 by the king long ago. At one time she had pleased the king very 9 much, and he offered to grant her two boons: "Ask any two things in 10 my power and I will grant them to you," said he, but she made no 11 request then. She had forgotten all about it; but the evil-minded 12 maidservant in her employ began to work upon her jealousy with 13 regard to Rama being installed on the throne, and insinuated to her 14 how nice it would be for her if her own son had succeeded the king, 15 until the queen was almost mad with jealousy. Then the servant 16 suggested to her to ask from the king the two promised boons: one 17 would be that her own son Bharata should be placed on the throne, 18 and the other, that Rama should be sent to the forest and be exiled 19 for fourteen years.

20 Now, Rama was the life and the soul of the old king and 21 when this wicked request was made to him, he as a king felt he 22 could not go back on his word. So he did not know what to do. But 23 Rama came to the rescue and willingly offered to give up the throne 24 and go into exile, so that his father might not be guilty of falsehood.
25 So Rama went into exile for fourteen years, accompanied by his 26 loving wife Sita and his devoted brother Lakshmana, who would on 27 no account be parted from him.

28 The Aryans did not know who were the inhabitants of these 29 wild forests. In those days the forest tribes they called "monkeys", 30 and some of the so-called "monkeys", if unusually strong and 31 powerful, were called demons.

32 So, into the forest, inhabited by demons and monkeys, 33 Rama, Lakshmana, and Sita went. When Sita had offered to 34 accompany Rama, he exclaimed, "How can you, a princess, face 35 hardships and accompany me into a forest full of unknown
36 dangers!" But Sita replied, "Wherever Rama goes, there goes Sita.
37 How can you talk of 'princess' and 'royal birth' to me? I go before 38 you!" So, Sita went. And the younger brother, he also went with 39 them. They penetrated far into the forest, until they reached the 40 river Godavari. On the banks of the river they built little cottages, 41 and Rama and Lakshmana used to hunt deer and collect fruits.
42 After they had lived thus for some time, one day there came a 43 demon giantess. She was the sister of the giant king of Lanka 44 (Ceylon). Roaming through the forest at will, she came across 45 Rama, and seeing that he was a very handsome man, she fell in love 46 with him at once. But Rama was the purest of men, and also he was 47 a married man; so of course he could not return her love. In 48 revenge, she went to her brother, the giant king, and told him all 49 about the beautiful Sita, the wife of Rama.

50 Rama was the most powerful of mortals; there were no 51 giants or demons or anybody else strong enough to conquer him.
52 So, the giant king had to resort to subterfuge. He got hold of 1 another giant who was a magician and changed him into a beautiful 2 golden deer; and the deer went prancing round about the place

3 where Rama lived, until Sita was fascinated by its beauty and asked 4 Rama to go and capture the deer for her. Rama went into the forest 5 to catch the deer, leaving his brother in charge of Sita. Then 6 Lakshmana laid a circle of fire round the cottage, and he said to 7 Sita, "Today I see something may befall you; and, therefore, I tell 8 you not to go outside of this magic circle. Some danger may befall 9 you if you do." In the meanwhile, Rama had pierced the magic deer 10 with his arrow, and immediately the deer, changed into the form of 11 a man, died.

12 Immediately, at the cottage was heard the voice of Rama,
13 crying, "Oh, Lakshmana, come to my help!" and Sita said, 14 "Lakshmana, go at once into the forest to help Rama!" "That is not 15 Rama's voice," protested Lakshmana. But at the entreaties of Sita, 16 Lakshmana had to go in search of Rama. As soon as he went away, 17 the giant king, who had taken the form of a mendicant monk, stood 18 at the gate and asked for alms. "Wait awhile," said Sita, "until my 19 husband comes back and I will give you plentiful alms." "I cannot 20 wait, good lady," said he, "I am very hungry, give me anything you 21 have." At this, Sita, who had a few fruits in the cottage, brought 22 them out. But the mendicant monk after many persuasions 23 prevailed upon her to bring the alms to him, assuring her that she 24 need have no fear as he was a holy person. So Sita came out of the 25 magic circle, and immediately the seeming monk assumed his giant 26 body, and grasping Sita in his arms he called his magic chariot, and 27 putting her therein, he fled with the weeping Sita. Poor Sita! She 28 was utterly helpless, nobody was there to come to her aid. As the 29 giant was carrying her away, she took off a few of the ornaments 30 from her arms and at intervals dropped them to the ground.

31 She was taken by Ravana to his kingdom, Lanka, the island 32 of Ceylon. He made proposals to her to become his queen, and 33 tempted her in many ways to accede to his request. But Sita was 34 chastity itself, would not even speak to the giant; and he to punish 35 her, made her live under a tree, day and night, until she should 36 consent to be his wife.

37 When Rama and Lakshmana returned to the cottage and 38 found that Sita was not there, their grief knew no bounds. They 39 could not imagine what had become of her. The two brothers went 40 on, seeking, seeking everywhere for Sita, but could find no trace of 41 her. After long searching, they came across a group of "monkeys", 42 and in the midst of them was Hanuman, the "divine monkey".
43 Hanuman, the best of monkeys, became the most faithful servant of 44 Rama and helped him in rescuing Sita, as we shall see later on. His 45 devotion to Rama was so great that he is worshipped by the Hindus 46 as the ideal of a true servant of the Lord. You see, by the "monkeys" 47 and "demons" are meant the aborigines of South India.

48 So, Rama, at last, fell in with these monkeys. They told him 49 that they had seen flying through the sky a chariot, in which was 50 seated a demon who was carrying away a most beautiful lady, and 51 that she was weeping bitterly, and as the chariot passed over their 52 heads she dropped one of her ornaments to attract their attention.

1 Then they showed Rama the ornament. Lakshmana took up the 2 ornament, and said, "I do not know whose ornament this is." Rama
3 took it from him and recognised it at once, saying "Yes, it is Sita's." 4 Lakshmana could not recognise the ornament, because in India the 5 wife of the elder brother was held in so much reverence that he had 6 never looked upon the arms and the neck of Sita. So you see, as it
7 was a necklace, he did not know whose it was. There is in this 8 episode a touch of the old Indian custom. Then, the monkeys told 9 Rama who this demon king was, and where he lived, and then they 10 all went to seek for him.

11 Now, the monkey-king Vali and his younger brother Sugriva 12 were then fighting amongst themselves for the kingdom. The 13 younger brother was helped by Rama, and he regained the kingdom 14 for Vali, who had driven him away; and he, in return, promised to 15 help Rama. They searched the country all round, but could not find 16 Sita. At last Hanuman leaped by one bound from the coast of India 17 to the island of Ceylon, and there went looking all over Lanka for 18 Sita, but nowhere could he find her.

19 You see, this giant king had conquered the gods, the men, in 20 fact the whole world; and he had collected all the beautiful women 21 and made them his concubines. So, Hanuman thought to himself, 22 "Sita cannot be with them in the palace. She would rather die than 23 be in such a place." So Hanuman went to seek for her elsewhere. At 24 last, he found Sita under a tree, pale and thin, like the new moon 25 that lies low in the horizon. Now Hanuman took the form of a little 26 monkey and settled on the tree, and there he witnessed how 27 giantesses sent by Ravana came and tried to frighten Sita into 28 submission, but she would not even listen to the name of the giant 29 king.

30 Then, Hanuman came nearer to Sita and told her how he 31 became the messenger of Rama, who had sent him to find out 32 where Sita was; and Hanuman showed to Sita the signet ring which 33 Rama had given as a token for establishing his identity. He also 34 informed her that as soon as Rama would know her whereabouts, 35 he would come with an army and conquer the giant and recover 36 her. However, he suggested to Sita that if she wished it, he would 37 take her on his shoulders and could with one leap clear the ocean 38 and get back to Rama. But Sita could not bear the idea, as she was 39 chastity itself, and could not touch the body of any man except her 40 husband. So, Sita remained where she was. But she gave him a 41 jewel from her hair to carry to Rama; and with that Hanuman 42 returned.

43 Learning everything about Sita from Hanuman, Rama
44 collected an army, and with it marched towards the southernmost 45 point of India. There Rama's monkeys built a huge bridge, called 46 Setu-Bandha, connecting India with Ceylon. In very low water even 47 now it is possible to cross from India to Ceylon over the sand-banks 48 there.

1 Now Rama was God incarnate, otherwise, how could he 2 have done all these things? He was an Incarnation of God, 3 according to the Hindus. They in India believe him to be the 4 seventh Incarnation of God.

5 The monkeys removed whole hills, placed them in the sea 6 and covered them with stones and trees, thus making a huge 7 embankment. A little squirrel, so it is said, was there rolling himself 8 in the sand and running backwards and forwards on to the bridge 9 and shaking himself. Thus in his small way he was working for the 10 bridge of Rama by putting in sand. The monkeys laughed, for they 11 were bringing whole mountains, whole forests, huge loads of sand 12 for the bridge--so they laughed at the little squirrel rolling in the 13 sand and then shaking himself. But Rama saw it and remarked: 14 "Blessed be the little squirrel; he is doing his work to the best of his 15 ability, and he is therefore quite as great as the greatest of you." 16 Then he gently stroked the squirrel on the bank, and the marks of 17 Rama's fingers, running lengthways, are seen on the squirrel's back 18 to this day.

19 Now, when the bridge was finished, the whole army of 20 monkeys, led by Rama and his brother entered Ceylon. For several 21 months afterwards tremendous war and bloodshed followed. At 22 last, this demon king, Ravana, was conquered and killed; and his 23 capital, with all the palaces and everything, which were entirely of 24 solid gold, was taken. In far-away villages in the interior of India, 25 when I tell them that I have been in Ceylon, the simple folk say, 26 "There, as our books tell, the houses are built of gold." So, all these 27 golden cities fell into the hands of Rama, who gave them over to 28 Vibhishana, the younger brother of Ravana, and seated him on the 29 throne in the place of his brother, as a return for the valuable 30 services rendered by him to Rama during the war.

31 Then Rama and Sita and his followers left Lanka. But there 32 ran a murmur among his followers. "The test! The test!" they cried, 33 "Sita has not given the test that she was perfectly pure in Ravana's 34 household." "Pure! she is chastity itself!" exclaimed Rama. "Never 35 mind! We want the test," persisted the people. Subsequently, a huge 36 sacrificial fire was made ready, into which Sita had to plunge 37 herself. Rama was in agony, thinking that Sita was lost; but in a 38 moment, the God of fire himself appeared with a throne upon his 39 head, and upon the throne was Sita. Then, there was universal 40 rejoicing, and everybody was satisfied.

41 Early during the period of exile, Bharata, the younger 42 brother had come and informed Rama, of the death of the old king 43 and vehemently insisted on his occupying the throne. During 44 Rama's exile Bharata would on no account ascend the throne and 45 out of respect placed a pair of Rama's wooden shoes on it as a 46 substitute for his brother. Then Rama returned to his capital, and by 47 the common consent of his people, he became the king of Ayodhya.

48 After Rama regained his kingdom, he took the necessary 49 vows which in olden times the king had to take for the benefit of his 50 people. The king was the slave of his people, he had to bow to 51 public opinion, as we shall see later on. Rama passed a few years in

1 happiness with Sita, when the people again began to murmur that 2 Sita had been stolen by a demon and carried across the ocean. They 3 were not satisfied with the former test and clamoured for another 4 test, otherwise she must be banished.

5 In order to satisfy the demands of the people, Sita was 6 banished, and left to live in the forest, where was the hermitage of 7 the sage and poet Valmiki. The sage found poor Sita weeping and 8 forlorn, and hearing her sad story, sheltered her in his Ashrama.
9 Sita was expecting soon to become a mother, and she gave birth to 10 twin boys. The poet never told the children who they were. He 11 brought them up together in the Brahmacharin life. He then 12 composed the poem known as Ramayana, set it to music, and 13 dramatised it.

14 The drama, in India, was a very holy thing. Drama and music
15 are themselves held to be religion. Any song--whether it be a love-16 song or otherwise--if one's whole soul is in that song, one attains 17 salvation, one has nothing else to do. They say it leads to the same 18 goal as meditation.

19 So, Valmiki dramatised "The Life of Rama", and taught 20 Rama's two children how to recite and sing it.

21 There came a time when Rama was going to perform a huge 22 sacrifice, or Yajna, such as the old kings used to celebrate. But no 23 ceremony in India can be performed by a married man without his 24 wife: he must have the wife with him, the Sahadharmini, the "co-25 religionist"--that is the expression for the wife. The Hindu 26 householder has to perform hundreds of ceremonies, but not one 27 can be duly performed according to the Shastras, if he has not a 28 wife to complement it with her part in it.

1 Now Rama's wife was not with him then, as she had been 2 banished. So, the people asked him to marry again. But at this 3 request Rama for the first time in his life stood against the people.
4 He said, "This cannot be. My life is Sita's." So, as substitute, a 5 golden statue of Sita was made, in order that the ceremony could 6 be accomplished. They arranged even a dramatic entertainment, to 7 enhance the religious feeling of this great festival. Valmiki, the 8 great sage-poet, came with his pupils, Lava and Kusha, the 9 unknown sons of Rama. A stage had been erected and everything 10 was ready for the performance. Rama and his brothers attended 11 with all his nobles and his people--a vast audience. Under the 12 direction of Valmiki, the life of Rama was sung by Lava and Kusha, 13 who fascinated the whole assembly by their charming voice and 14 appearance. Poor Rama was nearly maddened, and when in the 15 drama, the scene of Sita's exile came about, he did not know what 16 to do. Then the sage said to him, "Do not be grieved, for I will show 17 you Sita." Then Sita was brought upon the stage and Rama 18 delighted to see his wife. All of a sudden, the old murmur arose: 19 "The test! The test!" Poor Sita was so terribly overcome by the 20 repeated cruel slight on her reputation that it was more than she 21 could bear. She appealed to the gods to testify to her innocence, 22 when the Earth opened and Sita exclaimed, "Here is the test", and 23 vanished into the bosom of the Earth. The people were taken aback 24 at this tragic end. And Rama was overwhelmed with grief.

25 A few days after Sita's disappearance, a messenger came to 26 Rama from the gods, who intimated to him that his mission on earth 27 was finished and he was to return to heaven. These tidings brought 28 to him the recognition of his own real Self. He plunged into the 29 waters of the Sarayu, the mighty river that laved his capital, and 30 joined Sita in the other world.

31 This is the great, ancient epic of India. Rama and Sita are 32 the ideal of the Indian nation. All children, especially girls, worship 33 Sita. The height of a woman's ambition is to be like Sita, the pure, 34 the devoted, the all-suffering! When you study these characters, you 35 can at once find out how different is the ideal in India from that of 36 the West. For the race, Sita stands as the ideal of suffering. The 37 West says, 'Do! Show your power by doing.' India says, "Show your 38 power by suffering." The West has solved the problem of how much 39 a man can have: India has solved the problem of how little a man 40 can have. The two extremes, you see. Sita is typical of India--the 41 idealised India. The question is not whether she ever lived, whether 42 the story is history or not, we know that the ideal is there. There is 43 no other Pauranika story that has so permeated the whole nation, 44 so entered into its very life, and has so tingled in every drop of 45 blood of the race, as this ideal of Sita. Sita is the name in India for 46 everything that is good, pure and holy--everything that in woman 47 we call womanly. If a priest has to bless a woman he says, "Be Sita!"
48 If he blesses a child, he says "Be Sita!" They are all children of Sita, 49 and are struggling to be Sita, the patient, the all-suffering, the ever-50 faithful, the ever-pure wife. Through all this suffering she 51 experiences, there is not one harsh word against Rama. She takes it 52 as her own duty, and performs her own part in it. Think of the 1 terrible injustice of her being exiled to the forest! But Sita knows no 2 bitterness. That is, again, the Indian ideal. Says the ancient 3 Buddha, "When a man hurts you, and you turn back to hurt him, 4 that would not cure the first injury; it would only create in the world 5 one more wickedness." Sita was a true Indian by nature; she never 6 returned injury.

7 Who knows which is the truer ideal? The apparent power 8 and strength, as held in the West, or the fortitude in suffering, of 9 the East?

10 The West says, "We minimise evil by conquering it." India 11 says, "We destroy evil by suffering, until evil is nothing to us, it 12 becomes positive enjoyment." Well, both are great ideals. Who 13 knows which will survive in the long run? Who knows which 14 attitude will really most benefit humanity? Who knows which will 15 disarm and conquer animality? Will it be suffering, or doing?

16 In the meantime, let us not try to destroy each other's ideals.
17 We are both intent upon the same work, which is the annihilation of 18 evil. You take up your method; let us take up our method. Let us not 19 destroy the ideal. I do not say to the West, "Take up our method."
20 Certainly not. The goal is the same, but the methods can never be 21 the same. And so, after hearing about the ideals of India, I hope 22 that you will say in the same breath to India, "We know, the goal, 23 the ideal, is all right for us both. You follow your own ideal. You 24 follow your method in your own way, and Godspeed to you!" My 25 message in life is to ask the East and West not to quarrel over 26 different ideals, but to show them that the goal is the same in both 27 cases, however opposite it may appear. As we wend our way 28 through this mazy vale of life, let us bid each other Godspeed.

THE MAHABHARATA

(Delivered at the Shakespeare Club, Pasadena, California, February 1, 1900)

The other epic about which I am going to speak to you this evening, is called the Mahabharata. It contains the story of a race descended from King Bharata, who was the son of Dushyanta and Shakuntala. Maha means great, and Bharata means the descendants of Bharata, from whom India has derived its name, Bharata. Mahabharata means Great India, or the story of the great descendants of Bharata. The scene of this epic is the ancient kingdom of the Kurus, and the story is based on the great war which took place between the Kurus and the Panchalas. So the region of the quarrel is not very big. This epic is the most popular one in India; and it exercises the same authority in India as Homer's poems did over the Greeks. As ages went on, more and more matter was added to it, until it has become a huge book of about a hundred thousand couplets. All sorts of tales, legends and myths, philosophical treatises, scraps of history, and various discussion have been added to it from time to time, until it is a vast, gigantic mass of literature; and through it all runs the old, original story. The central story of the Mahabharata is of a war between two families of cousins, one family, called the Kauravas, the other the Pandavas--for the empire of India.

The Aryans came into India in small companies. Gradually, these tribes began to extend, until, at last, they became the undisputed rulers of India, and then arose this fight to gain the mastery, between two branches of the same family. Those of you who have studied the Gita know how the book opens with a description of the battle-field, with two armies arrayed one against the other. That is the war of the Mahabharata.

There were two brothers, sons of the emperor. The elder one was called Dhritarashtra, and the other was called Pandu. Dhritarashtra, the elder one, was born blind. According to Indian law, no blind, halt, maimed, consumptive, or any other constitutionally diseased person, can inherit. He can only get a maintenance. So, Dhritarashtra could not ascend the throne, though he was the elder son, and Pandu became the emperor.

Dhritarashtra had a hundred sons, and Pandu only had five. After the death of Pandu at an early age, Dhritarashtra became king of the Kurus and brought up the sons of Pandu along with his own children. When they grew up, they were placed under the tutorship of the great priest-warrior, Drona, and were well trained in the various material arts and sciences befitting princes. The education of the princes being finished, Dhritarashtra put Yudhishtira, the eldest of the sons of Pandu, on the throne of his father. The sterling virtues of Yudhishtira and the valour and devotion of his other brothers aroused jealousies in the hearts of the sons of the blind king, and at the instigation of Duryodhana, the eldest of them, the

1 five Pandava brothers were prevailed upon to visit Vâranâvata, on 2 the plea of a religious festival that was being held there. There they 3 were accommodated in a palace made under Duryodhana's 4 instructions, of hemp, resin, and lac, and other inflammable 5 materials, which were subsequently set fire to secretly. But the 6 good Vidura, the step-brother of Dhritarashtra, having become 7 cognisant of the evil intentions of Duryodhana and his party, had 8 warned the Pandavas of the plot, and they managed to escape 9 without anyone's knowledge. When the Kurus saw the house was 10 reduced to ashes, they heaved a sigh of relief and thought all 11 obstacles were now removed out of their path. Then the children of 12 Dhritarashtra got hold of the kingdom. The five Pandava brothers 13 had fled to the forest with their mother, Kunti. They lived there by 14 begging, and went about in disguise giving themselves out as 15 Brahmana students. Many were the hardships and adventures they 16 encountered in the wild forests, but their fortitude of mind, and 17 strength, and valour made them conquer all dangers. So things 18 went on until they came to hear of the approaching marriage of the 19 princess of a neighbouring country.

20 I told you last night of the peculiar form of the ancient 21 Indian marriage. It was called Svayamvara, that is, the choosing of 22 the husband by the princess. A great gathering of princes and 23 nobles assembled, amongst whom the princess would chose her 24 husband. Preceded by her trumpeters and heralds she would 25 approach, carrying a garland of flowers in her hand. At the throne 26 of each candidate for her hand, the praises of that prince and all his 27 great deeds in battle would be declared by the heralds. And when 28 the princess decided which prince she desired to have for a 29 husband, she would signify the fact by throwing the marriage-
30 garland round his neck. Then the ceremony would turn into a 31 wedding. King Drupada was a great king, king of the Panchalas, 32 and his daughter, Draupadi, famed far and wide for her beauty and 33 accomplishments, was going to choose a hero.

34 At a Svayamvara there was always a great feat of arms or 35 something of the kind. On this occasion, a mark in the form of a fish 36 was set up high in the sky; under that fish was a wheel with a hole 37 in the centre, continually turning round, and beneath was a tub of 38 water. A man looking at the reflection of the fish in the tub of water 39 was asked to send an arrow and hit the eye of the fish through the 40 Chakra or wheel, and he who succeeded would be married to the 41 princess. Now, there came kings and princes from different parts of 42 India, all anxious to win the hand of the princess, and one after 43 another they tried their skill, and every one of them failed to hit the 44 mark.

45 You know, there are four castes in India: the highest caste is 46 that of the hereditary priest, the Brahmana; next is the caste of the 47 Kshatriya, composed of kings and fighters; next, the Vaishyas, the 48 traders or businessmen, and then Shudras, the servants. Now, this 49 princess was, of course, a Kshatriya, one of the second caste.

50 When all those princes failed in hitting the mark, then the 51 son of King Drupada rose up in the midst of the court and said: 52 "The Kshatriya, the king caste has failed; now the contest is open to

1 the other castes. Let a Brahmana, even a Shudra, take part in it;
2 whosoever hits the mark, marries Draupadi."

3 Among the Brahmanas were seated the five Pandava 4 brothers. Arjuna, the third brother, was the hero of the bow. He 5 arose and stepped forward. Now, Brahmanas as a caste are very 6 quiet and rather timid people. According to the law, they must not 7 touch a warlike weapon, they must not wield a sword, they must not 8 go into any enterprise that is dangerous. Their life is one of 9 contemplation, study, and control of the inner nature. Judge, 10 therefore, how quiet and peaceable a people they are. When the 11 Brahmanas saw this man get up, they thought this man was going 12 to bring the wrath of the Kshatriyas upon them, and that they would 13 all be killed. So they tried to dissuade him, but Arjuna did not listen 14 to them, because he was a soldier. He lifted the bow in his hand, 15 strung it without any effort, and drawing it, sent the arrow right 16 through the wheel and hit the eye of the fish.

17 Then there was great jubilation. Draupadi, the princess, 18 approached Arjuna and threw the beautiful garland of flowers over 19 his head. But there arose a great cry among the princes, who could 20 not bear the idea that this beautiful princess who was a Kshatriya 21 should be won by a poor Brahmana, from among this huge 22 assembly of kings and princes. So, they wanted to fight Arjuna and 23 snatch her from him by force. The brothers had a tremendous fight 24 with the warriors, but held their own, and carried off the bride in 25 triumph.

26 The five brothers now returned home to Kunti with the 27 princess. Brahmanas have to live by begging. So they, who lived as 28 Brahmanas, used to go out, and what they got by begging they 29 brought home and the mother divided it among them. Thus the five 30 brothers, with the princess, came to the cottage where the mother 31 lived. They shouted out to her jocosely, "Mother, we have brought 32 home a most wonderful alms today." The mother replied, "Enjoy it in 33 common, all of you, my children." Then the mother seeing the 34 princess, exclaimed, "Oh! what have I said! It is a girl!" But what 35 could be done! The mother's word was spoken once for all. It must 36 not be disregarded. The mother's words must be fulfilled. She could 37 not be made to utter an untruth, as she never had done so. So 38 Draupadi became the common wife of all the five brothers.

39 Now, you know, in every society there are stages of 40 development. Behind this epic there is a wonderful glimpse of the 41 ancient historic times. The author of the poem mentions the fact of 42 the five brothers marrying the same woman, but he tries to gloss it 43 over, to find an excuse and a cause for such an act; it was the 44 mother's command, the mother sanctioned this strange betrothal, 45 and so on. You know, in every nation there has been a certain stage 46 in society that allowed polyandry--all the brothers of a family would 47 marry one wife in common. Now, this was evidently a glimpse of the 48 past polyandrous stage.

49 In the meantime, the brother of the princess was perplexed 50 in his mind and thought: "Who are these people? Who is this man 51 whom my sister is going to marry? They have not any chariots,

1 horses, or anything. Why, they go on foot!" So he had followed them 2 at a distance, and at night overheard their conversation and 3 became fully convinced that they were really Kshatriyas. Then King 4 Drupada came to know who they were and was greatly delighted.

5 Though at first much objection was raised, it was declared 6 by Vyasa that such a marriage was allowable for these princes, and 7 it was permitted. So the king Drupada had to yield to this 8 polyandrous marriage, and the princess was married to the five 9 sons of Pandu.

10 Then the Pandavas lived in peace and prosperity and 11 became more powerful every day. Though Duryodhana and his 12 party conceived of fresh plots to destroy them, King Dhritarashtra 13 was prevailed upon by the wise counsels of the elders to make 14 peace with the Pandavas; and so he invited them home amidst the 15 rejoicings of the people and gave them half of the kingdom. Then, 16 the five brothers built for themselves a beautiful city, called 17 Indraprastha, and extended their dominions, laying all the people 18 under tribute to them. Then the eldest, Yudhishtira, in order to 19 declare himself emperor over all the kings of ancient India, decided 20 to perform a Rajasuya Yajna, or Imperial Sacrifice, in which the 21 conquered kings would have to come with tribute and swear 22 allegiance, and help the performance of the sacrifice by personal 23 services. Shri Krishna, who had become their friend and a relative, 24 came to them and approved of the idea. But there was one obstacle 25 to its performance. A king, Jarasandha by name, who intended to 26 offer a sacrifice of a hundred kings, had eighty-six of them kept as 27 captives with him. Shri Krishna counselled an attack on Jarasandha.
28 So he, Bhima, and Arjuna challenged the king, who accepted the 29 challenge and was finally conquered by Bhima after fourteen days' 30 continuous wrestling. The captive kings were then set free.

31 Then the four younger brothers went out with armies on a 32 conquering expedition, each in a different direction, and brought all 33 the kings under subjection to Yudhishtira.

34 Returning, they laid all the vast wealth they secured at the 35 feet of the eldest brother to meet the expenses of the great 36 sacrifice.

37 So, to this Rajasuya sacrifice all the liberated kings came, 38 along with those conquered by the brothers, and rendered homage 39 to Yudhishtira. King Dhritarashtra and his sons were also invited 40 to come and take a share in the performance of the sacrifice. At the 41 conclusion of the sacrifice, Yudhishtira was crowned emperor, and 42 declared as lord paramount. This was the sowing of the future feud.
43 Duryodhana came back from the sacrifice filled with jealousy 44 against Yudhishtira, as their sovereignty and vast splendour and 45 wealth were more than he could bear; and so he devised plans to 46 effect their fall by guile, as he knew that to overcome them by force 47 was beyond his power. This king, Yudhishtira, had the love of 48 gambling, and he was challenged at an evil hour to play dice with 49 Shakuni, the crafty gambler and the evil genius of Duryodhana. In 50 ancient India, if a man of the military caste was challenged to fight, 51 he must at any price accept the challenge to uphold his honour. And

1 if he was challenged to play dice, it was a point of honour to play, 2 and dishonourable to decline the challenge. King Yudhishtira, says
3 the Epic, was the incarnation of all virtues. Even he, the great sage-4 king, had to accept the challenge. Shakuni and his party had made 5 false dice. So Yudhishtira lost game after game, and stung with his 6 losses, he went on with the fatal game, staking everything he had, 7 and losing all, until all his possessions, his kingdom and everything, 8 were lost. The last stage came when, under further challenge, he 9 had no other resources left but to stake his brothers, and then 10 himself, and last of all, the fair Draupadi, and lost all. Now they 11 were completely at the mercy of the Kauravas, who cast all sorts of 12 insults upon them, and subjected Draupadi to the most inhuman 13 treatment. At last through the intervention of the blind king, they 14 got their liberty, and were asked to return home and rule their 15 kingdom. But Duryodhana saw the danger and forced his father to 16 allow one more throw of the dice in which the party which would 17 lose, should retire to the forests for twelve years, and then live 18 unrecognised in a city for one year; but if they were found out, the 19 same term of exile should have to be undergone once again and 20 then only the kingdom was to be restored to the exiled. This last 21 game also Yudhishtira lost, and the five Pandava brothers retired 22 to the forests with Draupadi, as homeless exiles. They lived in the 23 forests and mountains for twelve years. There they performed many 24 deeds of virtue and valour, and would go out now and then on a 25 long round of pilgrimages, visiting many holy places. That part of 26 the poem is very interesting and instructive, and various are the 27 incidents, tales, and legends with which this part of the book is 28 replete. There are in it beautiful and sublime stories of ancient 29 India, religious and philosophical. Great sages came to see the 30 brothers in their exile and narrated to them many telling stories of 31 ancient India, so as to make them bear lightly the burden of their 32 exile. One only I will relate to you here.

33 There was a king called Ashvapati. The king had a daughter, 34 who was so good and beautiful that she was called Savitri, which is 35 the name of a sacred prayer of the Hindus. When Savitri grew old 36 enough, her father asked her to choose a husband for herself.
37 These ancient Indian princesses were very independent, you see, 38 and chose their own princely suitors.

39 Savitri consented and travelled in distant regions, mounted 40 in a golden chariot, with her guards and aged courtiers to whom 41 her father entrusted her, stopping at different courts, and seeing 42 different princes, but not one of them could win the heart of Savitri.
43 They came at last to a holy hermitage in one of those forests that in 44 ancient India were reserved for animals, and where no animals 45 were allowed to be killed. The animals lost the fear of man--even 46 the fish in the lakes came and took food out of the hand. For 47 thousands of years no one had killed anything therein. The sages 48 and the aged went there to live among the deer and the birds. Even 49 criminals were safe there. When a man got tired of life, he would go 50 to the forest; and in the company of sages, talking of religion and 51 meditating thereon, he passed the remainder of his life.

52 Now it happened that there was a king, Dyumatsena, who 1 was defeated by his enemies and was deprived of his kingdom when 2 he was struck with age and had lost his sight. This poor, old, blind 3 king, with his queen and his son, took refuge in the forest and 4 passed his life in rigid penance. The boy's name was Satyavan.

5 It came to pass that after having visited all the different 6 royal courts, Savitri at last came to this hermitage, or holy place.
7 Not even the greatest king could pass by the hermitages, or 8 Ashramas as they were called, without going to pay homage to the 9 sages, for such honour and respect was felt for these holy men. The 10 greatest emperor of India would be only too glad to trace his 11 descent to some sage who lived in a forest, subsisting on roots and 12 fruits, and clad in rags. We are all children of sages. That is the 13 respect that is paid to religion. So, even kings, when they pass by 14 the hermitages, feel honoured to go in and pay their respects to the 15 sages. If they approach on horseback, they descend and walk as 16 they advance towards them. If they arrive in a chariot, chariot and 17 armour must be left outside when they enter. No fighting man can 18 enter unless he comes in the manner of a religious man, quiet and 19 gentle.

20 So Savitri came to this hermitage and saw there Satyavan, 21 the hermit's son, and her heart was conquered. She had escaped all 22 the princes of the palaces and the courts, but here in the forest-23 refuge of the King Dyumatsena, his son, Satyavan, stole her heart.

24 When Savitri returned to her father's house, he asked her, 25 "Savitri, dear daughter, speak. Did you see anybody whom you 26 would like to marry?" Then softly with blushes, said Savitri, "Yes, 27 father." "What is the name of the prince?" "He is no prince, but the 28 son of King Dyumatsena who has lost his kingdom--a prince without 29 a patrimony, who lives a monastic life, the life of a Sannyasin in a 30 forest, collecting roots and herbs, helping and feeding his old father 31 and mother, who live in a cottage."

32 On hearing this the father consulted the Sage Narada, who 33 happened to be then present there, and he declared it was the most 34 ill-omened choice that was ever made. The king then asked him to 35 explain why it was so. And Narada said, "Within twelve months 36 from this time the young man will die." Then the king started with 37 terror, and spoke, "Savitri, this young man is going to die in twelve 38 months, and you will become a widow: think of that! Desist from 39 your choice, my child, you shall never be married to a short-lived 40 and fated bridegroom." "Never mind, father; do not ask me to marry 41 another person and sacrifice the chastity of mind, for I love and 42 have accepted in my mind that good and brave Satyavan only as my 43 husband. A maiden chooses only once, and she never departs from 44 her troth." When the king found that Savitri was resolute in mind 45 and heart, he complied. Then Savitri married prince Satyavan, and 46 she quietly went from the palace of her father into the forest, to live 47 with her chosen husband and help her husband's parents. Now, 48 though Savitri knew the exact date when Satyavan was to die, she 49 kept it hidden from him. Daily he went into the depths of the 50 forests, collected fruits and flowers, gathered faggots, and then 51 came back to the cottage, and she cooked the meals and helped the 52 old people. Thus their lives went on until the fatal day came near,

1 and three short days remained only. She took a severe vow of three 2 nights' penance and holy fasts, and kept her hard vigils. Savitri 3 spent sorrowful and sleepless nights with fervent prayers and 4 unseen tears, till the dreaded morning dawned. That day Savitri
5 could not bear him out of her sight, even for a moment. She begged 6 permission from his parents to accompany her husband, when he 7 went to gather the usual herbs and fuel, and gaining their consent
8 she went. Suddenly, in faltering accents, he complained to his wife 9 of feeling faint, "My head is dizzy, and my senses reel, dear Savitri, 10 I feel sleep stealing over me; let me rest beside thee for a while." In 11 fear and trembling she replied, "Come, lay your head upon my lap, 12 my dearest lord." And he laid his burning head in the lap of his wife, 13 and ere long sighed and expired. Claspings him to her, her eyes 14 flowing with tears, there she sat in the lonesome forest, until the 15 emissaries of Death approached to take away the soul of Satyavan.
16 But they could not come near to the place where Savitri sat with the 17 dead body of her husband, his head resting in her lap. There was a 18 zone of fire surrounding her, and not one of the emissaries of Death 19 could come within it. They all fled back from it, returned to King 20 Yama, the God of Death, and told him why they could not obtain the 21 soul of this man.

22 Then came Yama, the God of Death, the Judge of the dead.
23 He was the first man that died--the first man that died on earth--and 24 he had become the presiding deity over all those that die. He 25 judges whether, after a man has died, he is to be punished or 26 rewarded. So he came himself. Of course, he could go inside that 27 charmed circle, as he was a god. When he came to Savitri, he said, 28 "Daughter, give up this dead body, for know, death is the fate of 29 mortals, and I am the first of mortals who died. Since then, 30 everyone has had to die. Death is the fate of man." Thus told, Savitri 31 walked off, and Yama drew the soul out. Yama having possessed 32 himself of the soul of the young man proceeded on his way. Before 33 he had gone far, he heard footfalls upon the dry leaves. He turned 34 back. "Savitri, daughter, why are you following me? This is the fate 35 of all mortals." "I am not following thee, Father," replied Savitri, 36 "but this is, also, the fate of woman, she follows where her love 37 takes her, and the Eternal Law separates not loving man and 38 faithful wife." Then said the God of Death, "Ask for any boon, except 39 the life of your husband." "If thou art pleased to grant a boon, O 40 Lord of Death, I ask that my father-in-law may be cured of his 41 blindness and made happy." "Let thy pious wish be granted, duteous 42 daughter." And then the King of Death travelled on with the soul of 43 Satyavan. Again the same footfall was heard from behind. He 44 looked round. "Savitri, my daughter, you are still following me?"
45 "Yes, my Father; I cannot help doing so; I am trying all the time to 46 go back, but the mind goes after my husband and the body follows.
47 The soul has already gone, for in that soul is also mine; and when 48 you take the soul, the body follows, does it not?" "Pleased am I with 49 your words, fair Savitri. Ask yet another boon of me, but it must not 50 be the life of your husband." "Let my father-in-law regain his lost 51 wealth and kingdom, Father, if thou art pleased to grant another 52 supplication." "Loving daughter," Yama answered, "this boon I now 53 bestow; but return home, for living mortal cannot go with King

1 Yama." And then Yama pursued his way. But Savitri, meek and 2 faithful, still followed her departed husband. Yama again turned 3 back. "Noble Savitri, follow not in hopeless woe." "I cannot choose 4 but follow where thou takest my beloved one." "Then suppose, 5 Savitri, that your husband was a sinner and has to go to hell. In that 6 case goes Savitri with the one she loves?" "Glad am I to follow 7 where he goes, be it life or death, heaven or hell," said the loving 8 wife. "Blessed are your words, my child, pleased am I with you, ask 9 yet another boon, but the dead come not to life again." "Since you 10 so permit me, then, let the imperial line of my father-in-law be not 11 destroyed; let his kingdom descend to Satyavan's sons." And then 12 the God of Death smiled. "My daughter, thou shalt have thy desire 13 now: here is the soul of thy husband, he shall live again. He shall 14 live to be a father and thy children also shall reign in due course.
15 Return home. Love has conquered Death! Woman never loved like 16 thee, and thou art the proof that even I, the God of Death, am 17 powerless against the power of the true love that abideth!"

18 This is the story of Savitri, and every girl in India must 19 aspire to be like Savitri, whose love could not be conquered by 20 death, and who through this tremendous love snatched back from 21 even Yama, the soul of her husband.

22 The book is full of hundreds of beautiful episodes like this. I 23 began by telling you that the Mahabharata is one of the greatest 24 books in the world and consists of about a hundred thousand verses 25 in eighteen Parvans, or volumes.

26 To return to our main story. We left the Pandava brothers in 27 exile. Even there they were not allowed to remain unmolested 28 from the evil plots of Duryodhana; but all of them were futile.

29 A story of their forest life, I shall tell you here. One day the 30 brothers became thirsty in the forest. Yudhishtira bade his brother, 31 Nakula, go and fetch water. He quickly proceeded towards the 32 place where there was water and soon came to a crystal lake, and 33 was about to drink of it, when he heard a voice utter these words: 34 "Stop, O child. First answer my questions and then drink of this 35 water." But Nakula, who was exceedingly thirsty, disregarded these 36 words, drank of the water, and having drunk of it, dropped down 37 dead. As Nakula did not return, King Yudhishtira told Sahadeva to 38 seek his brother and bring back water with him. So Sahadeva 39 proceeded to the lake and beheld his brother lying dead. Afflicted at 40 the death of his brother and suffering severely from thirst, he went 41 towards the water, when the same words were heard by him: "O 42 child, first answer my questions and then drink of the water." He 43 also disregarded these words, and having satisfied his thirst, 44 dropped down dead. Subsequently Arjuna and Bhima were sent, 45 one after the other, on a similar quest; but neither returned, having 46 drunk of the lake and dropped down dead. Then Yudhishtira rose 47 up to go in search of his brothers. At length, he came to the 48 beautiful lake and saw his brothers lying dead. His heart was full of 49 grief at the sight, and he began to lament. Suddenly he heard the 50 same voice saying, "Do not, O child, act rashly. I am a Yaksha living 51 as a crane on tiny fish. It is by me that thy younger brothers have 52 been brought under the sway of the Lord of departed spirits. If

1 thou, O Prince, answer not the questions put by me, even thou shalt 2 number the fifth corpse. Having answered my questions first, do
3 thou, O Kunti's son, drink and carry away as much as thou
4 requirest." Yudhishtira replied, "I shall answer thy questions
5 according to my intelligence. Do thou ask me!" The Yaksha then 6 asked him several questions, all of which Yudhishtira answered 7 satisfactorily. One of the questions was: "What is the most 8 wonderful fact in this world?" "We see our fellow-beings every 9 moment falling off around us; but those that are left behind think 10 that they will never die. This is the most curious fact: in face of 11 death, none believes he will die!" Another question was: "What is 12 the path of knowing the secret of religion?" And Yudhishtira 13 answered, "By argument nothing can be settled; doctrines there are 14 many; various are the scriptures, one part contradicting the other.
15 There are not two sages who do not differ in their opinions. The 16 secret of religion is buried deep, as it were, in dark caves. So the 17 path to be followed is that which the great ones have trodden." 18 Then the Yaksha said, "I am pleased. I am Dharma, the God of 19 Justice in the form of a crane. I came to test you. Now, your 20 brothers, see, not one of them is dead. It is all my magic. Since 21 abstention from injury is regarded by thee as higher than both 22 profit and pleasure, therefore, let all thy brothers live, O bull of the 23 Bharata race." And at these words of the Yaksha, the Pandavas rose 24 up.

25 Here is a glimpse of the nature of King Yudhishtira. We find 26 by his answers that he was more of a philosopher, more of a Yogi, 27 than a king.

28 Now, as the thirteenth year of the exile was drawing nigh, 29 the Yaksha bade them go to Virata's kingdom and live there in such 30 disguises as they would think best.

31 So, after the term of the twelve years' exile had expired, 32 they went to the kingdom of Virata in different disguises to spend 33 the remaining one year in concealment, and entered into menial
34 service in the king's household. Thus Yudhishtira became a 35 Brahmana courtier of the king, as one skilled in dice; Bhima was 36 appointed a cook; Arjuna, dressed as a eunuch, was made a teacher 37 of dancing and music to Uttara, the princess, and remained in the 38 inner apartments of the king; Nakula became the keeper of the 39 king's horses; and Sahadeva got the charge of the cows; and 40 Draupadi, disguised as a waiting-woman was also admitted into the 41 queen's household. Thus concealing their identity the Pandava 42 brothers safely spent a year, and the search of Duryodhana to find 43 them out was of no avail. They were only discovered just when the 44 year was out.

45 Then Yudhishtira sent an ambassador to Dhritarashtra and 46 demanded that half of the kingdom should, as their share, be 47 restored to them. But Duryodhana hated his cousins and would not 48 consent to their legitimate demands. They were even willing to 49 accept a single province, nay, even five villages. But the headstrong 50 Duryodhana declared that he would not yield without fight even as 51 much land as a needle's point would hold. Dhritarashtra pleaded 52 again and again for peace, but all in vain. Krishna also went and 1 tried to avert the impending war and death of kinsmen, so did the 2 wise elders of the royal court; but all negotiations for a peaceful 3 partition of the kingdom were futile. So, at last, preparations were 4 made on both sides for war, and all the warlike nations took part in 5 it.

6 The old Indian customs of the Kshatriyas were observed in 7 it. Duryodhana took one side, Yudhishtira, the other. From 8 Yudhishtira messengers were at once sent to all the surrounding 9 kings, entreating their alliance, since honourable men would grant 10 the request that first reached them. So, warriors from all parts 11 assembled to espouse the cause of either the Pandavas or the Kurus 12 according to the precedence of their requests; and thus one brother 13 joined this side, and the other that side, the father on one side, and 14 the son on the other. The most curious thing was the code of war of 15 those days; as soon as the battle for the day ceased and evening 16 came, the opposing parties were good friends, even going to each 17 other's tents; however, when the morning came, again they 18 proceeded to fight each other. That was the strange trait that the 19 Hindus carried down to the time of the Mohammedan invasion.
20 Then again, a man on horseback must not strike one on foot; must 21 not poison the weapon; must not vanquish the enemy in any 22 unequal fight, or by dishonesty; and must never take undue 23 advantage of the other, and so on. If any deviated from these rules 24 he would be covered with dishonour and shunned. The Kshatriyas 25 were trained in that way. And when the foreign invasion came from 26 Central Asia, the Hindus treated the invaders in the selfsame way.
27 They defeated them several times, and on as many occasions sent 28 them back to their homes with presents, etc. The code laid down 29 was that they must not usurp anybody's country; and when a man 30 was beaten he must be sent back to his country with due regard to 31 his position. The Mohammedan conquerors treated the Hindu kings 32 differently, and when they got them once, they destroyed them 33 without remorse.

34 Mind you, in those days--in the times of our story, the poem
35 says--the science of arms was not the mere use of bows and arrows 36 at all; it was magic archery in which the use of Mantras, 37 concentration, etc., played a prominent part. One man could fight 38 millions of men and burn them at will. He could send one arrow, 39 and it would rain thousands of arrows and thunder; he could make 40 anything burn, and so on--it was all divine magic. One fact is 41 curious in both these poems--the Ramayana and the Mahabharata-- 42 along with these magic arrows and all these things going on, you 43 see the cannon already in use. The cannon is an old, old thing, used 44 by the Chinese and the Hindus. Upon the walls of the cities were 45 hundreds of curious weapons made of hollow iron tubes, which 46 filled with powder and ball would kill hundreds of men. The people 47 believed that the Chinese, by magic, put the devil inside a hollow 48 iron tube, and when they applied a little fire to a hole, the devil 49 came out with a terrific noise and killed many people.

50 So in those old days, they used to fight with magic arrows.
51 One man would be able to fight millions of others. They had their 52 military arrangements and tactics: there were the foot soldiers,

1 termed the Pada; then the cavalry, Turaga; and two other divisions
2 which the moderns have lost and given up--there was the elephant 3 corps--hundreds and hundreds of elephants, with men on their 4 backs, formed into regiments and protected with huge sheets of 5 iron mail; and these elephants would bear down upon a mass of the 6 enemy--then, there were the chariots, of course (you have all seen 7 pictures of those old chariots, they were used in every country).
8 These were the four divisions of the army in those old days.

9 Now, both parties alike wished to secure the alliance of 10 Krishna. But he declined to take an active part and fight in the war, 11 but offered himself as charioteer to Arjuna, and as the friend and 12 counsellor of the Pandavas, while to Duryodhana he gave his army 13 of mighty soldiers.

14 Then was fought on the vast plain of Kurukshetra the great 15 battle in which Bhishma, Drona, Karna, and the brothers of 16 Duryodhana with the kinsmen on both sides and thousands of other 17 heroes fell. The war lasted eighteen days. Indeed, out of the 18 eighteen Akshauhinis of soldiers very few men were left. The death 19 of Duryodhana ended the war in favour of the Pandavas. It was 20 followed by the lament of Gandhari, the queen, and the widowed 21 women, and the funerals of the deceased warriors.

22 The greatest incident of the war was the marvellous and 23 immortal poem of the Gita, the Song Celestial. It is the popular 24 scripture of India and the loftiest of all teachings. It consists of a 25 dialogue held by Arjuna with Krishna, just before the 26 commencement of the fight on the battle-field of Kurukshetra. I 27 would advise those of you who have not read that book to read it. If 28 you only knew how much it has influenced your own country even!
29 If you want to know the source of Emerson's inspiration, it is this 30 book, the Gita. He went to see Carlyle, and Carlyle made him a 31 present of the Gita; and that little book is responsible for the 32 Concord Movement. All the broad movements in America, in one 33 way or other, are indebted to the Concord party.

34 The central figure of the Gita is Krishna. As you worship 35 Jesus of Nazareth as God come down as man, so the Hindus 36 worship many Incarnations of God. They believe in not one or two 37 only, but in many, who have come down from time to time, 38 according to the needs of the world, for the preservation of Dharma 39 and destruction of wickedness. Each sect has one, and Krishna is 40 one of them. Krishna, perhaps, has a larger number of followers in 41 India than any other Incarnation of God. His followers hold that he 42 was the most perfect of those Incarnations. Why? "Because," they 43 say, "look at Buddha and other Incarnations; they were only monks, 44 and they had no sympathy for married people. How could they 45 have? But look at Krishna; he was great as a son, as a king, as a 46 father, and all through his life he practised the marvellous 47 teachings which he preached." "He who in the midst of the greatest 48 activity finds the sweetest peace, and in the midst of the greatest 49 calmness is most active, he has known the secret of life." Krishna 50 shows the way how to do this--by being non-attached: do everything 51 but do not get identified with anything. You are the soul, the pure, 52 the free, all the time; you are the Witness. Our misery comes, not

1 from work, but by our getting attached to something. Take for 2 instance, money: money is a great thing to have, earn it, says
3 Krishna; struggle hard to get money, but don't get attached to it. So 4 with children, with wife, husband, relatives, fame, everything; you 5 have no need to shun them, only don't get attached. There is only 6 one attachment and that belongs to the Lord, and to none other.
7 Work for them, love them, do good to them, sacrifice a hundred 8 lives, if need be, for them, but never be attached. His own life was 9 the exact exemplification of that.

10 Remember that the book which delineates the life of Krishna 11 is several thousand years old, and some parts of his life are very 12 similar to those of Jesus of Nazareth. Krishna was of royal birth; 13 there was a tyrant king, called Kamsa, and there was a prophecy 14 that one would be born of such and such a family, who would be 15 king. So Kamsa ordered all the male children to be massacred. The 16 father and mother of Krishna were cast by King Kamsa into prison, 17 where the child was born. A light suddenly shone in the prison and 18 the child spoke saying, "I am the Light of the world, born for the 19 good of the world." You find Krishna again symbolically represented 20 with cows--"The Great Cowherd" as he is called. Sages affirmed 21 that God Himself was born, and they went to pay him homage. In 22 other parts of the story, the similarity between the two does not 23 continue.

24 Shri Krishna conquered this tyrant Kamsa, but he never 25 thought of accepting or occupying the throne himself. He had 26 nothing to do with that. He had done his duty and there it ended.

27 After the conclusion of the Kurukshetra War, the great 28 warrior and venerable grandsire, Bhishma, who fought ten days out 29 of the eighteen days' battle, still lay on his deathbed and gave 30 instructions to Yudhishtira on various subjects, such as the duties 31 of the king, the duties of the four castes, the four stages of life, the 32 laws of marriage, the bestowing of gifts, etc., basing them on the 33 teachings of the ancient sages. He explained Sankhya philosophy 34 and Yoga philosophy and narrated numerous tales and traditions 35 about saints and gods and kings. These teachings occupy nearly 36 one-fourth of the entire work and form an invaluable storehouse of 37 Hindus laws and moral codes. Yudhishtira had in the meantime 38 been crowned king. But the awful bloodshed and extinction of 39 superiors and relatives weighed heavily on his mind; and then, 40 under the advice of Vyasa, he performed the Ashvamedha sacrifice.

41 After the war, for fifteen years Dhritarashtra dwelt in peace 42 and honour, obeyed by Yudhishtira and his brothers. Then the 43 aged monarch leaving Yudhishtira on the throne, retired to the 44 forest with his devoted wife and Kunti, the mother of the Pandava 45 brothers, to pass his last days in asceticism.

46 Thirty-six years had now passed since Yudhishtira regained 47 his empire. Then came to him the news that Krishna had left his 48 mortal body. Krishna, the sage, his friend, his prophet, his 49 counsellor, had departed. Arjuna hastened to Dwaraka and came 50 back only to confirm the sad news that Krishna and the Yadavas 51 were all dead. Then the king and the other brothers, overcome with

1 sorrow, declared that the time for them to go, too, had arrived. So 2 they cast off the burden of royalty, placed Parikshit, the grandson of 3 Arjuna, on the throne, and retired to the Himalayas, on the Great 4 Journey, the Mahaprasthana. This was a peculiar form of Sannyasa.
5 It was a custom for old kings to become Sannyasins. In ancient 6 India, when men became very old, they would give up everything.
7 So did the kings. When a man did not want to live any more, then 8 he went towards the Himalayas, without eating or drinking and 9 walked on and on till the body failed. All the time thinking of God, 10 he just marched on till the body gave way.

11 Then came the gods, the sages, and they told King 12 Yudhishtira that he should go and reach heaven. To go to heaven 13 one has to cross the highest peaks of the Himalayas. Beyond the 14 Himalayas is Mount Meru. On the top of Mount Meru is heaven.
15 None ever went there in this body. There the gods reside. And 16 Yudhishtira was called upon by the gods to go there.

17 So the five brothers and their wife clad themselves in robes 18 of bark, and set out on their journey. On the way, they were 19 followed by a dog. On and on they went, and they turned their 20 weary feet northward to where the Himalayas lifts his lofty peaks, 21 and they saw the mighty Mount Meru in front of them. Silently they 22 walked on in the snow, until suddenly the queen fell, to rise no 23 more. To Yudhishtira who was leading the way, Bhima, one of the 24 brothers said, "Behold, O King, the queen has fallen." The king shed 25 tears, but he did not look back. "We are going to meet Krishna," he 26 says. "No time to look back. March on." After a while, again Bhima 27 said, "Behold, our brother, Sahadeva has fallen." The king shed 28 tears; but paused not. "March on," he cried.

29 One after the other, in the cold and snow, all the four 30 brothers dropped down, but unshaken, though alone, the king 31 advanced onward. Looking behind, he saw the faithful dog was still 32 following him. And so the king and the dog went on, through snow 33 and ice, over hill and dale, climbing higher and higher, till they 34 reached Mount Meru; and there they began to hear the chimes of 35 heaven, and celestial flowers were showered upon the virtuous king 36 by the gods. Then descended the chariot of the gods, and Indra 37 prayed him, "Ascend in this chariot, greatest of mortals: thou that 38 alone art given to enter heaven without changing the mortal body."
39 But no, that Yudhishtira would not do without his devoted brothers 40 and his queen; then Indra explained to him that the brothers had 41 already gone thither before him.

42 And Yudhishtira looked around and said to his dog, "Get 43 into the chariot, child." The dog stood aghast. "What! the dog?" he 44 cried. "Do thou cast off this dog! The dog goeth not to heaven!
45 Great King, what dost thou mean? Art thou mad? Thou, the most 46 virtuous of the human race, thou only canst go to heaven in thy 47 body." "But he has been my devoted companion through the snow
48 and ice. When all my brothers were dead, my queen dead, he alone 49 never left me. How can I leave him now?" "There is no place in 50 heaven for men with dogs. He has to be left behind. There is 51 nothing unrighteous in this." "I do not go to heaven," replied the 52 king, "without this dog. I shall never give up such a one who has

1 taken refuge with me, until my own life is at an end. I shall never 2 swerve from righteousness, nay, not even for the joys of heaven or 3 the urging of a god." "Then," said Indra, "on one condition the dog 4 goes to heaven. You have been the most virtuous of mortals and he 5 has been a dog, killing and eating animals; he is sinful, hunting, and 6 taking other lives. You can exchange heaven with him." "Agreed," 7 says the king. "Let the dog go to heaven."

8 At once, the scene changed. Hearing these noble words of 9 Yudhishtira, the dog revealed himself as Dharma; the dog was no 10 other than Yama, the Lord of Death and Justice. And Dharma 11 exclaimed, "Behold, O King, no man was ever so unselfish as thou, 12 willing to exchange heaven with a little dog, and for his sake
13 disclaiming all his virtues and ready to go to hell even for him. Thou 14 art well born, O King of kings. Thou hast compassion for all 15 creatures, O Bharata, of which this is a bright example. Hence, 16 regions of undying felicity are thine! Thou has won them, O King, 17 and thine is a celestial and high goal."

18 Then Yudhishtira, with Indra, Dharma, and other gods, 19 proceeds to heaven in a celestial car. He undergoes some trials, 20 bathes in the celestial Ganga, and assumes a celestial body. He 21 meets his brothers who are now immortals, and all at last is bliss.

22 Thus ends the story of the Mahabharata, setting forth in a 23 sublime poem the triumph of virtue and the defeat of vice.

24 In speaking of the Mahabharata to you, it is simply 25 impossible for me to present the unending array of the grand and 26 majestic characters of the mighty heroes depicted by the genius 27 and master-mind of Vyasa. The internal conflicts between 28 righteousness and filial affection in the mind of the god-fearing, yet 29 feeble, old, blind King Dhritarashtra; the majestic character of the 30 grandsire Bhishma; the noble and virtuous character of the royal 31 Yudhishtira, and of the other four brothers, as mighty in valour as 32 in devotion and loyalty; the peerless character of Krishna, 33 unsurpassed in human wisdom; and not less brilliant, the 34 characters of the women--the stately queen Gandhari, the loving 35 mother Kunti, the ever-devoted and all-suffering Draupadi--these 36 and hundreds of other characters of this Epic and those of the 37 Ramayana have been the cherished heritage of the whole Hindu 38 world for the last several thousands of years and form the basis of 39 their thoughts and of their moral and ethical ideas. In fact, the 40 Ramayana and the Mahabharata are the two encyclopaedias of the 41 ancient Aryan life and wisdom, portraying an ideal civilisation 42 which humanity has yet to aspire after.

3 THOUGHTS ON THE GITA
4

5 During his sojourn in Calcutta in 1897, Swami Vivekananda 6 used to stay for the most part at the Math, the headquarters of the 7 Ramakrishna Mission, located then at Alambazar. During this time 8 several young men, who had been preparing themselves for some 9 time previously, gathered round him and took the vows of 10 Brahmacharya and Sannyasa, and Swamiji began to train them for 11 future work, by holding classes on the Gita and Vedanta, and 12 initiating them into the practices of meditation. In one of these 13 classes he talked eloquently in Bengali on the Gita. The following is 14 a translation of the summary of the discourse as it was entered in 15 the Math diary:

16 The book known as the Gita forms a part of the 17 Mahabharata. To understand the Gita properly, several things are 18 very important to know. First, whether it formed a part of the 19 Mahabharata, i.e. whether the authorship attributed to Veda-Vyasa 20 was true, or if it was merely interpolated within the great epic; 21 secondly, whether there was any historical personality of the name 22 of Krishna; thirdly, whether the great war of Kurukshetra as 23 mentioned in the Gita actually took place; and fourthly, whether 24 Arjuna and others were real historical persons.

25 Now in the first place, let us see what grounds there are for 26 such inquiry. We know that there were many who went by the name 27 of Veda-Vyasa; and among them who was the real author of the 28 Gita--the Badarayana Vyasa or the Dvaipayana Vyasa? "Vyasa" was 29 only a title. Anyone who composed a new Purana was known by the 30 name of Vyasa, like the word Vikramaditya, which was also a 31 general name. Another point is, the book, Gita, had not been much 32 known to the generality of people before Shankaracharya made it 33 famous by writing his great commentary on it. Long before that, 34 there was current, according to many, the commentary on it by 35 Bodhayana. If this could be proved, it would go a long way, no 36 doubt, to establish the antiquity of the Gita and the authorship of 37 Vyasa. But the Bodhayana Bhashya on the Vedanta-Sutras--from 38 which Ramanuja compiled his Shri-Bhashya, which Shankaracharya 39 mentions and even quotes in part here and there in his own 40 commentary, and which was so greatly discussed by the Swami 41 Dayananda--not a copy even of that Bodhayana Bhashya could I find 42 while travelling throughout India. It is said that even Ramanuja 43 compiled his Bhashya from a worm-eaten manuscript which he 44 happened to find. When even this great Bodhayana Bhashya on the 45 Vedanta-Sutras is so much enshrouded in the darkness of 46 uncertainty, it is simply useless to try to establish the existence of 47 the Bodhayana Bhashya on the Gita. Some infer that 48 Shankaracharya was the author of the Gita, and that it was he who 49 foisted it into the body of the Mahabharata.

50 Then as to the second point in question, much doubt exists

1 about the personality of Krishna. In one place in the Chhandogya 2 Upanishad we find mention of Krishna, the son of Devaki, who 3 received spiritual instructions from one Ghora, a Yogi. In the 4 Mahabharata, Krishna is the king of Dwaraka; and in the Vishnu
5 Purana we find a description of Krishna playing with the Gopis.
6 Again, in the Bhagavata, the account of his Rasalila is detailed at 7 length. In very ancient times in our country there was in vogue an 8 Utsava called Madanotsava (celebration in honour of Cupid). That 9 very thing was transformed into Dola and thrust upon the shoulders 10 of Krishna. Who can be so bold as to assert that the Rasalila and 11 other things connected with him were not similarly fastened upon 12 him? In ancient times there was very little tendency in our country 13 to find out truths by historical research. So any one could say what 14 he thought best without substantiating it with proper facts and 15 evidence. Another thing: in those ancient times there was very little 16 hankering after name and fame in men. So it often happened that 17 one man composed a book and made it pass current in the name of 18 his Guru or of someone else. In such cases it is very hazardous for 19 the investigator of historical facts to get at the truth. In ancient 20 times they had no knowledge whatever of geography; imagination
21 ran riot. And so we meet with such fantastic creations of the brain 22 as sweet-ocean, milk-ocean, clarified-butter-ocean, curd-ocean, etc!
23 In the Puranas, we find one living ten thousand years, another a 24 hundred thousand years! But the Vedas say, {Sanskrit}--"Man lives 25 a hundred years." Whom shall we follow here? So, to reach a 26 correct conclusion in the case of Krishna is well-nigh impossible.

27 It is human nature to build round the real character of a 28 great man all sorts of imaginary superhuman attributes. As regards 29 Krishna the same must have happened, but it seems quite probable 30 that he was a king. Quite probable I say, because in ancient times in 31 our country it was chiefly the kings who exerted themselves most in 32 the preaching of Brahma-Jnana. Another point to be especially 33 noted here is that whoever might have been the author of the Gita, 34 we find its teachings the same as those in the whole of the 35 Mahabharata. From this we can safely infer that in the age of the 36 Mahabharata some great man arose and preached the Brahma-37 Jnana in this new garb to the then existing society. Another fact 38 comes to the fore that in the olden days, as one sect after another 39 arose, there also came into existence and use among them one new 40 scripture or another. It happened, too, that in the lapse of time both 41 the sect and its scripture died out, or the sect ceased to exist but its 42 scripture remained. Similarly, it was quite probable that the Gita 43 was the scripture of such a sect which had embodied its high and 44 noble ideals in this sacred book.

45 Now to the third point, bearing on the subject of the 46 Kurukshetra War, no special evidence in support of it can be 47 adduced. But there is no doubt that there was a war fought 48 between the Kurus and the Panchalas. Another thing: how could 49 there be so much discussion about Jnana, Bhakti, and Yoga on the 50 battle-field, where the huge army stood in battle array ready to 51 fight, just waiting for the last signal? And was any shorthand writer 52 present there to note down every word spoken between Krishna

1 and Arjuna, in the din and turmoil of the battle-field? According to 2 some, this Kurukshetra War is only an allegory. When we sum up its 3 esoteric significance, it means the war which is constantly going on 4 within man between the tendencies of good and evil. This meaning, 5 too, may not be irrational.

6 About the fourth point, there is enough ground of doubt as 7 regards the historicity of Arjuna and others, and it is this:
8 Shatapatha Brahmana is a very ancient book. In it are mentioned 9 somewhere all the names of those who were the performers of the 10 Ashvamedha Yajna: but in those places there is not only no mention, 11 but no hint even of the names of Arjuna and others, though it 12 speaks of Janamejaya, the son of Parikshit who was a grandson of 13 Arjuna. Yet in the Mahabharata and other books it is stated that 14 Yudhishtira, Arjuna, and others celebrated the Ashvamedha
15 sacrifice.

16 One thing should be especially remembered here, that there 17 is no connection between these historical researches and our real 18 aim, which is the knowledge that leads to the acquirement of 19 Dharma. Even if the historicity of the whole thing is proved to be 20 absolutely false today, it will not in the least be any loss to us. Then 21 what is the use of so much historical research, you may ask. It has 22 its use, because we have to get at the truth; it will not do for us to 23 remain bound by wrong ideas born of ignorance. In this country 24 people think very little of the importance of such inquiries. Many of 25 the sects believe that in order to preach a good thing which may be 26 beneficial to many, there is no harm in telling an untruth, if that 27 helps such preaching, or in other words, the end justifies the 28 means. Hence we find many of our Tantras beginning with, 29 "Mahadeva said to Parvati". But our duty should be to convince 30 ourselves of the truth, to believe in truth only. Such is the power of 31 superstition, or faith in old traditions without inquiry into its truth, 32 that it keeps men bound hand and foot, so much so, that even Jesus 33 the Christ, Mohammed, and other great men believed in many such 34 superstitions and could not shake them off. You have to keep your 35 eye always fixed on truth only and shun all superstitions completely.

36 Now it is for us to see what there is in the Gita. If we study 37 the Upanishads we notice, in wandering through the mazes of many 38 irrelevant subjects, the sudden introduction of the discussion of a 39 great truth, just as in the midst of a huge wilderness a traveller 40 unexpectedly comes across here and there an exquisitely beautiful 41 rose, with its leaves, thorns, roots, all entangled. Compared with 42 that, the Gita is like these truths beautifully arranged together in 43 their proper places--like a fine garland or a bouquet of the choicest 44 flowers. The Upanishads deal elaborately with Shraddha in many 45 places, but hardly mention Bhakti. In the Gita, on the other hand, 46 the subject of Bhakti is not only again and again dealt with, but in 47 it, the innate spirit of Bhakti has attained its culmination.

48 Now let us see some of the main points discussed in the 49 Gita. Wherein lies the originality of the Gita which distinguishes it 50 from all preceding scriptures? It is this: Though before its advent, 51 Yoga, Jnana, Bhakti, etc. had each its strong adherents, they all 52 quarrelled among themselves, each claiming superiority for its own

1 chosen path; no one ever tried to seek for reconciliation among 2 these different paths. It was the author of the Gita who for the first 3 time tried to harmonise these. He took the best from what all the 4 sects then existing had to offer and threaded them in the Gita. But 5 even where Krishna failed to show a complete reconciliation
6 (Samanvaya) among these warring sects, it was fully accomplished 7 by Ramakrishna Paramahansa in this nineteenth century.

8 The next is, Nishkama Karma, or work without desire or 9 attachment. People nowadays understand what is meant by this in 10 various ways. Some say what is implied by being unattached is to 11 become purposeless. If that were its real meaning, then heartless 12 brutes and the walls would be the best exponents of the 13 performance of Nishkama Karma. Many others, again, give the 14 example of Janaka, and wish themselves to be equally recognised as 15 past masters in the practice of Nishkama Karma! Janaka (lit. father) 16 did not acquire that distinction by bringing forth children, but these 17 people all want to be Janakas, with the sole qualification of being 18 the fathers of a brood of children! No! The true Nishkama Karmi 19 (performer of work without desire) is neither to be like a brute, nor 20 to be inert, nor heartless. He is not Tamasika but of pure Sattva.
21 His heart is so full of love and sympathy that he can embrace the 22 whole world with his love. The world at large cannot generally 23 comprehend his all-embracing love and sympathy.

24 The reconciliation of the different paths of Dharma, and 25 work without desire or attachment--these are the two special 26 characteristics of the Gita.

27 Now let us read a little from the second chapter.

28 {Sanskrit}

29 "Sanjaya said:

30 To him who was thus overwhelmed with pity and sorrowing, 31 and whose eyes were dimmed with tears, Madhusudana spoke 32 these words.

33 The Blessed Lord said:

34 In such a strait, whence comes upon thee, O Arjuna, this 35 dejection, un-Aryan-like, disgraceful, and contrary to the attainment 36 of heaven?

37 Yield not to unmanliness, O son of Pritha! Ill doth it become 38 thee. Cast off this mean faint-heartedness and arise, O scorcher of 39 thine enemies!"

40 In the Shlokas beginning with {Sanskrit}, how poetically, 41 how beautifully, has Arjuna's real position been painted! Then Shri 42 Krishna advises Arjuna; and in the words {Sanskrit} etc., why is he 43 goading Arjuna to fight? Because it was not that the disinclination 44 of Arjuna to fight arose out of the overwhelming predominance of 45 pure Sattva Guna; it was all Tamas that brought on this 46 unwillingness. The nature of a man of Sattva Guna is that he is 47 equally calm in all situations in life--whether it be prosperity or 48 adversity. But Arjuna was afraid, he was overwhelmed with pity.
49 That he had the instinct and the inclination to fight is proved by the 1 simple fact that he came to the battle-field with no other purpose 2 than that. Frequently in our lives also such things are seen to 3 happen. Many people think they are Sattvika by nature, but they 4 are really nothing but Tamasika. Many living in an uncleanly way

5 regard themselves as Paramahamsas! Why? Because the Shastras 6 say that Paramahamsas live like one inert, or mad, or like an 7 unclean spirit. Paramahamsas are compared to children, but here it 8 should be understood that the comparison is one-sided. The 9 Paramahamsa and the child are not one and non-different. They 10 only appear similar, being the two extreme poles, as it were. One 11 has reached to a state beyond Jnana, and the other has not got even 12 an inkling of Jnana. The quickest and gentlest vibrations of light are 13 both beyond the reach of our ordinary vision; but in the one it is 14 intense heat, and in the other it may be said to be almost without 15 any heat. So it is with the opposite qualities of Sattva and Tamas.
16 They seem in some respects to be the same, no doubt, but there is a 17 world of difference between them. The Tamoguna loves very much 18 to array itself in the garb of the Sattva. Here, in Arjuna, the mighty 19 warrior, it has come under the guise of Daya (pity).

20 In order to remove this delusion which had overtaken 21 Arjuna, what did the Bhagavan say? As I always preach that you 22 should not decry a man by calling him a sinner, but that you should 23 draw his attention to the omnipotent power that is in him, in the 24 same way does the Bhagavan speak to Arjuna. {Sanskrit}--"It doth 25 not befit thee!" "Thou art Atman imperishable, beyond all evil.
26 Having forgotten thy real nature, thou hast, by thinking thyself a 27 sinner, as one afflicted with bodily evils and mental grief, thou hast 28 made thyself so--this doth not befit thee!"--so says the Bhagavan: 29 "{Sanskrit}--Yield not to unmanliness, O son of Pritha. There is in 30 the world neither sin nor misery, neither disease nor grief; if there 31 is anything in the world which can be called sin, it is this--`fear'; 32 know that any work which brings out the latent power in thee is 33 Punya (virtue); and that which makes thy body and mind weak is, 34 verily, sin. Shake off this weakness, this faint-heartedness!
35 {Sanskrit} Thou art a hero, a Vira; this is unbecoming of thee."

36 If you, my sons, can proclaim this message to the world-- 37 {Sanskrit}--then all this disease, grief, sin, and sorrow will vanish 38 from off the face of the earth in three days. All these ideas of 39 weakness will be nowhere. Now it is everywhere--this current of the 40 vibration of fear. Reverse the current; bring in the opposite 41 vibration, and behold the magic transformation! Thou art 42 omnipotent--go, go to the mouth of the cannon, fear not.

43 Hate not the most abject sinner, look not to his exterior. Turn 44 thy gaze inward, where resides the Paramatman. Proclaim to the 45 whole world with trumpet voice, "There is no sin in thee, there is no 46 misery in thee; thou art the reservoir of omnipotent power. Arise, 47 awake, and manifest the Divinity within!"

48 If one reads this one Shloka--{Sanskrit}--one gets all the 49 merits of reading the entire Gita; for in this one Shloka lies 50 imbedded the whole Message of the Gita.

THE STORY OF JADA BHARATA

(Delivered in California)

There was a great monarch named Bharata. The land which is called India by foreigners is known to her children as Bharata Varsha. Now, it is enjoined on every Hindu when he becomes old, to give up all worldly pursuits--to leave the cares of the world, its wealth, happiness, and enjoyments to his son--and retire into the forest, there to meditate upon the Self which is the only reality in him, and thus break the bonds which bind him to life. King or priest, peasant or servant, man or woman, none is exempt from this duty; for all the duties of the householder--of the son, the brother, the husband, the father, the wife, the daughter, the mother, the sister--are but preparations towards that one stage, when all the bonds which bind the soul to matter are severed asunder for ever.

The great king Bharata in his old age gave over his throne to his son, and retired into the forest. He who had been ruler over millions and millions of subjects, who had lived in marble palaces, inlaid with gold and silver, who had drunk out of jewelled cups--this king built a little cottage with his own hands, made of reeds and grass, on the banks of a river in the Himalayan forests. There he lived on roots and wild herbs, collected by his own hands, and constantly meditated upon Him who is always present in the soul of man. Days, months, and years passed. One day, a deer came to drink water near by where the royal sage was meditating. At the same moment, a lion roared at a little distance off. The deer was so terrified that she, without satisfying her thirst, made a big jump to cross the river. The deer was with young, and this extreme exertion and sudden fright made her give birth to a little fawn, and immediately after she fell dead. The fawn fell into the water and was being carried rapidly away by the foaming stream, when it caught the eyes of the king. The king rose from his position of meditation and rescuing the fawn from the water, took it to his cottage, made a fire, and with care and attention fondled the little thing back to life. Then the kindly sage took the fawn under his protection, bringing it up on soft grass and fruits. The fawn thrived under the paternal care of the retired monarch, and grew into a beautiful deer. Then, he whose mind had been strong enough to break away from lifelong attachment to power, position, and family, became attached to the deer which he had saved from the stream. As he became fonder and fonder of the deer, the less and less he could concentrate his mind upon the Lord. When the deer went out to graze in the forest, if it were late in returning, the mind of the royal sage would become anxious and worried. He would think, "Perhaps my little one has been attacked by some tiger--or perhaps some other danger has befallen it; otherwise, why is it late?"

Some years passed in this way, but one day death came, and the royal sage laid himself down to die. But his mind, instead of being intent upon the Self, was thinking about the deer; and with

1 his eyes fixed upon the sad looks of his beloved deer, his soul left
2 the body. As the result of this, in the next birth he was born as a 3 deer. But no Karma is lost, and all the great and good deeds done
4 by him as a king and sage bore their fruit. This deer was a born 5 Jatismara, and remembered his past birth, though he was bereft of 6 speech and living in an animal body. He always left his companions 7 and was instinctively drawn to graze near hermitages where 8 oblations were offered and the Upanishads were preached.

9 After the usual years of a deer's life had been spent, it died 10 and was next born as the youngest son of a rich Brahmin. And in 11 that life also, he remembered all his past, and even in his childhood 12 was determined no more to get entangled in the good and evil of 13 life. The child, as it grew up, was strong and healthy, but would not 14 speak a word, and lived as one inert and insane, for fear of getting 15 mixed up with worldly affairs. His thoughts were always on the 16 Infinite, and he lived only to wear out his past Prarabdha Karma. In 17 course of time the father died, and the sons divided the property 18 among themselves; and thinking that the youngest was a dumb, 19 good-for-nothing man, they seized his share. Their charity, however, 20 extended only so far as to give him enough food to live upon. The 21 wives of the brothers were often very harsh to him, putting him to 22 do all the hard work; and if he was unable to do everything they 23 wanted, they would treat him very unkindly. But he showed neither 24 vexation nor fear, and neither did he speak a word. When they 25 persecuted him very much, he would stroll out of the house and sit 26 under a tree, by the hour, until their wrath was appeased, and then 27 he would quietly go home again.

28 One day, when the wives of the brothers had treated him 29 with more than usual unkindness, Bharata went out of the house, 30 seated himself under the shadow of a tree and rested. Now it 31 happened that the king of the country was passing by, carried in a 32 palanquin on the shoulders of bearers. One of the bearers had 33 unexpectedly fallen ill, and so his attendants were looking about for 34 a man to replace him. They came upon Bharata seated under a tree; 35 and seeing he was a strong young man, they asked him if he would 36 take the place of the sick man in bearing the king's palanquin. But 37 Bharata did not reply. Seeing that he was so able-bodied, the king's 38 servants caught hold of him and placed the pole on his shoulders.
39 Without speaking a word, Bharata went on. Very soon after this, the 40 king remarked that the palanquin was not being evenly carried, and 41 looking out of the palanquin addressed the new bearer, saying 42 "Fool, rest a while; if thy shoulders pain thee, rest a while." Then 43 Bharata laying the pole of the palanquin down, opened his lips for 44 the first time in his life, and spoke, "Whom dost thou, O King, call a 45 fool? Whom dost thou ask to lay down the palanquin? Who dost thou 46 say is weary? Whom dost thou address as 'thou'? If thou meanest, 47 O King, by the word 'thee' this mass of flesh, it is composed of the 48 same matter as thine; it is unconscious, and it knoweth no 49 weariness, it knoweth no pain. If it is the mind, the mind is the 50 same as thine; it is universal. But if the word 'thee' is applied to 51 something beyond that, then it is the Self, the Reality in me, which 52 is the same as in thee, and it is the One in the universe. Dost thou

1 mean, O King, that the Self can ever be weary, that It can ever be 2 tired, that It can ever be hurt? I did not want, O King--this body did 3 not want--to trample upon the poor worms crawling on the road, 4 and therefore, in trying to avoid them, the palanquin moved 5 unevenly. But the Self was never tired; It was never weak; It never 6 bore the pole of the palanquin: for It is omnipotent and 7 omnipresent." And so he dwelt eloquently on the nature of the soul, 8 and on the highest knowledge, etc. The king, who was proud of his 9 learning, knowledge, and philosophy, alighted from the palanquin, 10 and fell at the feet of Bharata, saying, "I ask thy pardon, O mighty 11 one, I did not know that thou wast a sage, when I asked thee to 12 carry me." Bharata blessed him and departed. He then resumed the 13 even tenor of his previous life. When Bharata left the body, he was 14 freed for ever from the bondage of birth.

THE STORY OF PRAHLADA

(Delivered in California)

Hiranyakashipu was the king of the Daityas. The Daityas, though born of the same parentage as the Devas or gods, were always, at war with the latter. The Daityas had no part in the oblations and offerings of mankind, or in the government of the world and its guidance. But sometimes they waxed strong and drove all the Devas from the heaven, and seized the throne of the gods and ruled for a time. Then the Devas prayed to Vishnu, the Omnipresent Lord of the universe, and He helped them out of their difficulty. The Daityas were driven out, and once more the gods reigned. Hiranyakashipu, king of the Daityas, in his turn, succeeded in conquering his cousins, the Devas, and seated himself on the throne of the heavens and ruled the three worlds--the middle world, inhabited by men and animals; the heavens, inhabited by gods and godlike beings; and the nether world, inhabited by the Daityas. Now, Hiranyakashipu declared himself to be the God of the whole universe and proclaimed that there was no other God but himself, and strictly enjoined that the Omnipotent Vishnu should have no worship offered to Him anywhere; and that all the worship should henceforth be given to himself only.

Hiranyakashipu had a son called Prahlada. Now, it so happened, that this Prahlada from his infancy was devoted to God. He showed inclinations of this as a child; and the king of the Daityas, fearing that the evil he wanted to drive away from the world would crop up in his own family, made over his son to two teachers called Shanda and Amarka, who were very stern disciplinarians, with strict injunctions that Prahlada was never to hear even the name of Vishnu mentioned. The teachers took the prince to their home, and there he was put to study with the other children of his age. But the little Prahlada, instead of learning from his books, devoted all the time in teaching the other boys how to worship Vishnu. When the teachers found it out, they were frightened, for the fear of the mighty king Hiranyakashipu was upon them, and they tried their best to dissuade the child from such teachings. But Prahlada could no more stop his teaching and worshipping Vishnu than he could stop breathing. To clear themselves, the teachers told the terrible fact to the king, that his son was not only worshipping Vishnu himself, but also spoiling all the other children by teaching them to worship Vishnu.

The monarch became very much enraged when he heard this and called the boy to his presence. He tried by gentle persuasions to dissuade Prahlada from the worship of Vishnu and taught him that he, the king, was the only God to worship. But it was to no purpose. The child declared, again and again, that the Omnipresent Vishnu, Lord of the universe, was the only Being to be worshipped--for even he, the king, held his throne only so long as it

1 pleased Vishnu. The rage of the king knew no bounds, and he 2 ordered the boy to be immediately killed. So the Daityas struck him 3 with pointed weapons; but Prahlad's mind was so intent upon 4 Vishnu that he felt no pain from them.

5 When his father, the king, saw that it was so, he became 6 frightened but, roused to the worst passions of a Daitya, contrived 7 various diabolical means to kill the boy. He ordered him to be 8 trampled under foot by an elephant. The enraged elephant could 9 not crush the body any more than he could have crushed a block of 10 iron. So this measure also was to no purpose. Then the king 11 ordered the boy to be thrown over a precipice, and this order too 12 was duly carried out; but, as Vishnu resided in the heart of 13 Prahlada, he came down upon the earth as gently as a flower drops 14 upon the grass. Poison, fire, starvation, throwing into a well, 15 enchantments, and other measures were then tried on the child one 16 after another, but to no purpose. Nothing could hurt him in whose 17 heart dwelt Vishnu.

18 At last, the king ordered the boy to be tied with mighty 19 serpents called up from the nether worlds, and then cast to the 20 bottom of the ocean, where huge mountains were to be piled high 21 upon him, so that in course of time, if not immediately, he might die; 22 and he ordered him to be left in this plight. Even though treated in 23 this manner, the boy continued to pray to his beloved Vishnu:
24 "Salutation to Thee, Lord of the universe. Thou beautiful Vishnu!"
25 Thus thinking and meditating on Vishnu, he began to feel that 26 Vishnu was near him, nay, that He was in his own soul, until he 27 began to feel that he was Vishnu and that he was everything and 28 everywhere.

29 As soon as he realised this, all the snake bonds snapped 30 asunder; the mountains were pulverised, the ocean upheaved, and 31 he was gently lifted up above the waves, and safely carried to the 32 shore. As Prahlada stood there, he forgot that he was a Daitya and 33 had a mortal body: he felt he was the universe and all the powers of 34 the universe emanated from him; there was nothing in nature that 35 could injure him; he himself was the ruler of nature. Time passed 36 thus, in one unbroken ecstasy of bliss, until gradually Prahlada 37 began to remember that he had a body and that he was Prahlada.
38 As soon as he became once more conscious of the body, he saw that 39 God was within and without; and everything appeared to him as 40 Vishnu.

41 When the King Hiranyakashipu found to his horror that all 42 mortal means of getting rid of the boy who was perfectly devoted to 43 his enemy, the God Vishnu, were powerless, he was at a loss to 44 know what to do. The king had the boy again brought before him, 45 and tried to persuade him once more to listen to his advice, through 46 gentle means. But Prahlada made the same reply. Thinking, 47 however, that these childish whims of the boy would be rectified 48 with age and further training, he put him again under the charge of 49 the teachers, Shanda and Amarka, asking them to teach him the 50 duties of the king. But those teachings did not appeal to Prahlada, 51 and he spent his time in instructing his schoolmates in the path of 52 devotion to the Lord Vishnu.

1 When his father came to hear about it, he again became 2 furious with rage, and calling the boy to him, threatened to kill him, 3 and abused Vishnu in the worst language. But Prahlada still 4 insisted that Vishnu was the Lord of the universe, the 5 Beginningless, the Endless, the Omnipotent and the Omnipresent, 6 and as such, he alone was to be worshipped. The king roared with 7 anger and said: "Thou evil one, if thy Vishnu is God omnipresent, 8 why doth he not reside in that pillar yonder?" Prahlada humbly 9 submitted that He did do so. "If so," cried the king, "let him defend 10 thee; I will kill thee with this sword." Thus saying the king rushed at 11 him with sword in hand, and dealt a terrible blow at the pillar.
12 Instantly a thundering voice was heard, and lo and behold, there 13 issued forth from the pillar Vishnu in His awful Nrisimha form--half-14 lion, half-man! Panic-stricken, the Daityas ran away in all directions; 15 but Hiranyakashipu fought with him long and desperately, till he 16 was finally overpowered and killed.

17 Then the gods descended from heaven and offered hymns to 18 Vishnu, and Prahlada also fell at His feet and broke forth into 19 exquisite hymns of praise and devotion. And he heard the Voice of 20 God saying, "Ask, Prahlada, ask for anything thou desirest; thou art 21 My favourite child; therefore ask for anything thou mayest wish." 22 And Prahlada choked with feelings replied, "Lord, I have seen Thee.
23 What else can I want? Do thou not tempt me with earthly or 24 heavenly boons." Again the Voice said: "Yet ask something, my son." 25 And then Prahlada replied, "That intense love, O Lord, which the 26 ignorant bear to worldly things, may I have the same love for Thee; 27 may I have the same intensity of love for Thee, but only for love's 28 sake!"

29 Then the Lord said, "Prahlada, though My intense devotees 30 never desire for anything, here or hereafter, yet by My command, 31 do thou enjoy the blessings of this world to the end of the present 32 cycle, and perform works of religious merit, with thy heart fixed on 33 Me. And thus in time, after the dissolution of thy body, thou shalt 34 attain Me." Thus blessing Prahlada, the Lord Vishnu disappeared.
35 Then the gods headed by Brahma installed Prahlada on the throne
36 of the Daityas and returned to their respective spheres.

THE GREAT TEACHERS OF THE WORLD

(Delivered at the Shakespeare Club, Pasadena, California, February 3, 1900)

The universe, according to the theory of the Hindus, is moving in cycles of wave forms. It rises, reaches its zenith, then falls and remains in the hollow, as it were, for some time, once more to rise, and so on, in wave after wave and fall after fall. What is true of the universe is true of every part of it. The march of human affairs is like that. The history of nations is like that: they rise and they fall; after the rise comes a fall, again out of the fall comes a rise, with greater power. This motion is always going on. In the religious world the same movement exists. In every nation's spiritual life, there is a fall as well as a rise. The nation goes down, and everything seems to go to pieces. Then, again, it gains strength, rises; a huge wave comes, sometimes a tidal wave--and always on the topmost crest of the wave is a shining soul, the Messenger. Creator and created by turns, he is the impetus that makes the wave rise, the nation rise: at the same time, he is created by the same forces which make the wave, acting and interacting by turns. He puts forth his tremendous power upon society; and society makes him what he is. These are the great world-thinkers. These are the Prophets of the world, the Messengers of life, the Incarnations of God.

Man has an idea that there can be only one religion, that there can be only one Prophet, and that there can be only one Incarnation; but that idea is not true. By studying the lives of all these great Messengers, we find that each, as it were, was destined to play a part, and a part only; that the harmony consists in the sum total and not in one note. As in the life of races--no race is born to alone enjoy the world. None dare say no. Each race has a part of play in this divine harmony of nations. Each race has its mission to perform, its duty to fulfil. The sum total is the great harmony.

So, not any one of these Prophets is born to rule the world for ever. None has yet succeeded and none is going to be the ruler for ever. Each only contributes a part; and, as to that part, it is true that in the long run every Prophet will govern the world and its destinies.

Most of us are born believers in a personal religion. We talk of principles, we think of theories, and that is all right; but every thought and every movement, every one of our actions, shows that we can only understand the principle when it comes to us through a person. We can grasp an idea only when it comes to us through a materialised ideal person. We can understand the precept only through the example. Would to God that all of us were so developed that we would not require any example, would not require any person. But that we are not; and, naturally, the vast majority of

1 mankind have put their souls at the feet of these extraordinary
2 personalities, the Prophets, the Incarnations of God--Incarnations 3 worshipped by the Christians, by the Buddhists, and by the Hindus.
4 The Mohammedans from the beginning stood against any such 5 worship. They would have nothing to do with worshipping the 6 Prophets or the Messengers, or paying any homage to them; but, 7 practically, instead of one Prophet, thousands upon thousands of 8 saints are being worshipped. We cannot go against facts! We are 9 bound to worship personalities, and it is good. Remember that word 10 from your great Prophet to the query: "Lord, show us the Father", 11 "He that hath seen me hath seen the Father." Which of us can 12 imagine anything except that He is a man? We can only see Him in 13 and through humanity. The vibration of light is everything in this 14 room: why cannot we see it everywhere? You have to see it only in 15 that lamp. God is an Omnipresent Principle--everywhere: but we 16 are so constituted at present that we can see Him, feel Him, only in 17 and through a human God. And when these great Lights come, then 18 man realises God. And they come in a different way from what we 19 come. We come as beggars; they come as Emperors. We come here 20 like orphans, as people who have lost their way and do not know it.
21 What are we to do? We do not know what is the meaning of our 22 lives. We cannot realise it. Today we are doing one thing, tomorrow 23 another. We are like little bits of straw rocking to and fro in water, 24 like feathers blown about in a hurricane.

25 But, in the history of mankind, you will find that there come 26 these Messengers, and that from their very birth their mission is 27 found and formed. The whole plan is there, laid down; and you see 28 them swerving not one inch from that. Because they come with a 29 mission, they come with a message, they do not want to reason. Did 30 you ever hear or read of these great Teachers, or Prophets, 31 reasoning out what they taught? No, not one of them did so. They 32 speak direct. Why should they reason? They see the Truth. And not 33 only do they see it but they show it! If you ask me, "Is there any 34 God?" and I say "Yes", you immediately ask my grounds for saying 35 so, and poor me has to exercise all his powers to provide you with 36 some reason. If you had come to Christ and said, "Is there any 37 God?" he would have said, "Yes"; and if you had asked, "Is there any 38 proof?" he would have replied, "Behold the Lord!" And thus, you 39 see, it is a direct perception, and not at all the ratiocination of 40 reason. There is no groping in the dark, but there is the strength of 41 direct vision. I see this table; no amount of reason can take that 42 faith from me. It is a direct perception. Such is their faith--faith in 43 their ideals, faith in their mission, faith in themselves, above all 44 else. The great shining Ones believe in themselves as nobody else 45 ever does. The people say, "Do you believe in God? Do you believe 46 in a future life? Do you believe in this doctrine or that dogma?" But 47 here the base is wanting: this belief in oneself. Ay, the man who 48 cannot believe in himself, how can they expect him to believe in 49 anything else? I am not sure of my own existence. One moment I
50 think that I am existing and nothing can destroy me; the next 51 moment I am quaking in fear of death. One minute I think I am
52 immortal; the next minute, a spook appears, and then I don't know 53 what I am, nor where I am. I don't know whether I am living or

1 dead. One moment I think that I am spiritual, that I am moral; and 2 the next moment, a blow comes, and I am thrown flat on my back.
3 And why?--I have lost faith in myself, my moral backbone is broken.

4 But in these great Teachers you will always find this sign:
5 that they have intense faith in themselves. Such intense faith is 6 unique, and we cannot understand it. That is why we try to explain 7 away in various ways what these Teachers speak of themselves; and 8 people invent twenty thousand theories to explain what they say 9 about their realisation. We do not think of ourselves in the same 10 way, and, naturally, we cannot understand them.

11 Then again, when they speak, the world is bound to listen.
12 When they speak, each word is direct; it bursts like a bomb-shell.
13 What is in the word, unless it has the Power behind? What matters 14 it what language you speak, and how you arrange your language?
15 What matters it whether you speak correct grammar or with fine 16 rhetoric? What matters it whether your language is ornamental or 17 not? The question is whether or not you have anything to give. It is 18 a question of giving and taking, and not listening. Have you 19 anything to give?--that is the first question. If you have, then give.
20 Words but convey the gift: it is but one of the many modes.
21 Sometimes we do not speak at all. There is an old Sanskrit verse 22 which says, "I saw the Teacher sitting under a tree. He was a young 23 man of sixteen, and the disciple was an old man of eighty. The 24 preaching of the Teacher was silence, and the doubts of the disciple 25 departed."

26 Sometimes they do not speak at all, but yet they convey the 27 Truth from mind to mind. They come to give. They command, they 28 are the Messengers; you have to receive the Command. Do you not 29 remember in your own scriptures the authority with which Jesus 30 speaks? "Go ye, therefore, and teach all nations . . . teaching them 31 to observe all things whatsoever I have commanded you." It runs 32 through all his utterances, that tremendous faith in his own 33 message. That you find in the life of all these great giants whom the 34 world worships as its Prophets.

35 These great Teachers are the living Gods on this earth.
36 Whom else should we worship? I try to get an idea of God in my 37 mind, and I find what a false little thing I conceive; it would be a sin 38 to worship that God. I open my eyes and look at the actual life of 39 these great ones of the earth. They are higher than any conception 40 of God that I could ever form. For, what conception of mercy could a 41 man like me form who would go after a man if he steals anything 42 from me and send him to jail? And what can be my highest idea of 43 forgiveness? Nothing beyond myself. Which of you can jump out of 44 your own bodies? Which of you can jump out of your own minds?
45 Not one of you. What idea of divine love can you form except what 46 you actually live? What we have never experienced we can form no 47 idea of. So, all my best attempts at forming an idea of God would 48 fail in every case. And here are plain facts, and not idealism--actual 49 facts of love, of mercy, of purity, of which I can have no conception 50 even. What wonder that I should fall at the feet of these men and 51 worship them as God? And what else can anyone do? I should like 52 to see the man who can do anything else, however much he may

1 talk. Talking is not actuality. Talking about God and the Impersonal, 2 and this and that, is all very good; but these man-Gods are the real 3 Gods of all nations and all races. These divine men have been 4 worshipped and will be worshipped so long as man is man. Therein
5 is our faith, therein is our hope, of a reality. Of what avail is a mere 6 mystical principle!

7 The purpose and intent of what I have to say to you is this,
8 that I have found it possible in my life to worship all of them, and to 9 be ready for all that are yet to come. A mother recognises her son 10 in any dress in which he may appear before her; and if one does not 11 do so, I am sure she is not the mother of that man. Now, as regards 12 those of you that think that you understand Truth and Divinity and 13 God in only one Prophet in the world, and not in any other, 14 naturally, the conclusion which I draw is that you do not understand 15 Divinity in anybody; you have simply swallowed words and 16 identified yourself with one sect, just as you would in party politics, 17 as a matter of opinion; but that is no religion at all. There are some 18 fools in this world who use brackish water although there is 19 excellent sweet water near by, because, they say, the brackish-
20 water well was dug by their father. Now, in my little experience I 21 have collected this knowledge--that for all the devilry that religion 22 is blamed with, religion is not at all in fault: no religion ever 23 persecuted men, no religion ever burnt witches, no religion ever did 24 any of these things. What then incited people to do these things?
25 Politics, but never religion; and if such politics takes the name of 26 religion whose fault is that?

27 So, when each man stands and says "My Prophet is the only 28 true Prophet," he is not correct--he knows not the alpha of religion.
29 Religion is neither talk, nor theory, nor intellectual consent. It is 30 realisation in the heart of our hearts; it is touching God; it is 31 feeling, realising that I am a spirit in relation with the Universal 32 Spirit and all Its great manifestations. If you have really entered the 33 house of the Father, how can you have seen His children and not 34 known them? And if you do not recognise them, you have not 35 entered the house of the Father. The mother recognises her child in 36 any dress and knows him however disguised. Recognise all the 37 great, spiritual men and women in every age and country, and see 38 that they are not really at variance with one another. Wherever 39 there has been actual religion--this touch of the Divine, the soul 40 coming in direct sense-contact with the Divine--there has always 41 been a broadening of the mind which enables it to see the light 42 everywhere. Now, some Mohammedans are the crudest in this 43 respect, and the most sectarian. Their watchword is: "There is one 44 God, and Mohammed is His Prophet." Everything beyond that not 45 only is bad, but must be destroyed forthwith; at a moment's notice, 46 every man or woman who does not exactly believe in that must be 47 killed; everything that does not belong to this worship must be 48 immediately broken; every book that teaches anything else must be 49 burnt. From the Pacific to the Atlantic for five hundred years blood 50 ran all over the world. That is Mohammedanism! Nevertheless, 51 among these Mohammedans, wherever there was a philosophic 52 man, he was sure to protest against these cruelties. In that he

1 showed the touch of the Divine and realised a fragment of the truth; 2 he was not playing with his religion; for it was not his father's 3 religion he was talking, but spoke the truth direct like a man.

4 Side by side with the modern theory of evolution there is 5 another thing: atavism. There is a tendency in us to revert to old 6 ideas in religion. Let us think something new, even if it be wrong. It 7 is better to do that. Why should you not try to hit the mark? We 8 come wiser through failures. Time is infinite. Look at the wall. Did 9 the wall ever tell a lie? It is always the wall. Man tells a lie--and 10 becomes a god too. It is better to do something; never mind even if 11 it proves to be wrong; it is better than doing nothing. The cow 12 never tells a lie, but she remains a cow, all the time. Do something!
13 Think some thought; it doesn't matter whether you are right or 14 wrong. But think something! Because my forefathers did not think 15 this way, shall I sit down quietly and gradually lose my sense of 16 feeling and my own thinking faculties? I may as well be dead! And 17 what is life worth if we have no living ideas, no convictions of our 18 own about religion? There is some hope for the atheists, because 19 though they differ from others, they think for themselves. The 20 people who never think anything for themselves are not yet born 21 into the world of religion; they have a mere jelly-fish existence.
22 They will not think; they do not care for religion. But the 23 disbeliever, the atheist, cares, and he is struggling. So think 24 something! Struggle Godward! Never mind if you fail, never mind if 25 you get hold of a queer theory. If you are afraid to be called queer, 26 keep it in your own mind--you need not go and preach it to others.
27 But do something! Struggle Godward! Light must come. If a man 28 feeds me every day of my life, in the long run I shall lose the use of 29 my hands. Spiritual death is the result of following each other like a 30 flock of sheep. Death is the result of inaction. Be active; and 31 wherever there is activity, there must be difference. Difference is 32 the sauce of life; it is the beauty, it is the art of everything.
33 Difference makes all beautiful here. It is variety that is the source 34 of life, the sign of life. Why should we be afraid of it?

35 Now, we are coming into a position to understand about the 36 Prophets. Now, we see that the historical evidence is--apart from 37 the jelly-fish existence in religion--that where there has been any 38 real thinking, any real love for God, the soul has grown Godwards 39 and has got as it were, a glimpse now and then, has come into 40 direct perception, even for a second, even once in its life.
41 Immediately, "All doubts vanish for ever, and all the crookedness of 42 the heart is made straight, and all bondages vanish, and the results 43 of action and Karma fly when He is seen who is the nearest of the 44 near and the farthest of the far." That is religion, that is all of 45 religion; the rest is mere theory, dogma, so many ways of going to 46 that state of direct perception. Now we are fighting over the basket 47 and the fruits have fallen into the ditch.

48 If two men quarrel about religion, just ask them the 49 question: "Have you seen God? Have you seen these things?" One 50 man says that Christ is the only Prophet: well, has he seen Christ?
51 "Has your father seen Him?" "No, Sir." "Has your grandfather seen 52 Him?" "No, Sir." "Have you seen Him?" "No, Sir." "Then what are

1 you quarrelling for? The fruits have fallen into the ditch, and you 2 are quarrelling over the basket!" Sensible men and woman should 3 be ashamed to go on quarrelling in that way!

4 These great Messengers and Prophets are great and true.
5 Why? Because, each one has come to preach a great idea. Take the 6 Prophets of India, for instance. They are the oldest of the founders 7 of religion. We take, first, Krishna. You who have read the Gita see 8 all through the book that the one idea is non-attachment. Remain 9 unattached. The heart's love is due to only One. To whom? To Him 10 who never changeth. Who is that One? It is God. Do not make the 11 mistake of giving the heart to anything that is changing, because 12 that is misery. You may give it to a man; but if he dies, misery is the 13 result. You may give it to a friend, but he may tomorrow become 14 your enemy. If you give it to your husband, he may one day quarrel 15 with you. You may give it to your wife, and she may die the day
16 after tomorrow. Now, this is the way the world is going on. So says 17 Krishna in the Gita: The Lord is the only One who never changes.
18 His love never fails. Wherever we are and whatever we do, He is 19 ever and ever the same merciful, the same loving heart. He never 20 changes, He is never angry, whatever we do. How can God be angry 21 with us? Your babe does many mischievous things: are you angry 22 with that babe? Does not God know what we are going to be? He 23 knows we are all going to be perfect, sooner or later. He has 24 patience, infinite patience. We must love Him, and everyone that 25 lives--only in and through Him. This is the keynote. You must love 26 the wife, but not for the wife's sake. "Never, O Beloved, is the 27 husband loved on account of the husband, but because the Lord is 28 in the husband." The Vedanta philosophy says that even in the love 29 of the husband and wife, although the wife is thinking that she is 30 loving the husband, the real attraction is the Lord, who is present 31 there. He is the only attraction, there is no other; but the wife in 32 most cases does not know that it is so, but ignorantly she is doing 33 the right thing, which is, loving the Lord. Only, when one does it 34 ignorantly, it may bring pain. If one does it knowingly, that is 35 salvation. This is what our scriptures say. Wherever there is love, 36 wherever there is a spark of joy, know that to be a spark of His 37 presence because He is joy, blessedness, and love itself. Without 38 that there cannot be any love.

39 This is the trend of Krishna's instruction all the time. He has 40 implanted that upon his race, so that when a Hindu does anything, 41 even if he drinks water, he says, "If there is any virtue in it, let it go 42 to the Lord." The Buddhist says, if he does any good deed, "Let the 43 merit of the good deed belong to the world; if there is any virtue in 44 what I do, let it go to the world, and let the evils of the world come 45 to me." The Hindu says he is a great believer in God; the Hindu 46 says that God is omnipotent and that He is the Soul of every soul 47 everywhere; the Hindu says, "If I give all my virtues unto Him, that 48 is the greatest sacrifice, and they will go to the whole universe."

49 Now, this is one phase; and what is the other message of 50 Krishna? "Whosoever lives in the midst of the world, and works, and 51 gives up all the fruit of his action unto the Lord, he is never touched 52 with the evils of the world. Just as the lotus, born under the water,

1 rises up and blossoms above the water, even so is the man who is 2 engaged in the activities of the world, giving up all the fruit of his 3 activities unto the Lord." (Gita, V. 10).

4 Krishna strikes another note as a teacher of intense activity.
5 Work, work, work day and night, says the Gita. You may ask, "Then, 6 where is peace? If all through life I am to work like a cart-horse and 7 die in harness, what am I here for?" Krishna says, "Yes, you will find 8 peace. Flying from work is never the way to find peace." Throw off 9 your duties if you can, and go to the top of a mountain; even there 10 the mind is going--whirling, whirling, whirling. Someone asked a 11 Sannyasin, "Sir, have you found a nice place? How many years have 12 you been travelling in the Himalayas?" "For forty years," replied the 13 Sannyasin. "There are so many beautiful spots to select from, and to 14 settle down in: why did you not do so?" "Because for these forty 15 years my mind would not allow me to do so." We all say, "Let us find 16 peace"; but the mind will not allow us to do so.

17 You know the story of the man who caught a Tartar. A 18 soldier was outside the town, and he cried out when he came near 19 the barracks, "I have caught a Tartar." A voice called out, "Bring 20 him in." "He won't come in, sir." "Then you come in." "He won't let 21 me come in, sir." So, in this mind of ours, we have "caught a Tartar": 22 neither can we tone it down, nor will it let us be toned down. We 23 have all "caught Tartars". We all say, be quiet, and peaceful, and so 24 forth. But every baby can say that and thinks he can do it. However, 25 that is very difficult. I have tried. I threw overboard all my duties 26 and fled to the tops of mountains; I lived in caves and deep forests-- 27 but all the same, I "caught a Tartar", because I had my world with 28 me all the time. The "Tartar" is what I have in my own mind, so we 29 must not blame poor people outside. "These circumstances are 30 good, and these are bad," so we say, while the "Tartar" is here, 31 within; if we can quiet him down, we shall be all right.

32 Therefore Krishna teaches us not to shirk our duties, but to 33 take them up manfully, and not think of the result. The servant has 34 no right to question. The soldier has no right to reason. Go forward, 35 and do not pay too much attention to the nature of the work you 36 have to do. Ask your mind if you are unselfish. If you are, never 37 mind anything, nothing can resist you! Plunge in! Do the duty at 38 hand. And when you have done this, by degrees you will realise the 39 Truth: "Whosoever in the midst of intense activity finds intense 40 peace, whosoever in the midst of the greatest peace finds the 41 greatest activity, he is a Yogi, he is a great soul, he has arrived at 42 perfection."

43 Now, you see that the result of this teaching is that all the 44 duties of the world are sanctified. There is no duty in this world 45 which we have any right to call menial: and each man's work is 46 quite as good as that of the emperor on his throne.

47 Listen to Buddha's message--a tremendous message. It has a 48 place in our heart. Says Buddha, "Root out selfishness, and 49 everything that makes you selfish. Have neither wife, child, nor 50 family. Be not of the world; become perfectly unselfish." A worldly 51 man thinks he will be unselfish, but when he looks at the face of his

1 wife it makes him selfish. The mother thinks she will be perfectly 2 unselfish, but she looks at her baby, and immediately selfishness
3 comes. So with everything in this world. As soon as selfish desires 4 arise, as soon as some selfish pursuit is followed, immediately the 5 whole man, the real man, is gone: he is like a brute, he is a slave, he 6 forgets his fellow men. No more does he say, "You first and I 7 afterwards," but it is "I first and let everyone else look out for 8 himself."

9 We find that Krishna's message has also a place for us.
10 Without that message, we cannot move at all. We cannot 11 conscientiously and with peace, joy, and happiness, take up any 12 duty of our lives without listening to the message of Krishna: "Be 13 not afraid even if there is evil in your work, for there is no work 14 which has no evil." "Leave it unto the Lord, and do not look for the 15 results."

16 On the other hand, there is a corner in the heart for the 17 other message: Time flies, this world is finite and all misery. With 18 your good food, nice clothes, and your comfortable home, O 19 sleeping man and woman, do you ever think of the millions that are 20 starving and dying? Think of the great fact that it is all misery, 21 misery, misery! Note the first utterance of the child: when it enters 22 into the world, it weeps. That is the fact--the child weeps. This is a 23 place for weeping! If we listen to the Messenger, we should not be 24 selfish.

25 Behold another Messenger, He of Nazareth. He teaches, "Be 26 ready, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." I have pondered over 27 the message of Krishna, and am trying to work without attachment, 28 but sometimes I forget. Then, suddenly, comes to me the message 29 of Buddha: "Take care, for everything in the world is evanescent, 30 and there is always misery in this life." I listen to that, and I am 31 uncertain which to accept. Then again comes, like a thunderbolt, 32 the message: "Be ready, for the Kingdom of Heaven is at hand." Do 33 not delay a moment. Leave nothing for tomorrow. Get ready for the 34 final event, which may overtake you immediately, even now. That 35 message, also, has a place, and we acknowledge it. We salute the 36 Messenger, we salute the Lord.

37 And then comes Mohammed, the Messenger of equality. You 38 ask, "What good can there be in his religion?" If there were no 39 good, how could it live? The good alone lives, that alone survives; 40 because the good alone is strong, therefore it survives. How long is 41 the life of an impure man, even in this life? Is not the life of the 42 pure man much longer? Without doubt, for purity is strength, 43 goodness is strength. How could Mohammedanism have lived, had 44 there been nothing good in its teaching? There is much good.
45 Mohammed was the Prophet of equality, of the brotherhood of man, 46 the brotherhood of all Mussalmans.

47 So we see that each Prophet, each Messenger, has a 48 particular message. When you first listen to that message, and then 49 look at his life, you will see his whole life stands explained, radiant.

50 Now, ignorant fools start twenty thousand theories, and put 51 forward, according to their own mental development, explanations

1 to suit their own ideas, and ascribe them to these great Teachers.
2 They take their teachings and put their misconstruction upon them.
3 With every great Prophet his life is the only commentary. Look at 4 his life: what he did will bear out the texts. Read the Gita, and you 5 will find that is exactly borne out by the life of the Teacher.

6 Mohammed by his life showed that amongst Mohammedans
7 there should be perfect equality and brotherhood. There was no
8 question of race, caste, creed, colour, or sex. The Sultan of Turkey 9 may buy a Negro from the mart of Africa, and bring him in chains to 10 Turkey; but should he become a Mohammedan and have sufficient 11 merit and abilities, he might even marry the daughter of the Sultan.
12 Compare this with the way in which the Negroes and the American 13 Indians are treated in this country! And what do Hindus do? If one 14 of your missionaries chance to touch the food of an orthodox 15 person, he would throw it away. Notwithstanding our grand 16 philosophy, you note our weakness in practice; but there you see 17 the greatness of the Mohammedan beyond other races, showing 18 itself in equality, perfect equality regardless of race or colour.

19 Will other and greater Prophets come? Certainly they will 20 come in this world. But do not look forward to that. I should better 21 like that each one of you became a Prophet of this real New 22 Testament, which is made up of all the Old Testaments. Take all the 23 old messages, supplement them with your own realisations, and 24 become a Prophet unto others. Each one of these Teachers has 25 been great; each has left something for us; they have been our 26 Gods. We salute them, we are their servants; and, all the same, we 27 salute ourselves; for if they have been Prophets and children of 28 God, we also are the same. They reached their perfection, and we 29 are going to attain ours now. Remember the words of Jesus: "The 30 Kingdom of Heaven is at hand!" This very moment let every one of 31 us make a staunch resolution: "I will become a Prophet, I will 32 become a messenger of Light, I will become a child of God, nay, I 33 will become a God!"

ON LORD BUDDHA

(Delivered in Detroit)

In every religion we find one type of self-devotion particularly developed. The type of working without a motive is most highly developed in Buddhism. Do not mistake Buddhism and Brahminism. In this country you are very apt to do so. Buddhism is one of our sects. It was founded by a great man called Gautama, who became disgusted at the eternal metaphysical discussions of his day, and the cumbrous rituals, and more especially with the caste system. Some people say that we are born to a certain state, and therefore we are superior to others who are not thus born. He was also against the tremendous priestcraft. He preached a religion in which there was no motive power, and was perfectly agnostic about metaphysics or theories about God. He was often asked if there was a God, and he answered, he did not know. When asked about right conduct, he would reply, "Do good and be good." There came five Brahmins, who asked him to settle their discussion. One said, "Sir, my book says that God is such and such, and that this is the way to come to God." Another said, "That is wrong, for my book says such and such, and this is the way to come to God"; and so the others. He listened calmly to all of them, and then asked them one by one, "Does any one of your books say that God becomes angry, that He ever injures anyone, that He is impure?" "No, Sir, they all teach that God is pure and good." "Then, my friends, why do you not become pure and good first, that you may know what God is?"

Of course I do not endorse all his philosophy. I want a good deal of metaphysics, for myself. I entirely differ in many respects, but, because I differ, is that any reason why I should not see the beauty of the man? He was the only man who was bereft of all motive power. There were other great men who all said they were the Incarnations of God Himself, and that those who would believe in them would go to heaven. But what did Buddha say with his dying breath? "None can help you; help yourself; work out your own salvation." He said about himself, "Buddha is the name of infinite knowledge, infinite as the sky; I, Gautama, have reached that state; you will all reach that too if you struggle for it." Bereft of all motive power, he did not want to go to heaven, did not want money; he gave up his throne and everything else and went about begging his bread through the streets of India, preaching for the good of men and animals with a heart as wide as the ocean.

He was the only man who was ever ready to give up his life for animals to stop a sacrifice. He once said to a king, "If the sacrifice of a lamb helps you to go to heaven, sacrificing a man will help you better; so sacrifice me." The king was astonished. And yet this man was without any motive power. He stands as the perfection of the active type, and the very height to which he attained shows that through the power of work we can also attain to the highest spirituality.

1 To many the path becomes easier if they believe in God. But 2 the life of Buddha shows that even a man who does not believe in 3 God, has no metaphysics, belongs to no sect, and does not go to any 4 church, or temple, and is a confessed materialist, even he can 5 attain to the highest. We have no right to judge him. I wish I had 6 one infinitesimal part of Buddha's heart. Buddha may or may not 7 have believed in God; that does not matter to me. He reached the 8 same state of perfection to which others come by Bhakti--love of 9 God-Yoga, or Jnana. Perfection does not come from belief or faith.
10 Talk does not count for anything. Parrots can do that. Perfection 11 comes through the disinterested performance of action.

2 CHRIST THE MESSENGER

3 (Delivered at Los Angeles, California, 1900)
4

5 The wave rises on the ocean, and there is a hollow. Again
6 another wave rises, perhaps bigger than the former, to fall down 7 again, similarly, again to rise--driving onward. In the march of 8 events, we notice the rise and fall, and we generally look towards 9 the rise, forgetting the fall. But both are necessary, and both are 10 great. This is the nature of the universe. Whether in the world of 11 our thoughts, the world of our relations in society, or in our spiritual 12 affairs, the same movement of succession, of rises and falls, is 13 going on. Hence great predominances in the march of events, the 14 liberal ideals, are marshalled ahead, to sink down, to digest, as it 15 were, to ruminate over the past--to adjust, to conserve, to gather 16 strength once more for a rise and a bigger rise.

17 The history of nations also has ever been like that. The great 18 soul, the Messenger we are to study this afternoon, came at a 19 period of the history of his race which we may well designate as a 20 great fall. We catch only little glimpses here and there of the stray 21 records that have been kept of his sayings and doings; for verily it 22 has been well said, that the doings and sayings of that great soul 23 would fill the world if they had all been written down. And the three 24 years of his ministry were like one compressed, concentrated age, 25 which it has taken nineteen hundred years to unfold, and who 26 knows how much longer it will yet take! Little men like you and me 27 are simply the recipients of just a little energy. A few minutes, a few 28 hours, a few years at best, are enough to spend it all, to stretch it 29 out, as it were, to its fullest strength, and then we are gone for ever.
30 But mark this giant that came; centuries and ages pass, yet the 31 energy that he left upon the world is not yet stretched, nor yet 32 expended to its full. It goes on adding new vigour as the ages roll 33 on.

34 Now what you see in the life of Christ is the life of all the 35 past. The life of every man is, in a manner, the life of the past. It 36 comes to him through heredity, through surroundings, through 37 education, through his own reincarnation--the past of the race. In a 38 manner, the past of the earth, the past of the whole world is there, 39 upon every soul. What are we, in the present, but a result, an effect, 40 in the hands of that infinite past? What are we but floating wavelets 41 in the eternal current of events, irresistibly moved forward and 42 onward and incapable of rest? But you and I are only little things, 43 bubbles. There are always some giant waves in the ocean of affairs, 44 and in you and me the life of the past race has been embodied only 45 a little; but there are giants who embody, as it were, almost the 46 whole of the past and who stretch out their hands for the future.
47 These are the sign-posts here and there which point to the march of 48 humanity; these are verily gigantic, their shadows covering the 49 earth--they stand undying, eternal! As it has been said by the same 50 Messenger, "No man hath seen God at any time, but through the 51 Son." And that is true. And where shall we see God but in the Son?

1 It is true that you and I, and the poorest of us, the meanest even,
2 embody that God, even reflect that God. The vibration of light is 3 everywhere, omnipresent; but we have to strike the light of the 4 lamp before we can see the light. The Omnipresent God of the 5 universe cannot be seen until He is reflected by these giant lamps 6 of the earth--the Prophets, the man-Gods, the Incarnations, the 7 embodiments of God.

8 We all know that God exists, and yet we do not see Him, we 9 do not understand Him. Take one of these great Messengers of 10 light, compare his character with the highest ideal of God that you 11 ever formed, and you will find that your God falls short of the ideal, 12 and that the character of the Prophet exceeds your conceptions.
13 You cannot even form a higher ideal of God than what the actually 14 embodied have practically realised and set before us as an example.
15 Is it wrong, therefore, to worship these as God? Is it a sin to fall at 16 the feet of these man-Gods and worship them as the only divine 17 beings in the world? If they are really, actually, higher than all our 18 conceptions of God, what harm is there in worshipping them? Not 19 only is there no harm, but it is the only possible and positive way of 20 worship. However much you may try to struggle, by abstraction, by 21 whatsoever method you like, still so long as you are a man in the 22 world of men, your world is human, your religion is human, and 23 your God is human. And that must be so. Who is not practical 24 enough to take up an actually existing thing and give up an idea 25 which is only an abstraction, which he cannot grasp, and is difficult 26 of approach except through a concrete medium? Therefore, these 27 Incarnations of God have been worshipped in all ages and in all 28 countries.

29 We are now going to study a little of the life of Christ, the 30 Incarnation of the Jews. When Christ was born, the Jews were in 31 that state which I call a state of fall between two waves; a state of 32 conservatism; a state where the human mind is, as it were, tired for 33 the time being of moving forward and is taking care only of what it 34 has already; a state when the attention is more bent upon 35 particulars, upon details, than upon the great, general, and bigger 36 problems of life; a state of stagnation, rather than a towing ahead; a 37 state of suffering more than of doing. Mark you, I do not blame this 38 state of things. We have no right to criticise it--because had it not 39 been for this fall, the next rise, which was embodied in Jesus of 40 Nazareth would have been impossible. The Pharisees and 41 Sadducees might have been insincere, they might have been doing 42 things which they ought not to have done; they might have been 43 even hypocrites; but whatever they were, these factors were the 44 very cause, of which the Messenger was the effect. The Pharisees 45 and Sadducees at one end were the very impetus which came out at 46 the other end as the gigantic brain of Jesus of Nazareth.

47 The attention to forms, to formulas, to the everyday details 48 of religion, and to rituals, may sometimes be laughed at; but 49 nevertheless, within them is strength. Many times in the rushing 50 forward we lose much strength. As a fact, the fanatic is stronger 51 than the liberal man. Even the fanatic, therefore, has one great 52 virtue, he conserves energy, a tremendous amount of it. As with the 1 individual so with the race, energy is gathered to be conserved.

2 Hemmed in all around by external enemies, driven to focus in a 3 centre by the Romans, by the Hellenic tendencies in the world of 4 intellect, by waves from Persia, India, and Alexandria--hemmed in 5 physically, mentally, and morally--there stood the race with an 6 inherent, conservative, tremendous strength, which their 7 descendants have not lost even today. And the race was forced to 8 concentrate and focus all its energies upon Jerusalem and Judaism.
9 But all power when once gathered cannot remain collected; it must 10 expend and expand itself. There is no power on earth which can be 11 kept long confined within a narrow limit. It cannot be kept 12 compressed too long to allow of expansion at a subsequent period.

13 This concentrated energy amongst the Jewish race found its 14 expression at the next period in the rise of Christianity. The 15 gathered streams collected into a body. Gradually, all the little 16 streams joined together, and became a surging wave on the top of 17 which we find standing out the character of Jesus of Nazareth.
18 Thus, every Prophet is a creation of his own times, the creation of 19 the past of his race; he himself is the creator of the future. The 20 cause of today is the effect of the past and the cause for the future.
21 In this position stands the Messenger. In him is embodied all that is 22 the best and greatest in his own race, the meaning, the life, for 23 which that race has struggled for ages; and he himself is the 24 impetus for the future, not only to his own race but to unnumbered 25 other races of the world.

26 We must bear another fact in mind: that my view of the great 27 Prophet of Nazareth would be from the standpoint of the Orient.
28 Many times you forget, also, that the Nazarene himself was an 29 Oriental of Orientals. With all your attempts to paint him with blue 30 eyes and yellow hair, the Nazarene was still an Oriental. All the 31 similes, the imageries, in which the Bible is written--the scenes, the 32 locations, the attitudes, the groups, the poetry, and symbol--speak 33 to you of the Orient: of the bright sky, of the heat, of the sun, of the 34 desert, of the thirsty men and animals; of men and women coming 35 with pitchers on their heads to fill them at the wells; of the flocks, of 36 the ploughmen, of the cultivation that is going on around; of the 37 water-mill and wheel, of the mill-pond, of the millstones. All these 38 are to be seen today in Asia.

39 The voice of Asia has been the voice of religion. The voice of 40 Europe is the voice of politics. Each is great in its own sphere. The 41 voice of Europe is the voice of ancient Greece. To the Greek mind, 42 his immediate society was all in all: beyond that, it is Barbarian.
43 None but the Greek has the right to live. Whatever the Greeks do is 44 right and correct; whatever else there exists in the world is neither 45 right nor correct, nor should be allowed to live. It is intensely 46 human in its sympathies, intensely natural, intensely artistic, 47 therefore. The Greek lives entirely in this world. He does not care 48 to dream. Even is poetry is practical. His gods and goddesses are 49 not only human beings, but intensely human, with all human 50 passions and feelings almost the same as with any of us. He loves 51 what is beautiful, but, mind you, it is always external nature; the 52 beauty of the hills, of the snows, of the flowers, the beauty of forms

1 and of figures, the beauty in the human face, and, more often, in the 2 human form--that is what the Greeks liked. And the Greeks being 3 the teachers of all subsequent Europeanism, the voice of Europe is 4 Greek.

5 There is another type in Asia. Think of that vast, huge 6 continent, whose mountain-tops go beyond the clouds, almost 7 touching the canopy of heaven's blue; a rolling desert of miles upon 8 miles where a drop of water cannot be found, neither will a blade of 9 grass grow; interminable forests and gigantic rivers rushing down 10 to the sea. In the midst of all these surroundings, the oriental love 11 of the beautiful and of the sublime developed itself in another 12 direction. It looked inside, and not outside. There is also the thirst 13 for nature, and there is also the same thirst for power; there is also 14 the same thirst for excellence, the same idea of the Greek and 15 Barbarian, but it has extended over a larger circle. In Asia, even 16 today, birth or colour or language never makes a race. That which 17 makes a race is its religion. We are all Christians; we are all 18 Mohammedans; we are all Hindus, or all Buddhists. No matter if a 19 Buddhist is a Chinaman, or is a man from Persia, they think that 20 they are brothers, because of their professing the same religion.
21 Religion is the tie, unity of humanity. And then again, the Oriental, 22 for the same reason, is a visionary, is a born dreamer. The ripples of 23 the waterfalls, the songs of the birds, the beauties of the sun and 24 moon and the stars and the whole earth are pleasant enough; but 25 they are not sufficient for the oriental mind. He wants to dream a 26 dream beyond. He wants to go beyond the present. The present, as 27 it were, is nothing to him. The Orient has been the cradle of the 28 human race for ages, and all the vicissitudes of fortune are there-- 29 kingdoms succeeding kingdoms, empires succeeding empires,
30 human power, glory, and wealth, all rolling down there; a Golgotha 31 of power and learning. That is the Orient: a Golgotha of power, of 32 kingdoms, of learning. No wonder, the oriental mind looks with 33 contempt upon the things of this world and naturally wants to see 34 something that changeth not, something which dieth not, something 35 which in the midst of this world of misery and death is eternal, 36 blissful, undying. An oriental Prophet never tires of insisting upon 37 these ideals; and, as for Prophets, you may also remember that 38 without one exception, all the Messengers were Orientals.

1 We see, therefore, in the life of this great Messenger of life,
2 the first watchword: "Not this life, but something higher"; and, like 3 the true son of the Oriental, he is practical in that. You people in the 4 West are practical in your own department, in military affairs, and 5 in managing political circles and other things. Perhaps the Oriental 6 is not practical in those ways, but he is practical in his own field; he 7 is practical in religion. If one preaches a philosophy, tomorrow 8 there are hundreds who will struggle their best to make it practical 9 in their lives. If a man preaches that standing on one foot would 10 lead one to salvation, he will immediately get five hundred to stand 11 on one foot. You may call it ludicrous; but, mark you, beneath that is 12 their philosophy--that intense practicality. In the West, plans of 13 salvation mean intellectual gymnastics--plans which are never 14 worked out, never brought into practical life. In the West, the 15 preacher who talks the best is the greatest preacher.

16 So, we find Jesus of Nazareth, in the first place, the true son 17 of the Orient, intensely practical. He has no faith in this evanescent 18 world and all its belongings. No need of text-torturing, as is the 19 fashion in the West in modern times, no need of stretching out texts 20 until they will not stretch any more. Texts are not India rubber, and 21 even that has its limits. Now, no making of religion to pander to the 22 sense vanity of the present day! Mark you, let us all be honest. If 23 we cannot follow the ideal, let us confess our weakness, but not 24 degrade it; let not any try to pull it down. One gets sick at heart at 25 the different accounts of the life of the Christ that Western people 26 give. I do not know what he was or what he was not! One would 27 make him a great politician; another, perhaps, would make of him a 28 great military general; another, a great patriotic Jew; and so on. Is 29 there any warrant in the books for all such assumptions? The best 30 commentary on the life of a great teacher is his own life. "The foxes 31 have holes, the birds of the air have nests, but the Son of man hath 32 not where to lay his head." That is what Christ says as the only way 33 to salvation; he lays down no other way. Let us confess in sackcloth 34 and ashes that we cannot do that. We still have fondness for "me 35 and mine". We want property, money, wealth. Woe unto us! Let us 36 confess and not put to shame that great Teacher of Humanity! He 37 had no family ties. But do you think that, that Man had any physical 38 ideas in him? Do you think that, this mass of light, this God and not-39 man, came down to earth, to be the brother of animals? And yet, 40 people make him preach all sorts of things. He had no sex ideas! He 41 was a soul! Nothing but a soul--just working a body for the good of 42 humanity; and that was all his relation to the body. In the soul there 43 is no sex. The disembodied soul has no relation to the animal, no 44 relationship to the body. The ideal may be far away beyond us. But 45 never mind, keep to the ideal. Let us confess that it is our ideal, but 46 we cannot approach it yet.

47 He had no other occupation in life, no other thought except 48 that one, that he was a spirit. He was a disembodied, unfettered, 49 unbound spirit. And not only so, but he, with his marvellous vision, 50 had found that every man and woman, whether Jew or Gentile, 51 whether rich or poor, whether saint or sinner, was the embodiment 52 of the same undying spirit as himself. Therefore, the one work his

1 whole life showed was to call upon them to realise their own 2 spiritual nature. Give up he says, these superstitious dreams that 3 you are low and that you are poor. Think not that you are trampled 4 upon and tyrannised over as if you were slaves, for within you is 5 something that can never be tyrannised over, never be trampled 6 upon, never be troubled, never be killed. You are all Sons of God, 7 immortal spirit. "Know", he declared, "the Kingdom of Heaven is 8 within you." "I and my Father are one." Dare you stand up and say, 9 not only that "I am the Son of God", but I shall also find in my heart 10 of hearts that "I and my Father are one"? That was what Jesus of 11 Nazareth said. He never talks of this world and of this life. He has 12 nothing to do with it, except that he wants to get hold of the world 13 as it is, give it a push and drive it forward and onward until the 14 whole world has reached to the effulgent Light of God, until 15 everyone has realised his spiritual nature, until death is vanished 16 and misery banished.

17 We have read different stories that have been written about 18 him; we know the scholars and their writings, and the higher 19 criticism; and we know all that has been done by study. We are not 20 here to discuss how much of the New Testament is true, we are not 21 here to discuss how much of that life is historical. It does not matter 22 at all whether the New Testament was written within five hundred 23 years of his birth, nor does it matter even, how much of that life is 24 true. But there is something behind it, something we want to 25 imitate. To tell a lie, you have to imitate a truth, and that truth is a 26 fact. You cannot imitate that which never existed. You cannot 27 imitate that which you never perceived. But there must have been a 28 nucleus, a tremendous power that came down, a marvellous
29 manifestation of spiritual power--and of that we are speaking. It 30 stands there. Therefore, we are not afraid of all the criticisms of the 31 scholars. If I, as an Oriental, have to worship Jesus of Nazareth, 32 there is only one way left to me, that is, to worship him as God and 33 nothing else. Have we no right to worship him in that way, do you 34 mean to say? If we bring him down to our own level and simply pay 35 him a little respect as a great man, why should we worship at all?
36 Our scriptures say, "These great children of Light, who manifest the 37 Light themselves, who are Light themselves, they, being 38 worshipped, become, as it were, one with us and we become one 39 with them."

40 For, you see, in three ways man perceives God. At first the 41 undeveloped intellect of the uneducated man sees God as far away, 42 up in the heavens somewhere, sitting on a throne as a great Judge.
43 He looks upon Him as a fire, as a terror. Now, that is good, for there 44 is nothing bad in it. You must remember that humanity travels not 45 from error to truth, but from truth to truth; it may be, if you like it 46 better, from lower truth to higher truth, but never from error to 47 truth. Suppose you start from here and travel towards the sun in a 48 straight line. From here the sun looks only small in size. Suppose 49 you go forward a million miles, the sun will be much bigger. At 50 every stage the sun will become bigger and bigger. Suppose twenty 51 thousand photographs had been taken of the same sun, from 52 different standpoints; these twenty thousand photographs will all

1 certainly differ from one another. But can you deny that each is a 2 photograph of the same sun? So all forms of religion, high or low, 3 are just different stages toward that eternal state of Light, which is 4 God Himself. Some embody a lower view, some a higher, and that is 5 all the difference. Therefore, the religions of the unthinking masses 6 all over the world must be, and have always been, of a God who is 7 outside of the universe, who lives in heaven, who governs from that 8 place, who is a punisher of the bad and a rewarder of the good, and 9 so on. As man advanced spiritually, he began to feel that God was 10 omnipresent, that He must be in him, that He must be everywhere, 11 that He was not a distant God, but clearly the Soul of all souls. As 12 my soul moves my body, even so is God the mover of my soul. Soul 13 within soul. And a few individuals who had developed enough and 14 were pure enough, went still further, and at last found God. As the 15 New Testament says, "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall 16 see God." And they found at last that they and the Father were one.

17 You find that all these three stages are taught by the Great 18 Teacher in the New Testament. Note the Common Prayer he taught:
19 "Our Father which art in Heaven, hallowed be Thy name," and so 20 on--a simple prayer, a child's prayer. Mark you, it is the "Common 21 Prayer" because it is intended for the uneducated masses. To a 22 higher circle, to those who had advanced a little more, he gave a 23 more elevated teaching: "I am in my Father, and ye in me, and I in 24 you." Do you remember that? And then, when the Jews asked him 25 who he was, he declared that he and his Father were one, and the 26 Jews thought that that was blasphemy. What did he mean by that?
27 This has been also told by your old Prophets, "Ye are gods and all of 28 you are children of the Most High." Mark the same three stages.
29 You will find that it is easier for you to begin with the first and end 30 with the last.

31 The Messenger came to show the path: that the spirit is not 32 in forms, that it is not through all sorts of vexations and knotty 33 problems of philosophy that you know the spirit. Better that you had 34 no learning, better that you never read a book in your life. These 35 are not at all necessary for salvation--neither wealth, nor position 36 nor power, not even learning; but what is necessary is that one 37 thing, purity. "Blessed are the pure in heart," for the spirit in its 38 own nature is pure. How can it be otherwise? It is of God, it has 39 come from God. In the language of the Bible, "It is the breath of 40 God." In the language of the Koran, "It is the soul of God." Do you 41 mean to say that the Spirit of God can ever be impure? But, alas, it 42 has been, as it were, covered over with the dust and dirt of ages, 43 through our own actions, good and evil. Various works which were 44 not correct, which were not true, have covered the same spirit with 45 the dust and dirt of the ignorance of ages. It is only necessary to 46 clear away the dust and dirt, and then the spirit shines immediately.
47 "Blessed are the pure in heart, for they shall see God." "The 48 Kingdom of Heaven is within you." Where goest thou to seek for the 49 Kingdom of God, asks Jesus of Nazareth, when it is there, within 50 you? Cleanse the spirit, and it is there. It is already yours. How can 51 you get what is not yours? It is yours by right. You are the heirs of 52 immortality, sons of the Eternal Father.

1 This is the great lesson of the Messenger, and another which 2 is the basis of all religions, is renunciation. How can you make the 3 spirit pure? By renunciation. A rich young man asked Jesus, "Good 4 Master, what shall I do that I may inherit eternal life?" And Jesus 5 said unto him, "One thing thou lackest; go thy way, sell whatsoever 6 thou hast, and give to the poor, and thou shalt have treasures in 7 heaven: and come, take up thy cross, and follow Me." And he was 8 sad at that saying and went away grieved; for he had great 9 possessions. We are all more or less like that. The voice is ringing in 10 our ears day and night. In the midst of our pleasures and joys, in 11 the midst of worldly things, we think that we have forgotten 12 everything else. Then comes a moment's pause and the voice rings 13 in our ears: "Give up all that thou hast and follow Me." "Whosoever 14 will save his life shall lose it; and whosoever shall lose his life for 15 My sake shall find it." For whoever gives up this life for His sake, 16 finds the life immortal. In the midst of all our weakness there is a 17 moment of pause and the voice rings: "Give up all that thou hast; 18 give it to the poor and follow me." This is the one ideal he preaches, 19 and this has been the ideal preached by all the great Prophets of 20 the world: renunciation. What is meant by renunciation? That there 21 is only one ideal in morality: unselfishness. Be selfless. The ideal is 22 perfect unselfishness. When a man is struck on the right cheek, he 23 turns the left also. When a man's coat is carried off, he gives away 24 his cloak also.

25 We should work in the best way we can, without dragging 26 the ideal down. Here is the ideal. When a man has no more self in 27 him, no possession, nothing to call "me" or "mine", has given 28 himself up entirely, destroyed himself as it were--in that man is God 29 Himself; for in him self-will is gone, crushed out, annihilated. That 30 is the ideal man. We cannot reach that state yet; yet, let us worship 31 the ideal, and slowly struggle to reach the ideal, though, maybe, 32 with faltering steps. It may be tomorrow, or it may be a thousand 33 years hence; but that ideal has to be reached. For it is not only the 34 end, but also the means. To be unselfish, perfectly selfless, is 35 salvation itself; for the man within dies, and God alone remains.

36 One more point. All the teachers of humanity are unselfish.
37 Suppose Jesus of Nazareth was teaching, and a man came and told 38 him, "What you teach is beautiful. I believe that it is the way to 39 perfection, and I am ready to follow it; but I do not care to worship 40 you as the only begotten Son of God." What would be the answer of 41 Jesus of Nazareth? "Very well, brother, follow the ideal and advance 42 in your own way. I do not care whether you give me the credit for 43 the teaching or not. I am not a shopkeeper. I do not trade in 44 religion. I only teach truth, and truth is nobody's property. Nobody 45 can patent truth. Truth is God Himself. Go forward." But what the 46 disciples say nowadays is: "No matter whether you practise the 47 teachings or not, do you give credit to the Man? If you credit the 48 Master, you will be saved; if not, there is no salvation for you." And 49 thus the whole teaching of the Master is degenerated, and all the 50 struggle and fight is for the personality of the Man. They do not 51 know that in imposing that difference, they are, in a manner, 52 bringing shame to the very Man they want to honour--the very Man

1 that would have shrunk with shame from such an idea. What did he 2 care if there was one man in the world that remembered him or 3 not? He had to deliver his message, and he gave it. And if he had 4 twenty thousand lives, he would give them all up for the poorest 5 man in the world. If he had to be tortured millions of times for a 6 million despised Samaritans, and if for each one of them the 7 sacrifice of his own life would be the only condition of salvation, he 8 would have given his life. And all this without wishing to have his 9 name known even to a single person. Quiet, unknown, silent, would 10 he work, just as the Lord works. Now, what would the disciple say?
11 He will tell you that you may be a perfect man, perfectly unselfish; 12 but unless you give the credit to our teacher, to our saint, it is of no 13 avail. Why? What is the origin of this superstition, this ignorance?
14 The disciple thinks that the Lord can manifest Himself only once.
15 There lies the whole mistake. God manifests Himself to you in man.
16 But throughout nature, what happens once must have happened 17 before, and must happen in future. There is nothing in nature which 18 is not bound by law; and that means that whatever happens once 19 must go on and must have been going on.

20 In India they have the same idea of the Incarnations of God.
21 One of their great Incarnations, Krishna, whose grand sermon, the 22 Bhagavad-Gita, some of you might have read, says, "Though I am 23 unborn, of changeless nature, and Lord of beings, yet subjugating 24 My Prakriti, I come into being by My own Maya. Whenever virtue 25 subsides and immorality prevails, then I body Myself forth. For the 26 protection of the good, for the destruction of the wicked, and for 27 the establishment of Dharma, I come into being, in every age."
28 Whenever the world goes down, the Lord comes to help it forward; 29 and so He does from time to time and place to place. In another 30 passage He speaks to this effect: Wherever thou findest a great soul 31 of immense power and purity struggling to raise humanity, know 32 that he is born of My splendour, that I am there working through 33 him.

34 Let us, therefore, find God not only in Jesus of Nazareth, but 35 in all the great Ones that have preceded him, in all that came after 36 him, and all that are yet to come. Our worship is unbounded and 37 free. They are all manifestations of the same Infinite God. They are 38 all pure and unselfish; they struggled and gave up their lives for us, 39 poor human beings. They each and all suffer vicarious atonement 40 for every one of us, and also for all that are to come hereafter.

41 In a sense you are all Prophets; every one of you is a 42 Prophet, bearing the burden of the world on your own shoulders.
43 Have you ever seen a man, have you ever seen a woman, who is not 44 quietly, patiently, bearing his or her little burden of life? The great 45 Prophets were giants-they bore a gigantic world on their 46 shoulders. Compared with them we are pigmies, no doubt, yet we 47 are doing the same task; in our little circles, in our little homes, we 48 are bearing our little crosses. There is no one so evil, no one so 49 worthless, but he has to bear his own cross. But with all our 50 mistakes, with all our evil thoughts and evil deeds, there is a bright 51 spot somewhere, there is still somewhere the golden thread 52 through which we are always in touch with the divine. For, know for 1 certain, that the moment the touch of the divine is lost there would 2 be annihilation. And because none can be annihilated, there is 3 always somewhere in our heart of hearts, however low and 4 degraded we may be, a little circle of light which is in constant 5 touch with the divine.

6 Our salutations go to all the past Prophets whose teachings 7 and lives we have inherited, whatever might have been their race, 8 clime, or creed! Our salutations go to all those Godlike men and 9 women who are working to help humanity, whatever be their birth, 10 colour, or race! Our salutations to those who are coming in the 11 future--living Gods--to work unselfishly for our descendants.

4 "Whenever virtue subsides and vice prevails, I come down to 5 help mankind," declares Krishna, in the Bhagavad-Gita. Whenever 6 this world of ours, on account of growth, on account of added 7 circumstances, requires a new adjustment, a wave of power comes, 8 and as man is acting on two planes, the spiritual and the material, 9 waves of adjustment come on both planes. On the one side, of the 10 adjustment on the material plane, Europe has mainly been the basis 11 during modern times, and of the adjustment on the other, the 12 spiritual plane, Asia has been the basis throughout the history of 13 the world. Today, man requires one more adjustment on the 14 spiritual plane; today, when material ideas are at the height of their 15 glory and power, today when man is likely to forget his divine 16 nature, through his growing dependence on matter, and is likely to 17 be reduced to a mere money-making machine, an adjustment is 18 necessary; the voice has spoken, and the power is coming to drive 19 away the clouds of gathering materialism. The power has been set 20 in motion which, at no distant date, will bring unto mankind once 21 more the memory of their real nature; and again the place from 22 which this power will start will be Asia.

23 This world of ours is on the plan of the division of labour. It 24 is vain to say that one man shall possess everything. Yet how 25 childish we are! The baby in his ignorance thinks that his doll is the 26 only possession that is to be coveted in this whole universe. So a 27 nation which is great in the possession of material powers thinks 28 that that is all that is to be coveted, that that is all that is meant by 29 progress, that that is all that is meant by civilisation, and if there 30 are other nations which do not care for possession, and do not 31 possess that power, they are not fit to live, their whole existence is 32 useless! On the other hand, another nation may think that mere 33 material civilisation is utterly useless. From the Orient came the 34 voice which once told the world that if a man possesses everything 35 that is under the sun or above it, and does not possess spirituality, 36 what avails it? This is the Oriental type; the other is the Occidental 37 type.

38 Each of these types has its grandeur, each has its glory. The 39 present adjustment will be the harmonising, the mingling of these 40 two ideals. To the Oriental, the world of spirit is as real as to the 41 Occidental is the world of senses. In the spiritual, the Oriental finds 42 everything he wants or hopes for; in it he finds all that makes life 43 real to him. To the Occidental he is a dreamer; to the Oriental, the 44 Occidental is a dreamer playing with ephemeral toys, and he laughs 45 to think that grown-up men and women should make so much of a 46 handful of matter which they will have to leave sooner or later.
47 Each calls the other a dreamer. But the oriental ideal is as 48 necessary for the progress of the human race as is the occidental, 49 and I think it is more necessary. Machines never made mankind
50 happy, and never will make. He who is trying to make us believe 51 this, will claim that happiness is in the machine; but it is always in

1 the mind. That man alone who is the lord of his own mind can 2 become happy, and none else. And what, after all, is this power of 3 machinery? Why should a man who can send a current of electricity 4 through a wire be called a very great man, and a very intelligent 5 man? Does not nature do a million times more than that every 6 moment? Why not then fall down and worship nature? What avails 7 it if you have power over the whole of the world, if you have 8 mastered every atom in the universe? That will not make you happy 9 unless you have the power of happiness in yourself, until you have 10 conquered yourself. Man is born to conquer nature, it is true, but 11 the Occidental means by "nature" only physical or external nature.
12 It is true that external nature is majestic, with its mountains, and 13 oceans, and rivers, and with its infinite powers and varieties. Yet 14 there is a more majestic internal nature of man, higher than the 15 sun, moon and stars, higher than this earth of ours, higher than the 16 physical universe, transcending these little lives of ours; and it 17 affords another field of study. There the Orientals excel, just as the 18 Occidentals excel in the other. Therefore it is fitting that, whenever 19 there is a spiritual adjustment, it should come from the Orient. It is 20 also fitting that when the Oriental wants to learn about machine-21 making he should sit at the feet of the Occidental and learn from 22 him. When the Occident wants to learn about the spirit, about God, 23 about the soul, about the meaning and the mystery of this universe, 24 he must sit at the feet of the Orient to learn.

25 I am going to present before you the life of one man who has 26 put in motion such a wave in India. But before going into the life of 27 this man I will try to present before you the secret of India, what 28 India means. If those whose eyes have been blinded by the glamour 29 of material things, whose whole dedication of life is to eating and 30 drinking and enjoying, whose ideal of possession is lands and gold, 31 whose ideal of pleasure is that of the senses, whose God is money, 32 and whose goal is a life of ease and comfort in this world and death 33 after that, whose minds never look forward, and who rarely think of 34 anything higher than the sense-objects in the midst of which they 35 live--if such as these go to India, what do they see? Poverty, squalor, 36 superstition, darkness, hideousness everywhere. Why? Because in 37 their minds enlightenment means dress, education, social 38 politeness. Whereas occidental nations have used every effort to 39 improve their material position, India has done differently. There 40 live the only men in the world who, in the whole history of 41 humanity, never went beyond their frontiers to conquer anyone, 42 who never coveted that which belonged to anyone else, whose only 43 fault was that their lands were so fertile, and they accumulated 44 wealth by the hard labour of their hands, and so tempted other 45 nations to come and despoil them. They are contented to be 46 despoiled, and to be called barbarians; and in return they want to 47 send to this world visions of the Supreme, to lay bare for the world 48 the secrets of human nature, to rend the veil that conceals the real 49 man, because they know the dream, because they know that behind 50 this materialism lives the real divine nature of man which no sin 51 can tarnish, no crime can spoil, no lust can taint, which fire cannot 52 burn, nor water wet, which heat cannot dry, nor death kill. And to 53 them this true nature of man is as real as is any material object to

1 the senses of an Occidental.

2 Just as you are brave to jump at the mouth of a cannon with 3 a hurrah, just as you are brave in the name of patriotism to stand 4 up and give up your lives for your country, so are they brave in the 5 name of God. There it is that when a man declares that this is a 6 world of ideas, that it is all a dream, he casts off clothes and 7 property to demonstrate that what he believes and thinks is true.
8 There it is that a man sits on the banks of a river, when he has 9 known that life is eternal, and wants to give up his body just as 10 nothing, just as you can give up a bit of straw. Therein lies their 11 heroism, that they are ready to face death as a brother, because 12 they are convinced that there is no death for them. Therein lies the 13 strength that has made them invincible through hundreds of years 14 of oppression and foreign invasion, and tyranny. The nation lives 15 today, and in that nation even in the days of the direst disaster, 16 spiritual giants have never failed to arise. Asia produces giants in 17 spirituality just as the Occident produces giants in politics, giants in 18 science. In the beginning of the present century, when Western 19 influence began to pour into India, when Western conquerors, 20 sword in hand, came to demonstrate to the children of the sages 21 that they were mere barbarians, a race of dreamers, that their 22 religion was but mythology, and God and soul and everything they 23 had been struggling for were mere words without meaning, that the 24 thousands of years of struggle, the thousands of years of endless 25 renunciation, had all been in vain, the question began to be agitated 26 among young men at the universities whether the whole national 27 existence up to then had been a failure, whether they must begin 28 anew on the occidental plan, tear up their old books, burn their 29 philosophies, drive away their preachers, and break down their 30 temples. Did not the occidental conqueror, the man who 31 demonstrated his religion with sword and gun, say that all the old 32 ways were mere superstition and idolatry? Children brought up and 33 educated in the new schools started on the occidental plan, drank 34 in these ideas, from their childhood, and it is not to be wondered at 35 that doubts arose. But instead of throwing away superstition and 36 making a real search after truth, the test of truth became, "What 37 does the West say?" The priests must go, the Vedas must be burned, 38 because the West has said so. Out of the feeling of unrest thus 39 produced, there arose a wave of so-called reform in India.

40 If you wish to be a true reformer, three things are 41 necessary. The first is to feel. Do you really feel for your brothers?
42 Do you really feel that there is so much misery in the world, so 43 much ignorance and superstition? Do you really feel that men are 44 your brothers? Does this idea come into your whole being? Does it 45 run with your blood? Does it tingle in your veins? Does it course 46 through every nerve and filament of your body? Are you full of that 47 idea of sympathy? If you are, that is only the first step. You must 48 think next if you have found any remedy. The old ideas may be all 49 superstition, but in and around these masses of superstition are 50 nuggets of gold and truth. Have you discovered means by which to 51 keep that gold alone, without any of the dross? If you have done 52 that, that is only the second step; one more thing is necessary. What

1 is your motive? Are you sure that you are not actuated by greed of 2 gold, by thirst for fame, or power? Are you really sure that you can 3 stand to your ideals, and work on, even if the whole world wants to 4 crush you down? Are you sure you know what you want and will 5 perform your duty, and that alone, even if your life is at stake? Are 6 you sure that you will persevere so long as life endures, so long as 7 there is one pulsation left in the heart? Then you are a real 8 reformer, you are a teacher, a Master, a blessing to mankind. But 9 man is so impatient, so short-sighted! He has not the patience to 10 wait, he has not the power to see. He wants to rule, he wants 11 results immediately. Why? He wants to reap the fruits himself, and 12 does not really care for others. Duty for duty's sake is not what he 13 wants. "To work you have the right, but not to the fruits thereof," 14 says Krishna. Why cling to results? Ours are the duties. Let the 15 fruits take care of themselves. But man has no patience, he takes 16 up any scheme. The larger number of would-be reformers all over 17 the world, can be classed under this heading.

18 As I have said, the idea of reform came to India when it 19 seemed as if the wave of materialism that had invaded her shores 20 would sweep away the teachings of the sages. But the nation had 21 borne the shocks of a thousand such waves of change. This one was 22 mild in comparison. Wave after wave had flooded the land, breaking 23 and crushing everything for hundreds of years. The sword had 24 flashed, and "Victory unto Allah" had rent the skies of India; but 25 these floods subsided, leaving the national ideals unchanged.

26 The Indian nation cannot be killed. Deathless it stands and 27 it will stand so long as that spirit shall remain as the background, so 28 long as her people do not give up their spirituality. Beggars they 29 may remain, poor and poverty-stricken; dirt and squalor may 30 surround them perhaps throughout all time, but let them not give 31 up their God, let them not forget that they are the children of the 32 sages. Just as in the West even the man in the street wants to trace 33 his descent from some robber-baron of the Middle Ages, so in India, 34 even an Emperor on the throne wants to trace his descent from 35 some beggar-sage in the forest, from a man who wore the bark of a 36 tree, lived upon the fruits of the forest and communed with God.
37 That is the type of descent we want; and while holiness is thus 38 supremely venerated, India cannot die.

39 Many of you perhaps have read the article by Prof. Max 40 Muller in a recent issue of the Nineteenth Century, headed "A Real 41 Mahatman". The life of Sri Ramakrishna is interesting, as it was a 42 living illustration of the ideas that he preached. Perhaps it will be a 43 little romantic for you who live in the West in an atmosphere
44 entirely different from that of India. For the methods and manners 45 in the busy rush of life in the West vary entirely from those of India.
46 Yet perhaps it will be of all the more interest for that, because it 47 will bring into a newer light, things about which many have already 48 heard.

49 It was while reforms of various kinds were being 50 inaugurated in India that a child was born of poor Brahmin parents 51 on the eighteenth of February, 1836, in one of the remote villages of 52 Bengal. The father and mother were very orthodox people. The life

1 of a really orthodox Brahmin is one of continuous renunciation. Very 2 few things can he do; and over and beyond them the orthodox 3 Brahmin must not occupy himself with any secular business. At the 4 same time he must not receive gifts from everybody. You may 5 imagine how rigorous that life becomes. You have heard of the 6 Brahmins and their priest-craft many times, but very few of you 7 have ever stopped to ask what makes this wonderful band of men 8 the rulers of their fellows. They are the poorest of all the classes in 9 the country; and the secret of their power lies in their renunciation.
10 They never covet wealth. Theirs is the poorest priesthood in the 11 world, and therefore the most powerful. Even in this poverty, a 12 Brahmin's wife will never allow a poor man to pass through the 13 village without giving him something to eat. That is considered the 14 highest duty of the mother in India; and because she is the mother 15 it is her duty to be served last; she must see that everyone is served 16 before her turn comes. That is why the mother is regarded as God 17 in India. This particular woman, the mother of our subject, was the 18 very type of a Hindu mother. The higher the caste the greater the 19 restrictions. The lowest caste people can eat and drink anything 20 they like, but as men rise in the social scale more and more 21 restrictions come; and when they reach the highest caste, the 22 Brahmin, the hereditary priesthood of India, their lives, as I have 23 said, are very much circumscribed. Compared to Western manners 24 their lives are of continuous asceticism. The Hindus are perhaps the 25 most exclusive nation in the world. They have the same great 26 steadiness as the English, but much more amplified. When they get 27 hold of an idea they carry it out to its very conclusion, and they 28 keep hold of it generation after generation until they make 29 something out of it. Once give them an idea and it is not easy to 30 take it back, but it is hard to make them grasp a new idea.

31 The orthodox Hindus therefore, are very exclusive, living 32 entirely within their own horizon of thought and feeling. Their lives 33 are laid down in our old books in every little detail, and the least 34 detail is grasped with almost adamant firmness by them. They 35 would starve rather than eat a meal cooked by the hands of a man 36 not belonging to their own small section of caste. But withal, they 37 have intensity and tremendous earnestness. That force of intense 38 faith and religious life occurs often among the orthodox Hindus, 39 because their very orthodoxy comes from the tremendous 40 conviction that it is right. We may not all think that that to which 41 they hold on with such perseverance is right; but to them it is. Now 42 it is written in our books that a man should always be charitable 43 even to the extreme. If a man starves himself to death to help 44 another man, to save that man's life, it is all right; it is even held 45 that a man ought to do that. And it is expected of a Brahmin to 46 carry this idea out to the very extreme. Those who are acquainted 47 with the literature of India will remember a beautiful old story 48 about this extreme charity, how a whole family, as related in the 49 Mahabharata, starved themselves to death and gave their last meal 50 to a beggar. This is not an exaggeration, for such things still 51 happen. The character of the father and mother of my Master were 52 very much like that. Very poor they were and yet many a time the 53 mother would starve herself a whole day to help a poor man. Of 1 them this child was born; and he was a peculiar child from very 2 boyhood. He remembered his past from his birth, and was 3 conscious for what purpose he came into the world, and every 4 power was devoted to the fulfilment of that purpose.

5 While he was quite young his father died; and the boy was 6 sent to school. A Brahmin's boy must go to school; the caste 7 restricts him to a learned profession only. The old system of 8 education in India, still prevalent in many parts of the country, 9 especially in connection with Sannysins, was very different from the 10 modern system. The students had not to pay. It was thought that 11 knowledge is so sacred that no man ought to sell it. Knowledge 12 must be given freely and without any price. The teachers used to 13 take students without charge, and not only so, but most of them 14 gave their students food and clothes. To support these teachers the 15 wealthy families on certain occasions, such as a marriage festival, 16 or at the ceremonies for the dead, made gifts to them. They were 17 considered the first and foremost claimants to certain gifts; and 18 they in their turn had to maintain their students. So whenever there 19 is a marriage, especially in a rich family, these professors are 20 invited, and they attend and discuss various subjects. This boy went 21 to one of these gatherings of professors, and the professors were 22 discussing various topics, such as logic or astronomy, subjects much 23 beyond his age. The boy was peculiar, as I have said, and he 24 gathered this moral out of it: "This is the outcome of all their 25 knowledge. Why are they fighting so hard? It is simply for money; 26 the man who can show the highest learning here will get the best 27 pair of cloth, and that is all these people are struggling for. I will 28 not go to school any more." And he did not; that was the end of his 29 going to school. But this boy had an elder brother, a learned 30 professor, who took him to Calcutta, however, to study with him.
31 After a short time the boy became convinced that the aim of all 32 secular learning was mere material advancement, and he resolved 33 to give up study and devote himself to the pursuit of spiritual 34 knowledge. The father being dead, the family was very poor; and 35 this boy had to make his own living. He went to a place near 36 Calcutta and became a temple priest. To become a temple priest is 37 thought very degrading to a Brahmin. Our temples are not churches 38 in your sense of the word, they are not places for public worship; 39 for, properly speaking, there is no such thing as public worship in 40 India. Temples are erected mostly by rich persons as a meritorious 41 religious act.

42 If a man has much property, he wants to build a temple. In 43 that he puts a symbol or an image of an Incarnation of God, and 44 dedicates it to worship in the name of God. The worship is akin to 45 that which is conducted in Roman Catholic churches, very much 46 like the mass, reading certain sentences from the sacred books, 47 waving a light before the image, and treating the image in every 48 respect as we treat a great man. This is all that is done in the 49 temple. The man who goes to a temple is not considered thereby a 50 better man than he who never goes. More properly the latter is 51 considered the more religious man, for religion in India is to each 52 man his own private affair. In the house of every man there is either

1 a little chapel, or a room set apart, and there he goes morning and 2 evening, sits down in a corner, and there does his worship. And this 3 worship is entirely mental, for another man does not hear or know 4 what he is doing. He sees him only sitting there, and perhaps 5 moving his fingers in a peculiar fashion, or closing his nostrils and 6 breathing in a peculiar manner. Beyond that, he does not know 7 what his brother is doing; even his wife, perhaps, will not know.
8 Thus, all worship is conducted in the privacy of his own home.
9 Those who cannot afford to have a chapel go to the banks of a river, 10 or a lake, or the sea if they live at the seaside, but people 11 sometimes go to worship in a temple by making salutation to the 12 image. There their duty to the temple ends. Therefore, you see, it 13 has been held from the most ancient times in our country, legislated 14 upon by Manu, that it is a degenerating occupation to become a 15 temple priest. Some of the books say it is so degrading as to make a 16 Brahmin worthy of reproach. Just as with education, but in a far 17 more intense sense with religion, there is the other idea behind it 18 that the temple priests who take fees for their work are making 19 merchandise of sacred things. So you may imagine the feelings of 20 that boy when he was forced through poverty to take up the only 21 occupation open to him, that of a temple priest.

22 There have been various poets in Bengal whose songs have 23 passed down to the people; they are sung in the streets of Calcutta 24 and in every village. Most of these are religious songs, and their 25 one central idea, which is perhaps peculiar to the religions of India, 26 is the idea of realisation. There is not a book in India on religion 27 which does not breathe this idea. Man must realise God, feel God, 28 see God, talk to God. That is religion. The Indian atmosphere is full 29 of stories of saintly persons having visions of God. Such doctrines 30 form the basis of their religion; and all these ancient books and 31 scriptures are the writings of persons who came into direct contact 32 with spiritual facts. These books were not written for the intellect, 33 nor can any reasoning understand them, because they have been 34 written by men who saw the things of which they wrote, and they 35 can be understood only by men who have raised themselves to the 36 same height. They say there is such a thing as realisation even in 37 this life, and it is open to everyone, and religion begins with the 38 opening of this faculty, if I may call it so. This is the central idea in 39 all religions and this is why we may find one man with the most 40 finished oratorical powers, or the most convincing logic, preaching 41 the highest doctrines and yet unable to get people to listen to him, 42 while we may find another, a poor man, who scarcely can speak the 43 language of his own motherland, yet half the nation worships him in 44 his own lifetime as God. When in India the idea somehow or other 45 gets abroad that a man has raised himself to that state of 46 realisation, that religion is no more a matter of conjecture to him, 47 that he is no more groping in the dark in such momentous questions 48 as religion, the immortality of the soul, and God, people come from 49 all quarters to see him and gradually they begin to worship him.

50 In the temple was an image of the "Blissful Mother." This 51 boy had to conduct the worship morning and evening, and by 52 degrees this one idea filled his mind: "Is there anything behind this

1 image? Is it true that there is a Mother of Bliss in the universe? Is it 2 true that She lives and guides this universe, or is it all a dream? Is 3 there any reality in religion?"

4 This scepticism comes to almost every Hindu child. It is the 5 scepticism of our country: Is this that we are doing real? And 6 theories will not satisfy us, although there are ready at hand almost 7 all the theories that have ever been made with regard to God and 8 soul. Neither books nor theories can satisfy us, the one idea that 9 gets hold of thousands of our people is this idea of realisation. Is it 10 true that there is a God? If it be true, can I see Him? Can I realise 11 the truth? The Western mind may think all this very impracticable, 12 but to us it is intensely practical. For this idea men will give up their 13 lives. You have just heard how from the earliest times there have 14 been persons who have given up all comforts and luxuries to live in 15 caves, and hundreds have given up their homes to weep bitter tears 16 of misery, on the banks of sacred rivers, in order to realise this 17 idea--not to know in the ordinary sense of the word, not intellectual 18 understanding, not a mere rationalistic comprehension of the real 19 thing, not mere groping in the dark, but intense realisation, much 20 more real than this world is to our senses. That is the idea. I do not 21 advance any proposition as to that just now, but that is the one fact 22 that is impressed upon them. Thousands will be killed, other 23 thousands will be ready. So upon this one idea the whole nation for 24 thousands of years have been denying and sacrificing themselves.
25 For this idea thousands of Hindus every year give up their homes 26 and many of them die through the hardships they have to undergo.
27 To the Western mind this must seem most visionary, and I can see 28 the reason for this point of view. But though I have resided in the 29 West, I still think this idea the most practical thing in life.

30 Every moment I think of anything else is so much loss to 31 me--even the marvels of earthly sciences; everything is vain if it 32 takes me away from that thought. Life is but momentary whether 33 you have the knowledge of an angel or the ignorance of an animal.
34 Life is but momentary, whether you have the poverty of the poorest 35 man in rags or the wealth of the richest living person. Life is but 36 momentary, whether you are a downtrodden man living in one of 37 the big streets of the big cities of the West or a crowned Emperor 38 ruling over millions. Life is but momentary, whether you have the 39 best of health or the worst. Life is but momentary, whether you 40 have the most poetical temperament or the most cruel. There is but 41 one solution of life, says the Hindu, and that solution is what they 42 call God and Religion. If these be true, life becomes explained, life 43 becomes bearable, becomes enjoyable. Otherwise, life is but a 44 useless burden. That is our idea, but no amount of reasoning can 45 demonstrate it; it can only make it probable, and there it rests. The 46 highest demonstration of reasoning that we have in any branch of 47 knowledge can only make a fact probable, and nothing further. The 48 most demonstrable facts of physical science are only probabilities, 49 not facts yet. Facts are only in the senses. Facts have to be 50 perceived, and we have to perceive religion to demonstrate it to 51 ourselves. We have to sense God to be convinced that there is a 52 God. We must sense the facts of religion to know that they are facts.

1 Nothing else, and no amount of reasoning, but our own perception 2 can make these things real to us, can make my belief firm as a rock.
3 That is my idea, and that is the Indian idea.

4 This idea took possession of the boy and his whole life 5 became concentrated upon that. Day after day he would weep and 6 say: "Mother, is it true that Thou existest, or is it all poetry? Is the 7 Blissful Mother an imagination of poets and misguided people, or is 8 there such a reality?" We have seen that of books, of education in 9 our sense of the word, he had none and so much the more natural, 10 so much the more healthy, was his mind, so much the purer his 11 thoughts, undiluted by drinking in the thoughts of others. Because 12 he did not go to the university, therefore he thought for himself.
13 Because we have spent half our lives in the university we are filled 14 with a collection of other people's thoughts. Well has Prof. Max 15 Muller said in the article I have just referred to that this was a 16 clean, original man; and the secret of that originality was that he 17 was not brought up within the precincts of a university. However, 18 this thought--whether God can be seen--which was uppermost in his 19 mind gained in strength every day until he could think of nothing 20 else. He could no more conduct the worship properly, could no 21 more attend to the various details in all their minuteness. Often he 22 would forget to place the food offering before the image, sometimes 23 he would forget to wave the light; at other times he would wave it 24 for hours, and forget everything else.

25 And that one idea was in his mind every day: "Is it true that 26 Thou existest, O Mother? Why dost Thou not speak? Art Thou 27 dead?" Perhaps some of us here will remember that there are 28 moments in our lives when, tired of all these ratiocinations of dull 29 and dead logic, tired of plodding through books--which after all 30 teach us nothing, become nothing but a sort of intellectual opium-31 eating--we must have it at stated times or we die--tired with all this, 32 the heart of our hearts sends out a wail: "Is there no one in this 33 universe who can show me the light? If Thou art, show the light 34 unto me. Why dost Thou not speak? Why dost Thou make Thyself so 35 scarce, why send so many Messengers and not Thyself come to me?
36 In this world of fights and factions whom am I to follow and believe?
37 If Thou art the God of every man and woman alike, why comest 38 Thou not to speak to Thy child and see if he is not ready?" Well, to 39 us all come such thoughts in moments of great depression; but such 40 are the temptations surrounding us, that the next moment we 41 forget. For the moment it seemed that the doors of the heavens 42 were going to be opened, for the moment it seemed as if we were 43 going to plunge into the light effulgent; but the animal man again 44 shakes off all these angelic visions. Down we go, animal man once 45 more, eating and drinking and dying, and dying and drinking and 46 eating again and again. But there are exceptional minds which are 47 not turned away so easily, which once attracted can never be 48 turned back, whatever may be the temptation in the way, which 49 want to see the Truth, knowing that life must go. They say, let it go 50 in a noble conquest, and what conquest is nobler than the conquest 51 of the lower man, than this solution of the problem of life and death, 52 of good and evil?

1 At last it became impossible for him to serve in the temple.
2 He left it and entered into a little wood that was near and lived 3 there. About this part of his life he has told me many times that he 4 could not tell when the sun rose or set, nor how he lived. He lost all 5 thought of himself and forgot to eat. During this period he was 6 lovingly watched over by a relative who put into his mouth food 7 which he mechanically swallowed.

8 Days and nights thus passed with the boy. When a whole 9 day would pass, towards the evening, when the peal of bells in the 10 temples, and the voices singing, would reach the wood, it would 11 make the boy very sad, and he would cry: "Another day is gone in 12 vain, Mother, and Thou dost not come. Another day of this short life 13 has gone and I have not known the Truth." In the agony of his soul, 14 sometimes he would rub his face against the ground and weep, and 15 this one prayer burst forth: "Do Thou manifest Thyself in me, Thou 16 Mother of the universe! See that I need Thee and nothing else!"
17 Verily, he wanted to be true to his own ideal. He had heard that the 18 Mother never came until everything had been given up for Her. He 19 had heard that the Mother wanted to come to everyone, but they 20 would not have Her, that people wanted all sorts of foolish little 21 idols to pray to, that they wanted their own enjoyments, and not the 22 Mother, and that the moment they really wanted Her with their 23 whole soul, and nothing else, that moment She would come. So he 24 began to break himself into that idea; he wanted to be exact, even 25 on the plane of matter. He threw away all the little property he had, 26 and took a vow that he would never touch money, and this one idea, 27 "I will not touch money", became a part of him. It may appear to be 28 something occult, but even in after-life when he was sleeping, if I 29 touched him with a piece of money his hand would become bent, 30 and his whole body would become, as it were, paralysed. The other 31 idea that came into his mind was that lust was the other enemy.
32 Man is a soul, and soul is sexless, neither man nor woman. The idea 33 of sex and the idea of money were the two things, he thought, that 34 prevented him from seeing the Mother. This whole universe is the 35 manifestation of the Mother, and She lives in every woman's body.
36 "Every woman represents the Mother; how can I think of woman in 37 mere sex relation?" That was the idea: Every woman was his 38 Mother, he must bring himself to the state when he would see 39 nothing but Mother in every woman. And he carried it out in his life.

40 This is the tremendous thirst that seizes the human heart.
41 Later on, this very man said to me: "My child, suppose there is a 42 bag of gold in one room, and a robber in the next room, do you 43 think that the robber can sleep? He cannot. His mind will be always 44 thinking how to get into that room and obtain possession of that 45 gold. Do you think then that a man firmly persuaded that there is a 46 Reality behind all these appearances, that there is a God, that there 47 is One who never dies, One who is infinite bliss, a bliss compared 48 with which these pleasures of the senses are simply playthings, can 49 rest contented without struggling to attain It? Can he cease his 50 efforts for a moment? No.

51 He will become mad with longing." This divine madness 52 seized the boy. At that time he had no teacher, nobody to tell him

1 anything, and everyone thought that he was out of his mind. This is 2 the ordinary condition of things. If a man throws aside the vanities 3 of the world we hear him called mad. But such men are the salt of 4 the earth. Out of such madness have come the powers that have 5 moved this world of ours, and out of such madness alone will come 6 the powers of the future, that are going to move the world.

7 So days, weeks, months passed in continuous struggle of the 8 soul to arrive at Truth. The boy began to see visions, to see 9 wonderful things; the secrets of his nature were beginning to open 10 to him. Veil after veil was, as it were, being taken off. Mother 11 Herself became the teacher, and initiated the boy into the truths he 12 sought. At this time there came to this place a woman of beautiful 13 appearance, learned beyond compare. Later on this saint used to 14 say about her that she was not learned, but was the embodiment of 15 learning; she was learning itself, in human form. There too, you find 16 the peculiarity of the Indian nation. In the midst of the ignorance in 17 which the average Hindu woman lives, in the midst of what is called 18 in Western countries her lack of freedom, there could arise a 19 woman of this supreme spirituality. She was a Sannyasini; for 20 women also give up the world, throw away their property, do not 21 marry, and devote themselves to the worship of the Lord. She came; 22 and when she heard of this boy in the grove she offered to go and 23 see him; and hers was the first help he received. At once she 24 recognised what his trouble was, and she said to him: "My son, 25 blessed is the man upon whom such madness comes. The whole of 26 this universe is mad--some for wealth, some for pleasure, some for 27 fame, some for a hundred other things. They are mad for gold, or 28 husbands, or wives, for little trifles, mad to tyrannise over 29 somebody, mad to become rich, mad for every foolish thing except 30 God. And they can understand only their own madness. When 31 another man is mad after gold, they have fellow-feeling and 32 sympathy for him, and they say he is the right man, as lunatics 33 think that lunatics alone are sane. But if a man is mad after the 34 Beloved, after the Lord, how can they understand? They think he 35 has gone crazy; and they say, 'Have nothing to do with him.' That is 36 why they call you mad; but yours is the right kind of madness.
37 Blessed is the man who is mad after God. Such men are very few."
38 This woman remained near the boy for years, taught him the forms 39 of the religions of India, initiated him in the different practices of 40 Yoga, and, as it were, guided and brought into harmony this 41 tremendous river of spirituality.

42 Later there came to the same grove, a Sannyasin, one of the 43 begging friars of India, a learned man, a philosopher. He was a 44 peculiar man, he was an idealist. He did not believe that this world 45 existed in reality; and to demonstrate that he would never go under 46 a roof, he would always live out of doors, in storm and sunshine 47 alike. This man began to teach the boy the philosophy of the Vedas; 48 and he found very soon, to his astonishment, that the pupil was in 49 some respects wiser than the master. He spent several months 50 there with the boy, after which he initiated him into the order of 51 Sannyasins, and took his departure.

52 When as a temple priest his extraordinary worship made

1 people think him deranged in his head, his relatives took him home 2 and married him to a little girl, thinking that that would turn his 3 thoughts and restore the balance of his mind. But he came back
4 and, as we have seen, merged deeper in his madness. Sometimes, 5 in our country, boys are married as children and have no voice in 6 the matter; their parents marry them. Of course such a marriage is 7 little more than a betrothal. When they are married they still 8 continue to live with their parents, and the real marriage takes 9 place when the wife grows older, when it is customary for the 10 husband to go and bring his bride to his own home. In this case, 11 however, the husband had entirely forgotten he had a wife. In her 12 far-off home the girl had heard that her husband had become a 13 religious enthusiast and that he was even considered insane by 14 many. She resolved to learn the truth for herself, so she set out and 15 walked to the place where her husband was. When at last she stood 16 in her husband's presence, he at once admitted her right to his life, 17 although in India any person, man or woman, who embraces a 18 religious life is thereby freed from all other obligations. The young 19 man fell at the feet of his wife and said, "As for me, the Mother has 20 shown me that She resides in every woman, and so I have learnt to 21 look upon every woman as Mother. That is the one idea I can have 22 about you; but if you wish to drag me into the world, as I have been 23 married to you, I am at your service."

24 The maiden was a pure and noble soul, and was able to 25 understand her husband's aspirations and sympathise with them.
26 She quickly told him that she had no wish to drag him down to a life 27 of worldliness; but that all she desired was to remain near him, to 28 serve him, and to learn of him. She became one of his most devoted 29 disciples, always revering him as a divine being. Thus through his 30 wife's consent the last barrier was removed, and he was free to 31 lead the life he had chosen.

32 The next desire that seized upon the soul of this man was to 33 know the truth about the various religions. Up to that time he had 34 not known any religion but his own. He wanted to understand what 35 other religions were like. So he sought teachers of other religions.
36 By teachers you must always remember what we mean in India, not 37 a book-worm, but a man of realisation, one who knows truth at first 38 hand and not through an intermediary. He found a Mohammedan 39 saint and placed himself under him; he underwent the disciplines 40 prescribed by him, and to his astonishment found that when 41 faithfully carried out, these devotional methods led him to the same 42 goal he had already attained. He gathered similar experience from 43 following the true religion of Jesus the Christ. He went to all the 44 sects he could find, and whatever he took up he went into with his 45 whole heart. He did exactly as he was told, and in every instance he 46 arrived at the same result. Thus from actual experience he came to 47 know that the goal of every religion is the same, that each is trying 48 to teach the same thing, the difference being largely in method, and 49 still more in language. At the core, all sects and all religions have 50 the same aim; and they were only quarrelling for their own selfish 51 purposes--they were not anxious about the truth, but about "my 52 name" and "your name". Two of them preached the same truth, but

1 one of them said, "That cannot be true, because I have not put upon 2 it the seal of my name. Therefore do not listen to him." And the 3 other man said, "Do not hear him, although he is preaching very 4 much the same thing, yet it is not true because he does not preach 5 it in my name."

6 That is what my Master found, and he then set about to 7 learn humility, because he had found that the one idea in all 8 religions is, "not me, but Thou", and he who says, "not me", the 9 Lord fills his heart. The less of this little "I" the more of God there is 10 in him. That he found to be the truth in every religion in the world, 11 and he set himself to accomplish this. As I have told you, whenever 12 he wanted to do anything he never confined himself to fine theories, 13 but would enter into the practice immediately. We see many 14 persons talking the most wonderfully fine things about charity and 15 about equality and the rights of other people and all that, but it is 16 only in theory. I was so fortunate as to find one who was able to 17 carry theory into practice. He had the most wonderful faculty of 18 carrying everything into practice which he thought was right.

19 Now, there was a family of Pariahs living near the place. The 20 Pariahs number several millions in the whole of India and are a sect 21 of people so low that some of our books say that if a Brahmin
22 coming out from his house sees the face of a Pariah, he has to fast 23 that day and recite certain prayers before he becomes holy again.
24 In some Hindu cities when a Pariah enters, he has to put a crow's 25 feather on his head as a sign that he is a Pariah, and he has to cry 26 aloud, "Save yourselves, the Pariah is passing through the street", 27 and you will find people flying off from him as if by magic, because 28 if they touch him by chance, they will have to change their clothes, 29 bathe, and do other things. And the Pariah for thousands of years 30 has believed that it is perfectly right; that his touch will make 31 everybody unholy. Now my Master would go to a Pariah and ask to 32 be allowed to clean his house. The business of the Pariah is to clean 33 the streets of the cities and to keep houses clean. He cannot enter 34 the house by the front door; by the back door he enters; and as 35 soon as he has gone, the whole place over which he has passed is 36 sprinkled with and made holy by a little Ganga water. By birth the 37 Brahmin stands for holiness, and the Pariah for the very reverse.
38 And this Brahmin asked to be allowed to do the menial services in 39 the house of the Pariah. The Pariah of course could not allow that, 40 for they all think that if they allow a Brahmin to do such menial 41 work it will be an awful sin, and they will become extinct. The 42 Pariah would not permit it; so in the dead of night, when all were 43 sleeping, Ramakrishna would enter the house. He had long hair, 44 and with his hair he would wipe the place, saying, "Oh, my Mother, 45 make me the servant of the Pariah, make me feel that I am even 46 lower than the Pariah." "They worship Me best who worship My 47 worshippers. These are all My children and your privilege is to 48 serve them"--is the teaching of Hindu scriptures.

49 There were various other preparations which would take a 50 long time to relate, and I want to give you just a sketch of his life.
51 For years he thus educated himself. One of the Sadhanas was to 52 root out the sex idea. Soul has no sex, it is neither male nor female.

1 It is only in the body that sex exists, and the man who desires to 2 reach the spirit cannot at the same time hold to sex distinctions.
3 Having been born in a masculine body, this man wanted to bring the 4 feminine idea into everything. He began to think that he was a 5 woman, he dressed like a woman, spoke like a woman, gave up the 6 occupations of men, and lived in the household among the women 7 of a good family, until, after years of this discipline, his mind 8 became changed, and he entirely forgot the idea of sex; thus the 9 whole view of life became changed to him.

10 We hear in the West about worshipping woman, but this is 11 usually for her youth and beauty. This man meant by worshipping 12 woman, that to him every woman's face was that of the Blissful 13 Mother, and nothing but that. I myself have seen this man standing 14 before those women whom society would not touch, and falling at 15 their feet bathed in tears, saying: "Mother, in one form Thou art in 16 the street, and in another form Thou art the universe. I salute Thee, 17 Mother, I salute Thee." Think of the blessedness of that life from 18 which all carnality has vanished, which can look upon every woman 19 with that love and reverence when every woman's face becomes 20 transfigured, and only the face of the Divine Mother, the Blissful 21 One, the Protectress of the human race shines upon it! That is what 22 we want. Do you mean to say that the divinity back of a woman can 23 ever be cheated? It never was and never will be. It always asserts 24 itself. Unfailingly it detects fraud, it detects hypocrisy, unerringly it 25 feels the warmth of truth, the light of spirituality, the holiness of 26 purity. Such purity is absolutely necessary if real spirituality is to be 27 attained.

28 This rigorous, unsullied purity came into the life of that 29 man. All the struggles which we have in our lives were past for him.
30 His hard-earned jewels of spirituality, for which he had given three-31 quarters of his life, were now ready to be given to humanity, and 32 then began his mission. His teaching and preaching were peculiar.
33 In our country a teacher is a most highly venerated person, he is 34 regarded as God Himself. We have not even the same respect for 35 our father and mother. Father and mother give us our body, but the 36 teacher shows us the way to salvation. We are his children, we are 37 born in the spiritual line of the teacher. All Hindus come to pay 38 respect to an extraordinary teacher, they crowd around him. And 39 here was such a teacher, but the teacher had no thought whether 40 he was to be respected or not, he had not the least idea that he was 41 a great teacher, he thought that it was Mother who was doing 42 everything and not he. He always said: "If any good comes from my 43 lips, it is the Mother who speaks; what have I to do with it?" That 44 was his one idea about his work, and to the day of his death he 45 never gave it up. This man sought no one. His principle was, first 46 form character, first earn spirituality, and results will come of 47 themselves. His favorite illustration was, "When the lotus opens, 48 the bees come of their own accord to seek the honey; so let the 49 lotus of your character be full-blown and the results will follow."
50 This is a great lesson to learn.

51 My Master taught me this lesson hundreds of times, yet I 52 often forget it. Few understand the power of thought. If a man goes

1 into a cave, shuts himself in, and thinks one really great thought 2 and dies, that thought will penetrate the walls of that cave, vibrate 3 through space, and at last permeate the whole human race. Such is 4 the power of thought; be in no hurry therefore to give your thoughts 5 to others. First have something to give. He alone teaches who has 6 something to give, for teaching is not talking, teaching is not 7 imparting doctrines, it is communicating. Spirituality can be 8 communicated just as really as I can give you a flower. This is true 9 in the most literal sense. This idea is very old in India and finds 10 illustration in the West in the theory, in the belief, of apostolic 11 succession. Therefore, first make character--that is the highest duty 12 you can perform. Know Truth for yourself, and there will be many to 13 whom you can teach it afterwards; they will all come. This was the 14 attitude of my Master. He criticised no one. For years I lived with 15 that man, but never did I hear those lips utter one word of 16 condemnation for any sect. He had the same sympathy for all sects; 17 he had found the harmony between them. A man may be 18 intellectual, or devotional, or mystic, or active; the various religions 19 represent one or the other of these types. Yet it is possible to 20 combine all the four in one man, and this is what future humanity is 21 going to do. That was his idea. He condemned no one, but saw the 22 good in all.

23 People came by thousands to see this wonderful man who 24 spoke in a patois, every word of which was forceful and instinct 25 with light. For it is not what is spoken, much less the language in 26 which it is spoken, but it is the personality of the speaker which 27 dwells in everything he says that carries weight. Every one of us 28 feels this at times. We hear most splendid orations, most 29 wonderfully reasoned-out discourses, and we go home and forget 30 them all. At other times we hear a few words in the simplest of 31 language, and they enter into our lives, become part and parcel of 32 ourselves and produce lasting results. The words of a man who can 33 put his personality into them take effect, but he must have 34 tremendous personality. All teaching implies giving and taking, the 35 teacher gives and the taught receives, but the one must have 36 something to give, and the other must be open to receive.

37 This man came to live near Calcutta, the capital of India, the 38 most important university town in our country, which was sending 39 out sceptics and materialists by the hundreds every year. Yet many 40 of these university men--skeptics and agnostics--used to come and 41 listen to him. I heard of this man, and I went to hear him. He looked 42 just like an ordinary man, with nothing remarkable about him. He 43 used the most simple language, and I thought, "Can this man be a 44 great teacher?"--crept near to him and asked him the question 45 which I had been asking others all my life: "Do you believe in God, 46 Sir?" "Yes," he replied. "Can you prove it, Sir?" "Yes." "How?"
47 "Because I see Him just as I see you here, only in a much intenser 48 sense." That impressed me at once. For the first time I had found a 49 man who dared to say that he saw God, that religion was a reality to 50 be felt, to be sensed in an infinitely more intense way than we can 51 sense the world. I began to go to that man, day after day, and I 52 actually saw that religion could be given. One touch, one glance,

1 can change a whole life. I had read about Buddha and Christ and 2 Mohammed, about all those different luminaries of ancient times,
3 how they would stand up and say, "Be thou whole," and the man
4 became whole. I now found it to be true, and when I myself saw this 5 man, all scepticism was brushed aside. It could be done; and my 6 Master used to say: "Religion can be given and taken more tangibly, 7 more really than anything else in the world." Be therefore spiritual 8 first; have something to give, and then stand before the world and 9 give it. Religion is not talk, or doctrines or theories; nor is it 10 sectarianism. Religion cannot live in sects and societies. It is the 11 relation between the soul and God; how can it be made into a 12 society? It would then degenerate into a business, and wherever 13 there are business and business principles in religion, spirituality 14 dies. Religion does not consist in erecting temples, or building 15 churches, or attending public worship. It is not to be found in 16 books, or in words, or in lectures, or in organisations. Religion 17 consists in realisation. As a fact, we all know that nothing will 18 satisfy us until we know the truth for ourselves. However we may 19 argue, however much we may hear, but one thing will satisfy us, 20 and that is our own realisation; and such an experience is possible 21 for every one of us, if we will only try. The first ideal of this attempt 22 to realise religion is that of renunciation. As far as we can, we must 23 give up. Darkness and light, enjoyment of the world and enjoyment 24 of God will never go together. "Ye cannot serve God and Mammon." 25 Let people try it if they will, and I have seen millions in every 26 country who have tried; but after all, it comes to nothing. If one 27 word remains true in the saying, it is, give up everything for the 28 sake of the Lord. This is a hard and long task, but you can begin it 29 here and now. Bit by bit we must go towards it.

30 The second idea that I learnt from my Master, and which is 31 perhaps the most vital, is the wonderful truth that the religions of 32 the world are not contradictory or antagonistic. They are but 33 various phases of one eternal religion. That one eternal religion is 34 applied to different planes of existence, is applied to the opinions of 35 various minds and various races. There never was my religion or 36 yours, my national religion or your national religion; there never 37 existed many religions, there is only the one. One Infinite religion 38 existed all through eternity and will ever exist, and this religion is 39 expressing itself in various countries in various ways. Therefore we 40 must respect all religions and we must try to accept them all as far 41 as we can. Religions manifest themselves not only according to race 42 and geographical position, but according to individual powers. In 43 one man religion is manifesting itself as intense activity, as work. In 44 another it is manifesting itself as intense devotion, in yet another as 45 mysticism, in others as philosophy, and so forth. It is wrong when 46 we say to others: "Your methods are not right." Perhaps a man, 47 whose nature is that of love, thinks that the man who does good to 48 others is not on the right road to religion, because it is not his own 49 way, and is therefore wrong. If the philosopher thinks, "Oh, the poor 50 ignorant people, what do they know about a God of Love, and loving 51 Him? They do not know what they mean," he is wrong, because 52 they may be right and he also.

1 To learn this central secret that the Truth may be one and 2 yet many at the same time, that we may have different visions of the 3 same Truth from different standpoints, is exactly what must be 4 done. Then, instead of antagonism to anyone, we shall have infinite
5 sympathy with all. Knowing that as long as there are different 6 natures born in this world, the same religious truth will require 7 different adaptations, we shall understand that we are bound to 8 have forbearance with each other. Just as nature is unity in variety-- 9 an infinite variation in the phenomenal--as in and through all these 10 variations of the phenomenal runs the Infinite, the Unchangeable, 11 the Absolute Unity, so it is with every man; the microcosm is but a 12 miniature repetition of the macrocosm; in spite of all these 13 variations, in and through them all runs this eternal harmony, and 14 we have to recognise this. This idea, above all other ideas, I find to 15 be the crying necessity of the day. Coming from a country which is a 16 hotbed of religious sects--through good fortune or ill fortune, 17 everyone who has a religious idea wants to send an advance guard-- 18 I have been acquainted from my childhood with the various sects of 19 the world. Even the Mormons came to preach in India. Welcome 20 them all! That is the soil on which to preach religion. There it takes 21 root more than in any other country. If you come and teach politics 22 to the Hindus they do not understand; but if you come to preach 23 religion, however curious it may be, you will have hundreds and 24 thousands of followers in no time, and you have every chance of 25 becoming a living God in your lifetime. I am glad it is so, it is the 26 one thing we want in India.

27 The sects among the Hindus are various, a great many in 28 number, and some of them apparently hopelessly contradictory. Yet 29 they all tell you they are but different manifestations of religion. "As 30 different rivers, taking their start from different mountains, running 31 crooked or straight, all come and mingle their waters in the ocean, 32 so the different sects, with their different points of view, at last all 33 come unto Thee." This is not a theory, it has to be recognised, but 34 not in that patronising way which we see with some people. "Oh, 35 yes, there are some very good things in it. These are what we call 36 the ethnical religions. These ethnical religions have some good in 37 them." Some even have the most wonderfully liberal idea that other 38 religions are all little bits of a prehistoric evolution, but "ours is the 39 fulfilment of things." One man says because his is the oldest 40 religion it is the best; another makes the same claim because his is 41 the latest.

42 We have to recognise that each one of them has the same 43 saving power as the other. What you have heard about their 44 difference, whether in the temple or in the church, is a mass of 45 superstition. The same God answers all; and it is not you, or I, or 46 any body of men that is responsible for the safety and salvation of 47 the least little bit of the soul; the same Almighty God is responsible 48 for all. I do not understand how people declare themselves to be 49 believers in God, and at the same time think that God has handed 50 over to a little body of men all truth, and that they are the 51 guardians of the rest of humanity. How can you call that religion?
52 Religion is realisation; but mere talk--mere trying to believe, mere

1 groping in darkness, mere parroting the words of ancestors and 2 thinking it is religion, mere making a political something out of the 3 truths of religion--is not religion at all. In every sect--even among 4 the Mohammedans whom we always regard as the most exclusive-- 5 even among them we find that wherever there was a man trying to 6 realise religion, from his lips have come the fiery words: "Thou art 7 the Lord of all, Thou art in the heart of all, Thou art the guide of all, 8 Thou art the Teacher of all, and Thou carest infinitely more for the 9 land of Thy children than we can ever do." Do not try to disturb the 10 faith of any man. If you can, give him something better, if you can 11 get hold of a man where he stands and give him a push upwards; do 12 so, but do not destroy what he has. The only true teacher is he who 13 can convert himself, as it were, into a thousand persons at a 14 moment's notice. The only true teacher is he who can immediately 15 come down to the level of the student, and transfer his soul to the 16 student's soul and see through the student's eyes and hear through 17 his ears and understand through his mind. Such a teacher can 18 really teach and none else. All these negative, breaking-down, 19 destructive teachers that are in the world can never do any good.

20 In the presence of my Master I found out that man could be 21 perfect, even in this body. Those lips never cursed anyone, never 22 even criticised anyone. Those eyes were beyond the possibility of 23 seeing evil, that mind had lost the power of thinking evil. He saw 24 nothing but good. That tremendous purity, that tremendous 25 renunciation is the one secret of spirituality. "Neither through 26 wealth, nor through progeny, but through renunciation alone, is 27 immortality to be reached," say the Vedas. "Sell all that thou hast 28 and give to the poor, and follow me," says the Christ. So all great 29 saints and prophets have expressed it, and have carried it out in 30 their lives. How can great spirituality come without that 31 renunciation? Renunciation is the background of all religious 32 thought wherever it be, and you will always find that as this idea of 33 renunciation lessens, the more will the senses creep into the field of 34 religion, and spirituality will decrease in the same ratio.

35 That man was the embodiment of renunciation. In our 36 country it is necessary for a man who becomes a Sannyasin to give 37 up all worldly wealth and position, and this my Master carried out 38 literally. There were many who would have felt themselves blessed 39 if he would only have accepted a present from their hands, who 40 would gladly have given him thousands of rupees if he would have 41 taken them, but these were the only men from whom he would turn 42 away. He was a triumphant example, a living realisation of the 43 complete conquest of lust and of desire for money. He was beyond 44 all ideas of either, and such men are necessary for this century.
45 Such renunciation is necessary in these days when men have begun 46 to think that they cannot live a month without what they call their 47 "necessities," and which they are increasing out of all proportion. It 48 is necessary in a time like this that a man shall arise to demonstrate 49 to the sceptics of the world that there yet breathes a man who does 50 not care a straw for all the gold or all the fame that is in the 51 universe. Yet there are such men.

52 The other idea of his life was intense love for others. The

1 first part of my Master's life was spent in acquiring spirituality, and 2 the remaining years in distributing it. People in our country have 3 not the same customs as you have in visiting a religious teacher or 4 a Sannyasin. Somebody would come to ask him about something, 5 some perhaps would come hundreds of miles, walking all the way, 6 just to ask one question, to hear one word from him, "Tell me one 7 word for my salvation." That is the way they come. They come in 8 numbers, unceremoniously, to the place where he is mostly to be 9 found; they may find him under a tree and question him; and before 10 one set of people has gone, others have arrived. So if a man is 11 greatly revered, he will sometimes have no rest day or night. He 12 will have to talk constantly. For hours people will come pouring in, 13 and this man will be teaching them.

14 So men came in crowds to hear him, and he would talk 15 twenty hours in the twenty-four, and that not for one day, but for 16 months and months, until at last the body broke down under the 17 pressure of this tremendous strain. His intense love for mankind 18 would not let him refuse to help even the humblest of the thousands 19 who sought his aid. Gradually there developed a vital throat 20 disorder, and yet he could not be persuaded to refrain from these 21 exertions. As soon as he heard that people were asking to see him, 22 he would insist upon having them admitted and would answer all 23 their questions. When expostulated with, he replied, "I do not care.
24 I will give up twenty thousand such bodies to help one man. It is 25 glorious to help even one man." There was no rest for him. Once a 26 great man asked him: "Sir, you are a great yogi, why do you not put 27 your mind a little on your body and cure your disease?" At first he 28 did not answer, but when the question had been repeated he gently 29 said: "My friend, I thought you were a sage, but you talk like other 30 men of the world. This mind has been given to the Lord. Do you 31 mean to say that I should take it back and put it upon the body 32 which is but a mere cage of the soul?"

1 So he went on preaching to the people, and the news
2 spread that his body was about to pass away, and the people began 3 to flock to him in greater crowds than ever. You cannot imagine the 4 way they come to these great religious teachers in India, how they 5 crowd around them and make gods of them while they are yet
6 living. Thousands wait simply to touch the hem of their garments. It 7 is through this appreciation of spirituality in others that spirituality 8 is produced. Whatever any man wants and appreciates, that he will 9 get, and it is the same with nations. If you go to India and deliver a 10 political lecture, however grand it may be, you will scarcely find 11 people to listen to you; but just go and teach religion, live it, not 12 merely talk it, and hundreds will crowd just to look at you, to touch 13 your feet. When the people heard that this holy man was likely to go 14 from them soon, they began to come around him more than ever, 15 and my Master went on teaching them without the least regard for 16 his health. We could not prevent this. Many of the people came 17 from long distances, and he would not rest until he had answered 18 their questions. "While I can speak I must teach them," he would 19 say, and he was as good as his word. One day he told us that he 20 would lay down the body that day, and repeating the most sacred 21 word of the Vedas he entered into Samadhi and passed away.

22 His thoughts and his message were known to very few who 23 were capable of giving them out. Among others, he left a few young 24 boys who had renounced the world, and were ready to carry on his 25 work. Attempts were made to crush them. But they stood firm, 26 having the inspiration of that great life before them. Having had the 27 contact of that blessed life for years, they stood their ground. These 28 young men, living as Sannyasins, begged through the streets of the 29 city where they were born, although some of them came from high 30 families. At first they met with great antagonism, but they 31 persevered and went on from day to day spreading all over India 32 the message of that great man, until the whole country was filled 33 with the ideas he had preached. This man from a remote village of 34 Bengal, without education, simply by the sheer force of his own 35 determination, realised the truth and gave it to others, leaving only 36 a few young boys to keep it alive.

37 Today the name of Shri Ramakrishna Paramahansa is 38 known all over India to its millions of people. Nay, the power of that 39 man has spread beyond India, and if there has ever been a word of 40 truth, a word of spirituality that I have spoken anywhere in the 41 world, I owe it to my Master; only the mistakes are mine.

42 This is the message of Shri Ramakrishna to the modern 43 world. "Do not care for doctrines, do not care for dogmas, or sects, 44 or churches or temples; they count for little compared with the 45 essence of existence in each man, which is spirituality; and the 46 more that this is developed in a man, the more powerful is he for 47 good. Earn that first, acquire that, and criticise no one, for all 48 doctrines and creeds have some good in them. Show by your lives 49 that religion does not mean words, or names, or sects, but that it 50 means spiritual realisation. Only those can understand who have 51 felt. Only those that have attained to spirituality can communicate it 52 to others, can be great teachers of mankind. They alone are the 1 powers of light."

2 The more such men are produced in a country, the more
3 that country will be raised; and that country where such men 4 absolutely do not exist is simply doomed, nothing can save it.
5 Therefore, my Master's message to mankind is "Be spiritual and 6 realise truth for yourself." He would have you give up for the sake 7 of your fellow beings. He would have you cease talking about love 8 for your brother, and set to work to prove your words. The time has 9 come for renunciation, for realisation; and then you will see the 10 harmony in all the religions of the world. You will know that there is 11 no need of any quarrel, and then only will you be ready to help 12 humanity. To proclaim and make clear the fundamental unity 13 underlying all religions was the mission of my Master. Other 14 teachers have taught special religions which bear their names, but 15 this great teacher of the nineteenth century made no claim for 16 himself. He left every religion undisturbed because he had realised 17 that in reality, they are all part and parcel of one eternal religion.

INDIAN RELIGIOUS THOUGHT

(Delivered under the auspices of the Brooklyn Ethical Society, in the Art Gallery of the Pouch Mansion, Clinton Avenue, Brooklyn, U.S.A.)

India, although only half the size of the United States, contains a population of over two hundred and ninety millions, and there are three religions which hold sway over them--the Mohammedan, the Buddhist, and the Hindu. The adherents of the first mentioned number about sixty millions, of the second about nine millions, while the last embrace nearly two hundred and six millions. The cardinal features of the Hindu religion are founded on the meditative and speculative philosophy and on the ethical teachings contained in the various books of the Vedas, which assert that the universe is infinite in space and eternal in duration. It never had a beginning, and it never will have an end. Innumerable have been the manifestations of the power of the spirit in the realm of matter, of the force of the Infinite in the domain of the finite; but the Infinite Spirit Itself is self-existent, eternal, and unchangeable. The passage of time makes no mark whatever on the dial of eternity. In its supersensuous region which cannot be comprehended at all by the human understanding, there is no past, and there is no future. The Vedas teach that the soul of man is immortal. The body is subject to the law of growth and decay; what grows must of necessity decay. But the indwelling spirit is related to the infinite and eternal life; it never had a beginning and it never will have an end. One of the chief distinctions between the Hindu and the Christian religions is that the Christian religion teaches that each human soul had its beginning at its birth into this world, whereas the Hindu religion asserts that the spirit of man is an emanation of the Eternal Being, and had no more a beginning than God Himself. Innumerable have been and will be its manifestations in its passage from one personality to another, subject to the great law of spiritual evolution, until it reaches perfection, when there is no more change.

It has been often asked: If this be so, why is it we do not remember anything of our past lives? This is our explanation: Consciousness is the name of the surface only of the mental ocean, but within its depths are stored up all our experiences, both pleasant and painful. The desire of the human soul is to find out something that is stable. The mind and the body, in fact all the various phenomena of nature, are in a condition of incessant change. But the highest aspiration of our spirit is to find out something that does not change, that has reached a state of permanent perfection. And this is the aspiration of the human soul after the Infinite! The finer our moral and intellectual development, the stronger will become this aspiration after the Eternal that changes not.

The modern Buddhists teach that everything that cannot be

1 known by the five senses is non-existent, and that it is a delusion to 2 suppose that man is an independent entity. The idealists, on the 3 contrary, claim that each individual is an independent entity, and 4 the external world does not exist outside of his mental conception.
5 But the sure solution of this problem is that nature is a mixture of 6 independence and dependence, of reality and idealism. Our mind 7 and bodies are dependent on the external world, and this 8 dependence varies according to the nature of their relation to it; 9 but the indwelling spirit is free, as God is free, and is able to direct 10 in a greater or lesser degree, according to the state of their 11 development, the movements of our minds and bodies.

12 Death is but a change of condition. We remain in the same 13 universe, and are subject to the same laws as before. Those who 14 have passed beyond and have attained high planes of development 15 in beauty and wisdom are but the advance-guard of a universal 16 army who is following after them. The spirit of the highest is related 17 to the spirit of the lowest, and the germ of infinite perfection exists 18 in all. We should cultivate the optimistic temperament, and 19 endeavour to see the good that dwells in everything. If we sit down 20 and lament over the imperfection of our bodies and minds, we proift 21 nothing; it is the heroic endeavour to subdue adverse 22 circumstances that carries our spirit upwards. The object of life is 23 to learn the laws of spiritual progress. Christians can learn from 24 Hindus, and Hindus can learn from Christians. Each has made a 25 contribution of value to the wisdom of the world.

26 Impress upon your children that true religion is positive and 27 not negative, that it does not consist in merely refraining from evil, 28 but in a persistent performance of noble deeds. True religion comes 29 not from the teaching of men or the reading of books; it is the 30 awakening of the spirit within us, consequent upon pure and heroic 31 action. Every child born into the world brings with it a certain 32 accumulated experience from previous incarnations; and the 33 impress of this experience is seen in the structure of its mind and 34 body. But the feeling of independence which possesses us all shows 35 there is something in us besides mind and body. The soul that 36 reigns within is independent and creates the desire for freedom. If 37 we are not free, how can we hope to make the world better? We 38 hold that human progress is the result of the action of the human 39 spirit. What the world is, and what we ourselves are, are the fruits 40 of the freedom of the spirit.

41 We believe in one God, the Father of us all, who is 42 omnipresent and omnipotent, and who guides and preserves His 43 children with infinite love. We believe in a Personal God as the 44 Christians do, but we go further: we believe that we are He! That 45 His personality is manifested in us, that God is in us, and that we 46 are in God. We believe there is a germ of truth in all religions, and 47 the Hindu bows down to them all; for in this world, truth is to be 48 found not in subtraction but in addition. We would offer God a 49 bouquet of the most beautiful flowers of all the diverse faiths. We 50 must love God for love's sake, not for the hope of reward. We must 51 do our duty for duty's sake, not for the hope of reward. We must 52 worship the beautiful for beauty's sake, not for the hope of reward.

1 Thus in the purity of our hearts shall we see God. Sacrifices, 2 genuflexions, mumblings, and mutterings are not religion. They are 3 only good if they stimulate us to the brave performance of beautiful 4 and heroic deeds and lift our thoughts to the apprehension of the 5 divine perfection.

6 What good is it, if we acknowledge in our prayers that God is 7 the Father of us all, and in our daily lives do not treat every man as 8 our brother? Books are only made so that they may point the way to 9 a higher life; but no good results unless the path is trodden with 10 unflinching steps! Every human personality may be compared to a 11 glass globe. There is the same pure white light--an emission of the 12 divine Being--in the centre of each, but the glass being of different 13 colours and thickness, the rays assume diverse aspects in the 14 transmission. The equality and beauty of each central flame is the 15 same, and the apparent inequality is only in the imperfection of the 16 temporal instrument of its expression. As we rise higher and higher 17 in the scale of being, the medium becomes more and more 18 translucent.

4 It was not often that Swami Vivekananda, while in the West, 5 took part in debates. One such occasion in London when he did so 6 was during the discussion of a lecture on, "Can Psychic Phenomena 7 be proved from a Scientific Basis?" Referring first to a remark 8 which he had heard in the course of this debate, not for the first 9 time in the West, he said:

10 One point I want to remark upon. It is a mistaken statement 11 that has been made to us that the Mohammedans do not believe 12 that women have souls. I am very sorry to say it is an old mistake 13 among Christian people, and they seem to like the mistake. That is 14 a peculiarity in human nature, that people want to say something 15 very bad about others whom they do not like. By the by, you know I 16 am not a Mohammedan, but yet I have had opportunity for studying 17 this religion, and there is not one word in the Koran which says that 18 women have no souls, but in fact it says they have.

19 About the psychical things that have been the subject of 20 discussion, I have very little to say here, for in the first place, the 21 question is whether psychical subjects are capable of scientific 22 demonstration. What do you mean by this demonstration? First of 23 all, there will be the subjective and the objective side necessary.
24 Taking chemistry and physics, with which we are so familiar, and of 25 which we have read so much, is it true that everyone in this world is 26 able to understand the demonstration even of the commonest 27 subjects? Take any boor and show him one of your experiments.
28 What will he understand of it? Nothing. It requires a good deal of 29 previous training to be brought up to the point of understanding an 30 experiment. Before that he cannot understand it at all. That is a 31 great difficulty in the way. If scientific demonstration means 32 bringing down certain facts to a plane which is universal for all 33 human beings, where all beings can understand it, I deny that there 34 can be any such scientific demonstration for any subject in the 35 world. If it were so, all our universities and education would be in 36 vain. Why are we educated if by birth we can understand 37 everything scientific? Why so much study? It is of no use 38 whatsoever. So, on the face of it, it is absurd if this be the meaning 39 of scientific demonstration, the bringing down of intricate facts to 40 the plane on which we are now. The next meaning should be the 41 correct one, perhaps, that certain facts should be adduced as 42 proving certain more intricate facts. There are certain more 43 complicated, intricate phenomena, which we explain by less 44 intricate ones, and thus get, perhaps, near to them; in this way they 45 are gradually brought down to the plane of our present ordinary 46 consciousness. But even this is very complicated and very difficult, 47 and means a training also, a tremendous amount of education. So 48 all I have to say is that in order to have scientific explanation of 49 psychical phenomena, we require not only perfect evidence on the 50 side of the phenomena themselves, but a good deal of training on 51 the part of those who want to see. All this being granted, we shall

1 be in a position to say yea or nay, about the proof or disproof of any 2 phenomena which are presented before us. But, before that, the 3 most remarkable phenomena or the most oft-recorded phenomena 4 that have happened in human society, in my opinion, would be very 5 hard indeed to prove even in an offhand manner.

6 Next, as to those hasty explanations that religions are the 7 outcome of dreams, those who have made a particular study of 8 them would think of them but as mere guesses.

9 We have no reason to suppose that religions were the 10 outcome of dreams as has been so easily explained. Then it would 11 be very easy indeed to take even the agnostic's position, but 12 unfortunately the matter cannot be explained so easily. There are 13 many other wonderful phenomena happening, even at the present 14 time, and these have all to be investigated, and not only have to be, 15 but have been investigated all along. The blind man says there is no 16 sun. That does not prove that there is no sun. These phenomena 17 have been investigated years before. Whole races of mankind have 18 trained themselves for centuries to become fit instruments for 19 discovering the fine workings of the nerves; their records have been 20 published ages ago, colleges have been created to study these 21 subjects, and men and women there are still who are living 22 demonstrations of these phenomena. Of course I admit that there is 23 a good deal of hoax in the whole thing, a good deal of what is wrong 24 and untrue in these things; but with what is this not the case? Take 25 any common scientific phenomenon; there are two or three facts 26 which either scientists or ordinary men may regard as absolute 27 truths, and the rest as mere frothy suppositions. Now let the 28 agnostic apply the same test to his own science which he would 29 apply to what he does not want to believe. Half of it would be 30 shaken to its foundation at once. We are bound to live on 31 suppositions. We cannot live satisfied where we are; that is the 32 natural growth of the human soul. We cannot become agnostics on 33 this side and at the same time go about seeking for anything here; 34 we have to pick. And, for this reason, we have to get beyond our 35 limits, struggle to know what seems to be unknowable; and this 36 struggle must continue.

37 In my opinion, therefore, I go really one step further than 38 the lecturer, and advance the opinion that most of the psychical 39 phenomena--not only little things like spirit-rappings or table-40 rappings which are mere child's play, not merely little things like 41 telepathy which I have seen boys do even--most of the psychical 42 phenomena which the last speaker calls the higher clairvoyance, 43 but which I would rather beg to call the experiences of the super-44 conscious state of the mind, are the very stepping-stones to real 45 psychological investigation. The first thing to be seen is whether the 46 mind can attain to that state or not. My explanation would, of 47 course, be a little different from his, but we should probably agree 48 when we explain terms. Not much depends on the question whether 49 this present consciousness continues after death or not, seeing that 50 this universe, as it is now, is not bound to this state of 51 consciousness. Consciousness is not co-existent with existence. In 52 my own body, and in all of our bodies, we must all admit that we are

1 conscious of very little of the body, and of the greater part of it we 2 are unconscious. Yet it exists. Nobody is ever conscious of his brain, 3 for example. I never saw my brain, and I am never conscious of it.
4 Yet I know that it exists. Therefore we may say that it is not 5 consciousness that we want, but the existence of something which 6 is not this gross matter; and that that knowledge can be gained 7 even in this life, and that that knowledge has been gained and 8 demonstrated, as far as any science has been demonstrated, is a 9 fact. We have to look into these things, and I would insist on 10 reminding those who are here present on one other point. It is well 11 to remember that very many times we are deluded on this. Certain 12 people place before us the demonstration of a fact which is not 13 ordinary to the spiritual nature, and we reject that fact because we 14 say we cannot find it to be true. In many cases the fact may not be 15 correct, but in many cases also we forget to consider whether we 16 are fit to receive the demonstration or not, whether we have 17 permitted our bodies and our minds to become fit subjects for their 18 discovery.

3 ON ART IN INDIA
4

5 "Arts and Sciences in India" was the topic under which the 6 Swami Vivekananda was introduced to the audience at Wendte
7 Hall, San Francisco. The Swami held the attention of his hearers 8 throughout as was demonstrated by the many questions which were 9 put to him after his address.

10 The Swami said in part:

11 In the history of nations, the government at the beginning has 12 always been in the hands of the priests. All the learning also has 13 proceeded from the priests. Then, after the priests, the government 14 changes hands, and the Kshatriya or the kingly power prevails, and 15 the military rule is triumphant. This has always been true. And last 16 comes the grasp of luxury, and the people sink down under it to be 17 dominated by stronger and more barbarous races.

18 Amongst all races of the world, from the earliest time in 19 history, India has been called the land of wisdom. For ages India 20 itself has never gone out to conquer other nations. Its people have 21 never been fighters. Unlike your Western people, they do not eat 22 meat, for meat makes fighters; the blood of animals makes you 23 restless, and you desire to do something.

24 Compare India and England in the Elizabethan period. What 25 a dark age it was for your people, and how enlightened we were 26 even then. The Anglo-Saxon people have always been badly fitted 27 for art. They have good poetry--for instance, how wonderful is the 28 blank verse of Shakespeare! Merely the rhyming of words is not 29 good. It is not the most civilised thing in the world.

30 In India, music was developed to the full seven notes, even 31 to half and quarter notes, ages ago. India led in music, also in 32 drama and sculpture. Whatever is done now is merely an attempt at 33 imitation. Everything now in India hinges on the question of how 34 little a man requires to live upon.

IS INDIA A BENIGHTED COUNTRY?

The following is a report of a lecture at Detroit, United States, America, with the editorial comments of the Boston Evening Transcript, 5th April, 1894:

Swami Vivekananda has been in Detroit recently and made a profound impression there. All classes flocked to hear him, and professional men in particular were greatly interested in his logic and his soundness of thought. The opera-house alone was large enough for his audience. He speaks English extremely well, and he is as handsome as he is good. The Detroit newspapers have devoted much space to the reports of his lectures. An editorial in the Detroit Evening News says: Most people will be inclined to think that Swami Vivekananda did better last night in his opera-house lecture than he did in any of his former lectures in this city. The merit of the Hindu's utterances last night lay in their clearness. He drew a very sharp line of distinction between Christianity and Christianity, and told his audience plainly wherein he himself is a Christian in one sense and not a Christian in another sense. He also drew a sharp line between Hinduism and Hinduism, carrying the implication that he desired to be classed as a Hindu only in its better sense. Swami Vivekananda stands superior to all criticism when he says, "We want missionaries of Christ. Let such come to India by the hundreds and thousands. Bring Christ's life to us and let it permeate the very core of society. Let him be preached in every village and corner of India."

When a man is as sound as that on the main question, all else that he may say must refer to the subordinate details. There is infinite humiliation in this spectacle of a pagan priest reading lessons of conduct and of life to the men who have assumed the spiritual supervision of Greenland's icy mountains and India's coral strand; but the sense of humiliation is the sine qua non of most reforms in this world. Having said what he did of the glorious life of the author of the Christian faith, Vivekananda has the right to lecture the way he has the men who profess to represent that life among the nations abroad. And after all, how like the Nazarene that sounds: "Provide neither gold nor silver, nor brass in your purses, nor scrip for your journey, neither two coats, neither shoes, nor yet staves; for the workman is worthy of his meat." Those who have become at all familiar with the religious literature of India before the advent of Vivekananda are best prepared to understand the utter abhorrence of the Orientals of our Western commercial spirit--or what Vivekananda calls, "the shopkeeper's spirit"--in all that we do even in our very religion.

Here is a point for the missionaries which they cannot afford to ignore. They who would convert the Eastern world of paganism

1 must live up to what they preach, in contempt for the kingdoms of 2 this world and all the glory of them.

3 Brother Vivekananda considers India the most moral nation
4 in the world. Though in bondage, its spirituality still endures. Here
5 are extracts from the notices of some of his recent Detroit 6 addresses: At this point the lecturer struck the great moral keynote 7 of his discourse stating that with his people it was the belief that all 8 non-self is good and all self is bad. This point was emphasised 9 throughout the evening and might be termed the text of the 10 address. "To build a home is selfish, argues the Hindu, so he builds 11 it for the worship of God and for the entertainment of guests. To 12 cook food is selfish, so he cooks it for the poor; he will serve himself 13 last if any hungry stranger applies; and this feeling extends 14 throughout the length and breadth of the land. Any man can ask for 15 food and shelter and any house will be opened to him.

16 "The caste system has nothing to do with religion. A man's 17 occupation is hereditary--a carpenter is born a carpenter; a 18 goldsmith, a goldsmith; a workman, a workman; and a priest, a 19 priest.

20 "Two gifts are especially appreciated, the gift of learning 21 and the gift of life. But the gift of learning takes precedence. One 22 may save a man's life, and that is excellent; one may impart to 23 another knowledge, and that is better. To instruct for money is an 24 evil, and to do this would bring opprobrium upon the head of the 25 man who barter learning for gold as though it were an article of 26 trade. The Government makes gifts from time to time to the 27 instructors, and the moral effect is better than it would be if the 28 conditions were the same as exist in certain alleged civilised 29 countries." The speaker had asked throughout the length and 30 breadth of the land what was the definition of "civilisation", and he 31 had asked the question in many countries. Sometimes the reply has 32 been, "What we are, that is civilisation." He begged to differ in the 33 definition of the word. A nation may conquer the waves, control the 34 elements, develop the utilitarian problems of life seemingly to the 35 utmost limits, and yet not realise that in the individual, the highest 36 type of civilisation is found in him who has learned to conquer self.
37 This condition is found more in India than in any other country on 38 earth, for there the material conditions are subservient to the 39 spiritual, and the individual looks to the soul manifestations in 40 everything that has life, studying nature to this end. Hence that 41 gentle disposition to endure with indomitable patience the flings of 42 what appears unkind fortune, the while there is a full consciousness 43 of a spiritual strength and knowledge greater than that possessed 44 by any other people. Therefore the existence of a country and 45 people from which flows an unending stream that attracts the 46 attention of thinkers far and near to approach and throw from their 47 shoulders an oppressive earthly burden.

48 This lecture was prefaced with the statement that the 49 speaker had been asked many questions. A number of these he 50 preferred to answer privately, but three he had selected for 51 reasons, which would appear, to answer from the pulpit. They 52 were: "Do the people of India throw their children into the jaws of 1 the crocodiles?" "Do they kill themselves beneath the wheels of 2 Jagannatha?" "Do they burn widows with their husbands?" The 3 first question the lecturer treated in the same vein as an American 4 abroad would in answering inquiries about Indians running round

5 in the streets of New York and similar myths which are even today 6 entertained by many persons on the Continent. The statement was 7 too ludicrous to give a serious response to it. When asked by 8 certain well-meaning but ignorant people why they gave only 9 female children to the crocodiles, he could only ironically reply 10 that probably it was because they were softer and more tender 11 and could be more easily masticated by the inhabitants of the 12 river in that benighted country. Regarding the Jagannatha legend, 13 the lecturer explained the old practice of the Car-festival in the 14 sacred city, and remarked that possibly a few pilgrims in their zeal 15 to grasp the rope and participate in the drawing of the Car 16 slipped and fell and were so destroyed. Some such mishaps had 17 been exaggerated into the distorted versions from which the good 18 people of other countries shrank with horror. Vivekananda denied 19 that people burned widows. It was true, however, that widows had 20 burned themselves. In the few cases where this had happened, 21 they had been urged not to do so by holy men, who were always 22 opposed to suicide. Where the devoted widows insisted, stating 23 that they desired to accompany their husbands in the 24 transformation that had taken place, they were obliged to submit 25 themselves to the fiery test. That is, they thrust their hands within 26 the flames, and if they permitted them to be consumed, no further 27 opposition was placed in the way of the fulfilment of their desires.
28 But India is not the only country where women, who have loved, 29 have followed immediately the beloved one to the realms of 30 immortality; suicides in such cases have occurred in every land. It is 31 an uncommon bit of fanaticism in any country--as unusual in India 32 as elsewhere. "No," the speaker repeated, "the people do not burn 33 women in India; nor have they ever burned witches."

34 This latter touch is decidedly acute by way of reflection. No 35 analysis of the philosophy of the Hindu monk need be attempted 36 here, except to say that it is based in general on the struggle of the 37 soul to individually attain Infinity. One learned Hindu opened the 38 Lowell Institute Course this year. What Mr. Mozoomdar began, 39 might worthily be ended by Brother Vivekananda. This new visitor 40 has by far the most interesting personality, although in the Hindu 41 philosophy, of course, personality is not to be taken into 42 consideration. At the Parliament of Religions they used to keep 43 Vivekananda until the end of the programme to make people stay 44 until the end of the session. On a warm day, when a prosy speaker 45 talked too long and people began going home by hundreds, the 46 Chairman would get up and announce that Swami Vivekananda 47 would make a short address just before the benediction. Then he 48 would have the peaceable hundreds perfectly in tether. The four 49 thousand fanning people in the Hall of Columbus would sit smiling 50 and expectant, waiting for an hour or two of other men's speeches, 51 to listen to Vivekananda for fifteen minutes. The Chairman knew 52 the old rule of keeping the best until the last.

2 THE CLAIMS OF RELIGION
3

4 Many of you remember the thrill of joy with which in your 5 childhood you saw the glorious rising sun; all of you, sometimes in 6 your life, stand and gaze upon the glorious setting sun, and at least 7 in imagination, try to pierce through the beyond. This, in fact, is at 8 the bottom of the whole universe--this rising from and this setting 9 into the beyond, this whole universe coming up out of the unknown, 10 and going back again into the unknown, crawling in as a child out of 11 darkness, and crawling out again as an old man into darkness.

12 This universe of ours, the universe of the senses, the 13 rational, the intellectual, is bounded on both sides by the 14 illimitable, the unknowable, the ever unknown. Herein is the 15 search, herein are the inquiries, here are the facts; from this comes 16 the light which is known to the world as religion. Essentially, 17 however, religion belongs to the supersensuous and not to the 18 sense plane. It is beyond all reasoning, and not on the plane of 19 intellect. It is a vision, an inspiration, a plunge into the unknown 20 and unknowable, making the unknowable more than known, for it 21 can never be "known". This search has been in the human mind, as 22 I believe, from the very beginning of humanity. There cannot have 23 been human reasoning and intellect in any period of the world's 24 history without this struggle, this search beyond. In our little 25 universe, this human mind, we see a thought arise. Whence it rises 26 we do not know, and when it disappears, where it goes, we know 27 not either. The macrocosm and the microcosm are, as it were, in 28 the same groove, passing through the same stages, vibrating in the 29 same key.

30 I shall try to bring before you the Hindu theory that 31 religions do not come from without, but from within. It is my belief 32 that religious thought is in man's very constitution, so much so that 33 it is impossible for him to give up religion until he can give up his 34 mind and body, until he can stop thought and life. As long as a man 35 thinks, this struggle must go on, and so long man must have some 36 form of religion. Thus we see various forms of religion in the world.
37 It is a bewildering study; but it is not, as many of us think, a vain 38 speculation. Amidst this chaos there is harmony, throughout these 39 discordant sounds there is a note of concord; and he who is 40 prepared to listen to it, will catch the tone.

41 The great question of all questions at the present time is 42 this: Taking for granted that the knowable and the known are 43 bounded on both sides by the unknowable and the infinitely 44 unknown, why struggle for that unknown? Why shall we not be 45 content with the known? Why shall we not rest satisfied with 46 eating, drinking, and doing a little good to society? This idea is in 47 the air. From the most learned professor to the prattling baby, we 48 are told, "Do good to the world, that is all of religion, and don't 49 bother your head about questions of the beyond." So much so is 50 this the case that it has become a truism.

1 But fortunately we must inquire into the beyond. This 2 present, this expressed, is only one part of that unexpressed. The 3 sense universe is, as it were, only one portion, one bit of that 4 infinite spiritual universe projected into the plane of sense 5 consciousness. How can this little bit of projection be explained, be 6 understood, without knowing that which is beyond? It is said of 7 Socrates that one day while lecturing at Athens, he met a 8 Brahmana who had travelled into Greece, and Socrates told the 9 Brahmana that the greatest study for mankind is man. And the 10 Brahmana sharply retorted, "How can you know man until you 11 know God?" This God, this eternally Unknowable, or Absolute, or 12 Infinite, or without name--you may call Him by what name you like-- 13 is the rationale, the only explanation, the raison d'etre of that 14 which is known and knowable, this present life. Take anything 15 before you, the most material thing--take any one of these most 16 materialistic sciences, such as chemistry or physics, astronomy or 17 biology--study it, push the study forward and forward, and the 18 gross forms will begin to melt and become finer and finer, until 19 they come to a point where you are bound to make a tremendous 20 leap from these material things into the immaterial. The gross melt 21 into the fine, physics into metaphysics, in every department of 22 knowledge.

23 So with everything we have--our society, our relations with 24 each other, our religion, and what you call ethics. There are 25 attempts at producing a system of ethics from the mere grounds of 26 utility. I challenge any man to produce such a rational system of 27 ethics. Do good to others. Why? Because it is the highest utility.
28 Suppose a man says, "I do not care for utility; I want to cut the 29 throats of others and make myself rich." What will you answer? It is 30 out-Heroding Herod! But where is the utility of my doing good to 31 the world? Am I a fool to work my life out that others may be 32 happy? Why shall I myself not be happy, if there is no other 33 sentiency beyond society, no other power in the universe beyond 34 the five senses? What prevents me from cutting the throats of my 35 brothers so long as I can make myself safe from the police, and 36 make myself happy? What will you answer? You are bound to show 37 some utility. When you are pushed from your ground you answer, 38 "My friend, it is good to be good." What is the power in the human 39 mind which says, "It is good to do good", which unfolds before us in 40 glorious view the grandeur of the soul, the beauty of goodness, the 41 all attractive power of goodness, the infinite power of goodness?
42 That is what we call God. Is it not?

43 Secondly, I want to tread on a little more delicate ground. I 44 want your attention, and ask you not to make any hasty conclusions 45 from what I say. We cannot do much good to this world. Doing good 46 to the world is very good. But can we do much good to the world?
47 Have we done much good these hundreds of years that we have 48 been struggling--have we increased the sum total of the happiness 49 in the world? Thousands of means have been created every day to 50 conduce to the happiness of the world, and this has been going on 51 for hundreds and thousands of years. I ask you: Is the sum total of 52 the happiness in the world today more than what it was a century

1 ago? It cannot be. Each wave that rises in the ocean must be at the 2 expense of a hollow somewhere. If one nation becomes rich and 3 powerful, it must be at the expense of another nation somewhere.
4 Each piece of machinery that is invented will make twenty people
5 rich and a twenty thousand people poor. It is the law of competition 6 throughout. The sum total of the energy displayed remains the 7 same throughout. It is, too, a foolhardy task. It is unreasonable to 8 state that we can have happiness without misery. With the increase 9 of all these means, you are increasing the want of the world, and 10 increased wants means insatiable thirst which will never be 11 quenched. What can fill this want, this thirst? And so long as there 12 is this thirst, misery is inevitable. It is the very nature of life to be 13 happy and miserable by turns. Then again is this world left to you to 14 do good to it? Is there no other power working in this universe? Is 15 God dead and gone, leaving His universe to you and me--the 16 Eternal, the Omnipotent, the All-merciful, the Ever-awakened, the 17 One who never sleeps when the universe is sleeping, whose eyes 18 never blink? This infinite sky is, as it were, His ever-open eye. Is He 19 dead and gone? Is He not acting in this universe? It is going on; you 20 need not be in a hurry; you need not make yourself miserable.

21 [The Swami here told the story of the man who wanted a 22 ghost to work for him, but who, when he had the ghost, could not 23 keep him employed, until he gave him a curly dog's tail to 24 straighten.]

25 Such is the case with us, with this doing good to the 26 universe. So, my brothers, we are trying to straighten out the tail of 27 the dog these hundreds and thousands of years. It is like 28 rheumatism. You drive it out from the feet, and it goes to the head; 29 you drive it from the head, and it goes somewhere else.

30 This will seem to many of you to be a terrible, pessimistic 31 view of the world, but it is not. Both pessimism and optimism are 32 wrong. Both are taking up the extremes.

33 So long as man has plenty to eat and drink, and good clothes 34 to wear, he becomes a great optimist; but that very man, when he 35 loses everything, becomes a great pessimist. When a man loses all 36 his money and is very poor, then and then alone, with the greatest 37 force come to him the ideas of brotherhood of humanity. This is the 38 world, and the more I go to different countries and see of this 39 world, and the older I get, the more I am trying to avoid both these 40 extremes of optimism and pessimism. The world is neither good nor 41 evil. It is the Lord's world. It is beyond both good and evil, perfect 42 in itself. His will is going on, showing all these different pictures; 43 and it will go on without beginning and without end. It is a great 44 gymnasium in which you and I, and millions of souls must come and 45 get exercises, and make ourselves strong and perfect. This is what 46 it is for. Not that God could not make a perfect universe; not that 47 He could not help the misery of the world. You remember the story 48 of the young lady and the clergyman, who were both looking at the 49 moon through the telescope, and found the moon spots. And the 50 clergyman said, "I am sure they are the spires of some churches."
51 "Nonsense," said the young lady, "I am sure they are the young 52 lovers kissing each other." So we are doing with this world. When

1 we are inside, we think we are seeing the inside. According to the 2 plane of existence in which we are, we see the universe. Fire in the 3 kitchen is neither good nor bad. When it cooks a meal for you, you 4 bless the fire, and say, "How good it is!" And when it burns your 5 finger, you say, "What a nuisance it is!" It would be equally correct
6 and logical to say: This universe is neither good nor evil. The world 7 is the world, and will be always so. If we open ourselves to it in 8 such a manner that the action of the world is beneficial to us, we 9 call it good. If we put ourselves in the position in which it is painful, 10 we call it evil. So you will always find children, who are innocent 11 and joyful and do not want to injure anyone, are very optimistic.
12 They are dreaming golden dreams. Old men who have all the 13 desires in their hearts and not the means to fulfil them, and 14 especially those who have been thumped and bumped by the world
15 a good deal, are very pessimistic. Religion wants to know the truth.
16 And the first thing it has discovered is that without a knowledge of 17 this truth there will be no life worth living.

18 Life will be a desert, human life will be vain, if we cannot 19 know the beyond. It is very good to say: Be contented with the 20 things of the present moment. The cows and the dogs are, and so 21 are all animals, and that is what makes them animals. So if man 22 rests content with the present and gives up all search into the 23 beyond, mankind will all have to go back to the animal plane again.
24 It is religion, this inquiry into the beyond, that makes the difference 25 between man and an animal. Well has it been said that man is the 26 only animal that naturally looks upwards; every other animal 27 naturally looks down. That looking upward and going upward and 28 seeking perfection are what is called salvation, and the sooner a 29 man begins to go higher, the sooner he raises himself towards this 30 idea of truth as salvation. It does not consist in the amount of 31 money in your pocket, or the dress you wear, or the house you live 32 in, but in the wealth of spiritual thought in your brain. That is what 33 makes for human progress; that is the source of all material and 34 intellectual progress, the motive power behind, the enthusiasm 35 that pushes mankind forward.

36 What again is the goal of mankind? Is it happiness, sensuous 37 pleasure? They used to say in the olden time that in heaven they 38 will play on trumpets and live round a throne; in modern time I find 39 that they think this ideal is very weak, and they have improved upon 40 it and say that they will have marriages and all these things there.
41 If there is any improvement in these two things, the second is an 42 improvement for the worse. All these various theories of heaven 43 that are being put forward show weakness in the mind. And that 44 weakness is here:

45 First, they think that sense happiness is the goal of life.
46 Secondly, they cannot conceive of anything that is beyond the five 47 senses. They are as irrational as the Utilitarians. Still they are much 48 better than the modern Atheistic Utilitarians, at any rate. Lastly, 49 this Utilitarian position is simply childish. What right have you to 50 say, "Here is my standard, and the whole universe must be 51 governed by my standard?" What right have you to say that every 52 truth shall be judged by this standard of yours--the standard that

1 preaches mere bread, and money, and clothes as God?

2 Religion does not live in bread, does not dwell in a house.
3 Again and again you hear this objection advanced: "What good can 4 religion do? Can it take away the poverty of the poor and give them
5 more clothes?" Supposing it cannot, would that prove the untruth 6 of religion? Suppose a baby stands up among you, when you are 7 trying to demonstrate an astronomical theory, and says, "Does it 8 bring gingerbread?" "No, it does not," you answer. "Then," says the 9 baby, "it is useless." Babies judge the whole universe from their 10 own standpoint, that of producing gingerbread, and so do the 11 babies of the world.

12 Sad to say at the later end of this nineteenth century that 13 these are passing for the learned, the most rational, the most 14 logical, the most intelligent crowd ever seen on this earth.

15 We must not judge of higher things from this low standpoint 16 of ours. Everything must be judged by its own standard, and the 17 infinite must be judged by the standard of infinity. Religion 18 permeates the whole of man's life, not only the present, but the 19 past, present, and future. It is therefore the eternal relation 20 between the eternal Soul, and the eternal God. Is it logical to 21 measure its value by its action upon five minutes of human life?
22 Certainly not. But these are all negative arguments.

23 Now comes the question: Can religion really do anything? It 24 can.

25 Can religion really bring bread and clothes? It does. It is 26 always doing so, and it does infinitely more than that; it brings to 27 man eternal life. It has made man what he is, and will make of this 28 human animal a God. That is what religion can do. Take off religion 29 from human society, what will remain? Nothing but a forest of 30 brutes. As I have just tried to show you that it is absurd to suppose 31 that sense happiness is the goal of humanity, we find as a 32 conclusion that knowledge is the goal of all life. I have tried to show 33 to you that in these thousands of years of struggle for the search of 34 truth and the benefit of mankind, we have scarcely made the least 35 appreciable advance. But mankind has made gigantic advance in 36 knowledge. The highest utility of this progress lies not in the 37 creature comforts that it brings, but in manufacturing a god out of 38 this animal man. Then, with knowledge, naturally comes bliss.
39 Babies think that the happiness of the senses is the highest thing 40 they can have. Most of you know that there is a keener enjoyment 41 in man in the intellect, than in the senses. No one of you can feel 42 the same pleasure in eating as a dog does. You can mark that.
43 Where does the pleasure come from in man? Not that whole-souled
44 enjoyment of eating that the pig or the dog has. See how the pig 45 eats. It is unconscious of the universe while it is eating; its whole 46 soul is bound up in the food. It may be killed but it does not care 47 when it has food. Think of the intense enjoyment that the pig has!
48 No man has that. Where is it gone? Man has changed it into 49 intellectual enjoyment. The pig cannot enjoy religious lectures. That 50 is one step higher and keener yet than intellectual pleasures, and 51 that is the spiritual plane, spiritual enjoyment of things divine,

1 soaring beyond reason and intellect. To procure that we shall have 2 to lose all these sense-enjoyments. This is the highest utility. Utility 3 is what I enjoy, and what everyone enjoys, and we run for that.

4 We find that man enjoys his intellect much more than an 5 animal enjoys his senses, and we see that man enjoys his spiritual 6 nature even more than his rational nature. So the highest wisdom
7 must be this spiritual knowledge. With this knowledge will come 8 bliss. All these things of this world are but the shadows, the 9 manifestations in the third or fourth degree of the real Knowledge 10 and Bliss.

11 It is this Bliss that comes to you through the love of 12 humanity; the shadow of this spiritual Bliss is this human love, but 13 do not confound it with that human bliss. There is that great error:
14 We are always mistaking the love that we have--this carnal, human 15 love, this attachment for particles, this electrical attraction for 16 human beings in society--for this spiritual Bliss. We are apt to 17 mistake this for that eternal state, which it is not. For want of any 18 other name in English, I would call it Bliss, which is the same as 19 eternal knowledge--and that is our goal. Throughout the world, 20 wherever there has been a religion, and wherever there will be a 21 religion, they have all sprung and will all spring out of one source, 22 called by various names in various countries; and that is what in the 23 Western countries you call "inspiration". What is this inspiration?
24 Inspiration is the only source of religious knowledge. We have seen 25 that religion essentially belongs to the plane beyond the senses. It 26 is "where the eyes cannot go, or the ears, where the mind cannot 27 reach, or what words cannot express". That is the field and goal of 28 religion, and from this comes that which we call inspiration. It 29 naturally follows, therefore, that there must be some way to go 30 beyond the senses. It is perfectly true that our reason cannot go 31 beyond the senses; all reasoning is within the senses, and reason is 32 based upon the facts which the senses reach. But can a man go 33 beyond the senses? Can a man know the unknowable? Upon this 34 the whole question of religion is to be and has been decided. From 35 time immemorial there was that adamant wall, the barrier to the 36 senses; from time immemorial hundreds and thousands of men and 37 woman have dashed themselves against this wall to penetrate
38 beyond.

39 Millions have failed, and millions have succeeded. This is the 40 history of the world. Millions more do not believe that anyone ever 41 succeeded; and these are the sceptics of the present day. Man 42 succeeds in going beyond this wall if he only tries. Man has not only 43 reason, he has not only senses, but there is much in him which is 44 beyond the senses. We shall try to explain it a little. I hope you will 45 feel that it is within you also.

46 I move my hand, and I feel and I know that I am moving my 47 hand. I call it consciousness. I am conscious that I am moving my 48 hand. But my heart is moving. I am not conscious of that; and yet 49 who is moving the heart? It must be the same being. So we see that 50 this being who moves the hands and speaks, that is to say, acts 51 consciously, also acts unconsciously. We find, therefore, that this 52 being can act upon two planes--one, the plane of consciousness, and

1 the other, the plane below that. The impulsions from the plane of 2 unconsciousness are what we call instinct, and when the same 3 impulsions come from the plane of consciousness, we call it reason.
4 But there is a still higher plane, superconsciousness in man. This is 5 apparently the same as unconsciousness, because it is beyond the 6 plane of consciousness, but it is above consciousness and not below 7 it. It is not instinct, it is inspiration. There is proof of it. Think of all 8 these great prophets and sages that the world has produced, and it 9 is well known how there will be times in their lives, moments in 10 their existence, when they will be apparently unconscious of the 11 external world; and all the knowledge that subsequently comes out 12 of them, they claim, was gained during this state of existence. It is 13 said of Socrates that while marching with the army, there was a 14 beautiful sunrise, and that set in motion in his mind a train of 15 thought; he stood there for two days in the sun quite unconscious.
16 It was such moments that gave the Socratic knowledge to the 17 world.

18 So with all the great preachers and prophets, there are 19 moments in their lives when they, as it were, rise from the 20 conscious and go above it. And when they come back to the plane of 21 consciousness, they come radiant with light; they have brought 22 news from the beyond, and they are the inspired seers of the world.

1 But there is a great danger. Any man may say he is inspired;
2 many times they say that. Where is the test? During sleep we are 3 unconscious; a fool goes to sleep; he sleeps soundly for three hours; 4 and when he comes back from that state, he is the same fool if not 5 worse. Jesus of Nazareth goes into his transfiguration, and when he 6 comes out, he has become Jesus the Christ. That is all the 7 difference. One is inspiration, and the other is instinct. The one is a 8 child, and the other is the old experienced man. This inspiration is 9 possible for everyone of us. It is the source of all religions, and will 10 ever be the source of all higher knowledge. Yet there are great 11 dangers in the way. Sometimes fraudulent people try to impose 12 themselves upon mankind. In these days it is becoming all too 13 prevalent. A friend of mine had a very fine picture. Another 14 gentleman who was rather religiously inclined, and a rich man, had 15 his eyes upon this picture; but my friend would not sell it. This 16 other gentleman one day comes and says to my friend, I have an 17 inspiration and I have a message from God. "What is your 18 message?" my friend asked. "The message is that you must deliver 19 that picture to me." My friend was up to his mark; he immediately 20 added, "Exactly so; how beautiful! I had exactly the same 21 inspiration, that I should have to deliver to you the picture. Have 22 you brought your cheque?" "Cheque? What cheque?" "Then", said 23 my friend, "I don't think your inspiration was right. My inspiration 24 was that I must give the picture to the man who brought a cheque 25 for $100,000. You must bring the cheque first." The other man 26 found he was caught, and gave up the inspiration theory. These are 27 the dangers. A man came to me in Boston and said he had visions in 28 which he had been talked to in the Hindu language. I said, "If I can 29 see what he says I will believe it." But he wrote down a lot of 30 nonsense. I tried my best to understand it, but I could not. I told 31 him that so far as my knowledge went, such language never was 32 and never will be in India. They had not become civilised enough to 33 have such a language as that. He thought of course that I was a 34 rogue and sceptic, and went away; and I would not be surprised 35 next to hear that he was in a lunatic asylum. These are the two 36 dangers always in this world--the danger from frauds, and the 37 danger from fools. But that need not deter us, for all great things in 38 this world are fraught with danger. At the same time we must take 39 a little precaution. Sometimes I find persons perfectly wanting in 40 logical analysis of anything. A man comes and says, "I have a 41 message from such and such a god", and asks, "Can you deny it? Is 42 it not possible that there will be such and such a god, and that he 43 will give such a message?" And 90 per cent of fools will swallow it.
44 They think that that is reason enough. But one thing you ought to 45 know, that it is possible for anything to happen--quite possible that 46 the earth may come into contact with the Dog star in the next year 47 and go to pieces. But if I advance this proposition, you have the 48 right to stand up and ask me to prove it to you. What the lawyers
49 call the onus probandi is on the man who made the proposition. It 50 is not your duty to prove that I got my inspiration from a certain 51 god, but mine, because I produced the proposition to you. If I 52 cannot prove it, I should better hold my tongue. Avoid both these 53 dangers, and you can get anywhere you please. Many of us get

1 many messages in our lives, or think we get them, and as long as 2 the message is regarding our own selves, go on doing what you 3 please; but when it is in regard to our contact with and behaviour to 4 others, think a hundred times before you act upon it; and then you 5 will be safe.

6 We find that this inspiration is the only source of religion; yet 7 it has always been fraught with many dangers; and the last and 8 worst of all dangers is excessive claims. Certain men stand up and 9 say they have a communication from God, and they are the 10 mouthpiece of God Almighty, and no one else has the right to have 11 that communication. This, on the face of it, is unreasonable. If there 12 is anything in the universe, it must be universal; there is not one 13 movement here that is not universal, because the whole universe is 14 governed by laws. It is systematic and harmonious all through.
15 Therefore what is anywhere must be everywhere. Each atom in the 16 universe is built on the same plan as the biggest sun and the stars.
17 If one man was ever inspired, it is possible for each and every one 18 of us to be inspired, and that is religion. Avoid all these dangers, 19 illusions and delusions, and fraud and making excessive claims, but 20 come face to face with religious facts, and come into direct contact 21 with the science of religion. Religion does not consist in believing 22 any number of doctrines or dogmas, in going to churches or 23 temples, in reading certain books. Have you seen God? Have you 24 seen the soul? If not, are you struggling for it? It is here and now, 25 and you have not to wait for the future. What is the future but the 26 present illimitable? What is the whole amount of time but one 27 second repeated again and again? Religion is here and now, in this 28 present life.

29 One question more: What is the goal? Nowadays it is 30 asserted that man is progressing infinitely, forward and forward, 31 and there is no goal of perfection to attain to. Ever approaching, 32 never attaining, whatever that may mean, and however wonderful 33 it may be, it is absurd on the face of it. Is there any motion in a 34 straight line? A straight line infinitely projected becomes a circle, it 35 returns back to the starting point. You must end where you begin; 36 and as you began in God, you must go back to God. What remains?
37 Detail work. Through eternity you have to do the detail work.

38 Yet another question: Are we to discover new truths of 39 religion as we go on? Yea and nay. In the first place, we cannot 40 know anything more of religion; it has been all known. In all the 41 religions of the world you will find it claimed that there is a unity
42 within us. Being one with the Divinity, there cannot be any further 43 progress in that sense. Knowledge means finding this unity in 44 variety. I see you as men and women, and this is variety. It becomes 45 scientific knowledge when I group you together and call you human 46 beings. Take the science of chemistry, for instance. Chemists are 47 seeking to resolve all known substances into their original 48 elements, and if possible, to find the one element from which all 49 these are derived. The time may come when they will find the one 50 element. That is the source of all other elements. Reaching that, 51 they can go no further; the science of chemistry will have become 52 perfect. So it is with the science of religion. If we can discover this 1 perfect unity, then there cannot be any further progress.

2 When it was discovered that "I and my Father are one", the 3 last word was said of religion. Then there only remained detail
4 work. In true religion there is no faith or belief in the sense of blind 5 faith. No great preacher ever preached that. That only comes with 6 degeneracy. Fools pretend to be followers of this or that spiritual 7 giant, and although they may be without power, endeavour to teach 8 humanity to believe blindly. Believe what? To believe blindly is to 9 degenerate the human soul. Be an atheist if you want, but do not 10 believe in anything unquestioningly. Why degrade the soul to the 11 level of animals? You not only hurt yourselves thereby, but you 12 injure society, and make danger for those that come after you.
13 Stand up and reason out, having no blind faith. Religion is a 14 question of being and becoming, not of believing. This is religion, 15 and when you have attained to that you have religion. Before that 16 you are no better than the animals. "Do not believe in what you 17 have heard," says the great Buddha, "do not believe in doctrines 18 because they have been handed down to you through generations; 19 do not believe in anything because it is followed blindly by many; do 20 not believe because some old sage makes a statement; do not 21 believe in truths to which you have become attached by habit; do 22 not believe merely on the authority of your teachers and elders.
23 Have deliberation and analyse, and when the result agrees with 24 reason and conduces to the good of one and all, accept it and live 25 up to it."

3 CONCENTRATION
4

5 [This and the following two lectures are reproduced here 6 from the Vedanta and the West with the kind permission of the 7 Vedanta Society of Southern California, by whom is reserved the 8 copyright for America. The lectures were recorded by Ida Ansell 9 under circumstances which she herself relates thus:

10 "Swami Vivekananda's second trip to the West occurred in 11 1899-1900. During the first half of 1900 he worked in and around 12 San Francisco, California. I was a resident of that city, twenty-two 13 years old at the time. . . . I heard him lecture perhaps a score of 14 times from March to May of 1900, and recorded seventeen of his 15 talks. . . .

16 "The lectures were given in San Francisco, Oakland, and 17 Alameda, in churches, in the Alameda and San Francisco Homes of 18 Truth, and in rented halls. . . . Altogether Swamiji gave, besides 19 nearly daily interviews and informal classes, at least thirty or forty 20 major addresses in March, April, and May. . . .

21 "I was long hesitant about transcribing and releasing these 22 lectures because of the imperfectness of my notes. I was just an 23 amateur stenographer, at the time I took them. . . . One would have 24 needed a speed of at least three hundred words per minute to 25 capture all of Swamiji's torrents of eloquence. I possessed less than 26 half the required speed, and at the time I had no idea that the 27 material would have value to anyone but myself. In addition to his 28 fast speaking pace, Swamiji was a superb actor. His stories and 29 imitations absolutely forced one to stop writing, to enjoy watching 30 him. . . . Even though my notes were somewhat fragmentary, I have 31 yielded to the opinion that their contents are precious and must be 32 given for publication.

33 "Swamiji's speaking style was colloquial, fresh, and forceful.
34 No alterations have been made in it; no adjusting or smoothing out 35 of his spontaneous flow for purposes of publication has been done.
36 Where omissions were made because of some obscurity in the 37 meaning, they have been indicated by three dots. Anything inserted 38 for purposes of clarification has been placed in square brackets.
39 With these qualifications, the words are exactly as Swamiji spoke 40 them.

41 "Everything Swamiji said had tremendous power. These 42 lectures have slept in my old stenographer's notebook for more 43 than fifty years. Now as they emerge, one feels that the power is 44 still there."]

45 All knowledge we have, either of the external or internal 46 world, is obtained through only one method--by the concentration of 47 the mind. No knowledge can be had of any science unless we can 48 concentrate our minds upon the subject. The astronomer 49 concentrates his mind through the telescope . . . and so on. If you

1 want to study your own mind, it will be the same process. You will 2 have to concentrate your mind and turn it back upon itself. The 3 difference in this world between mind and mind is simply the fact of 4 concentration. One, more concentrated than the other, gets more
5 knowledge.

6 In the lives of all great men, past and present, we find this 7 tremendous power of concentration. Those are men of genius, you 8 say. The science of Yoga tells us that we are all geniuses if we try 9 hard to be. Some will come into this life better fitted and will do it 10 quicker perhaps. We can all do the same. The same power is in 11 everyone. The subject of the present lecture is how to concentrate 12 the mind in order to study the mind itself.

13 Yogis have laid down certain rules and this night I am going 14 to give you a sketch of some of these rules.

15 Concentration, of course, comes from various sources.
16 Through the senses you can get concentration. Some get it when 17 they hear beautiful music, others when they see beautiful 18 scenery. . . . Some get concentrated by lying upon beds of spikes, 19 sharp iron spikes, others by sitting upon sharp pebbles. These are 20 extraordinary cases [using] most unscientific procedure. Scientific 21 procedure is gradually training the mind.

22 One gets concentrated by holding his arm up. Torture gives 23 him the concentration he wants. But all these are extraordinary.

24 Universal methods have been organised according to 25 different philosophers. Some say the state we want to attain is 26 super-consciousness of the mind--going beyond the limitations the 27 body has made for us. The value of ethics to the Yogi lies in that it 28 makes the mind pure. The purer the mind, the easier it is to control 29 it. The mind takes every thought that rises and works it out. The 30 grosser the mind, the more difficult [it is] to control [it]. The 31 immoral man will never be able to concentrate his mind to study 32 psychology. He may get a little control as he begins, get a little 33 power of hearing . . . and even those powers will go from him. The 34 difficulty is that if you study closely, you see how [the] extraordinary 35 power arrived at was not attained by regular scientific training. The 36 men who, by the power of magic, control serpents will be killed by 37 serpents. . . . The man who attains any extraordinary powers will in 38 the long run succumb to those powers. There are millions [who] 39 receive power through all sorts of ways in India. The vast majority 40 of them die raving lunatics. Quite a number commit suicide, the 41 mind [being] unbalanced.

42 The study must be put on the safe side: scientific, slow, 43 peaceful. The first requisite is to be moral. Such a man wants the 44 gods to come down, and they will come down and manifest 45 themselves to him. That is our psychology and philosophy in 46 essence, [to be] perfectly moral. Just think what that means! No 47 injury, perfect purity, perfect austerity! These are absolutely 48 necessary. Just think, if a man can attain all these in perfection!
49 What more do you want? If he is free from all enmity towards any 50 being, . . . all animals will give up their enmity [in his presence].
51 The Yogis lay down very strict laws . . . so that one cannot pass off

1 for a charitable man without being charitable. . . .

2 If you believe me, I have seen a man who used to live in a
3 hole and there were cobras and frogs living with him. . . .
4 Sometimes he would fast for [days and months] and then come out.
5 He was always silent. One day there came a robber. . . .

6 My old master used to say, "When the lotus of the heart has 7 bloomed, the bees will come by themselves." Men like that are 8 there yet. They need not talk. . . . When the man is perfect from his 9 heart, without a thought of hatred, all animals will give up their 10 hatred [before him]. So with purity. These are necessary for our 11 dealings with our fellow beings. We must love all. . . . We have no 12 business to look at the faults of others: it does no good. We must not 13 even think of them. Our business is with the good. We are not here 14 to deal with faults. Our business is to be good.

15 Here comes Miss So-and-so. She says, "I am going to be a 16 Yogi." She tells the news twenty times, meditates fifty days, then 17 she says, "There is nothing in this religion. I have tried it. There is 18 nothing in it."

19 The very basis [of spiritual life] is not there. The foundation 20 [must be] this perfect morality. That is the great difficulty. . . .

21 In our country there are vegetarian sects. They will take in 22 the early morning pounds of sugar and place it on the ground for 23 ants, and the story is, when one of them was putting sugar on the 24 ground for ants, a man placed his foot upon the ants. The former 25 said, "Wretch, you have killed the animals!" And he gave him such a 26 blow that it killed the man.

27 External purity is very easy and all the world rushes towards 28 [it]. If a certain kind of dress is the kind of morality [to be 29 observed], any fool can do that. When it is grappling with the mind 30 itself, it is hard work.

31 The people who do external, superficial things are so self-32 righteous! I remember, when I was a boy I had a great regard for 33 the character of Jesus Christ. [Then I read about the wedding feast 34 in the Bible.] I closed the book and said, "He ate meat and drank 35 wine! He cannot be a good man."

36 We are always losing sight of the real meaning of things. The 37 little eating and dress! Every fool can see that. Who sees that which 38 is beyond? It is culture of the heart that we want. . . . One mass of 39 people in India we see bathing twenty times a day sometimes, 40 making themselves very pure. And they do not touch anyone. . . .
41 The coarse facts, the external things! [If by bathing one could be 42 pure,] fish are the purest beings.

43 Bathing, and dress, and food regulation--all these have their 44 proper value when they are complementary to the spiritual. . . .
45 That first, and these all help. But without it, no amount of eating 46 grass . . . is any good at all. They are helps if properly understood.
47 But improperly understood, they are derogatory. . . .

48 This is the reason why I am explaining these things: First, 49 because in all religions everything degenerates upon being

1 practised by [the ignorant]. The camphor in the bottle evaporated, 2 and they are fighting over the bottle.

3 Another thing: . . . [Spirituality] evaporates when they say, 4 "This is right, and that is wrong." All quarrels are [with forms and 5 creeds] never in the spirit. The Buddhist offered for years glorious 6 preaching; gradually, this spirituality evaporated. . . . [Similarly with 7 Christianity.] And then began the quarrel whether it is three gods 8 in one or one in three, when nobody wants to go to God Himself and 9 know what He is. We have to go to God Himself to know whether 10 He is three in one or one in three.

11 Now, with this explanation, the posture. Trying to control the 12 mind, a certain posture is necessary. Any posture in which the 13 person can sit easily--that is the posture for that person. As a rule, 14 you will find that the spinal column must be left free. It is not 15 intended to bear the weight of the body. . . . The only thing to 16 remember in the sitting posture: [use] any posture in which the 17 spine is perfectly free of the weight of the body.

18 Next [Pranayama] . . . the breathing exercises. A great deal 19 of stress is laid upon breathing. . . . What I am telling you is not 20 something gleaned from some sect in India. It is universally true.
21 Just as in this country you teach your children certain prayers, [in 22 India] they get the children and give them certain facts etc.

23 Children are not taught any religion in India except one or 24 two prayers. Then they begin to seek for somebody with whom they 25 can get en rapport. They go to different persons and find that "This 26 man is the man for me", and get initiation. If I am married, my wife 27 may possibly get another man teacher and my son will get 28 somebody else, and that is always my secret between me and my 29 teacher. The wife's religion the husband need not know, and he 30 would not dare ask her what her religion is. It is well known that 31 they would never say. It is only known to that person and the 32 teacher. . . . Sometimes you will find that what would be quite 33 ludicrous to one will be just teaching for another. . . . Each is 34 carrying his own burden and is to be helped according to his 35 particular mind. It is the business of every individual, between him, 36 his teacher, and God. But there are certain general methods which 37 all these teachers preach. Breathing [and] meditating are universal.
38 That is the worship in India.

39 On the banks of the Ganga, we will see men, women, and 40 children all [practising] breathing and then meditating. Of course, 41 they have other things to do. They cannot devote much time to this.
42 But those who have taken this as the study of life, they practise 43 various methods. There are eighty-four different Asanas (postures).
44 Those that take it up under some person, they always feel the 45 breath and the movements in all the different parts of the body. . . .

46 Next comes Dharana [concentration]. . . . Dharana is holding 47 the mind in certain spots.

48 The Hindu boy or girl . . . gets initiation. He gets from his 49 Guru a word. This is called the root word. This word is given to the 50 Guru [by his Guru], and he gives it to his disciples. One such word

1 is OM. All these symbols have a great deal of meaning, and they 2 hold it secret, never write it. They must receive it through the ear--
3 not through writing--from the teacher, and then hold it as God
4 himself. Then they meditate on the word. . . .

5 I used to pray like that at one time, all through the rainy 6 season, four months. I used to get up and take a plunge in the river, 7 and with all my wet clothes on repeat [the Mantra] till the sun set.
8 Then I ate something--a little rice or something. Four months in the 9 rainy season!

10 The Indian mind believes that there is nothing in the world 11 that cannot be obtained. If a man wants money in this country, he 12 goes to work and earns money. There, he gets a formula and sits 13 under a tree and believes that money must come. Everything must 14 come by the power of his [thought]. You make money here. It is the 15 same thing. You put forth your whole energy upon money-making.

16 There are some sects called Hatha-Yogis. . . . They say the 17 greatest good is to keep the body from dying. . . . Their whole 18 process is clinging to the body. Twelve years training! And they 19 begin with little children, otherwise it is impossible. . . . One thing 20 [is] very curious about the Hatha-Yogi: When he first becomes a 21 disciple, he goes into the wilderness and lives alone forty days 22 exactly. All they have they learn within those forty days.

23 A man in Calcutta claims to have lived five hundred years.
24 The people all tell me that their grandfathers saw him. . . . He takes 25 a constitutional twenty miles, never walks, he runs. Goes into the 26 water, covers himself [from] top to toe with mud. After that he 27 plunges again into the water, again sticks himself with mud. . . . I do 28 not see any good in that. (Snakes, they say, live two hundred years.) 29 He must be very old, because I have travelled fourteen years in 30 India and wherever I went everybody knew him. He has been 31 travelling all his life. . . . [The Hatha Yogi] will swallow a piece of 32 rubber eighty inches long and take it out again. Four times a day he 33 has to wash every part of his body, internal and external parts. . . .

34 The walls can keep their bodies thousands of years. . . .
35 What of that? I would not want to live so long. "Sufficient unto the 36 day is the evil thereof." One little body, with all its delusions and 37 limitations, is enough.

38 There are other sects. . . . They give you a drop of the elixir 39 of life and you remain young. . . . It will take me months to 40 enumerate [all the sects]. All their activity is on this side [in the 41 material world]. Every day a new sect. . . .

42 The power of all those sects is in the mind. Their idea is to 43 hold the mind. First concentrate it and hold it at a certain place.
44 They generally say, at certain parts of the body along the spinal 45 column or upon the nerve centres. By holding the mind at the nerve 46 centres, [the Yogi] gets power over the body. The body is the great 47 cause of disturbance to his peace, is opposite of his highest ideal, so 48 he wants control: [to] keep the body as servant.

49 Then comes meditation. That is the highest state. . . . When 50 [the mind] is doubtful that is not its great state. Its great state is

1 meditation. It looks upon things and sees things, not identifying 2 itself with anything else. As long as I feel pain, I have identified
3 myself with the body. When I feel joy or pleasure, I have identified 4 myself with the body. But the high state will look with the same 5 pleasure or blissfulness upon pleasure or upon pain. . . . Every 6 meditation is direct superconsciousness. In perfect concentration 7 the soul becomes actually free from the bonds of the gross body 8 and knows itself as it is. Whatever one wants, that comes to him.
9 Power and knowledge are already there. The soul identifies itself 10 with that which is powerless matter and thus weeps. It identifies 11 itself with mortal shapes. . . . But if that free soul wants to exercise 12 any power, it will have it. If it does not, it does not come. He who 13 has known God has become God. There is nothing impossible to 14 such a free soul. No more birth and death for him. He is free for 15 ever.

MEDITATION

(Delivered at the Washington Hall, San Francisco, April 3, 1900)

Meditation has been laid stress upon by all religions. The meditative state of mind is declared by the Yogis to be the highest state in which the mind exists. When the mind is studying the external object, it gets identified with it, loses itself. To use the simile of the old Indian philosopher: the soul of man is like a piece of crystal, but it takes the colour of whatever is near it. Whatever the soul touches . . . it has to take its colour. That is the difficulty. That constitutes the bondage. The colour is so strong, the crystal forgets itself and identifies itself with the colour. Suppose a red flower is near the crystal and the crystal takes the colour and forgets itself, thinks it is red. We have taken the colour of the body and have forgotten what we are. All the difficulties that follow come from that one dead body. All our fears, all worries, anxieties, troubles, mistakes, weakness, evil, are from that one great blunder--that we are bodies. This is the ordinary person. It is the person taking the colour of the flower near to it. We are no more bodies than the crystal is the red flower.

The practice of meditation is pursued. The crystal knows what it is, takes its own colour. It is meditation that brings us nearer to truth than anything else. . . .

In India two persons meet. In English they say, "How do you do?" The Indian greeting is, "Are you upon yourself?" The moment you stand upon something else, you run the risk of being miserable. This is what I mean by meditation--the soul trying to stand upon itself. That state must surely be the healthiest state of the soul, when it is thinking of itself, residing in its own glory. No, all the other methods that we have--by exciting emotions, prayers, and all that--really have that one end in view. In deep emotional excitement the soul tries to stand upon itself. Although the emotion may arise from anything external, there is concentration of mind.

There are three stages in meditation. The first is what is called [Dharana], concentrating the mind upon an object. I try to concentrate my mind upon this glass, excluding every other object from my mind except this glass. But the mind is wavering. . . . When it has become strong and does not waver so much, it is called [Dhyana], meditation. And then there is a still higher state when the differentiation between the glass and myself is lost--[Samadhi or absorption]. The mind and the glass are identical. I do not see any difference. All the senses stop and all powers that have been working through other channels of other senses [are focused in the mind]. Then this glass is under the power of the mind entirely. This is to be realised. It is a tremendous play played by the Yogis. . . . Take for granted, the external object exists. Then that which is really outside of us is not what we see. The glass that I see is not the external object certainly. That external something which is the glass I do not know and will never know.

1 Something produces an impression upon me. Immediately I 2 send the reaction towards that, and the glass is the result of the 3 combination of these two. Action from outside--X. Action from 4 inside--Y. The glass is XY. When you look at X, call it external world-- 5 at Y, internal world. . . . If you try to distinguish which is your mind 6 and which is the world--there is no such distinction. The world is 7 the combination of you and something else. . . .

8 Let us take another example. You are dropping stones upon 9 the smooth surface of a lake. Every stone you drop is followed by a 10 reaction. The stone is covered by the little waves in the lake.
11 Similarly, external things are like the stones dropping into the lake 12 of the mind. So we do not really see the external . . . ; we see the 13 wave only. . . .

14 These waves that rise in the mind have caused many things 15 outside. We are not discussing the [merits of] idealism and realism.
16 We take for granted that things exist outside, but what we see is 17 different from things that exist outside, as we see what exists 18 outside plus ourselves.

19 Suppose I take my contribution out of the glass. What 20 remains? Almost nothing. The glass will disappear. If I take my 21 contribution from the table, what would remain of the table?
22 Certainly not this table, because it was a mixture of the outside plus 23 my contribution. The poor lake has got to throw the wave towards 24 the stone whenever [the stone] is thrown in it. The mind must 25 create the wave towards any sensation. Suppose . . . we can 26 withhold the mind. At once we are masters. We refuse to contribute 27 our share to all these phenomena. . . . If I do not contribute my 28 share, it has got to stop.

29 You are creating this bondage all the time. How? By putting 30 in your share. We are all making our own beds, forging our own 31 chains. . . . When the identifying ceases between this external 32 object and myself, then I will be able to take my contribution off, 33 and this thing will disappear. Then I will say, "Here is the glass", 34 and then take my mind off, and it disappears. . . . If you can take 35 away your share, you can walk upon water. Why should it drown 36 you any more? What of poison? No more difficulties. In every 37 phenomenon in nature you contribute at least half, and nature 38 brings half. If your half is taken off, the thing must stop.

39 . . . To every action there is equal reaction. . . . If a man 40 strikes me and wounds me, it is that man's action and my body's 41 reaction. . . . Suppose I have so much power over the body that I 42 can resist even that automatic action. Can such power be attained?
43 The books say it can. . . . If you stumble on [it], it is a miracle. If you 44 learn it scientifically, it is Yoga.

45 I have seen people healed by the power of mind. There is the 46 miracle worker. We say he prays and the man is healed. Another 47 man says, "Not at all. It is just the power of the mind. The man is 48 scientific. He knows what he is about."

49 The power of meditation gets us everything. If you want to 50 get power over nature, [you can have it through meditation]. It is 1 through the power of meditation all scientific facts are discovered

2 today. They study the subject and forget everything, their own 3 identity and everything, and then the great fact comes like a flash.
4 Some people think that is inspiration. There is no more inspiration 5 than there is expiration; and never was anything got for nothing.

6 The highest so-called inspiration was the work of Jesus. He 7 worked hard for ages in previous births. That was the result of his 8 previous work--hard work. . . . It is all nonsense to talk about 9 inspiration. Had it been, it would have fallen like rain. Inspired 10 people in any line of thought only come among nations who have 11 general education and [culture]. There is no inspiration. . . .
12 Whatever passes for inspiration is the result that comes from 13 causes already in the mind. One day, flash comes the result! Their 14 past work was the [cause].

15 Therein also you see the power of meditation--intensity of 16 thought. These men churn up their own souls. Great truths come to 17 the surface and become manifest. Therefore the practice of 18 meditation is the great scientific method of knowledge. There is no 19 knowledge without the power of meditation. From ignorance, 20 superstition, etc., we can get cured by meditation for the time being 21 and no more. [Suppose] a man has told me that if you drink such a 22 poison you will be killed, and another man comes in the night and 23 says, "Go drink the poison!" and I am not killed, [what happens is 24 this:] my mind cut out from the meditation the identity between the 25 poison and myself just for the time being. In another case of 26 [drinking] the poison, I will be killed.

27 If I know the reason and scientifically raise myself up to that 28 [state of meditation], I can save anyone. That is what the books say; 29 but how far it is correct you must appraise.

30 I am asked, "Why do you Indian people not conquer these 31 things? You claim all the time to be superior to all other people. You 32 practise Yoga and do it quicker than anybody else. You are fitter.
33 Carry it out! If you are a great people, you ought to have a great 34 system. You will have to say good-bye to all the gods. Let them go to 35 sleep as you take up the great philosophers. You are mere babies, 36 as superstitious as the rest of the world. And all your claims are 37 failures. If you have the claims, stand up and be bold, and all the 38 heaven that ever existed is yours. There is the musk deer with 39 fragrance inside, and he does not know where the fragrance [comes 40 from]. Then after days and days he finds it in himself. All these gods 41 and demons are within them. Find out, by the powers of reason, 42 education, and culture that it is all in yourself. No more gods and 43 superstitions. You want to be rational, to be Yogis, really spiritual."

44 [My reply is: With you too] everything is material. What is 45 more material than God sitting on a throne? You look down upon 46 the poor man who is worshipping the image. You are no better. And 47 you, gold worshippers, what are you? The image worshipper 48 worships his god, something that he can see. But you do not even 49 do that. You do not worship the spirit nor something that you can 50 understand. . . . Word worshippers! "God is spirit!" God is spirit 51 and should be worshipped in spirit and faith. Where does the spirit

1 reside? On a tree? On a cloud? What do you mean by God being 2 ours ? You are the spirit. That is the first fundamental belief you
3 must never give up. I am the spiritual being. It is there. All this skill 4 of Yoga and this system of meditation and everything is just to find 5 Him there.

6 Why am I saying all this just now? Until you fix the location, 7 you cannot talk. You fix it up in heaven and all the world over except 8 in the right place. I am spirit, and therefore the spirit of all spirits 9 must be in my soul. Those who think it anywhere else are ignorant.
10 Therefore it is to be sought here in this heaven; all the heaven that 11 ever existed [is within myself]. There are some sages who, knowing 12 this, turn their eyes inward and find the spirit of all spirits in their 13 own spirit. That is the scope of meditation. Find out the truth about 14 God and about your own soul and thus attain to liberation. . . .

15 You are all running after life, and we find that is foolishness.
16 There is something much higher than life even. This life is inferior, 17 material. Why should I live at all? I am something higher than life.
18 Living is always slavery. We always get mixed up. . . . Everything is 19 a continuous chain of slavery.

20 You get something, and no man can teach another. It is 21 through experience [we learn]. . . . That young man cannot be 22 persuaded that there are any difficulties in life. You cannot 23 persuade the old man that life is all smooth. He has had many 24 experiences. That is the difference.

25 By the power of meditation we have got to control, step by 26 step, all these things. We have seen philosophically that all these 27 differentiations--spirit, mind, matter, etc.--[have no real existence]. .
28 . . . Whatever exists is one. There cannot be many. That is what is 29 meant by science and knowledge. Ignorance sees manifold.
30 Knowledge realises one. . . . Reducing the many into one is 31 science. . . . The whole of the universe has been demonstrated into 32 one. That science is called the science of Vedanta. The whole 33 universe is one. The one runs through all this seeming variety. . . .

34 We have all these variations now and we see them--what we 35 call the five elements: solid, liquid, gaseous, luminous, ethereal.
36 After that the state of existence is mental and beyond that spiritual.
37 Not that spirit is one and mind is another, ether another, and so on.
38 It is the one existence appearing in all these variations. To go back, 39 the solid must become liquid. The way [the elements evolved] they 40 must go back. The solids will become liquid, etherised. This is the 41 idea of the macrocosm--and universal. There is the external 42 universe and universal spirit, mind, ether, gas, luminosity, liquid, 43 solid.

44 The same with the mind. I am just exactly the same in the 45 microcosm. I am the spirit; I am mind; I am the ether, solid, liquid, 46 gas. What I want to do is to go back to my spiritual state. It is for 47 the individual to live the life of the universe in one short life. Thus 48 man can be free in this life. He in his own short lifetime shall have 49 the power to live the whole extent of life. . . .

1 We all struggle. . . . If we cannot reach the Absolute, we will 2 get somewhere, and it will be better than we are now.

3 Meditation consists in this practice [of dissolving everything 4 into the ultimate Reality--spirit]. The solid melts into liquid, that into 5 gas, gas into ether, then mind, and mind will melt away. All is spirit.

6 Some of the Yogis claim that this body will become liquid
7 etc. You will be able to do anything with it--make it little, or gas, 8 pass through this wall--they claim.

9 I do not know. I have never seen anybody do it. But it is in 10 the books. We have no reason to disbelieve the books.

11 Possibly, some of us will be able to do it in this life. Like a 12 flash it comes, as the result of our past work. Who knows but some 13 here are old Yogis with just a little to do to finish the whole work.
14 Practice!

15 Meditation, you know, comes by a process of imagination.
16 You go through all these processes of purification of the elements-- 17 making the one melt into the other, that into the next higher, that 18 into mind, that into spirit, and then you are spirit.¹¹

19 Spirit is always free, omnipotent, omniscient. Of course, 20 under God. There cannot be many Gods. These liberated souls are 21 wonderfully powerful, almost omnipotent. [But] none can be as 22 powerful as God. If one [liberated soul] said, "I will make this planet 23 go this way", and another said, "I will make it go that way", [there 24 would be confusion].

25 Don't you make this mistake! When I say in English, "I am 26 God!" it is because I have no better word. In Sanskrit, God means 27 absolute existence, knowledge, and wisdom, infinite self-luminous 28 consciousness. No person. It is impersonal. . . .

29 I am never Rama [never one with Ishvara, the personal 30 aspect of God], but I am [one with Brahman, the impersonal, all-31 pervading existence]. Here is a huge mass of clay. Out of that clay I 32 made a little [mouse] and you made a little [elephant]. Both are 33 clay. Melt both down. They are essentially one. "I and my Father are 34 one." [But the clay mouse can never be one with the clay elephant.]

35 I stop somewhere; I have a little knowledge. You a little 36 more; you stop somewhere. There is one soul which is the greatest 37 of all. This is Ishvara, Lord of Yoga [God as Creator, with 38 attributes]. He is the individual. He is omnipotent. He resides in 39 every heart. There is no body. He does not need a body. All you get 40 by the practice of meditation etc., you can get by meditation upon 41 Ishvara, Lord of Yogis. . . .

42 The same can be attained by meditating upon a great soul;

11 ¹¹ This purification of the elements, known as Bhuta-shuddhi, is part of the ritualistic worship. The worshipper tries to feel that he is dissolving earth, water, fire, air, and ether with their subtle essences, and the sense-organs into mind. Mind, intellect, and sense of individual ego are merged into Mahat, the cosmic ego; Mahat is dissolved into Prakriti, the power of Brahman, and Prakriti merges into Brahman, the ultimate Reality. The Kundalini, the coiled-up power at the base of the spine, in his thoughts is led to the highest centre of consciousness in the brain, where he meditates on his oneness with the supreme Spirit.

1 or upon the harmony of life. These are called objective meditations.
2 So you begin to meditate upon certain external things, objective 3 things, either outside or inside. If you take a long sentence, that is 4 no meditation at all. That is simply trying to get the mind collected 5 by repetition. Meditation means the mind is turned back upon itself.
6 The mind stops all the [thought-waves] and the world stops. Your 7 consciousness expands. Every time you meditate you will keep your 8 growth. . . . Work a little harder, more and more, and meditation 9 comes. You do not feel the body or anything else. When you come 10 out of it after the hour, you have had the most beautiful rest you 11 ever had in your life. That is the only way you ever give rest to your 12 system. Not even the deepest sleep will give you such rest as that.
13 The mind goes on jumping even in deepest sleep. Just those few 14 minutes [in meditation] your brain has almost stopped. Just a little 15 vitality is kept up. You forget the body. You may be cut to pieces and 16 not feel it at all. You feel such pleasure in it. You become so light.
17 This perfect rest we get in meditation.

18 Then, meditation upon different objects. There are 19 meditations upon different centres of the spine. [According to the 20 Yogis, there are two nerves in the spinal column, called Ida and 21 Pingala. They are the main channels through which the afferent and 22 efferent currents travel.] The hollow [canal called Shushumna] runs 23 through the middle of the spinal column. The Yogis claim this cord 24 is closed, but by the power of meditation it has to be opened. The 25 energy has to be sent down to [the base of the spine], and the 26 Kundalini rises. The world will be changed. . . .

27 Thousands of divine beings are standing about you. You do 28 not see them because our world is determined by our senses. We 29 can only see this outside. Let us call it X. We see that X according to 30 our mental state. Let us take the tree standing outside. A thief came 31 and what did he see in the stump? A policeman. The child saw a 32 huge ghost. The young man was waiting for his sweetheart, and 33 what did he see? His sweetheart. But the stump of the tree had not 34 changed. It remained the same. This is God Himself, and with our 35 foolishness we see Him to be man, to be dust, to be dumb, 36 miserable.

37 Those who are similarly constituted will group together 38 naturally and live in the same world. Otherwise stated, you live in 39 the same place. All the heavens and all the hells are right here. For 40 example: [take planes in the form of] big circles cutting each other 41 at certain points. . . . On this plane in one circle we can be in touch 42 with a certain point in another [circle]. If the mind gets to the 43 centre, you begin to be conscious on all planes. In meditation 44 sometimes you touch another plane, and you see other beings, 45 disembodied spirits, and so on. You get there by the power of 46 meditation. This power is changing our senses, you see, refining our 47 senses. If you begin to practise meditation five days, you will feel 48 the pain from within these centres [of consciousness] and hearing 49 [becomes finer]. . . . That is why all the Indian gods have three eyes.
50 That is the psychic eye that opens out and shows you spiritual 51 things.

52 As this power of Kundalini rises from one centre to the other

1 in the spine, it changes the senses and you begin to see this world
2 another. It is heaven. You cannot talk. Then the Kundalini goes 3 down to the lower centres. You are again man until the Kundalini 4 reaches the brain, all the centres have been passed, and the whole 5 vision vanishes and you [perceive] . . . nothing but the one 6 existence. You are God. All heavens you make out of Him, all worlds 7 out of Him. He is the one existence. Nothing else exists.

THE PRACTICE OF RELIGION

(Delivered at Alameda, California, on April 18, 1900)

We read many books, many scriptures. We get various ideas from our childhood, and change them every now and then. We understand what is meant by theoretical religion. We think we understand what is meant by practical religion. Now I am going to present to you my idea of practical religion.

We hear all around us about practical religion, and analysing all that, we find that it can be brought down to one conception--charity to our fellow beings. Is that all of religion? Every day we hear in this country about practical Christianity--that a man has done some good to his fellow beings. Is that all?

What is the goal of life? Is this world the goal of life? Nothing more? Are we to be just what we are, nothing more? Is man to be a machine which runs smoothly without a hitch anywhere? Are all the sufferings he experiences today all he can have, and doesn't he want anything more?

The highest dream of many religions is the world. . . . The vast majority of people are dreaming of the time when there will be no more disease, sickness, poverty, or misery of any kind. They will have a good time all around. Practical religion, therefore, simply means: "Clean the streets! Make it nice!" We see how all enjoy it.

Is enjoyment the goal of life? Were it so, it would be a tremendous mistake to become a man at all. What man can enjoy a meal with more gusto than the dog or the cat? Go to a menagerie and see the [wild animals] tearing the flesh from the bone. Go back and become a bird! . . . What a mistake then to become a man! Vain have been my years--hundreds of years--of struggle only to become the man of sense-enjoyments.

Mark, therefore, the ordinary theory of practical religion, what it leads to. Charity is great, but the moment you say it is all, you run the risk of running into materialism. It is not religion. It is no better than atheism--a little less. . . . You Christians, have you found nothing else in the Bible than working for fellow creatures, building . . . hospitals? . . . Here stands a shopkeeper and says how Jesus would have kept the shop! Jesus would neither have kept a saloon, nor a shop, nor have edited a newspaper. That sort of practical religion is good, not bad; but it is just kindergarten religion. It leads nowhere. . . . If you believe in God, if you are Christians and repeat everyday, "Thy will be done", just think what it means! You say every moment, "Thy will be done", really meaning, "My will be done by Thee, O God." The Infinite is working His own plans out. Even He has made mistakes, and you and I are going to remedy that! The Architect of the universe is going to be taught by the carpenters! He has left the world a dirty hole, and you are going to make it a beautiful place!

What is the goal of it all? Can senses ever be the goal? Can

1 enjoyment of pleasure ever be the goal? Can this life ever be the 2 goal of the soul? If it is, better die this moment; do not want this 3 life! If that is the fate of man, that he is going to be only the 4 perfected machine, it would just mean that we go back to being 5 trees and stones and things like that. Did you ever hear a cow tell a 6 lie or see a tree steal? They are perfect machines. They do not 7 make mistakes. They live in a world where everything is finished. . .
8 .

9 What is the ideal of religion, then, if this cannot be practical 10 [religion]? And it certainly cannot be. What are we here for? We are 11 here for freedom, for knowledge.

12 We want to know in order to make ourselves free. That is our 13 life: one universal cry for freedom. What is the reason the . . . plant 14 grows from the seed, overturning the ground and raising itself up to 15 the skies? What is the offering for the earth from the sun? What is 16 your life? The same struggle for freedom. Nature is trying all 17 around to suppress us, and the soul wants to express itself. The 18 struggle with nature is going on. Many things will be crushed and 19 broken in this struggle for freedom. That is your real misery. Large 20 masses of dust and dirt must be raised on the battlefield. Nature 21 says, "I will conquer." The soul says, "I must be the conqueror."
22 Nature says, "Wait! I will give you a little enjoyment to keep you 23 quiet." The soul enjoys a little, becomes deluded a moment, but the 24 next moment it [cries for freedom again]. Have you marked the 25 eternal cry going on through the ages in every breast? We are 26 deceived by poverty. We become wealthy and are deceived with 27 wealth. We are ignorant. We read and learn and are deceived with 28 knowledge. No man is ever satisfied. That is the cause of misery, 29 but it is also the cause of all blessing. That is the sure sign. How 30 can you be satisfied with this world? . . . If tomorrow this world 31 becomes heaven, we will say, "Take this away. Give us something 32 else."

33 The infinite human soul can never be satisfied but by the 34 Infinite itself. . . . Infinite desire can only be satisfied by infinite 35 knowledge--nothing short of that. Worlds will come and go. What of 36 that? The soul lives and for ever expands. Worlds must come into 37 the soul. Worlds must disappear in the soul like drops in the ocean.
38 And this world to become the goal of the soul! If we have common 39 sense, we cannot be satisfied, though this has been the theme of 40 the poets in all the ages, always telling us to be satisfied. And 41 nobody has been satisfied yet! Millions of prophets have told us, 42 "Be satisfied with your lot"; poets sing. We have told ourselves to be 43 quiet and satisfied, yet we are not. It is the design of the Eternal 44 that there is nothing in this world to satisfy my soul, nothing in the 45 heavens above, and nothing beneath. Before the desire of my soul, 46 the stars and the worlds, upper and lower, the whole universe, is 47 but a hateful disease, nothing but that. That is the meaning.
48 Everything is an evil unless that is the meaning. Every desire is evil 49 unless that is the meaning, unless you understand its true 50 importance, its goal. All nature is crying through all the atoms for 51 one thing--its perfect freedom.

52 What is practical religion, then? To get to that state--

1 freedom, the attainment of freedom. And this world, if it helps us on 2 to that goal, [is] all right; if not--if it begins to bind one more layer
3 on the thousands already there, it becomes an evil. Possessions, 4 learning, beauty, everything else--as long as they help us to that 5 goal, they are of practical value. When they have ceased helping us 6 on to that goal of freedom, they are a positive danger. What is 7 practical religion, then? Utilise the things of this world and the next 8 just for one goal--the attainment of freedom. Every enjoyment, 9 every ounce of pleasure is to be bought by the expenditure of the 10 infinite heart and mind combined.

11 Look at the sum total of good and evil in this world. Has it 12 changed? Ages have passed, and practical religion has worked for 13 ages. The world thought that each time the problem would be 14 solved. It is always the same problem. At best it changes its form. . .
15 . It trades consumption and nerve-disease for twenty thousand 16 shops. . . . It is like old rheumatism: Drive it from one place, it goes 17 to another. A hundred years ago man walked on foot or bought 18 horses. Now he is happy because he rides the railroad; but he is 19 unhappy because he has to work more and earn more. Every 20 machine that saves labour puts more stress upon labour.

21 This universe, nature, or whatever you call it, must be 22 limited; it can never be unlimited. The Absolute, to become nature, 23 must be limited by time, space, and causation. The energy [at our 24 disposal] is limited. You can spend it in one place, losing it in 25 another. The sum total is always the same. Wherever there is a 26 wave in one place, there is a hollow in another. If one nation 27 becomes rich, others become poor. Good balances evil. The person 28 for the moment on top of the wave thinks all is good; the person at 29 the bottom says the world is [all evil]. But the man who stands aside 30 sees the divine play going on. Some weep and others laugh. The 31 latter will weep in their turn and the others laugh. What can we do?
32 We know we cannot do anything. . . .

33 Which of us do anything because we want to do good? How 34 few! They can be counted on the fingers. The rest of us also do 35 good, but because we are forced to do so. . . . We cannot stop.
36 Onward we go, knocked about from place to place. What can we 37 do? The world will be the same world, the earth the same. It will be 38 changed from blue to brown and from brown to blue. One language 39 translated into another, one set of evils changed into another set of 40 evils--that is what is going on. . . . Six of one, half a dozen of the 41 other. The American Indian in the forest cannot attend a lecture on 42 metaphysics as you can, but he can digest his meal. You cut him to 43 pieces, and the next moment he is all right. You and I, if we get 44 scratched, we have to go to the hospital for six months. . . .

45 The lower the organism, the greater is its pleasure in the 46 senses. Think of the lowest animals and the power of touch.
47 Everything is touch. . . . When you come to man, you will see that 48 the lower the civilisation of the man, the greater is the power of the 49 senses. . . . The higher the organism, the lesser is the pleasure of 50 the senses. A dog can eat a meal, but cannot understand the 51 exquisite pleasure of thinking about metaphysics. He is deprived of 52 the wonderful pleasure which you get through the intellect. The 1 pleasures of the senses are great. Greater than those is the 2 pleasure of the intellect. When you attend the fine fifty-course

3 dinner in Paris, that is pleasure indeed. But in the observatory, 4 looking at the stars, seeing . . . worlds coming and developing--think 5 of that! It must be greater, for I know you forget all about eating.
6 That pleasure must be greater than what you get from worldly 7 things. You forget all about wives, children, husbands, and 8 everything; you forget all about the sense-plane. That is intellectual 9 pleasure. It is common sense that it must be greater than sense-10 pleasure. It is always for greater joy that you give up the lesser.
11 This is practical religion--the attainment of freedom, renunciation.
12 Renounce!

13 Renounce the lower so that you may get the higher. What is 14 the foundation of society? Morality, ethics, laws. Renounce.
15 Renounce all temptation to take your neighbour's property, to put 16 hands upon your neighbour, all the pleasure of tyrannising over the 17 weak, all the pleasure of cheating others by telling lies. Is not 18 morality the foundation of society? What is marriage but the 19 renunciation of unchastity? The savage does not marry. Man 20 marries because he renounces. So on and on. Renounce! Renounce!
21 Sacrifice! Give up! Not for zero. Not for nothing. But to get the 22 higher. But who can do this? You cannot, until you have got the 23 higher. You may talk. You may struggle. You may try to do many 24 things. But renunciation comes by itself when you have got the 25 higher. Then the lesser falls away by itself.

26 This is practical religion. What else? Cleaning streets and 27 building hospitals? Their value consists only in this renunciation.
28 And there is no end to renunciation. The difficulty is they try to put 29 a limit to it--thus far and no farther. But there is no limit to this 30 renunciation.

31 Where God is, there is no other. Where the world is, there is 32 no God. These two will never unite. [Like] light and darkness. That 33 is what I have understood from Christianity and the life of the 34 Teacher. Is not that Buddhism? Is not that Hinduism? Is not that 35 Mohammedanism? Is not that the teaching of all the great sages
36 and teachers? What is the world that is to be given up? It is here. I 37 am carrying it all with me. My own body. It is all for this body that I 38 put my hand voluntarily upon my fellow man, just to keep it nice 39 and give it a little pleasure; [all for this body] that I injure others 40 and make mistakes. . . .

41 Great men have died. Weak men have died. Gods have died.
42 Death--death everywhere. This world is a graveyard of the infinite 43 past, yet we cling to this [body]: "I am never going to die". Knowing 44 for sure [that the body must die] and yet clinging to it. There is 45 meaning in that too [because in a sense we do not die]. The mistake 46 is that we cling to the body when it is the spirit that is really 47 immortal.

48 You are all materialists, because you believe that you are the 49 body. If a man give me a hard punch, I would say I am punched. If 50 he strikes me, I would say I am struck. If I am not the body, why 51 should I say so? It makes no difference if I say I am the spirit. I am

1 the body just now. I have converted myself into matter. That is why I 2 am to renounce the body, to go back to what I really am. I am the 3 spirit--the soul no instrument can pierce, no sword can cut asunder, 4 no fire can burn, no air can dry. Unborn and uncreated, without 5 beginning and without end, deathless, birthless and omnipresent-- 6 that is what I am; and all misery comes just because I think this 7 little lump of clay is myself. I am identifying myself with matter and 8 taking all the consequences.

9 Practical religion is identifying myself with my Self.

10 Stop this wrong identification! How far are you advanced in 11 that? You may have built two thousand hospitals, built fifty thousand 12 roads, and yet what of that, if you have not realised that you are the 13 spirit? You die a dog's death, with the same feelings that the dog 14 does. The dog howls and weeps because he knows that he is only 15 matter and he is going to be dissolved.

16 There is death, you know, inevitable death, in water, in air, in 17 the palace, in the prison--death everywhere. What makes you 18 fearless? When you have realised what you are--that infinite spirit, 19 deathless, birthless. Him no fire can burn, no instrument kill, no 20 poison hurt. Not theory, mind you. Not reading books. . . . [Not 21 parroting.] My old Master used to say, "It is all very good to teach 22 the parrot to say, 'Lord, Lord, Lord' all the time; but let the cat 23 come and take hold of its neck, it forgets all about it." [You may] 24 pray all the time, read all the scriptures in the world, and worship 25 all the gods there are, [but] unless you realise the soul there is no 26 freedom. Not talking, theorising, argumentation, but realisation.
27 That I call practical religion.

28 This truth about the soul is first to be heard. If you have 29 heard it, think about it. Once you have done that, meditate upon it.
30 No more vain arguments! Satisfy yourself once that you are the 31 infinite spirit. If that is true, it must be nonsense that you are the 32 body. You are the Self, and that must be realised. Spirit must see 33 itself as spirit. Now the spirit is seeing itself as body. That must 34 stop. The moment you begin to realise that, you are released.

35 You see this glass, and you know it is simply an illusion.
36 Some scientists tell you it is light and vibration. . . . Seeing the 37 spirit must be infinitely more real than that, must be the only true 38 state, the only true sensation, the only true vision. All these [objects 39 you see] are but dreams. You know that now. Not the old idealists 40 alone, but modern physicists also tell you that light is there. A little 41 more vibration makes all the difference. . . .

42 You must see God. The spirit must be realised, and that is 43 practical religion. It is not what Christ preached that you call 44 practical religion: "Blessed are the poor in spirit for theirs is the 45 Kingdom of Heaven." Was it a joke? What is the practical religion 46 you are thinking of? Lord help us! "Blessed are the pure in heart, 47 for they shall see God." That means street-cleaning, hospital-48 building, and all that? Good works, when you do them with a pure 49 mind. Don't give the man twenty dollars and buy all the papers in 50 San Francisco to see your name! Don't you read in your own books 51 how no man will help you? Serve as worship of the Lord Himself in

1 the poor, the miserable, the weak. That done, the result is 2 secondary. That sort of work, done without any thought of gain, 3 benefits the soul. And even of such is the Kingdom of Heaven.

4 The Kingdom of Heaven is within us. He is there. He is the 5 soul of all souls. See Him in your own soul. That is practical 6 religion. That is freedom. Let us ask each other how much we are 7 advanced in that: how much we are worshippers of the body, or real 8 believers in God, the spirit; how much we believe ourselves to be 9 spirit. That is selfless. That is freedom. That is real worship. Realise 10 yourself. That is all there is to do. Know yourself as you are--infinite 11 spirit. That is practical religion. Everything else is impractical, for 12 everything else will vanish. That alone will never vanish. It is 13 eternal. Hospitals will tumble down. Railroad givers will all die.
14 This earth will be blown to pieces, suns wiped out. The soul 15 endureth for ever.

16 Which is higher, running after these things which perish
17 or . . . worshipping that which never changes? Which is more 18 practical, spending all the energies of life in getting things, and 19 before you have got them death comes and you have to leave them 20 all?--like the great [ruler] who conquered all, [who when] death 21 came, said, "Spread out all the jars of things before me." He said, 22 "Bring me that big diamond." And he placed it on his breast and 23 wept. Thus weeping, he died, the same as the dog dies.

24 Man says, "I live." He knows not that it is [the fear of] death 25 that makes him cling slavishly to life. He says, "I enjoy." He never 26 dreams that nature has enslaved him.

27 Nature grinds all of us. Keep count of the ounce of pleasure 28 you get. In the long run, nature did her work through you, and 29 when you die your body will make other plants grow. Yet we think 30 all the time that we are getting pleasure ourselves. Thus the wheel 31 goes round.

32 Therefore to realise the spirit as spirit is practical religion.
33 Everything else is good so far as it leads to this one grand idea.
34 That [realisation] is to be attained by renunciation, by meditation-- 35 renunciation of all the senses, cutting the knots, the chains that 36 bind us down to matter. "I do not want to get material life, do not 37 want the sense-life, but something higher." That is renunciation.
38 Then, by the power of meditation, undo the mischief that has been 39 done.

40 We are at the beck and call of nature. If there is sound 41 outside, I have to hear it. If something is going on, I have to see it.
42 Like monkeys. We are two thousand monkeys concentrated, each 43 one of us. Monkeys are very curious. So we cannot help ourselves, 44 and call this "enjoying". Wonderful this language! We are enjoying 45 the world! We cannot help enjoying it. Nature wants us to do it. A 46 beautiful sound: I am hearing it. As if I could choose to hear it or 47 not! Nature says, "Go down to the depths of misery." I become 48 miserable in a moment. . . . We talk about pleasures [of the senses]
49 and possessions. One man thinks me very learned. Another thinks, 50 "He is a fool." This degradation, this slavery, without knowing 51 anything! In a dark room we are knocking our heads against each

1 other. . . .

2 What is meditation? Meditation is the power which enables 3 us to resist all this. Nature may call us, "Look, there is a beautiful 4 thing!" I do not look. Now she says, "There is a beautiful smell; 5 smell it!" I say to my nose, "Do not smell it", and the nose doesn't.
6 "Eyes, do not see!" Nature does such an awful thing--kills one of my 7 children, and says, "Now, rascal, sit down and weep! Go to the 8 depths!" I say, "I don't have to." I jump up. I must be free. Try it 9 sometimes. . . . [In meditation], for a moment, you can change this 10 nature. Now, if you had that power in yourself, would not that be 11 heaven, freedom? That is the power of meditation.

12 How is it to be attained? In a dozen different ways. Each 13 temperament has its own way. But this is the general principle: get 14 hold of the mind. The mind is like a lake, and every stone that drops 15 into it raises waves. These waves do not let us see what we are. The 16 full moon is reflected in the water of the lake, but the surface is so 17 disturbed that we do not see the reflection clearly. Let it be calm.
18 Do not let nature raise the wave. Keep quiet, and then after a little 19 while she will give you up. Then we know what we are. God is there 20 already, but the mind is so agitated, always running after the 21 senses. You close the senses and [yet] you whirl and whirl about.
22 Just this moment I think I am all right and I will meditate upon God, 23 and then my mind goes to London in one minute. And if I pull it 24 away from there, it goes to New York to think about the things I 25 have done there in the past. These [waves] are to be stopped by the 26 power of meditation.

27 Slowly and gradually we are to train ourselves. It is no joke-- 28 not a question of a day, or years, or maybe of births. Never mind!
29 The pull must go on. Knowingly, voluntarily, the pull must go on.
30 Inch by inch we will gain ground. We will begin to feel and get real 31 possessions, which no one can take away from us--the wealth that 32 no man can take, the wealth that nobody can destroy, the joy that 33 no misery can hurt any more. . . .

34 All these years we have depended upon others. If I have a 35 little pleasure and that person goes away, my pleasure is gone. . . .
36 See the folly of man: he depends for happiness upon men! All 37 separations are misery. Naturally. Depending upon wealth for 38 happiness? There is fluctuation of wealth. Depending upon health 39 or upon anything except the unchangeable spirit must bring misery 40 today or tomorrow.

41 Excepting the infinite spirit, everything else is changing.
42 There is the whirl of change. Permanence is nowhere except in 43 yourself. There is the infinite joy, unchanging. Meditation is the gate 44 that opens that to us. Prayers, ceremonials, and all the other forms 45 of worship are simply kindergartens of meditation. You pray, you 46 offer something. A certain theory existed that everything raised 47 one's spiritual power. The use of certain words, flowers, images, 48 temples, ceremonials like the waving of lights brings the mind to 49 that attitude, but that attitude is always in the human soul, nowhere 50 else. [People] are all doing it; but what they do without knowing it, 51 do knowingly. That is the power of meditation. All knowledge you

1 have--how did it come? From the power of meditation. The soul
2 churned the knowledge out of its own depths. What knowledge was 3 there ever outside of it? In the long run this power of meditation 4 separates ourselves from the body, and then the soul knows itself as 5 it is--the unborn, the deathless, and birthless being. No more is 6 there any misery, no more births upon this earth, no more evolution.
7 [The soul knows itself as having] ever been perfect and free.

3 IS THE SOUL IMMORTAL?

4 "None has power to destroy the unchangeable."

5 ----Bhagavad-Gita.
6

7 In the great Sanskrit epic, the Mahabharata, the story is told 8 how the hero, Yudhishtira, when asked by Dharma to tell what was 9 the most wonderful thing in the world, replied, that it was the 10 persistent belief of mankind in their own deathlessness in spite of 11 their witnessing death everywhere around them almost every 12 moment of their lives. And, in fact, this is the most stupendous 13 wonder in human life. In spite of all arguments to the contrary 14 urged in different times by different schools, in spite of the inability 15 of reason to penetrate the veil of mystery which will ever hang 16 between the sensuous and the supersensuous worlds, man is 17 thoroughly persuaded that he cannot die.

18 We may study all our lives, and in the end fail to bring the 19 problem of life and death to the plane of rational demonstration, 20 affirmative or negative. We may talk or write, preach or teach, for 21 or against the permanency or impermanency of human existence as 22 much as we like; we may become violent partisans of this side or 23 that; we may invent names by the hundred, each more intricate 24 than its predecessor, and lull ourselves into a momentary rest under 25 the delusion of our having solved the problem once for all; we may 26 cling with all our powers to any one of the curious religious 27 superstitions or the far more objectionable scientific superstitions-- 28 but in the end, we find ourselves playing an external game in the 29 bowling alley of reason and raising intellectual pin after pin, only to 30 be knocked over again and again.

31 But behind all this mental strain and torture, not 32 infrequently productive of more dangerous results than mere 33 games, stands a fact unchallenged and unchallengeable--the fact, 34 the wonder, which the Mahabharata points out as the inability of 35 our mind to conceive our own annihilation. Even to imagine my own 36 annihilation I shall have to stand by and look on as a witness.

37 Now, before trying to understand what this curious 38 phenomenon means, we want to note that upon this one fact the 39 whole world stands. The permanence of the external world is 40 inevitably joined to the permanence of the internal; and, however 41 plausible any theory of the universe may seem which asserts the 42 permanence of the one and denies that of the other, the theorist 43 himself will find that in his own mechanism not one conscious 44 action is possible, without the permanence of both the internal and 45 the external worlds being one of the factors in the motive cause.
46 Although it is perfectly true that when the human mind transcends 47 its own limitations, it finds the duality reduced to an indivisible 48 unity, on this side of the unconditioned, the whole objective world-- 49 that is to say, the world we know--is and can be alone known to us 50 as existing for the subject, and therefore, before we would be able

1 to conceive the annihilation of the subject we are bound to conceive 2 the annihilation of the object.

3 So far it is plain enough. But now comes the difficulty. I 4 cannot think of myself ordinarily as anything else but a body. My 5 idea of my own permanence includes my idea of myself as a body.
6 But the body is obviously impermanent, as is the whole of nature--a 7 constantly vanishing quantity.

8 Where, then, is this permanence?

9 There is one more wonderful phenomenon connected with 10 our lives, without which "who will be able to live, who will be able 11 to enjoy life a moment?"--the idea of freedom.

12 This is the idea that guides each footstep of ours, makes our 13 movements possible, determines our relations to each other--nay, is 14 the very warp and woof in the fabric of human life. Intellectual 15 knowledge tries to drive it inch by inch from its territory, post after 16 post is snatched away from its domains, and each step is made fast 17 and iron-bound with the railroadings of cause and effect. But it 18 laughs at all our attempts, and, lo, it keeps itself above all this 19 massive pile of law and causation with which we tried to smother it 20 to death! How can it be otherwise? The limited always requires a 21 higher generalisation of the unlimited to explain itself. The bound 22 can only be explained by the free, the caused by the uncaused. But 23 again, the same difficulty is also here. What is free? The body or 24 even the mind? It is apparent to all that they are as much bound by 25 law as anything else in the universe.

26 Now the problem resolves itself into this dilemma: either the 27 whole universe is a mass of never-ceasing change and nothing 28 more, irrevocably bound by the law of causation, not one particle 29 having a unity of itself, yet is curiously producing an ineradicable 30 delusion of permanence and freedom, or there is in us and in the 31 universe something which is permanent and free, showing that the 32 basal constitutional belief of the human mind is not a delusion. It is 33 the duty of science to explain facts by bringing them to a higher 34 generalisation. Any explanation, therefore, that first wants to 35 destroy a part of the fact given to be explained, in order to fit itself 36 to the remainder, is not scientific, whatever else it may be.

37 So any explanation that wants to overlook the fact of this 38 persistent and all-necessary idea of freedom commits the above-39 mentioned mistake of denying a portion of the fact in order to 40 explain the rest, and is, therefore, wrong. The only other alternative 41 possible, then, is to acknowledge, in harmony with our nature, that 42 there is something in us which is free and permanent.

43 But it is not the body; neither is it the mind. The body is 44 dying every minute. The mind is constantly changing. The body is a 45 combination, and so is the mind, and as such can never reach to a 46 state beyond all change. But beyond this momentary sheathing of 47 gross matter, beyond even the finer covering of the mind is the 48 Atman, the true Self of man, the permanent, the ever free. It is his 49 freedom that is percolating through layers of thought and matter, 50 and, in spite of the colourings of name and form, is ever asserting

1 its unshackled existence. It is his deathlessness, his bliss, his peace, 2 his divinity that shines out and makes itself felt in spite of the 3 thickest layers of ignorance. He is the real man, the fearless one, 4 the deathless one, the free.

5 Now freedom is only possible when no external power can 6 exert any influence, produce any change. Freedom is only possible 7 to the being who is beyond all conditions, all laws, all bondages of 8 cause and effect. In other words, the unchangeable alone can be 9 free and, therefore, immortal. This Being, this Atman, this real Self 10 of man, the free, the unchangeable is beyond all conditions, and as 11 such, it has neither birth nor death.

12 "Without birth or death, eternal, ever-existing is this soul of 13 man."

REINCARNATION

"Both you and I have passed through many births; you know them not, I know them all."

----Bhagavad-Gita

Of the many riddles that have perplexed the intellect of man in all climes and times, the most intricate is himself. Of the myriad mysteries that have called forth his energies to struggle for solution from the very dawn of history, the most mysterious is his own nature. It is at once the most insoluble enigma and the problem of all problems. As the starting-point and the repository of all we know and feel and do, there never has been, nor will be, a time when man's own nature will cease to demand his best and foremost attention.

Though through hunger after that truth, which of all others has the most intimate connection with his very existence, though through an all-absorbing desire for an inward standard by which to measure the outward universe, though through the absolute and inherent necessity of finding a fixed point in a universe of change, man has sometimes clutched at handfuls of dust for gold, and even when urged on by a voice higher than reason or intellect, he has many times failed rightly to interpret the real meaning of the divinity within--still there never was a time since the search began, when some race, or some individuals, did not hold aloft the lamp of truth.

Taking a one-sided, cursory and prejudiced view of the surroundings and the unessential details, sometimes disgusted also with the vagueness of many schools and sects, and often, alas, driven to the opposite extreme by the violent superstitions of organised priestcraft--men have not been wanting, especially among advanced intellects, in either ancient or modern times, who not only gave up the search in despair, but declared it fruitless and useless. Philosophers might fret and sneer, and priests ply their trade even at the point of the sword, but truth comes to those alone who worship at her shrine for her sake only, without fear and without shopkeeping.

Light comes to individuals through the conscious efforts of their intellect; it comes, slowly though, to the whole race through unconscious percolations. The philosophers show the volitional struggles of great minds; history reveals the silent process of permeation through which truth is absorbed by the masses.

Of all the theories that have been held by man about himself, that of a soul entity, separate from the body and immortal, has been the most widespread; and among those that held the belief in such a soul, the majority of the thoughtful had always believed also in its pre-existence.

1 At present the greater portion of the human race, having 2 organised religion, believe in it; and many of the best thinkers in 3 the most favoured lands, though nurtured in religions avowedly 4 hostile to every idea of the pre-existence of the soul, have endorsed 5 it. Hinduism and Buddhism have it for their foundation; the 6 educated classes among the ancient Egyptians believed in it; the 7 ancient Persians arrived at it; the Greek philosophers made it the 8 corner-stone of their philosophy; the Pharisees among the Hebrews 9 accepted it; and the Sufis among the Mohammedans almost 10 universally acknowledged its truth.

11 There must be peculiar surroundings which generate and 12 foster certain forms of belief among nations. It required ages for 13 the ancient races to arrive at any idea about a part, even of the 14 body, surviving after death; it took ages more to come to any 15 rational idea about this something which persists and lives apart 16 from the body. It was only when the idea was reached of an entity 17 whose connection with the body was only for a time, and only 18 among those nations who arrived at such a conclusion, that the 19 unavoidable question arose: Whither? Whence?

20 The ancient Hebrews never disturbed their equanimity by 21 questioning themselves about the soul. With them death ended all.
22 Karl Heckel justly says, "Though it is true that in the Old Testament, 23 preceding the exile, the Hebrews distinguish a life-principle, 24 different from the body, which is sometimes called 'Nephesh', or 25 'Ruakh', or 'Neshama', yet all these words correspond rather to the 26 idea of breath than to that of spirit or soul. Also in the writings of 27 the Palestinian Jews, after the exile, there is never made mention of 28 an individual immortal soul, but always only of a life-breath 29 emanating from God, which, after the body is dissolved, is 30 reabsorbed into the Divine 'Ruakh'."

31 The ancient Egyptians and the Chaldeans had peculiar 32 beliefs of their own about the soul; but their ideas about this living 33 part after death must not be confused with those of the ancient 34 Hindu, the Persian, the Greek, or any other Aryan race. There was, 35 from the earliest times, a broad distinction between the Aryas and 36 the non-Sanskrit speaking Mlechchhas in the conception of the 37 soul. Externally it was typified by their disposal of the dead--the 38 Mlechchhas mostly trying their best to preserve the dead bodies 39 either by careful burial or by the more elaborate processes of 40 mummifying, and the Aryas generally burning their dead.

41 Herein lies the key to a great secret--the fact that no
42 Mlechchha race, whether Egyptian, Assyrian, or Babylonian, ever 43 attained to the idea of the soul as a separate entity which can live 44 independent of the body, without the help of the Aryas, especially 45 of the Hindus.

46 Although Herodotus states that the Egyptians were the first 47 to conceive the idea of the immortality of the soul, and states as a 48 doctrine of the Egyptians "that the soul after the dissolution of the 49 body enters again and again into a creature that comes to life; then, 50 that the soul wanders through all the animals of the land and the 51 sea and through all the birds, and finally after three thousand years

1 returns to a human body," yet, modern researches into Egyptology 2 have hitherto found no trace of metempsychosis in the popular 3 Egyptian religion. On the other hand, the most recent researches of 4 Maspero, A. Erman, and other eminent Egyptologists tend to 5 confirm the supposition that the doctrine of palingenesis was not at 6 home with the Egyptians.

7 With the ancient Egyptians the soul was only a double, 8 having no individuality of its own, and never able to break its 9 connection with the body. It persists only so long as the body lasts; 10 and if by chance the corpse is destroyed, the departed soul must 11 suffer a second death and annihilation. The soul after death was 12 allowed to roam freely all over the world, but always returning at 13 night to where the corpse was, always miserable, always hungry 14 and thirsty, always extremely desirous to enjoy life once more, and 15 never being able to fulfil the desire. If any part of its old body was 16 injured, the soul was also invariably injured in its corresponding 17 part. And this idea explains the solicitude of the ancient Egyptians 18 to preserve their dead. At first the deserts were chosen as the 19 burial-place, because the dryness of the air did not allow the body 20 to perish soon, thus granting to the departed soul a long lease of 21 existence. In course of time one of the gods discovered the process 22 of making mummies, through which the devout hoped to preserve 23 the dead bodies of their ancestors for almost an infinite length of 24 time, thus securing immortality to the departed ghost, however 25 miserable it might be.

26 The perpetual regret for the world, in which the soul can 27 take no further interest, never ceased to torture the deceased. "O, 28 my brother," exclaims the departed, "withhold not thyself from 29 drinking and eating, from drunkenness, from love, from all 30 enjoyment, from following thy desire by night and by day; put not 31 sorrow within thy heart, for, what are the years of man upon earth?
32 The West is a land of sleep and of heavy shadows, a place wherein 33 the inhabitants, when once installed, slumber on in their mummy 34 forms, never more waking to see their brethren; never more to 35 recognise their fathers and mothers, with hearts forgetful of their 36 wives and children. The living water, which earth giveth to all who 37 dwell upon it, is for me stagnant and dead; that water floweth to all 38 who are on earth, while for me it is but liquid putrefaction, this 39 water that is mine. Since I came into this funeral valley I know not 40 where nor what I am. Give me to drink of running water . . . let me 41 be placed by the edge of the water with my face to the North, that 42 the breeze may caress me and my heart be refreshed from its 43 sorrow."

44 Among the Chaldeans also, although they did not speculate 45 so much as the Egyptians as to the condition of the soul after death, 46 the soul is still a double and is bound to its sepulchre. They also 47 could not conceive of a state without this physical body, and 48 expected a resurrection of the corpse again to life; and though the 49 goddess Ishtar, after great perils and adventures, procured the 50 resurrection of her shepherd husband, Dumuzi, the son of Ea and 51 Damkina, "The most pious votaries pleaded in vain from temple to 52 temple, for the resurrection of their dead friends."

1 Thus we find, that the ancient Egyptians or Chaldeans never 2 could entirely dissociate the idea of the soul from the corpse of the 3 departed or the sepulchre. The state of earthly existence was best 4 after all; and the departed are always longing to have a chance 5 once more to renew it; and the living are fervently hoping to help 6 them in prolonging the existence of the miserable double and 7 striving the best they can to help them.

8 This is not the soil out of which any higher knowledge of the 9 soul could spring. In the first place it is grossly materialistic, and 10 even then it is one of terror and agony. Frightened by the almost 11 innumerable powers of evil, and with hopeless, agonised efforts to 12 avoid them, the souls of the living, like their ideas of the souls of the 13 departed--wander all over the world though they might--could never 14 get beyond the sepulchre and the crumbling corpse.

15 We must turn now for the source of the higher ideas of the 16 soul to another race, whose God was an all-merciful, all-pervading 17 Being manifesting Himself through various bright, benign, and 18 helpful Devas, the first of all the human race who addressed their 19 God as Father--"Oh, take me by the hands even as a father takes his 20 dear son"; with whom life was a hope and not a despair; whose 21 religion was not the intermittent groans escaping from the lips of 22 an agonised man during the intervals of a life of mad excitement; 23 but whose ideas come to us redolent with the aroma of the field and 24 forest; whose songs of praise--spontaneous, free, joyful, like the 25 songs which burst forth from the throats of the birds when they hail 26 this beautiful world illuminated by the first rays of the lord of the 27 day--come down to us even now through the vista of eighty 28 centuries as fresh calls from heaven; we turn to the ancient Aryas.

29 "Place me in that deathless, undecaying world where is the 30 light of heaven, and everlasting lustre shines"; "Make me immortal 31 in that realm where dwells the King Vivasvan's son, where is the 32 secret shrine of heaven"; "Make me immortal in that realm where 33 they move even as they list"; "In the third sphere of inmost heaven, 34 where worlds are full of light, make me immortal in that realm of 35 bliss"--These are the prayers of the Aryas in their oldest record, the 36 Rig-Veda Samhita.

37 We find at once a whole world of difference between the 38 Mlechchha and the Aryan ideals. To the one, this body and this 39 world are all that are real, and all that are desirable. A little life-40 fluid which flies off from the body at death, to feel torture and 41 agony at the loss of the enjoyments of the senses, can, they fondly 42 hope, be brought back if the body is carefully preserved; and thus a 43 corpse became more an object of care than the living man. The 44 other found out that, that which left the body was the real man; and 45 when separated from the body, it enjoyed a state of bliss higher 46 than it ever enjoyed when in the body. And they hastened to 47 annihilate the corrupted corpse by burning it.

48 Here we find the germ out of which a true idea of the soul 49 could come. Here it was--where the real man was not the body, but 50 the soul, where all ideas of an inseparable connection between the 51 real man and the body were utterly absent--that a noble idea of the 1 freedom of the soul could rise. And it was when the Aryas 2 penetrated even beyond the shining cloth of the body with which 3 the departed soul was enveloped, and found its real nature of a 4 formless, individual, unit principle, that the question inevitably 5 arose: Whence?

6 It was in India and among the Aryas that the doctrine of the 7 pre-existence, the immortality, and the individuality of the soul first 8 arose. Recent researches in Egypt have failed to show any trace of 9 the doctrines of an independent and individual soul existing before 10 and after the earthly phase of existence. Some of the mysteries 11 were no doubt in possession of this idea, but in those it has been 12 traced to India.

13 "I am convinced", says Karl Heckel, "that the deeper we 14 enter into the study of the Egyptian religion, the clearer it is shown 15 that the doctrine of metempsychosis was entirely foreign to the 16 popular Egyptian religion; and that even that which single 17 mysteries possessed of it was not inherent to the Osiris teachings, 18 but derived from Hindu sources."

19 Later on, we find the Alexandrian Jews imbued with the 20 doctrine of an individual soul, and the Pharisees of the time of 21 Jesus, as already stated, not only had faith in an individual soul, but 22 believed in its wandering through various bodies; and thus it is easy 23 to find how Christ was recognised as an incarnation of an older 24 Prophet, and Jesus himself directly asserted that John the Baptist 25 was the Prophet Elias come back again. "If ye will receive it, this is 26 Elias, which was for to come."--Matt. XI.14.

27 The ideas of a soul and of its individuality among the 28 Hebrews, evidently came through the higher mystical teachings of 29 the Egyptians, who in their turn derived it from India. And that it 30 should come through Alexandria is significant, as the Buddhistic 31 records clearly show Buddhistic missionary activity in Alexandria 32 and Asia Minor.

33 Pythagoras is said to have been the first Greek who taught 34 the doctrine of palingenesis among the Hellenes. As an Aryan race, 35 already burning their dead and believing in the doctrine of an 36 individual soul, it was easy for the Greeks to accept the doctrine of 37 reincarnation through the Pythagorean teachings. According to 38 Apuleius, Pythagoras had come to India, where he had been 39 instructed by the Brahmins.

40 So far we have learnt that wherever the soul was held to be 41 an individual, the real man, and not a vivifying part of the body only, 42 the doctrine of its pre-existence had inevitably come, and that 43 externally those nations that believed in the independent 44 individuality of the soul had almost always signified it by burning 45 the bodies of the departed. Though one of the ancient Aryan races, 46 the Persian, developed at an early period and without any Semitic 47 influence a peculiar method of disposing of the bodies of the dead, 48 the very name by which they call their "Towers of silence", comes 49 from the root Dah, to burn.

50 In short, the races who did not pay much attention to the 1 analysis of their own nature, never went beyond the material body

2 as their all in all, and even when driven by higher light to penetrate 3 beyond, they only came to the conclusion that somehow or other, at 4 some distant period of time, this body will become incorruptible.

5 On the other hand, that race which spent the best part of its 6 energies in the inquiry into the nature of man as a thinking being-- 7 the Indo-Aryan--soon found out that beyond this body, beyond even 8 the shining body which their forefathers longed after, is the real 9 man, the principle, the individual who clothes himself with this 10 body, and then throws it off when worn out. Was such a principle 11 created? If creation means something coming out of nothing, their 12 answer is a decisive "No". This soul is without birth and without 13 death; it is not a compound or combination but an independent 14 individual, and as such it cannot be created or destroyed. It is only 15 travelling through various states.

16 Naturally, the question arises: Where was it all this time?
17 The Hindu philosophers say, "It was passing through different 18 bodies in the physical sense, or, really and metaphysically speaking, 19 passing through different mental planes."

20 Are there any proofs apart from the teachings of the Vedas 21 upon which the doctrine of reincarnation has been founded by the 22 Hindu philosophers? There are, and we hope to show later on that 23 there are grounds as valid for it as for any other universally 24 accepted doctrine. But first we will see what some of the greatest of 25 modern European thinkers have thought about reincarnation.

26 I. H. Fichte, speaking about the immortality of the soul, says:

27 "It is true there is one analogy in nature which might be 28 brought forth in refutation of the continuance. It is the well-known 29 argument that everything that has a beginning in time must also 30 perish at some period of time; hence, that the claimed past 31 existence of the soul necessarily implies its pre-existence. This is a 32 fair conclusion, but instead of being an objection to, it is rather an 33 additional argument for its continuance. Indeed, one needs only to 34 understand the full meaning of the metaphysico-physiological axiom 35 that in reality nothing can be created or annihilated, to recognise 36 that the soul must have existed prior to its becoming visible in a 37 physical body."

38 Schopenhauer, in his book, Die Welt als Wille und
39 Vorstellung, speaking about palingenesis, says:

40 "What sleep is for the individual, death is for the 'will'. It 41 would not endure to continue the same actions and sufferings 42 throughout an eternity without true gain, if memory and 43 individuality remained to it. It flings them off, and this is Lethe, and 44 through this sleep of death it reappears fitted out with another 45 intellect as a new being; a new day tempts to new shores. These 46 constant new births, then, constitute the succession of the life-47 dreams of a will which in itself is indestructible, until instructed and 48 improved by so much and such various successive knowledge in a 49 constantly new form, it abolishes and abrogates itself. . . . It must 50 not be neglected that even empirical grounds support a

1 palingenesis of this kind. As a matter of fact, there does exist a 2 connection between the birth of the newly appearing beings and 3 the death of those that are worn out. It shows itself in the great 4 fruitfulness of the human race which appears as a consequence of 5 devastating diseases. When in the fourteenth century the Black 6 Death had for the most part depopulated the Old World, a quite 7 abnormal fruitfulness appeared among the human race, and twin-8 births were very frequent. The circumstance was also remarkable 9 that none of the children born at this time obtained their full 10 number of teeth; thus nature, exerting itself to the utmost, was 11 niggardly in details. This is related by F. Schnurrer in his Chronik
12 der Seuchen, 1825. Casper, also, in his Ueber die Wahrscheinliche 13 Lebensdauer des Menschen, 1835, confirms the principle that the 14 number of births in a given population has the most decided 15 influence upon the length of life and mortality in it, as this always 16 keeps pace with mortality; so that always and everywhere the 17 deaths and the births increase and decrease in like proportion, 18 which he places beyond doubt by an accumulation of evidence 19 collected from many lands and their various provinces. And yet it is 20 impossible that there can be physical, causal connection between 21 my early death and the fruitfulness of a marriage with which I have 22 nothing to do, or conversely. Thus here the metaphysical appears 23 undeniable, and in a stupendous manner, as the immediate ground 24 of explanation of the physical. Every new-born being comes fresh 25 and blithe into the new existence, and enjoys it as a free gift; but 26 there is and can be nothing freely given. Its fresh existence is paid 27 for by the old age and death of a worn-out existence which has 28 perished, but which contained the indestructible seed out of which 29 the new existence has arisen; they are one being."

30 The great English philosopher Hume, nihilistic though he 31 was, says in the sceptical essay on immortality, "The 32 metempsychosis is therefore the only system of this kind that 33 philosophy can listen to." The philosopher Lessing, with a deep 34 poetical insight, asks, "Is this hypothesis so laughable merely 35 because it is the oldest, because the human understanding, before 36 the sophistries of the schools had dissipated and debilitated it, 37 lighted upon it at once? . . . Why should not I come back as often as 38 I am capable of acquiring fresh knowledge, fresh experience? Do I 39 bring away so much from once that there is nothing to repay the 40 trouble of coming back?"

41 The arguments for and against the doctrine of a pre-existing 42 soul reincarnating through many lives have been many, and some of 43 the greatest thinkers of all ages have taken up the gauntlet to 44 defend it; and so far as we can see, if there is an individual soul, 45 that it existed before seems inevitable. If the soul is not an 46 individual but a combination of "Skandhas" (notions), as the 47 Madhyamikas among the Buddhists insist, still they find pre-48 existence absolutely necessary to explain their position.

49 The argument showing the impossibility of an infinite 50 existence beginning in time is unanswerable, though attempts have 51 been made to ward it off by appealing to the omnipotence of God to 52 do anything, however contrary to reason it may be. We are sorry to 1 find this most fallacious argument proceeding from some of the 2 most thoughtful persons.

3 In the first place, God being the universal and common 4 cause of all phenomena, the question was to find the natural causes 5 of certain phenomena in the human soul, and the Deus ex machina
6 theory is, therefore, quite irrelevant. It amounts to nothing less 7 than confession of ignorance. We can give that answer to every 8 question asked in every branch of human knowledge and stop all 9 inquiry and, therefore, knowledge altogether.

10 Secondly, this constant appeal to the omnipotence of God is 11 only a word-puzzle. The cause, as cause, is and can only be known 12 to us as sufficient for the effect, and nothing more. As such we have 13 no more idea of an infinite effect than of an omnipotent cause.
14 Moreover, all our ideas of God are only limited; even the idea of 15 cause limits our idea of God. Thirdly, even taking the position for 16 granted, we are not bound to allow any such absurd theories as 17 "Something coming out of nothing", or "Infinity beginning in time", 18 so long as we can give a better explanation.

19 A so-called great argument is made against the idea of pre-20 existence by asserting that the majority of mankind are not 21 conscious of it. To prove the validity of this argument, the party who 22 offers it must prove that the whole of the soul of man is bound up in 23 the faculty of memory. If memory be the test of existence, then all 24 that part of our lives which is not now in it must be non-existent, 25 and every person who in a state of coma or otherwise loses his 26 memory must be non-existent also.

27 The premises from which the inference is drawn of a 28 previous existence, and that too on the plane of conscious action, as 29 adduced by the Hindu philosophers, are chiefly these:

30 First, how to explain this world of inequalities? Here is one 31 child born in the province of a just and merciful God, with every 32 circumstance conducing to his becoming a good and useful member 33 of the human race, and perhaps at the same instant and in the same 34 city another child is born under circumstances every one of which is 35 against his becoming good. We see children born to suffer, perhaps 36 all their lives, and that owing to no fault of theirs. Why should it be 37 so? What is the cause? Of whose ignorance is it the result? If not 38 the child's, why should it suffer for its parents' actions?

39 It is much better to confess ignorance than to try to evade 40 the question by the allurements of future enjoyments in proportion 41 to the evil here, or by posing "mysteries". Not only undeserved 42 suffering forced upon us by any agent is immoral--not to say unjust-- 43 but even the future-making-up theory has no legs to stand upon.

44 How many of the miserably born struggle towards a higher 45 life, and how many more succumb to the circumstances they are 46 placed under? Should those who grow worse and more wicked by 47 being forced to be born under evil circumstances be rewarded in 48 the future for the wickedness of their lives? In that case the more 49 wicked the man is here, the better will be his deserts hereafter.

50 There is no other way to vindicate the glory and the liberty

1 of the human soul and reconcile the inequalities and the horrors of 2 this world than by placing the whole burden upon the legitimate 3 cause--our own independent actions or Karma. Not only so, but 4 every theory of the creation of the soul from nothing inevitably 5 leads to fatalism and preordination, and instead of a Merciful 6 Father, places before us a hideous, cruel, and an ever-angry God to 7 worship. And so far as the power of religion for good or evil is 8 concerned, this theory of a created soul, leading to its corollaries of 9 fatalism and predestination, is responsible for the horrible idea 10 prevailing among some Christians and Mohammedans that the 11 heathens are the lawful victims of their swords, and all the horrors 12 that have followed and are following it still.

13 But an argument which the philosophers of the Nyaya school 14 have always advanced in favour of reincarnation, and which to us 15 seems conclusive, is this: Our experiences cannot be annihilated.
16 Our actions (Karma) though apparently disappearing, remain still 17 unperceived (Adrishta), and reappear again in their effect as 18 tendencies (Pravrittis). Even little babies come with certain 19 tendencies--fear of death, for example.

20 Now if a tendency is the result of repeated actions, the 21 tendencies with which we are born must be explained on that 22 ground too. Evidently we could not have got them in this life;
23 therefore we must have to seek for their genesis in the past. Now it 24 is also evident that some of our tendencies are the effects of the 25 self-conscious efforts peculiar to man; and if it is true that we are 26 born with such tendencies, it rigorously follows that their causes 27 were conscious efforts in the past--that is, we must have been on 28 the same mental plane which we call the human plane, before this 29 present life.

30 So far as explaining the tendencies of the present life by 31 past conscious efforts goes, the reincarnationists of India and the 32 latest school of evolutionists are at once; the only difference is that 33 the Hindus, as spiritualists, explain it by the conscious efforts of 34 individual souls, and the materialistic school of evolutionists, by a 35 hereditary physical transmission. The schools which hold to the 36 theory of creation out of nothing are entirely out of court.

37 The issue has to be fought out between the reincarnationists 38 who hold that all experiences are stored up as tendencies in the 39 subject of those experiences, the individual soul, and are 40 transmitted by reincarnation of that unbroken individuality--and the 41 materialists who hold that the brain is the subject of all actions and 42 the theory of the transmission through cells.

1 It is thus that the doctrine of reincarnation assumes an 2 infinite importance to our mind, for the fight between reincarnation 3 and mere cellular transmission is, in reality, the fight between 4 spiritualism and materialism. If cellular transmission is the all-5 sufficient explanation, materialism is inevitable, and there is no 6 necessity for the theory of a soul. If it is not a sufficient explanation, 7 the theory of an individual soul bringing into this life the 8 experiences of the past is as absolutely true. There is no escape 9 from the alternative, reincarnation or materialism. Which shall we 10 accept?

More than a decade has passed since a young German student, one of eight children of a not very well-to-do clergyman, heard on a certain day Professor Lassen lecturing on a language and literature new--very new even at that time--to European scholars, namely, Sanskrit. The lectures were of course free; for even now it is impossible for any one in any European University to make a living by teaching Sanskrit, unless indeed the University backs him.

Lassen was almost the last of that heroic band of German scholars, the pioneers of Sanskrit scholarship in Germany. Heroic certainly they were--what interest except their pure and unselfish love of knowledge could German scholars have had at that time in Indian literature? The veteran Professor was expounding a chapter of Shakuntala; and on that day there was no one present more eagerly and attentively listening to Lassen's exposition than our young student. The subject-matter of the exposition was of course interesting and wonderful, but more wonderful was the strange language, the strange sounds of which, although uttered with all those difficult peculiarities that Sanskrit consonants are subjected to in the mouths of unaccustomed Europeans, had strange fascination for him. He returned to his lodgings, but that night sleep could not make him oblivious of what he had heard. A glimpse of a hitherto unknown land had been given to him, a land far more gorgeous in its colours than any he had yet seen, and having a power of fascination never yet experienced by his young and ardent soul.

Naturally his friends were anxiously looking forward to the ripening of his brilliant parts, and expected that he would soon enter a learned profession which might bring him respect, fame, and, above all, a good salary and a high position. But then there was this Sanskrit! The vast majority of European scholars had not even heard of it then; as for making it pay--I have already said that such a thing is impossible even now. Yet his desire to learn it was strong.

It has unfortunately become hard for us modern Indians to understand how it could be like that; nevertheless, there are to be met with in Varanasi and Nadia and other places even now, some old as well as young persons among our Pandits, and mostly among the Sannyasins, who are mad with this kind of thirst for knowledge for its own sake. Students, not placed in the midst of the luxurious surroundings and materials of the modern Europeanised Hindu, and with a thousand times less facilities for study, poring over manuscripts in the flickering light of an oil lamp, night after night, which alone would have been enough to completely destroy the eyesight of the students of any other nation; travelling on foot hundreds of miles, begging their way all along, in search of a rare manuscript or a noted teacher; and wonderfully concentrating all the energy of their body and mind upon their one object of study,

1 year in and year out, till the hair turns grey and the infirmity of age 2 overtakes them--such students have not, through God's mercy, as 3 yet disappeared altogether from our country. Whatever India now 4 holds as a proud possession, has been undeniably the result of such 5 labour on the part of her worthy sons in days gone by; and the truth 6 of this remark will become at once evident on comparing the depth 7 and solidity as well as the unselfishness and the earnestness of 8 purpose of India's ancient scholarship with the results attained by 9 our modern Indian Universities. Unselfish and genuine zeal for real 10 scholarship and honest earnest thought must again become 11 dominant in the life of our countrymen if they are ever to rise to 12 occupy among nations a rank worthy of their own historic past. It is 13 this kind of desire for knowledge which has made Germany what 14 she is now--one of the foremost, if not the foremost, among the 15 nations of the world.

16 Yes, the desire to learn Sanskrit was strong in the heart of 17 this German student. It was long, uphill work--this learning of 18 Sanskrit; with him too it was the same world-old story of successful 19 scholars and their hard work, their privations and their indomitable 20 energy--and also the same glorious conclusion of a really heroic 21 achievement. He thus achieved success; and now--not only Europe, 22 but all India knows this man, Paul Deussen, who is the Professor of 23 Philosophy in the University of Kiel. I have seen professors of 24 Sanskrit in America and in Europe. Some of them are very 25 sympathetic towards Vedantic thought. I admire their intellectual 26 acumen and their lives of unselfish labour. But Paul Deussen--or as 27 he prefers to be called in Sanskrit, Deva-Sena--and the veteran Max 28 Muller have impressed me as being the truest friends of India and 29 Indian thought. It will always be among the most pleasing episodes 30 in my life--my first visit to this ardent Vedantist at Kiel, his gentle 31 wife who travelled with him in India, and his little daughter, the 32 darling of his heart--and our travelling together through Germany 33 and Holland to London, and the pleasant meetings we had in and 34 about London.

35 The earliest schools of Sanskritists in Europe entered into 36 the study of Sanskrit with more imagination than critical ability.
37 They knew a little, expected much from that little, and often tried to 38 make too much of what little they knew. Then, in those days even, 39 such vagaries as the estimation of Shakuntala as forming the high 40 watermark of Indian philosophy were not altogether unknown!
41 These were naturally followed by a reactionary band of superficial 42 critics, more than real scholars of any kind, who knew little or 43 nothing of Sanskrit, expected nothing from Sanskrit studies, and 44 ridiculed everything from the East. While criticising the unsound 45 imaginativeness of the early school to whom everything in Indian 46 literature was rose and musk, these, in their turn, went into 47 speculations which, to say the least, were equally highly unsound 48 and indeed very venturesome. And their boldness was very 49 naturally helped by the fact that these over-hasty and 50 unsympathetic scholars and critics were addressing an audience 51 whose entire qualification for pronouncing any judgment in the 52 matter was their absolute ignorance of Sanskrit. What a medley of 1 results from such critical scholarship! Suddenly, on one fine 2 morning, the poor Hindu woke up to find that everything that was 3 his was gone; one strange race had snatched away from him his 4 arts, another his architecture, and a third, whatever there was of 5 his ancient sciences; why, even his religion was not his own! Yes-- 6 that too had migrated into India in the wake of a Pehlevi cross of 7 stone! After a feverish period of such treading-on-each-other's-toes

8 of original research, a better state of things has dawned. It has now 9 been found out that mere adventure without some amount of the 10 capital of real and ripe scholarship produces nothing but ridiculous 11 failure even in the business of Oriental research, and that the 12 traditions in India are not to be rejected with supercilious 13 contempt, as there is really more in them than most people ever 14 dream of.

15 There is now happily coming into existence in Europe a new 16 type of Sanskrit scholars, reverential, sympathetic, and learned-- 17 reverential because they are a better stamp of men, and 18 sympathetic because they are learned. And the link which connects 19 the new portion of the chain with the old one is, of course, our Max 20 Muller. We Hindus certainly owe more to him than to any other 21 Sanskrit scholar in the West, and I am simply astonished when I 22 think of the gigantic task which he, in his enthusiasm, undertook as 23 a young man and brought to a successful conclusion in his old age.
24 Think of this man without any help, poring over old manuscripts, 25 hardly legible to the Hindus themselves, and in a language to 26 acquire which takes a lifetime even in India--without even the help 27 of any needy Pandit whose "brains could be picked", as the 28 Americans say, for ten shillings a month, and a mere mention of his 29 name in the introduction to some book of "very new researches"-- 30 think of this man, spending days and sometimes months in 31 elucidating the correct reading and meaning of a word or a 32 sentence in the commentary of Sayana (as he has himself told me), 33 and in the end succeeding in making an easy road through the 34 forest of Vedic literature for all others to go along; think of him and 35 his work, and then say what he really is to us! Of course we need 36 not all agree with him in all that he says in his many writings; 37 certainly such an agreement is impossible. But agreement or no 38 agreement, the fact remains that this one man has done a thousand 39 times more for the preservation, spreading, and appreciation of the 40 literature of our forefathers than any of us can ever hope to do, and 41 he has done it all with a heart which is full of the sweet balm of love 42 and veneration.

43 If Max Muller is thus the old pioneer of the new movement, 44 Deussen is certainly one of its younger advance-guard. Philological 45 interest had hidden long from view the gems of thought and 46 spirituality to be found in the mine of our ancient scriptures. Max 47 Muller brought out a few of them and exhibited them to the public 48 gaze, compelling attention to them by means of his authority as the 49 foremost philologist. Deussen, unhampered by any philological 50 leanings and possessing the training of a philosopher singularly 51 well versed in the speculations of ancient Greece and modern 52 Germany, took up the cue and plunged boldly into the metaphysical

1 depths of the Upanishads, found them to be fully safe and 2 satisfying, and then - equally boldly declared that fact before the 3 whole world. Deussen is certainly the freest among scholars in the 4 expression of his opinion about the Vedanta. He never stops to think 5 about the "What they would say" of the vast majority of scholars.
6 We indeed require bold men in this world to tell us bold words
7 about truth; and nowhere is this more true now than in Europe 8 where, through the fear of social opinion and such other causes, 9 there has been enough in all conscience of the whitewashing and 10 apologising attitude among scholars towards creeds and customs 11 which, in all probability, not many among them really believe in.
12 The greater is the glory, therefore, to Max Muller and to Deussen 13 for their bold and open advocacy of truth! May they be as bold in 14 showing to us our defects, the later corruptions in our thought-15 systems in India, especially in their application to our social needs!
16 Just now we very much require the help of such genuine friends as 17 these to check the growing virulence of the disease, very prevalent 18 in India, of running either to the one extreme of slavish panegyrists 19 who cling to every village superstition as the innermost essence of 20 the Shastras, or to the other extreme of demoniacal denouncers 21 who see no good in us and in our history, and will, if they can, at 22 once dynamite all the social and spiritual organisations of our 23 ancient land of religion and philosophy.

ON PROFESSOR MAX MULLER

Though the ideal of work of our Brahmavadin should always be "{Sanskrit}--To work thou hast the right, but never to the fruits thereof", yet no sincere worker passes out of the field of activity without making himself known and catching at least a few rays of light.

The beginning of our work has been splendid, and the steady earnestness shown by our friends is beyond all praise. Sincerity of conviction and purity of motive will surely gain the day; and even a small minority, armed with these, is surely destined to prevail against all odds.

Keep away from all insincere claimants to supernatural illumination; not that such illumination is impossible, but, my friends, in this world of ours "Lust, or gold, or fame" is the hidden motive behind ninety per cent of all such claims, and of the remaining ten per cent, nine per cent are cases which require the tender care of physicians more than the attention of metaphysicians.

The first great thing to accomplish is to establish a character, to obtain, as we say, the {Sanskrit} (established in Wisdom). This applies equally to individuals and to organised bodies of individuals. Do not fret because the world looks with suspicion at every new attempt, even though it be in the path of spirituality. The poor world, how often has it been cheated! The more the {Sanskrit}, that is, the worldly aspect of life, looks at any growing movement with eyes of suspicion, or, even better still, presents to it a semi-hostile front, so much the better is it for the movement. If there is any truth this movement has to disseminate, any need it is born to supply, soon will condemnation be changed into praise, and contempt converted into love. People in these days are apt to take up religion as a means to some social or political end. Beware of this. Religion is its own end. That religion which is only a means to worldly well-being is not religion, whatever else it may be; and it is sheer blasphemy against God and man to hold that man has no other end than the free and full enjoyment of all the pleasure of his senses.

Truth, purity, and unselfishness--wherever these are present, there is no power below or above the sun to crush the possessor thereof. Equipped with these, one individual is able to face the whole universe in opposition.

Above all, beware of compromises. I do not mean that you are to get into antagonism with anybody, but you have to hold on to your own principles in weal or woe and never adjust them to others' "fads" through the greed of getting supporters. Your Atman is the support of the universe--whose support do you stand in need of? Wait with patience and love and strength; if helpers are not ready

1 now, they will come in time. Why should we be in a hurry? The real 2 working force of all great work is in its almost unperceived 3 beginnings.

4 Whoever could have thought that the life and teachings of a 5 boy born of poor Brahmin parents in a wayside Bengal village 6 would, in a few years, reach such distant lands as our ancestors
7 never even dreamed of? I refer to Bhagavan Ramakrishna. Do you
8 know that Prof. Max Muller has already written an article on Shri 9 Ramakrishna for the Nineteenth Century, and will be very glad to 10 write a larger and fuller account of his life and teachings if 11 sufficient materials are forthcoming? What an extraordinary man is 12 Prof. Max Muller! I paid a visit to him a few days ago. I should say, 13 that I went to pay my respects to him, for whosoever loves Shri 14 Ramakrishna, whatever be his or her sect, or creed, or nationality, 15 my visit to that person I hold as a pilgrimage. "{Sanskrit}--

16 They who are devoted to those who love Me--they are My 17 best devotees." Is that not true?

18 The Professor was first induced to inquire about the power 19 behind, which led to sudden and momentous changes in the life of 20 the late Keshab Chandra Sen, the great Brahmo leader; and since 21 then, he has been an earnest student and admirer of the life and 22 teachings of Shri Ramakrishna. "Ramakrishna is worshipped by 23 thousands today, Professor", I said. "To whom else shall worship be 24 accorded, if not to such", was the answer. The Professor was 25 kindness itself, and asked Mr. Sturdy and myself to lunch with him.
26 He showed us several colleges in Oxford and the Bodleian library.
27 He also accompanied us to the railway station; and all this he did 28 because, as he said, "It is not every day one meets a disciple of 29 Ramakrishna Paramahansa."

30 The visit was really a revelation to me. That nice little house 31 in its setting of a beautiful garden, the silver-headed sage, with a 32 face calm and benign, and forehead smooth as a child's in spite of 33 seventy winters, and every line in that face speaking of a deep-34 seated mine of spirituality somewhere behind; that noble wife, the 35 helpmate of his life through his long and arduous task of exciting 36 interest, overriding opposition and contempt, and at last creating a 37 respect for the thoughts of the sages of ancient India--the trees, the 38 flowers, the calmness, and the clear sky--all these sent me back in 39 imagination to the glorious days of Ancient India, the days of our 40 Brahmarshis and Rajarshis, the days of the great Vanaprasthas, the 41 days of Arundhatis and Vasishthas.

42 It was neither the philologist nor the scholar that I saw, but 43 a soul that is every day realising its oneness with the Brahman, a 44 heart that is every moment expanding to reach oneness with the 45 Universal. Where others lose themselves in the desert of dry 46 details, he has struck the well-spring of life. Indeed his heartbeats 47 have caught the rhythm of the Upanishads "{Sanskrit}--Know the 48 Atman alone, and leave off all other talk."

49 Although a world-moving scholar and philosopher, his 50 learning and philosophy have only led him higher and higher to the 51 realisation of the Spirit, his {Sanskrit} (lower knowledge) has

1 indeed helped him to reach the {Sanskrit} (higher knowledge). This 2 is real learning. {Sanskrit}--"Knowledge gives humility." Of what 3 use is knowledge if it does not show us the way to the Highest?

4 And what love he bears towards India! I wish I had a 5 hundredth part of that love for my own motherland! Endued with an 6 extraordinary, and at the same time intensely active mind, he has 7 lived and moved in the world of Indian thought for fifty years or 8 more, and watched the sharp interchange of light and shade in the 9 interminable forest of Sanskrit literature with deep interest and 10 heartfelt love, till they have all sunk into his very soul and coloured 11 his whole being.

12 Max Muller is a Vedantist of Vedantists. He has, indeed, 13 caught the real soul of the melody of the Vedanta, in the midst of all 14 its settings of harmonies and discords--the one light that lightens 15 the sects and creeds of the world, the Vedanta, the one principle of 16 which all religions are only applications. And what was 17 Ramakrishna Paramahansa? The practical demonstration of this 18 ancient principle, the embodiment of India that is past, and a 19 foreshadowing of the India that is to be, the bearer of spiritual light 20 unto nations. The jeweller alone can understand the worth of 21 jewels; this is an old proverb. Is it a wonder that this Western sage 22 does study and appreciate every new star in the firmament of 23 Indian thought, before even the Indians themselves realise its 24 magnitude?

25 "When are you coming to India? Every heart there would 26 welcome one who has done so much to place the thoughts of their 27 ancestors in the true light", I said. The face of the aged sage 28 brightened up--there was almost a tear in his eyes, a gentle nodding 29 of the head, and slowly the words come out: "I would not return 30 then; you would have to cremate me there." Further questions 31 seemed an unwarrantable intrusion into realms wherein are stored 32 the holy secrets of man's heart. Who knows but that it was what the 33 poet has said--{Sanskrit}

34 --"He remembers with his mind the friendships of former 35 births, firmly rooted in his heart."

36 His life has been a blessing to the world; and may it be 37 many, many years more, before he changes the present plane of his 38 existence!

SKETCH OF THE LIFE OF PAVHARI BABA

To help the suffering world was the gigantic task to which the Buddha gave prominence, brushing aside for the time being almost all other phases of religion; yet he had to spend years in self-searching to realise the great truth of the utter hollowness of clinging to a selfish individuality. A more unselfish and untiring worker is beyond our most sanguine imagination: yet who had harder struggles to realise the meaning of things than he? It holds good in all times that the greater the work, the more must have been the power of realisation behind. Working out the details of an already laid out masterly plan may not require much concentrated thought to back it, but the great impulses are only transformed great concentrations. The theory alone perhaps is sufficient for small exertions, but the push that creates the ripple is very different from the impulsion that raises the wave, and yet the ripple is only the embodiment of a bit of the power that generates the wave.

Facts, naked facts, gaunt and terrible may be; truth, bare truth, though its vibrations may snap every chord of the heart; motive selfless and sincere, though to reach it, limb after limb has to be lopped off--such are to be arrived at, found, and gained, before the mind on the lower plane of activity can raise huge work-waves. The fine accumulates round itself the gross as it rolls on through time and becomes manifest, the unseen crystalises into the seen, the possible becomes the practical, the cause the effect, and thought, muscular work.

The cause, held back by a thousand circumstances, will manifest itself, sooner or later, as the effect; and potent thought, however powerless at present, will have its glorious day on the plane of material activity. Nor is the standard correct which judges of everything by its power to contribute to our sense-enjoyment.

The lower the animal, the more is its enjoyment in the senses, the more it lives in the senses. Civilisation, true civilisation, should mean the power of taking the animal-man out of his sense-life--by giving him visions and tastes of planes much higher--and not external comforts.

Man knows this instinctively. He may not formulate it to himself under all circumstances. He may form very divergent opinions about the life of thought. But it is there, pressing itself to the front in spite of everything, making him pay reverence to the hoodoo-worker, the medicine-man, the magician, the priest, or the professor of science. The growth of man can only be gauged by his power of living in the higher atmosphere where the senses are left behind, the amount of the pure thought-oxygen his lungs can breathe in, and the amount of time he can spend on that height.

As it is, it is an obvious fact that, with the exception of what

1 is taken up by the necessities of life, the man of culture is loth to 2 spend his time on the so-called comforts, and even necessary
3 actions are performed with lessened zeal, as the process moves 4 forward.

5 Even luxuries are arranged according to ideas and ideals, to 6 make them reflect as much of thought-life as possible--and this is 7 Art.

8 "As the one fire coming into the universe is manifesting itself 9 in every form, and yet is more besides"--yes, infinitely more 10 besides! A bit, only a small bit, of infinite thought can be made to 11 descend to the plane of matter to minister to our comfort--the rest 12 will not allow itself to be rudely handled. The superfine always 13 eludes our view and laughs at our attempts to bring it down. In this 14 case Mohammed must go to the mountain, and no "nay". Man must 15 raise himself to that higher plane if he wants to enjoy its beauties, 16 to bathe in its light, to feel his life pulsating in unison with the 17 Cause-Life of the universe.

18 It is knowledge that opens the door to regions of wonder, 19 knowledge that makes a god of an animal: and that knowledge 20 which brings us to That, "knowing which everything else is known" 21 (the heart of all knowledge--whose pulsation brings life to all 22 sciences--the science of religion) is certainly the highest, as it alone 23 can make man live a complete and perfect life in thought. Blessed 24 be the land which has styled it "supreme science"!

25 The principle is seldom found perfectly expressed in the 26 practical, yet the ideal is never lost. On the one hand, it is our duty 27 never to lose sight of the ideal, whether we can approach it with 28 sensible steps, or crawl towards it with imperceptible motion: on 29 the other hand, the truth is, it is always looming in front of us-- 30 though we try our best to cover its light with our hands before our 31 eyes.

32 The life of the practical is in the ideal. It is the ideal that has 33 penetrated the whole of our lives, whether we philosophise, or 34 perform the hard, everyday duties of life. The rays of the ideal, 35 reflected and refracted in various straight or tortuous lines, are 36 pouring in through every aperture and windhole, and consciously or 37 unconsciously, every function has to be performed in its light, every 38 object has to be seen transformed, heightened, or deformed by it. It 39 is the ideal that has made us what we are, and will make us what 40 we are going to be. It is the power of the ideal that has enshrouded 41 us, and is felt in our joys or sorrows, in our great acts or mean 42 doings, in our virtues and vices.

43 If such is the power of the ideal over the practical, the 44 practical is no less potent in forming the ideal. The truth of the 45 ideal is in the practical. The fruition of the ideal has been through 46 the sensing of the practical. That the ideal is there is a proof of the 47 existence of the practical somehow, somewhere. The ideal may be 48 vaster, yet it is the multiplication of little bits of the practical. The 49 ideal mostly is the summed-up, generalised, practical units.

50 The power of the ideal is in the practical. Its work on us is in

1 and through the practical. Through the practical, the ideal is 2 brought down to our sense-perception, changed into a form fit for 3 our assimilation. Of the practical we make the steps to rise to the 4 ideal. On that we build our hopes; it gives us courage to work.

5 One man who manifests the ideal in his life is more powerful 6 than legions whose words can paint it in the most beautiful colours 7 and spin out the finest principles.

8 Systems of philosophy mean nothing to mankind, or at best 9 only intellectual gymnastics, unless they are joined to religion and 10 can get a body of men struggling to bring them down to practical 11 life with more or less success. Even systems having not one positive 12 hope, when taken up by groups and made somewhat practical, had 13 always a multitude; and the most elaborate positive systems of 14 thought withered away without it.

15 Most of us cannot keep our activities on a par with our 16 thought-lives. Some blessed ones can. Most of us seem to lose the 17 power of work as we think deeper, and the power of deep thought if 18 we work more. That is why most great thinkers have to leave to 19 time the practical realisation of their great ideals. Their thoughts 20 must wait for more active brains to work them out and spread 21 them. Yet, as we write, comes before us a vision of him, the 22 charioteer of Arjuna, standing in his chariot between the 23 contending hosts, his left hand curbing the fiery steeds--a mail-clad 24 warrior, whose eagle-glance sweeps over the vast army, and as if by 25 instinct weighs every detail of the battle array of both parties--at 26 the same time that we hear, as it were, falling from his lips and 27 thrilling the awe-struck Arjuna, that most marvellous secret of 28 work: "He who finds rest in the midst of activity, and activity in rest, 29 he is the wise amidst men, he the Yogi, he is the doer of all work" 30 (Gita, IV. 18).

31 This is the ideal complete. But few ever reach it. We must 32 take things as they are, therefore, and be contented to piece 33 together different aspects of human perfection, developed in 34 different individuals.

35 In religion we have the man of intense thought, of great 36 activity in bringing help to others, the man of boldness and daring 37 self-realisation, and the man of meekness and humility.

38 The subject of this sketch was a man of wonderful humility 39 and intense self-realisation.

40 Born of Brahmin parents in a village near Guzi, Varanasi, 41 Pavhari Baba, as he was called in after life, came to study and live 42 with his uncle in Ghazipur, when a mere boy. At present, Hindu 43 ascetics are split up into the main divisions of Sannyasins, Yogis, 44 Vairagis, and Panthis. The Sannyasins are the followers of 45 Advaitism after Shankaracharya; the Yogis, though following the 46 Advaita system, are specialists in practising the different systems of 47 Yoga; the Vairagis are the dualistic disciples of Ramanujacharya 48 and others; the Panthis, professing either philosophy, are orders 49 founded during the Mohammedan rule. The uncle of Pavhari Baba
50 belonged to the Ramanuja or Shri sect, and was a Naishthika

1 Brahmacharin, i.e. one who takes the vow of lifelong celibacy. He 2 had a piece of land on the banks of the Ganga, about two miles to 3 the north of Ghazipur, and had established himself there. Having 4 several nephews, he took Pavhari Baba into his home and adopted 5 him, intending him to succeed to his property and position.

6 Not much is known of the life of Pavhari Baba at this period.
7 Neither does there seem to have been any indication of those 8 peculiarities which made him so well known in after years. He is 9 remembered merely as a diligent student of Vyakarana and Nyaya, 10 and the theology of his sect, and as an active lively boy whose jollity 11 at times found vent in hard practical jokes at the expense of his 12 fellow-students.

13 Thus the future saint passed his young days, going through 14 the routine duties of Indian students of the old school; and except 15 that he showed more than ordinary application to his studies, and a 16 remarkable aptitude for learning languages, there was scarcely 17 anything in that open, cheerful, playful student life to foreshadow 18 the tremendous seriousness which was to culminate in a most 19 curious and awful sacrifice.

20 Then something happened which made the young scholar 21 feel, perhaps for the first time, the serious import of life, and made 22 him raise his eyes, so long riveted on books, to scan his mental 23 horizon critically and crave for something in religion which was a 24 fact, and not mere booklore. His uncle passed away. One face on 25 which all the love of that young heart was concentrated had gone, 26 and the ardent boy, struck to the core with grief, determined to 27 supply the gap with a vision that can never change.

28 In India, for everything, we want a Guru. Books, we Hindus 29 are persuaded, are only outlines. The living secrets must be handed 30 down from Guru to disciple, in every art, in every science, much 31 more so in religion. From time immemorial earnest souls in India 32 have always retired to secluded spots, to carry on uninterrupted 33 their study of the mysteries of the inner life, and even today there is 34 scarcely a forest, a hill, or a sacred spot which rumour does not 35 consecrate as the abode of a great sage. The saying is well known:

36 "The water is pure that flows.

37 The monk is pure that goes."

38 As a rule, those who take to the celibate religious life in 39 India spend a good deal of their life in journeying through various 40 countries of the Indian continent, visiting different shrines--thus 41 keeping themselves from rust, as it were, and at the same time 42 bringing religion to the door of everyone. A visit to the four great 43 sacred places, situated in the four corners of India, is considered 44 almost necessary to all who renounce the world.

45 All these considerations may have had weight with our 46 young Brahmacharin, but we are sure that the chief among them 47 was the thirst for knowledge. Of his travels we know but little, 48 except that, from his knowledge of Dravidian languages, in which a 49 good deal of the literature of his sect is written, and his thorough 50 acquaintance with the old Bengali of the Vaishnavas of Shri

1 Chaitanya's order, we infer that his stay in Southern India and 2 Bengal could not have been very short.

3 But on his visit to one place, the friends of his youth lay 4 great stress. It was on the top of mount Girnar in Kathiawar, they 5 say, that he was first initiated into the mysteries of practical Yoga.

6 It was this mountain which was so holy to the Buddhists. At 7 its foot is the huge rock on which is inscribed the first-deciphered 8 edict of the "divinest of monarchs", Asoka. Beneath it, through 9 centuries of oblivion, lay the conclave of gigantic Stupas, forest 10 covered, and long taken for hillocks of the Girnar range. No less 11 sacred is it still held by the sect of which Buddhism is now thought 12 to be a revised edition, and which strangely enough did not venture 13 into the field of architectural triumphs till its world-conquering 14 descendant had melted away into modern Hinduism. Girnar is 15 celebrated amongst Hindus as having been sanctified by the stay of 16 the great Avadhuta Guru Dattatreya, and rumour has it that great 17 and perfected Yogis are still to be met with by the fortunate on its 18 top.

19 The next turning-point in the career of our youthful 20 Brahmacharin we trace to the banks of the Ganga somewhere near 21 Varanasi, as the disciple of a Sannyasin who practised Yoga and 22 lived in a hole dug in the high bank of the river. To this Yogi can be 23 traced the after-practice of our saint, of living inside a deep tunnel, 24 dug out of the ground on the bank of the Ganga near Ghazipur.
25 Yogis have always inculcated the advisability of living in caves or 26 other spots where the temperature is even, and where sounds do 27 not disturb the mind. We also learn he was about the same time 28 studying the Advaita system under a Sannyasin in Varanasi.

29 After years of travel, study, and discipline, the young 30 Brahmacharin came back to the place where he had been brought 31 up. Perhaps his uncle, if alive, would have found in the face of the 32 boy the same light which of yore a greater sage saw in that of his 33 disciple and exclaimed, "Child, thy face today shines with the glory 34 of Brahman!" But those that welcomed him to his home were only 35 the companions of his boyhood--most of them gone into, and 36 claimed for ever by, the world of small thought and eternal toil.

37 Yet there was a change, a mysterious--to them an awe-38 inspiring--change, in the whole character and demeanour of that 39 school-day friend and playmate whom they had been wont to 40 understand. But it did not arouse in them emulation, or the same 41 research. It was the mystery of a man who had gone beyond this 42 world of trouble and materialism, and this was enough. They 43 instinctively respected it and asked no questions.

44 Meanwhile, the peculiarities of the saint began to grow more 45 and more pronounced. He had a cave dug in the ground, like his 46 friend near Varanasi, and began to go into it and remain there for 47 hours. Then began a process of the most awful dietary discipline.
48 The whole day he worked in his little Ashrama, conducted the 49 worship of his beloved Ramachandra, cooked good dinners--in 50 which art he is said to have been extraordinarily proficient-- 51 distributed the whole of the offered food amongst his friends and

1 the poor, looked after their comforts till night came, and when they 2 were in their beds, the young man stole out, crossed the Ganga by 3 swimming, and reached the other shore. There he would spend the 4 whole night in the midst of his practices and prayers, come back 5 before daybreak and wake up his friends, and then begin once more 6 the routine business of "worshipping others", as we say in India.

7 His own diet, in the meanwhile, was being attenuated every 8 day, till it came down, we are told, to a handful of bitter Nimba 9 leaves, or a few pods of red pepper, daily. Then he gave up going 10 nightly to the woods on the other bank of the river and took more 11 and more to his cave. For days and months, we are told, he would 12 be in the hole, absorbed in meditation, and then come out. Nobody 13 knows what he subsisted on during these long intervals, so the 14 people called him Pav-ahari (or air-eater) Baba (or father).

15 He would never during his life leave this place. Once, 16 however, he was so long inside the cave that people gave him up as 17 dead, but after a long time, the Baba emerged and gave a Bhandara 18 (feast) to a large number of Sadhus.

19 When not absorbed in his meditations, he would be living in 20 a room above the mouth of his cave, and during this time he would 21 receive visitors. His fame began to spread, and to Rai Gagan 22 Chandra Bahadur of the Opium Department, Ghazipur--a gentleman 23 whose innate nobility and spirituality have endeared him to all--we 24 owe our introduction to the saint.

25 Like many others in India, there was no striking or stirring 26 external activity in this life. It was one more example of that Indian 27 ideal of teaching through life and not through words, and that truth 28 bears fruit in those lives only which have become ready to receive.
29 Persons of this type are entirely averse to preaching what they 30 know, for they are for ever convinced that it is internal discipline 31 alone that leads to truth, and not words. Religion to them is no 32 motive to social conduct, but an intense search after and realisation 33 of truth in this life. They deny the greater potentiality of one 34 moment over another, and every moment in eternity being equal to 35 every other, they insist on seeing the truths of religion face to face 36 now and here, not waiting for death.

37 The present writer had occasion to ask the saint the reason 38 of his not coming out of his cave to help the world. At first, with his 39 native humility and humour, he gave the following strong reply:

40 "A certain wicked person was caught in some criminal act 41 and had his nose cut off as a punishment. Ashamed to show his 42 noseless features to the world and disgusted with himself, he fled 43 into a forest; and there, spreading a tiger-skin on the ground, he 44 would feign deep meditation whenever he thought anybody was 45 about. This conduct, instead of keeping people off, drew them in 46 crowds to pay their respects to this wonderful saint; and he found 47 that his forest-life had brought him once again an easy living. Thus 48 years went by. At last the people around became very eager to 49 listen to some instruction from the lips of the silent meditative 50 saint; and one young man was specially anxious to be initiated into 51 the order. It came to such a pass that any more delay in that line

1 would undermine the reputation of the saint. So one day he broke 2 his silence and asked the enthusiastic young man to bring on the 3 morrow a sharp razor with him. The young man, glad at the 4 prospect of the great desire of his life being speedily fulfilled, came 5 early the next morning with the razor. The noseless saint led him to 6 a very retired spot in the forest, took the razor in his hand, opened 7 it, and with one stroke cut off his nose, repeating in a solemn voice, 8 `Young man, this has been my initiation into the order. The same I 9 give to you. Do you transmit it diligently to others when the 10 opportunity comes!' The young man could not divulge the secret of 11 this wonderful initiation for shame, and carried out to the best of 12 his ability the injunctions of his master. Thus a whole sect of nose-13 cut saints spread over the country. Do you want me to be the 14 founder of another such?"

15 Later on, in a more serious mood, another query brought the 16 answer: "Do you think that physical help is the only help possible?
17 Is it not possible that one mind can help other minds even without 18 the activity of the body?"

19 When asked on another occasion why he, a great Yogi, 20 should perform Karma, such as pouring oblations into the sacrificial 21 fire, and worshipping the image of Shri Raghunathji, which are 22 practices only meant for beginners, the reply came: "Why do you 23 take for granted that everybody makes Karma for his own good?
24 Cannot one perform Karma for others?"

25 Then again, everyone has heard of the thief who had come to 26 steal from his Ashrama, and who at the sight of the saint got 27 frightened and ran away, leaving the goods he had stolen in a 28 bundle behind; how the saint took the bundle up, ran after the thief, 29 and came up to him after miles of hard running; how the saint laid 30 the bundle at the feet of the thief, and with folded hands and tears 31 in his eyes asked his pardon for his own intrusion, and begged hard 32 for his acceptance of the goods, since they belonged to him, and not 33 to himself.

34 We are also told, on reliable authority, how once he was 35 bitten by a cobra; and though he was given up for hours as dead, he 36 revived; and when his friends asked him about it, he only replied 37 that the cobra "was a messenger from the Beloved".

38 And well may we believe this, knowing as we do the extreme 39 gentleness, humility, and love of his nature. All sorts of physical 40 illness were to him only "messengers from the Beloved", and he 41 could not even bear to hear them called by any other name, even 42 while he himself suffered tortures from them. This silent love and 43 gentleness had conveyed themselves to the people around, and 44 those who have travelled through the surrounding villages can 45 testify to the unspoken influence of this wonderful man. Of late, he 46 did not show himself to anyone. When out of his underground 47 retiring-place, he would speak to people with a closed door 48 between. His presence above ground was always indicated by the 49 rising smoke of oblations in the sacrificial fire, or the noise of 50 getting things ready for worship.

51 One of his great peculiarities was his entire absorption at 1 the time in the task in hand, however trivial. The same amount of 2 care and attention was bestowed in cleaning a copper pot as in the 3 worship of Shri Raghunathji, he himself being the best example of 4 the secret he once told us of work: "The means should be loved and 5 cared for as if it were the end itself."

6 Neither was his humility kindred to that which means pain 7 and anguish or self-abasement. It sprang naturally from the 8 realisation of that which he once so beautifully explained to us, "O 9 King, the Lord is the wealth of those who have nothing--yes, of 10 those", he continued, "who have thrown away all desires of 11 possession, even that of one's own soul." He would never directly 12 teach, as that would be assuming the role of a teacher and placing 13 himself in a higher position than another. But once the spring was 14 touched, the fountain welled up with infinite wisdom; yet always the 15 replies were indirect.

16 In appearance he was tall and rather fleshy, had but one eye, 17 and looked much younger than his real age. His voice was the 18 sweetest we have ever heard. For the last ten years or more of his 19 life, he had withdrawn himself entirely from the gaze of mankind. A 20 few potatoes and a little butter were placed behind the door of his 21 room, and sometimes during the night this was taken in when he 22 was not in Samadhi and was living above ground. When inside his 23 cave, he did not require even these. Thus, this silent life went on, 24 witnessing to the science of Yoga, and a living example of purity, 25 humility, and love.

26 The smoke, which, as we have said already, indicated his 27 coming out of Samadhi, one day smelled of burning flesh. The 28 people around could not guess what was happening; but when the 29 smell became overpowering, and the smoke was seen to rise up in 30 volumes, they broke open the door, and found that the great Yogi 31 had offered himself as the last oblation to his sacrificial fire, and 32 very soon a heap of ashes was all that remained of his body.

33 Let us remember the words of Kalidasa: "Fools blame the 34 actions of the great, because they are extraordinary and their 35 reasons past the finding-out of ordinary mortals."

36 Yet, knowing him as we do, we can only venture to suggest 37 that the saint saw that his last moments had come, and not wishing 38 to cause trouble to any, even after death, performed this last 39 sacrifice of an Arya, in full possession of body and mind.

40 The present writer owes a deep debt of gratitude to the 41 departed saint and dedicates these lines, however unworthy, to the 42 memory of one of the greatest Masters he has loved and served.

3 ARYANS AND TAMILIANS
4

5 A veritable ethnological museum! Possibly, the half-ape 6 skeleton of the recently discovered Sumatra link will be found on 7 search here, too. The Dolmens are not wanting. Flint implements 8 can be dug out almost anywhere. The lake-dwellers--at least the 9 river-dwellers--must have been abundant at one time. The cave-men 10 and leaf-wearers still persist. The primitive hunters living in forests 11 are in evidence in various parts of the country. Then there are the 12 more historical varieties--the Negrito-Kolarian, the Dravidian, and 13 the Aryan. To these have been added from time to time dashes of 14 nearly all the known races, and a great many yet unknown--various 15 breeds of Mongoloids, Mongols, Tartars, and the so-called Aryans of 16 the philologists. Well, here are the Persian, the Greek, the Yunchi, 17 the Hun, the Chin, the Scythian, and many more, melted and fused, 18 the Jews, Parsees, Arabs, Mongols, down to the descendants of the 19 Vikings and the lords of the German forests, yet undigested--an 20 ocean of humanity, composed of these race-waves seething, boiling, 21 struggling, constantly changing form, rising to the surface, and 22 spreading, and swallowing little ones, again subsiding--this is the 23 history of India.

24 In the midst of this madness of nature, one of the contending 25 factions discovered a method and, through the force of its superior 26 culture, succeeded in bringing the largest number of Indian 27 humanity under its sway.

28 The superior race styled themselves the Aryas or nobles, and 29 their method was the Varnashramachara--the so-called caste.

30 Of course the men of the Aryan race reserved for 31 themselves, consciously or unconsciously a good many privileges; 32 yet the institution of caste has always been very flexible, sometimes 33 too flexible to ensure a healthy uprise of the races very low in the 34 scale of culture.

35 It put, theoretically at least, the whole of India under the 36 guidance--not of wealth, nor of the sword--but of intellect--intellect 37 chastened and controlled by spirituality. The leading caste in India 38 is the highest of the Aryans--the Brahmins.

39 Though apparently different from the social methods of 40 other nations, on close inspection, the Aryan method of caste will 41 not be found so very different except on two points:

42 The first is, in every other country the highest honour
43 belongs to the Kshatriya--the man of the sword. The Pope of Rome 44 will be glad to trace his descent to some robber baron on the banks 45 of the Rhine. In India, the highest honour belongs to the man of 46 peace--the Sharman, the Brahmin, the man of God.

47 The greatest Indian king would be gratified to trace his 48 descent to some ancient sage who lived in the forest, probably a 49 recluse, possessing nothing, dependent upon the villagers for his

1 daily necessities, and all his life trying to solve the problems of this 2 life and the life hereafter.

3 The second point is, the difference of unit. The law of caste 4 in every other country takes the individual man or woman as the 5 sufficient unit. Wealth, power, intellect, or beauty suffices for the 6 individual to leave the status of birth and scramble up to anywhere 7 he can.

8 Here, the unit is all the members of a caste community.

9 Here, too, one has every chance of rising from a low caste to 10 a higher or the highest: only, in this birth-land of altruism, one is 11 compelled to take his whole caste along with him.

12 In India, you cannot, on account of your wealth, power, or 13 any other merit, leave your fellows behind and make common cause 14 with your superiors; you cannot deprive those who helped in your 15 acquiring the excellence of any benefit therefrom and give them in 16 return only contempt. If you want to rise to a higher caste in India, 17 you have to elevate all your caste first, and then there is nothing in 18 your onward path to hold you back.

19 This is the Indian method of fusion, and this has been going 20 on from time immemorial. For in India, more than elsewhere, such 21 words as Aryans and Dravidians are only of philological import, the 22 so-called craniological differentiation finding no solid ground to 23 work upon.

24 Even so are the names Brahmin, Kshatriya, etc. They simply 25 represent the status of a community in itself continuously 26 fluctuating, even when it has reached the summit and all further 27 endeavours are towards fixity of the type by non-marriage, by being 28 forced to admit fresh groups, from lower castes or foreign lands, 29 within its pale.

30 Whatever caste has the power of the sword, becomes 31 Kshatriya; whatever learning, Brahmin; whatever wealth, Vaishya.

32 The groups that have already reached the coveted goal, 33 indeed, try to keep themselves aloof from the newcomers, by 34 making sub-divisions in the same caste, but the fact remains that 35 they coalesce in the long run. This is going on before our own eyes, 36 all over India.

37 Naturally, a group having raised itself would try to preserve 38 the privileges to itself. Hence, whenever it was possible to get the 39 help of a king, the higher castes, especially the Brahmins, have 40 tried to put down similar aspirations in lower castes, by the sword if 41 practicable. But the question is: Did they succeed? Look closely into 42 your Puranas and Upa-puranas, look especially into the local 43 Khandas of the big Puranas, look round and see what is happening 44 before your eyes, and you will find the answer.

45 We are, in spite of our various castes, and in spite of the 46 modern custom of marriage restricted within the sub-divisions of a 47 caste (though this is not universal), a mixed race in every sense of 48 the word.

49 Whatever may be the import of the philological terms

1 "Aryan" and "Tamilian", even taking for granted that both these 2 grand sub-divisions of Indian humanity came from outside the 3 Western frontier, the dividing line had been, from the most ancient 4 times, one of language and not of blood. Not one of the epithets
5 expressive of contempt for the ugly physical features of the Dasyus 6 of the Vedas would apply to the great Tamilian race; in fact if there 7 be a toss for good looks between the Aryans and Tamilians, no 8 sensible man would dare prognosticate the result.

9 The super-arrogated excellence of birth of any caste in India
10 is only pure myth, and in no part of India has it, we are sorry to say, 11 found such congenial soil, owing to linguistic differences, as in the 12 South.

13 We purposely refrain from going into the details of this 14 social tyranny in the South, just as we have stopped ourselves from 15 scrutinising the genesis of the various modern Brahmins and other 16 castes. Sufficient for us to note the extreme tension of feeling that 17 is evident between the Brahmins and non-Brahmins of the Madras 18 Presidency.

19 We believe in Indian caste as one of the greatest social 20 institutions that the Lord gave to man. We also believe that though 21 the unavoidable defects, foreign persecutions, and, above all, the 22 monumental ignorance and pride of many Brahmins who do not 23 deserve the name, have thwarted, in many ways, the legitimate 24 fructification of this most glorious Indian institution, it has already 25 worked wonders for the land of Bharata and is destined to lead 26 Indian humanity to its goal.

27 We earnestly entreat the Brahmins of the South not to forget 28 the ideal of India--the production of a universe of Brahmins, pure as 29 purity, good as God Himself; this was at the beginning, says the 30 Mahabharata, and so will it be in the end.

31 Then anyone who claims to be a Brahmins should prove his 32 pretensions, first by manifesting that spirituality, and next by 33 raising others to the same status. On the face of this, it seems that 34 most of them are only nursing a false pride of birth; and any 35 schemer, native or foreign, who can pander to this vanity and 36 inherent laziness by fulsome sophistry, appears to satisfy most.

37 Beware, Brahmins, this is the sign of death! Arise and show 38 your manhood, your Brahminhood, by raising the non-Brahmins
39 around you--not in the spirit of a master--not with the rotten canker 40 of egotism crawling with superstitions and the charlatanry of East 41 and West--but in the spirit of a servant. For verily he who knows 42 how to serve knows how to rule.

43 The non-Brahmins also have been spending their energy in 44 kindling the fire of caste hatred--vain and useless to solve the 45 problem--to which every non-Hindu is only too glad to throw on a 46 load of fuel.

47 Not a step forward can be made by these inter-caste 48 quarrels, not one difficulty removed; only the beneficent onward 49 march of events would be thrown back, possibly for centuries, if the 50 fire bursts out into flames.

1 It would be a repetition of Buddhistic political blunders.

2 In the midst of this ignorant clamour and hatred, we are 3 delighted to find Pandit D. Savariroyan pursuing the only legitimate 4 and the only sensible course. Instead of wasting precious vitality in 5 foolish and meaningless quarrels, Pandit Savariroyan has 6 undertaken in his articles on the "Admixture of the Aryan with 7 Tamilian" in the Siddhanta Deepika, to clear away not only a lot of 8 haze, created by a too adventurous Western philology, but to pave 9 the way to a better understanding of the caste problem in the 10 South.

11 Nobody ever got anything by begging. We get only what we 12 deserve. The first step to deserve is to desire; and we desire with 13 success what we feel ourselves worthy to get.

14 A gentle yet clear brushing off of the cobwebs of the so-15 called Aryan theory and all its vicious corollaries is therefore 16 absolutely necessary, especially for the South, and a proper self-17 respect created by a knowledge of the past grandeur of one of the 18 great ancestors of the Aryan race--the great Tamilians.

19 We stick, in spite of Western theories, to that definition of 20 the word "Arya" which we find in our sacred books, and which 21 includes only the multitude we now call Hindus. This Aryan race, 22 itself a mixture of two great races, Sanskrit-speaking and Tamil-23 speaking, applies to all Hindus alike. That the Shudras have in 24 some Smritis been excluded from this epithet means nothing, for 25 the Shudras were and still are only the waiting Aryas--Aryas in 26 novitiate.

27 Though we know Pandit Savariroyan is walking over rather 28 insecure ground, though we differ from many of his sweeping 29 explanations of Vedic names and races, yet we are glad that he has 30 undertaken the task of beginning a proper investigation into the 31 culture of the great mother of Indian civilisation--if the Sanskrit-32 speaking race was the father.

33 We are glad also that he boldly pushes forward the Accado-
34 Sumerian racial identity of the ancient Tamilians. And this makes us 35 proud of the blood of the great civilisation which flowered before all 36 others--compared to whose antiquity the Aryans and Semites are 37 babies.

38 We would suggest, also, that the land of Punt of the 39 Egyptians was not only Malabar, but that the Egyptians as a race 40 bodily migrated from Malabar across the ocean and entered the 41 delta along the course of the Nile from north to south, to which 42 Punt they have been always fondly looking back as the home of the 43 blessed.

44 This is a move in the right direction. Detailed and more
45 careful work is sure to follow with a better study of the Tamilian 46 tongues and the Tamilian elements found in the Sanskrit literature, 47 philosophy, and religion. And who are more competent to do this 48 work than those who learn the Tamilian idioms as their mother-49 tongue?

1 As for us Vedantins and Sannyasins, we are proud of our 2 Sanskrit-speaking ancestors of the Vedas; proud of our Tamil-3 speaking ancestors whose civilisation is the oldest yet known; we 4 are proud of our Kolarian ancestors older than either of the above-- 5 who lived and hunted in forests; we are proud of our ancestors with 6 flint implements--the first of the human race; and if evolution is 7 true, we are proud of our animal ancestors, for they antedated man 8 himself. We are proud that we are descendants of the whole 9 universe, sentient or insentient. Proud that we are born, and work, 10 and suffer--prouder still that we die when the task is finished and 11 enter for ever the realm where there is no more delusion.

3 THE SOCIAL CONFERENCE ADDRESS
4

5 "God created the native, God created the European, but 6 somebody else created the mixed breed"--we heard a horribly 7 blasphemous Englishman say.

8 Before us lies the inaugural address of Mr. Justice Ranade, 9 voicing the reformatory zeal of the Indian Social Conference. In it 10 there is a huge array of instances of inter-caste marriages of yore, a 11 good deal about the liberal spirit of the ancient Kshatriyas, good 12 sober advice to students, all expressed with an earnestness of good-13 will and gentleness of language that is truly admirable.

14 The last part, however, which offers advice as to the creation 15 of a body of teachers for the new movement strong in the Punjab, 16 which we take for granted is the Arya Samaj, founded by a 17 Sannyasin, leaves us wondering and asking ourselves the question:

18 It seems God created the Brahmin, God created the 19 Kshatriya, but who created the Sannyasin?

20 There have been and are Sannyasins or monks in every 21 known religion. There are Hindu monks, Buddhist monks, Christian 22 monks, and even Islam had to yield its rigorous denial and take in 23 whole orders of mendicant monks.

24 There are the wholly shaved, the partly shaved, the long 25 hair, short hair, matted hair, and various other hirsute types.

26 There are the sky-clad, the rag-clad, the ochre-clad, the 27 yellow-clad (monks), the black-clad Christian, and the blue-clad 28 Mussulman. Then there have been those that tortured their flesh in 29 various ways, and others who believed in keeping their bodies well 30 and healthy. There was also, in old days in every country, the monk 31 militant. The same spirit and similar manifestations have run in 32 parallel lines with women, too--the nuns. Mr. Ranade is not only the 33 President of the Indian Social Conference but a chivalrous 34 gentleman also: the nuns of the Shrutis and Smritis seem to have 35 been to his entire satisfaction. The ancient celibate Brahmadakinis, 36 who travelled from court to court challenging great philosophers, 37 do not seem to him to thwart the central plan of the Creator--the 38 propagation of the species; nor did they seem to have lacked in the 39 variety and completeness of human experience, in Mr. Ranade's 40 opinion, as the stronger sex following the same line of conduct 41 seem to have done.

42 We therefore dismiss the ancient nuns and their modern 43 spiritual descendants as having passed muster.

44 The arch-offender, man alone, has to bear the brunt of Mr.
45 Ranade's criticism, and let us see whether he survives it or not.

46 It seems to be the consensus of opinion amongst savants 47 that this world-wide monastic institution had its first inception in 48 this curious land of ours, which appears to stand so much in need of 1 "social reform".

2 The married teacher and the celibate are both as old as the 3 Vedas. Whether the Soma-sipping married Rishi with his "all-4 rounded" experience was the first in order of appearance, or the 5 lack-human-experience celibate Rishi was the primeval form, is 6 hard to decide just now. Possibly Mr. Ranade will solve the problem 7 for us independently of the hearsay of the so-called Western 8 Sanskrit scholars; till then the question stands a riddle like the hen 9 and egg problem of yore.

10 But whatever be the order of genesis, the celibate teachers
11 of the Shrutis and Smritis stand on an entirely different platform 12 from the married ones, which is perfect chastity, Brahmacharya.

13 If the performance of Yajnas is the corner-stone of the work-14 portion of the Vedas, as surely is Brahmacharya the foundation of 15 the knowledge-portion.

16 Why could not the blood-shedding sacrificers be the 17 exponents of the Upanishads--why?

18 On the one side was the married Rishi, with his meaningless, 19 bizarre, nay, terrible ceremonials, his misty sense of ethics, to say 20 the least; on the other hand, the celibate monks tapping, in spite of 21 their want of human experience, springs of spirituality and ethics at 22 which the monastic Jinas, the Buddhas, down to Shankara, 23 Ramanuja, Kabir, and Chaitanya, drank deep and acquired energy 24 to propagate their marvellous spiritual and social reforms, and 25 which, reflected third-hand, fourth-hand from the West, is giving 26 our social reformers the power even to criticise the Sannyasins.

27 At the present day, what support, what pay, do the 28 mendicants receive in India, compared to the pay and privilege of 29 our social reformers? And what work does the social reformer do, 30 compared to the Sannyasin's silent selfless labour of love?

31 But they have not learnt the modern method of self-32 advertisement!!

33 The Hindu drank in with his mother's milk that this life is as 34 nothing--a dream! In this he is at one with the Westerners; but the 35 Westerner sees no further and his conclusion is that of the 36 Charvaka--to "make hay while the sun shines". "This world being a 37 miserable hole, let us enjoy to the utmost what morsels of pleasure 38 are left to us." To the Hindu, on the other hand, God and soul are 39 the only realities, infinitely more real than this world, and he is 40 therefore ever ready to let this go for the other.

41 So long as this attitude of the national mind continues, and 42 we pray it will continue for ever, what hope is there in our 43 anglicised compatriots to check the impulse in Indian men and 44 women to renounce all "for the good of the universe and for one's 45 own freedom"?

46 And that rotten corpse of an argument against the monk-- 47 used first by the Protestants in Europe, borrowed by the Bengali 48 reformers, and now embraced by our Bombay brethren--the monk 49 on account of his celibacy must lack the realisation of life "in all its 1 fullness and in all its varied experiences!" We hope this time the 2 corpse will go for good into the Arabian Sea, especially in these 3 days of plague, and notwithstanding the filial love one may suppose 4 the foremost clan of Brahmins there may have for ancestors of 5 great perfume, if the Pauranika accounts are of any value in tracing 6 their ancestry.

7 By the bye, In Europe, between the monks and nuns, they 8 have brought up and educated most of the children, whose parents, 9 though married people, were utterly unwilling to taste of the 10 "varied experiences of life".

11 Then, of course, every faculty has been given to us by God 12 for some use. Therefore the monk is wrong in not propagating the 13 race--a sinner! Well, so also have been given us the faculties of 14 anger, lust, cruelty, theft, robbery, cheating, etc., every one of these 15 being absolutely necessary for the maintenance of social life, 16 reformed or unreformed. What about these? Ought they also to be 17 maintained at full steam, following the varied-experience-theory or 18 not? Of course the social reformers, being in intimate acquaintance 19 with God Almighty and His purposes, must answer the query in the 20 positive. Are we to follow Vishvamisra, Atri, and others in their 21 ferocity and the Vasishtha family in particular in their "full and 22 varied experience" with womankind? For the majority of married 23 Rishis are as celebrated for their liberality in begetting children 24 wherever and whenever they could, as for their hymn-singing and 25 Soma-bibbing; or are we to follow the celibate Rishis who upheld 26 Brahmacharya as the sine qua non of spirituality?

27 Then there are the usual backsliders, who ought to come in 28 for a load of abuse--monks who could not keep up to their idea-- 29 weak, wicked.

30 But if the ideal is straight and sound, a backsliding monk is 31 head and shoulders above any householder in the land, on the 32 principle, "It is better to have loved and lost."

33 Compared to the coward that never made the attempt, he is 34 a hero.

35 If the searchlight of scrutiny were turned on the inner 36 workings of our social reform conclave, angels would have to take 37 note of the percentage of backsliders as between the monk and the 38 householder; and the recording angel is in our own heart.

39 But then, what about this marvellous experience of standing 40 alone, discarding all help, breasting the storms of life, of working 41 without any sense of recompense, without any sense of putrid duty?
42 Working a whole life, joyful, free--not goaded on to work like slaves 43 by false human love or ambition?

44 This the monk alone can have. What about religion? Has it to 45 remain or vanish? If it remains, it requires its experts, its soldiers.
46 The monk is the religious expert, having made religion his one 47 metier of life. He is the soldier of God. What religion dies so long 48 as it has a band of devoted monks?

1 Why are Protestant England and America shaking before the 2 onrush of the Catholic monk?
3 Vive Ranade and the Social Reformers!--but, O India!
4 Anglicised India! Do not forget, child, that there are in this society 5 problems that neither you nor your Western Guru can yet grasp the 6 meaning of--much less solve!

3 INDIA'S MESSAGE TO THE WORLD
4

5 The following notes were discovered among Swami
6 Vivekananda's papers. He intended to write a book and jotted down 7 forty-two points as a syllabus for the work, but only a few points 8 were dealt with as an introduction by him and the work was left 9 unfinished. We give the manuscript as found.

10
11 Syllabus
12

13 1. Bold has been my message to the people of the West.
14 Bolder to those at home.

15 2. Four years of residence in the marvellous West has made 16 India only the better understood. The shades are deeper and the 17 lights brighter.

18 3. The survey--it is not true that the Indians have 19 degenerated.

20 4. The problem here has been as it has been everywhere 21 else--the assimilation of various races, but nowhere has it been so 22 vast as here.

23 5. Community of language, government and, above all, 24 religion has been the power of fusion.

25 6. In other lands this has been attempted by "force", that is, 26 the enforcement of the culture of one race only over the rest. The 27 result being the production of a short-lived vigorous national life; 28 then, dissolution.

29 7. In India, on the other hand, the attempts have been as 30 gentle as the problem vast, and from the earliest times, the 31 customs, and especially the religions, of the different elements 32 tolerated.

33 8. Where it was a small problem and force was sufficient to 34 form a unity, the effect really was the nipping in the bud of various 35 healthy types in the germ of all the elements except the dominant 36 one. It was only one set of brains using the vast majority for its own 37 good, thus losing the major portion of the possible amount of 38 development; and thus when the dominant type had spent itself, the 39 apparently impregnable building tottered to its ruins, e.g., Greece, 40 Rome, the Norman.

41 9. A common language would be a great desideratum; but 42 the same criticism applies to it, the destruction of the vitality of the 43 various existing ones.

44 10. The only solution to be reached was the finding of a great 45 sacred language of which all the others would be considered as 46 manifestations, and that was found in the Sanskrit.

1 11.The Dravidian languages may or may not have been 2 originally Sanskritic, but for practical purposes they are so now, 3 and every day we see them approaching the ideal more and more,
4 yet keeping their distinctive vital peculiarities.

5 12.A racial background was found--the Aryas.

6 13.The speculation whether there was a distinct, separate 7 race called the Aryas living in Central Asia to the Baltic.

8 14.The so-called types. Races were always mixed.

9 15.The "blonde" and the "brunette".

10 16.Coming to practical common sense from so-called 11 historical imagination. The Aryas in their oldest records were in the 12 land between Turkistan and the Punjab and N.W. Tibet.

13 17.This leads to the attempt at fusion between races and 14 tribes of various degrees of culture.

15 18.Just as Sanskrit has been the linguistic solution, so the 16 Arya the racial solution. So the Brahminhood is the solution of the 17 varying degrees of progress and culture as well as that of all social 18 and political problems.

19 19.The great ideal of India--Brahminhood.

20 20.Property-less, selfless, subject to no laws, no king except 21 the moral.

22 21.Brahminhood by descent--various races have claimed and 23 acquired the right in the past as well as in the present.

24 22.No claim is made by the doer of great deeds, only by lazy 25 worthless fools.

26 23.Degradation of Brahminhood and Kshatriyahood. The 27 Puranas said there will be only non-Brahmins in the Kali Yuga, and 28 that is true, becoming truer every day. Yet a few Brahmins remain, 29 and in India alone.

30 24.Kshatriyahood--we must pass through that to become a 31 Brahmin. Some may have passed through in the past, but the 32 present must show that.

33 25.But the disclosure of the whole plan is to be found in 34 religion.

35 26.The different tribes of the same race worship similar 36 gods, under a generic name as the Baals of the Babylonians, the 37 Molochs of the Hebrews.

38 27.The attempt in Babylonia of making all the Baals merge 39 in Baal-Merodach--the attempt of the Israelites to merge all the 40 Molochs in the Moloch Yavah or Yahu.

41 28.The Babylonians destroyed by the Persians; and the 42 Hebrews who took the Babylonian mythology and adapted it to 43 their own needs, succeeded in producing a strict monotheistic
44 religion.

45 29.Monotheism like absolute monarchy is quick in executing 46 orders, and a great centralisation of force, but it grows no farther,

1 and its worst feature is its cruelty and persecution. All nations
2 coming within its influence perish very soon after a flaring up of a 3 few years.

4 30.In India the same problem presented itself--the solution
5 found--{Sanskrit}.

6 This is the keynote to everything which has succeeded, and 7 the keystone of the arch.

8 31.The result is that wonderful toleration of the Vedantist.

9 32.The great problem therefore is to harmonise and unify 10 without destroying the individuality of these various elements.

11 33.No form of religion which depends upon persons, either 12 of this earth or even of heaven, is able to do that.

13 34.Here is the glory of the Advaita system preaching a 14 principle, not a person, yet allowing persons, both human and 15 divine, to have their full play.

16 35.This has been going on all the time; in this sense we have 17 been always progressing. The Prophets during the Mohammedan 18 rule.

19 36.It was fully conscious and vigorous in old days, and less 20 so of late; in this sense alone we have degenerated.

21 37.This is going to be in the future. If the manifestation of 22 the power of one tribe utilising the labours of the rest produced 23 wonderful results at least for a certain length of time, here is going 24 to be the accumulation and the concentration of all the races that 25 have been slowly and inevitably getting mixed up in blood and 26 ideas, and in my mind's eye, I see the future giant slowly maturing.
27 The future of India, the youngest and the most glorious of the 28 nations of earth as well as the oldest.

29 38.The way--we will have to work. Social customs as 30 barriers, some as founded upon the Smritis. But none from the 31 Shrutis. The Smritis must change with time. This is the admitted 32 law.

33 39.The principles of the Vedanta not only should be 34 preached everywhere in India, but also outside. Our thought must 35 enter into the make-up of the minds of every nation, not through 36 writings, but through persons.

37 40.Gift is the only Karma in Kali Yuga. None attaining 38 knowledge until purified by Karma.

39 41.Gift of spiritual and secular knowledge.

40 42. Renunciation--Renouncers--the national call.

41 42 INTRODUCTION

43
44 Bold has been my message to the people of the West, bolder 45 is my message to you, my beloved countrymen. The message of 46 ancient India to new Western nations I have tried my best to voice--

1 ill done or well done the future is sure to show; but the mighty voice 2 of the same future is already sending forward soft but distinct 3 murmurs, gaining strength as the days go by, the message of India 4 that is to be to India as she is at present.

5 Many wonderful institutions and customs, and many 6 wonderful manifestations of strength and power it has been my 7 good fortune to study in the midst of the various races I have seen, 8 but the most wonderful of all was to find that beneath all these 9 apparent variations of manners and customs, of culture and power, 10 beats the same mighty human heart under the impulsion of the 11 same joys and sorrows, of the same weakness and strength.

12 Good and evil are everywhere and the balance is wondrously 13 even; but, above all, is the glorious soul of man everywhere which 14 never fails to understand any one who knows how to speak its own 15 language. Men and women are to be found in every race whose 16 lives are blessings to humanity, verifying the words of the divine 17 Emperor Asoka: "In every land dwell Brahmins and Shramanas."

18 I am grateful to the lands of the West for the many warm 19 hearts that received me with all the love that pure and disinterested 20 souls alone could give; but my life's allegiance is to this my 21 motherland; and if I had a thousand lives, every moment of the 22 whole series would be consecrated to your service, my countrymen, 23 my friends.

24 For to this land I owe whatever I possess, physical, mental, 25 and spiritual; and if I have been successful in anything, the glory is 26 yours, not mine. Mine alone are my weaknesses and failures, as 27 they come through my inability of profiting by the mighty lessons 28 with which this land surrounds one, even from his very birth.

29 And what a land! Whosoever stands on this sacred land, 30 whether alien or a child of the soil, feels himself surrounded--unless 31 his soul is degraded to the level of brute animals--by the living 32 thoughts of the earth's best and purest sons, who have been 33 working to raise the animal to the divine through centuries, whose 34 beginning history fails to trace. The very air is full of the pulsations 35 of spirituality. This land is sacred to philosophy, to ethics and 36 spirituality, to all that tends to give a respite to man in his incessant 37 struggle for the preservation of the animal, to all training that 38 makes man throw off the garment of brutality and stand revealed as 39 the spirit immortal, the birthless, the deathless, the ever-blessed-- 40 the land where the cup of pleasure was full, and fuller has been the 41 cup of misery, until here, first of all, man found out that it was all 42 vanity; here, first of all in the prime of youth, in the lap of luxury, in 43 the height of glory and plenitude of power, he broke through the 44 fetters of delusion. Here, in this ocean of humanity, amidst the 45 sharp interaction of strong currents of pleasure and pain, of 46 strength and weakness, of wealth and poverty, of joy and sorrow, of 47 smile and tear, of life and death, in the melting rhythm of eternal 48 peace and calmness, arose the throne of renunciation! Here in this 49 land, the great problems of life and death, of the thirst for life, and 50 the vain mad struggles to preserve it only resulting in the 51 accumulation of woes, were first grappled with and solved--solved

1 as they never were before and never will be hereafter; for here and 2 here alone was discovered that even life itself is an evil, the shadow 3 only of something which alone is real. This is the land where alone 4 religion was practical and real, and here alone men and women 5 plunged boldly in to realise the goal, just as in other lands they 6 madly plunge in to realise the pleasures of life by robbing their 7 weaker brethren. Here and here alone the human heart expanded 8 till it included not only the human, but birds, beasts, and plants; 9 from the highest gods to grains of sand, the highest and the lowest, 10 all find a place in the heart of man, grown great, infinite. And here 11 alone, the human soul studied the universe as one unbroken unity 12 whose every pulse was his own pulse.

13 We all hear so much about the degradation of India. There 14 was a time when I also believed in it. But today standing on the 15 vantage-ground of experience, with eyes cleared of obstructive 16 predispositions and above all, of the highly-coloured pictures of 17 other countries toned down to their proper shade and light by 18 actual contact, I confess in all humility that I was wrong. Thou 19 blessed land of the Aryas, thou wast never degraded. Sceptres have 20 been broken and thrown away, the ball of power has passed from 21 hand to hand, but in India, courts and kings always touched only a 22 few; the vast mass of the people, from the highest to the lowest, has 23 been left to pursue its own inevitable course, the current of national 24 life flowing at times slow and half-conscious, at others, strong and 25 awakened. I stand in awe before the unbroken procession of scores 26 of shining centuries, with here and there a dim link in the chain, 27 only to flare up with added brilliance in the next, and there she is 28 walking with her own majestic steps--my motherland--to fulfil her 29 glorious destiny, which no power on earth or in heaven can check-- 30 the regeneration of man the brute into man the God.

31 Ay, a glorious destiny, my brethren, for as far back as the 32 days of the Upanishads we have thrown the challenge to the world:
33 {Sanskrit}--"Not by progeny, not by wealth, but by renunciation 34 alone immortality is reached." Race after race has taken the 35 challenge up and tried their utmost to solve the world-riddle on the 36 plane of desires. They have all failed in the past--the old ones have 37 become extinct under the weight of wickedness and misery, which 38 lust for power and gold brings in its train, and the new ones are 39 tottering to their fall. The question has yet to be decided whether 40 peace will survive or war; whether patience will survive or non-41 forbearance, whether goodness will survive or wickedness; whether 42 muscle will survive or brain; whether worldliness will survive or 43 spirituality. We have solved our problem ages ago, and held on to it 44 through good or evil fortune, and mean to hold on to it till the end 45 of time. Our solution is unworldliness--renunciation.

46 This is the theme of Indian life-work, the burden of her 47 eternal songs, the backbone of her existence, the foundation of her 48 being, the raison d'etre of her very existence--the spiritualisation of 49 the human race. In this her life-course she has never deviated, 50 whether the Tartar ruled or the Turk, whether the Mogul ruled or 51 the English.

52 And I challenge anybody to show one single period of her

1 national life when India was lacking in spiritual giants capable of 2 moving the world. But her work is spiritual, and that cannot be 3 done with blasts of war-trumpets or the march of cohorts. Her 4 influence has always fallen upon the world like that of the gentle 5 dew, unheard and scarcely marked, yet bringing into bloom the 6 fairest flowers of the earth. This influence, being in its nature 7 gentle, would have to wait for a fortunate combination of 8 circumstances, to go out of the country into other lands, though it 9 never ceased to work within the limits of its native land. As such, 10 every educated person knows that whenever the empire-building 11 Tartar or Persian or Greek or Arab brought this land in contact with 12 the outside world, a mass of spiritual influence immediately flooded 13 the world from here. The very same circumstances have presented 14 themselves once more before us. The English high roads over land 15 and sea and the wonderful power manifested by the inhabitants of 16 that little island have once more brought India in contact with the 17 rest of the world, and the same work has already begun. Mark my 18 words, this is but the small beginning, big things are to follow; what 19 the result of the present work outside India will be I cannot exactly 20 state, but this I know for certain that millions, I say deliberately, 21 millions in every civilised land are waiting for the message that will 22 save them from the hideous abyss of materialism into which modern 23 money-worship is driving them headlong, and many of the leaders 24 of the new social movements have already discovered that Vedanta 25 in its highest form can alone spiritualise their social aspirations. I 26 shall have to return to this towards the end. I take up therefore the 27 other great subject, the work within the country.

28 The problem assumes a twofold aspect, not only 29 spiritualisation but assimilation of the various elements of which 30 the nation is composed. The assimilation of different races into one 31 has been the common task in the life of every nation.

3 STRAY REMARKS ON THEOSOPHY
4

5 The Theosophists are having a jubilee time of it this year,
6 and several press-notices are before us of their goings and doings 7 for the last twenty-five years.

8 Nobody has a right now to say that the Hindus are not 9 liberal to a fault. A coterie of young Hindus has been found to 10 welcome even this graft of American Spiritualism, with its panoply 11 of taps and raps and hitting back and forth with Mahatmic pellets.

12 The Theosophists claim to possess the original divine
13 knowledge of the universe. We are glad to learn of it, and gladder 14 still that they mean to keep it rigorously a secret. Woe unto us, poor 15 mortals, and Hindus as that, if all this is at once let out on us!
16 Modern Theosophy is Mrs. Besant. Blavatskism and Olcottism seem 17 to have taken a back seat. Mrs. Besant means well at least--and 18 nobody can deny her perseverance and zeal.

19 There are, of course, carping critics. We on our part see 20 nothing but good in Theosophy--good in what is directly beneficial, 21 good in what is pernicious, as they say, indirectly good as we say-- 22 the intimate geographical knowledge of various heavens, and other 23 places, and the denizens thereof; and the dexterous finger work on 24 the visible plane accompanying ghostly communications to live 25 Theosophists--all told. For Theosophy is the best serum we know of, 26 whose injection never fails to develop the queer moths finding 27 lodgment in some brains attempting to pass muster as sound.

28 We have no wish to disparage the good work of the 29 Theosophical or any other society. Yet exaggeration has been in the 30 past the bane of our race and if the several articles on the work of 31 the Theosophical Society that appeared in the Advocate of 32 Lucknow be taken as the temperamental gauge of Lucknow, we are 33 sorry for those it represents, to say the least; foolish depreciation is 34 surely vicious, but fulsome praise is equally loathsome.

35 This Indian grafting of American Spiritualism--with only a 36 few Sanskrit words taking the place of spiritualistic jargon-- 37 Mahatma missiles taking the place of ghostly raps and taps, and 38 Mahatmic inspiration that of obsession by ghosts.

39 We cannot attribute a knowledge of all this to the writer of 40 the articles in the Advocate, but he must not confound himself and 41 his Theosophists with the great Hindu nation, the majority of whom 42 have clearly seen through the Theosophical phenomena from the 43 start and, following the great Swami Dayananda Sarasvati who took 44 away his patronage from Blavatskism the moment he found it out, 45 have held themselves aloof.

46 Again, whatever be the predilection of the writer in 47 question, the Hindus have enough of religious teaching and 48 teachers amidst themselves even in this Kali Yuga, and they do not 49 stand in need of dead ghosts of Russians and Americans.

1 The articles in question are libels on the Hindus and their 2 religion. We Hindus-let the writer, like that of the articles referred 3 to, know once for all-have no need nor desire to import religion 4 from the West. Sufficient has been the degradation of importing 5 almost everything else.

6 The importation in the case of religion should be mostly on 7 the side of the West, we are sure, and our work has been all along 8 in that line. The only help the religion of the Hindus got from the 9 Theosophists in the West was not a ready field, but years of uphill 10 work, necessitated by Theosophical sleight-of-hand methods. The 11 writer ought to have known that the Theosophists wanted to crawl 12 into the heart of Western Society, catching on to the skirts of 13 scholars like Max Muller and poets like Edwin Arnold, all the same 14 denouncing these very men and posing as the only receptacles of 15 universal wisdom. And one heaves a sigh of relief that this 16 wonderful wisdom is kept a secret. Indian thought, charlatanry, and 17 mango-growing fakirism had all become identified in the minds of 18 educated people in the West, and this was all the help rendered to 19 Hindu religion by the Theosophists.

20 The great immediate visible good effect of Theosophy in 21 every country, so far as we can see, is to separate, like Prof. Koch's 22 injections into the lungs of consumptives, the healthy, spiritual, 23 active, and patriotic from the charlatans, the morbid, and the 24 degenerates posing as spiritual beings.

3 REPLY TO THE ADDRESS OF THE MAHARAJA
4 OF KHETRI

5 India--The Land Of Religion
6

7 During the residence of the Swamiji in America, the 8 following Address from the Maharaja of Khetri (Rajputana), dated 9 March 4th, 1895, was received by him:

10 My dear Swamiji,

11 As the head of this Durbar (a formal stately assemblage) 12 held today for this special purpose, I have much pleasure in 13 conveying to you, in my own name and that of my subjects, the 14 heartfelt thanks of this State for your worthy representation of 15 Hinduism at the Parliament of Religions, held at Chicago, in 16 America.

17 I do not think the general principles of Hinduism could be 18 expressed more accurately and clearly in English than what you 19 have done, with all the restrictions imposed by the very natural 20 shortcomings of language itself.

21 The influence of your speech and behaviour in foreign lands 22 has not only spread admiration among men of different countries 23 and different religions, but has also served to familiarise you with 24 them, to help in the furtherance of your unselfish cause. This is very 25 highly and inexpressibly appreciated by us all, and we should feel to 26 be failing in our duty, were I not to write to you formally at least 27 these few lines, expressing our sincere gratitude for all the trouble 28 you have taken in going to foreign countries, and to expound in the 29 American Parliament of Religions the truths of our ancient religion 30 which we ever hold so dear. It is certainly applicable to the pride of 31 India that it has been fortunate in possessing the privilege of having 32 secured so able a representative as yourself.

33 Thanks are also due to those noble souls whose efforts 34 succeeded in organising the Parliament of Religions, and who 35 accorded to you a very enthusiastic reception. As you were quite a 36 foreigner in that continent, their kind treatment of you is due to 37 their love of the several qualifications you possess, and this speaks 38 highly of their noble nature.

39 I herewith enclose twenty printed copies of this letter, and 40 have to request that, keeping this one with yourself, you will kindly 41 distribute the other copies among your friends.

42 With best regards,

43 I remain,

44 Yours very sincerely,

45 RAJA AJIT SINGH BAHADUR OF KHETRI
46

1 The Swamiji sent the following reply:

2 "Whenever virtue subsides, and wickedness raises its head, I
3 manifest Myself to restore the glory of religion"--are the words, O 4 noble Prince, of the Eternal One in the holy Gita, striking the 5 keynote of the pulsating ebb and flow of the spiritual energy in the 6 universe.

7 These changes are manifesting themselves again and again 8 in rhythms peculiar to themselves, and like every other tremendous 9 change, though affecting, more or less, every particle within their 10 sphere of action, they show their effects more intensely upon those 11 particles which are naturally susceptible to their power.

12 As in a universal sense, the primal state is a state of 13 sameness of the qualitative forces--a disturbance of this equilibrium 14 and all succeeding struggles to regain it, composing what we call 15 the manifestation of nature, this universe, which state of things 16 remains as long as the primitive sameness is not reached--so, in a 17 restricted sense on our own earth, differentiation and its inevitable 18 counterpart, this struggle towards homogeneity, must remain as 19 long as the human race shall remain as such, creating strongly 20 marked peculiarities between ethnic divisions, sub-races and even 21 down to individuals in all parts of the world.

22 In this world of impartial division and balance, therefore, 23 each nation represents, as it were, a wonderful dynamo for the 24 storage and distribution of a particular species of energy, and 25 amidst all other possessions that particular property shines forth as 26 the special characteristic of that race. And as any upheaval in any 27 particular part of human nature, though affecting others more or 28 less, stirs to its very depth that nation of which it is a special 29 characteristic, and from which as a centre it generally starts, so any 30 commotion in the religious world is sure to produce momentous 31 changes in India, that land which again and again has had to 32 furnish the centre of the wide-spread religious upheavals; for, above 33 all, India is the land of religion.

34 Each man calls that alone real which helps him to realise his 35 ideal. To the worldly-minded, everything that can be converted into 36 money is real, that which cannot be so converted is unreal. To the 37 man of a domineering spirit, anything that will conduce to his 38 ambition of ruling over his fellow men is real--the rest is naught; 39 and man finds nothing in that which does not echo back the 40 heartbeats of his special love in life.

41 Those whose only aim is to barter the energies of life for 42 gold, or name, or any other enjoyment; those to whom the tramp of 43 embattled cohorts is the only manifestation of power; those to 44 whom the enjoyments of the senses are the only bliss that life can 45 give--to these, India will ever appear as an immense desert whose 46 every blast is deadly to the development of life, as it is known by 47 them.

48 But to those whose thirst for life has been quenched for ever 49 by drinking from the stream of immortality that flows from far 50 away beyond the world of the senses, whose souls have cast away--

1 as a serpent its slough--the three-fold bondages of lust, gold, and 2 fame, who, from their height of calmness, look with love and 3 compassion upon the petty quarrels and jealousies and fights for 4 little gilded puff-balls, filled with dust, called "enjoyment" by those 5 under a sense-bondage; to those whose accumulated force of past 6 good deeds has caused the scales of ignorance to fall off from their 7 eyes, making them see through the vanity of name and form--to 8 such wheresoever they be, India, the motherland and eternal mine 9 of spirituality, stands transfigured, a beacon of hope to everyone in 10 search of Him who is the only real Existence in a universe of 11 vanishing shadows.

12 The majority of mankind can only understand power when it 13 is presented to them in a concrete form, fitted to their perceptions.
14 To them, the rush and excitement of war, with its power and spell, 15 is something very tangible, and any manifestation of life that does 16 not come like a whirlwind, bearing down everything before it, is to 17 them as death. And India, for centuries at the feet of foreign 18 conquerors, without any idea or hope of resistance, without the 19 least solidarity among its masses, without the least idea of 20 patriotism, must needs appear to such, as a land of rotten bones, a 21 lifeless putrescent mass.

22 It is sad--the fittest alone survive. How is it, then, that this 23 most unfitted of all races, according to commonly accepted ideas, 24 could bear the most awful misfortunes that ever befall a race, and 25 yet not show the least signs of decay? How is it that, while the 26 multiplying powers of the so-called vigorous and active races are 27 dwindling every day, the immoral (?) Hindu shows a power of 28 increase beyond them all? Great laurels are due, no doubt, to those 29 who can deluge the world with blood at a moment's notice; great 30 indeed is the glory of those who, to keep up a population of a few 31 millions in plenty, have to starve half the population of the earth, 32 but is no credit due to those who can keep hundreds of millions in 33 peace and plenty, without snatching the bread from the mouth of 34 anyone else? Is there no power displayed in bringing up and 35 guiding the destinies of countless millions of human beings, through 36 hundreds of centuries, without the least violence to others?

37 The mythologists of all ancient races supply us with fables of 38 heroes whose life was concentrated in a certain small portion of 39 their bodies, and until that was touched they remained 40 invulnerable. It seems as if each nation also has such a peculiar 41 centre of life, and so long as that remains untouched, no amount of 42 misery and misfortune can destroy it.

43 In religion lies the vitality of India, and so long as the Hindu 44 race do not forget the great inheritance of their forefathers, there is 45 no power on earth to destroy them.

46 Nowadays everybody blames those who constantly look back 47 to their past. It is said that so much looking back to the past is the 48 cause of all India's woes. To me, on the contrary, it seems that the 49 opposite is true. So long as they forgot the past, the Hindu nation 50 remained in a state of stupor; and as soon as they have begun to 51 look into their past, there is on every side a fresh manifestation of 1 life. It is out of this past that the future has to be moulded; this past 2 will become the future.

3 The more, therefore, the Hindus study the past, the more 4 glorious will be their future, and whoever tries to bring the past to 5 the door of everyone, is a great benefactor to his nation. The 6 degeneration of India came not because the laws and customs of 7 the ancients were bad, but because they were not allowed to be 8 carried to their legitimate conclusions.

9 Every critical student knows that the social laws of India 10 have always been subject to great periodic changes. At their 11 inception, these laws were the embodiment of a gigantic plan, 12 which was to unfold itself slowly through time. The great seers of 13 ancient India saw so far ahead of their time that the world has to 14 wait centuries yet to appreciate their wisdom, and it is this very 15 inability on the part of their own descendants to appreciate the full 16 scope of this wonderful plan that is the one and only cause of the 17 degeneration of India.

18 Ancient India had for centuries been the battlefield for the 19 ambitious projects of two of her foremost classes--the Brahmins and 20 the Kshatriyas.

21 On the other hand, the priesthood stood between the lawless
22 social tyranny of the princes over the masses, whom the Kshatriyas 23 declared to be their legal food. On the other hand, the Kshatriya 24 power was the one potent force which struggled with any success 25 against the spiritual tyranny of the priesthood and the ever-26 increasing chain of ceremonials which they were forging to bind 27 down the people with.

28 The tug of war began in the earliest periods of the history of 29 our race, and throughout the Shrutis it can be distinctly traced. A 30 momentary lull came when Shri Krishna, leading the faction of 31 Kshatriya power and of Jnana, showed the way to reconciliation.
32 The result was the teachings of the Gita--the essence of philosophy, 33 of liberality, of religion. Yet the causes were there, and the effect 34 must follow.

35 The ambition of these two classes to be the masters of the 36 poor and ignorant was there, and the strife once more became 37 fierce. The meagre literature that has come down to us from that 38 period brings to us but faint echoes of that mighty past strife, but at 39 last it broke out as a victory for the Kshatriyas, a victory for Jnana, 40 for liberty--and ceremonial had to go down, much of it for ever. This 41 upheaval was what is known as the Buddhistic reformation. On the 42 religious side, it represented freedom from ceremonial; on the 43 political side, overthrow of the priesthood by the Kshatriyas.

44 It is a significant fact that the two greatest men ancient 45 India produced, were both Kshatriyas--Krishna and Buddha--and 46 still more significant is the fact that both of these God-men threw 47 open the door of knowledge to everyone, irrespective of birth or 48 sex.

49 In spite of its wonderful moral strength, Buddhism was 50 extremely iconoclastic; and much of its force being spent in merely

1 negative attempts, it had to die out in the land of its birth, and what 2 remained of it became full of superstitions and ceremonials, a 3 hundred times cruder than those it was intended to suppress.
4 Although it partially succeeded in putting down the animal 5 sacrifices of the Vedas, it filled the land with temples, images, 6 symbols, and bones of saints.

7 Above all, in the medley of Aryans, Mongols, and aborigines 8 which it created, it unconsciously led the way to some of the 9 hideous Vamacharas. This was especially the reason why this 10 travesty of the teaching of the great Master had to be driven out of 11 India by Shri Shankara and his band of Sannyasins.

12 Thus even the current of life, set in motion by the greatest 13 soul that ever wore a human form, the Bhagavan Buddha himself, 14 became a miasmic pool, and India had to wait for centuries until 15 Shankara arose, followed in quick succession by Ramanuja and 16 Madhva.

17 By this time, an entirely new chapter had opened in the 18 history of India. The ancient Kshatriyas and the Brahmins had 19 disappeared. The land between the Himalayas and the Vindhya, 20 the home of the Aryas, the land which gave birth to Krishna and 21 Buddha, the cradle of great Rajarshis and Brahmarshis, became 22 silent, and from the very farther end of the Indian Peninsula, from 23 races alien in speech and form, from families claiming descent from 24 the ancient Brahmins, came the reaction against the corrupted 25 Buddhism.

26 What had become of the Brahmins and Kshatriyas of 27 Aryavarta? They had entirely disappeared, except here and there a 28 few mongrel clans claiming to be Brahmins and Kshatriyas, and in 29 spite of their inflated, self-laudatory assertions that the whole world 30 ought to learn from {Sanskrit}, they had to sit in sackcloth and 31 ashes, in all humility, to learn at the feet of the Southerners. The 32 result was the bringing back of the Vedas to India--a revival of 33 Vedanta, such as India never before had seen; even the 34 householders began to study the Aranyakas.

35 In the Buddhistic movement, the Kshatriyas were the real 36 leaders, and whole masses of them became Buddhists. In the zeal of 37 reform and conversion, the popular dialects had been almost 38 exclusively cultivated to the neglect of Sanskrit, and the larger 39 portion of Kshatriyas had become disjointed from the Vedic 40 literature and Sanskrit learning. Thus this wave of reform, which 41 came from the South, benefited to a certain extent the priesthood, 42 and the priests only. For the rest of India's millions, it forged more 43 chains than they had ever known before.

44 The Kshatriyas had always been the backbone of India, so 45 also they had been the supporters of science and liberty, and their 46 voices had rung out again and again to clear the land from 47 superstitions; and throughout the history of India they ever formed 48 the invulnerable barrier to aggressive priestly tyranny.

49 When the greater part of their number sank into ignorance, 50 and another portion mixed their blood with savages from Central

1 Asia and lent their swords to establish the rules of priests in India, 2 her cup became full to the brim, and down sank the land of 3 Bharata, not to rise again, until the Kshatriya rouses himself, and 4 making himself free, strikes the chains from the feet of the rest.
5 Priestcraft is the bane of India. Can man degrade his brother, and 6 himself escape degradation?

7 Know, Rajaji, the greatest of all truths, discovered by your 8 ancestors, is that the universe is one. Can one injure anyone
9 without injuring himself? The mass of Brahmin and Kshatriya 10 tyranny has recoiled upon their own heads with compound interest; 11 and a thousand years of slavery and degradation is what the 12 inexorable law of Karma is visiting upon them.

13 This is what one of your ancestors said: "Even in this life, 14 they have conquered relativity whose mind is fixed in sameness"-- 15 one who is believed to be God incarnate. We all believe it. Are his 16 words then vain and without meaning? If not, and we know they are 17 not, any attempt against this perfect equality of all creation, 18 irrespective of birth, sex, or even qualification, is a terrible mistake, 19 and no one can be saved until he has attained to this idea of 20 sameness.

21 Follow, therefore, noble Prince, the teachings of the 22 Vedanta, not as explained by this or that commentator, but as the 23 Lord within you understands them. Above all, follow this great 24 doctrine of sameness in all things, through all beings, seeing the 25 same God in all.

26 This is the way to freedom; inequality, the way to bondage.
27 No man and no nation can attempt to gain physical freedom without 28 physical equality, nor mental freedom without mental equality.

29 Ignorance, inequality, and desire are the three causes of 30 human misery, and each follows the other in inevitable union. Why 31 should a man think himself above any other man, or even an 32 animal? It is the same throughout:

33 {Sanskrit}

34 --"Thou art the man, Thou the woman, Thou art the young 35 man, Thou the young woman."

36 Many will say, "That is all right for the Sannyasins, but we 37 are householders." No doubt, a householder having many other 38 duties to perform, cannot as fully attain to this sameness; yet this 39 should be also their ideal, for it is the ideal of all societies, of all 40 mankind, all animals, and all nature, to attain to this sameness. But 41 alas! they think inequality is the way to attain equality, as if they 42 could come to right by doing wrong!

43 This is the bane of human nature, the curse upon mankind, 44 the root of all misery--this inequality. This is the source of all 45 bondage, physical, mental, and spiritual.

46 {Sanskrit}

47 --"Since seeing the Lord equally existent everywhere, he 48 injures not Self by self, and so goes to the Highest Goal" (Gita, XIII.
49 28). This one saying contains, in a few words, the universal way to 1 salvation.

2 You, Rajputs, have been the glories of ancient India. With 3 your degradation came national decay, and India can only be raised 4 if the descendants of the Kshatriyas co-operate with the 5 descendants of the Brahmins, not to share the spoils of pelf and 6 power, but to help the weak, to enlighten the ignorant, and to 7 restore the lost glory of the holy land of their forefathers.

8 And who can say but that the time is propitious? Once more 9 the wheel is turning up, once more vibrations have been set in 10 motion from India, which are destined at no distant day to reach the 11 farthest limits of the earth. One voice has spoken, whose echoes are 12 rolling on and gathering strength every day, a voice even mightier 13 than those which have preceded it, for it is the summation for them 14 all. Once more the voice that spoke to the sages on the banks of the 15 Sarasvati, the voice whose echoes reverberated from peak to peak 16 of the "Father of Mountains", and descended upon the plains 17 through Krishna, Buddha, and Chaitanya in all-carrying floods, has 18 spoken again. Once more the doors have opened. Enter ye into the 19 realms of light, the gates have been opened wide once more.

20 And you, my beloved Prince--you the scion of a race who are 21 the living pillars upon which rests the religion eternal, its sworn 22 defenders and helpers, the descendants of Rama and Krishna, will 23 you remain outside? I know, this cannot be. Yours, I am sure, will be 24 the first hand that will be stretched forth to help religion once 25 more. And when I think of you, Raja Ajit Singh, one in whom the 26 well-known scientific attainments of your house have been joined to 27 a purity of character of which a saint ought to be proud, to an 28 unbounded love for humanity, I cannot help believing in the glorious 29 renaissance of the religion eternal, when such hands are willing to 30 rebuild it again.

31 May the blessings of Ramakrishna be on you and yours for 32 ever and ever, and that you may live long for the good of many, and 33 for the spread of truth is the constant prayer of--

34 Vivekananda.

REPLY TO THE MADRAS ADDRESS

Friends, Fellow-Countrymen and Co-Religionists of Madras,

It is most gratifying to me to find that my insignificant service to the cause of our religion has been acceptable to you, not because it is as a personal appreciation of me and my work in a foreign and distant land, but as a sure sign that, though whirlwind after whirlwind of foreign invasion has passed over the devoted head of India, though centuries of neglect on our part and contempt on the part of our conquerors have visibly dimmed the glories of ancient Aryavarta, though many a stately column on which it rested, many a beautiful arch, and many a marvellous corner have been washed away by the inundations that deluged the land for centuries--the centre is all sound, the keystone is unimpaired. The spiritual foundation upon which the marvellous monument of glory to God and charity to all beings has been reared stands unshaken, strong as ever. Your generous appreciation of Him whose message to India and to the whole world, I, the most unworthy of His servant, had the privilege to bear shows your innate spiritual instinct which saw in Him and His message the first murmurs of that tidal wave of spirituality which is destined at no distant future to break upon India in all its irresistible powers, carrying away in its omnipotent flood all that is weak and defective, and raising the Hindu race to the platform it is destined to occupy in the providence of God, crowned with more glory than it ever had even in the past, the reward of centuries of silent suffering, and fulfilling its mission amongst the races of the world--the evolution of spiritual humanity.

The people of Northern India are especially grateful to you of the South, as the great source to which most of the impulses that are working in India today can be traced. The great Bhashyakaras, epoch-making Acharyas, Shankara, Ramanuja, and Madhva were born in Southern India. Great Shankara to whom every Advaitavadin in the world owes allegiance; great Ramanuja whose heavenly touch converted the downtrodden pariahs into Alwars; great Madhva whose leadership was recognised even by the followers of the only Northern Prophet whose power has been felt all over the length and breadth of India--Shri Krishna Chaitanya. Even at the present day it is the South that carries the palm in the glories of Varanasi--your renunciation controls the sacred shrines on the farthest peaks of the Himalayas, and what wonder that with the blood of Prophets running in your veins, with your lives blessed by such Acharyas, you are the first and foremost to appreciate and hold on to the message of Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna.

The South had been the repository of Vedic learning, and you will understand me when I state that, in spite of the reiterated assertions of aggressive ignorance, it is the Shruti still that is the backbone of all the different divisions of the Hindu religion.

However great may be the merits of the Samhita and the 1 Brahmana portions of the Vedas to the ethnologists or the 2 philologists, however desirable may be the results that the 3 {Sanskrit} or {Sanskrit} or {Sanskrit} in conjunction with the 4 different Vedis (altars) and sacrifices and libations produce--it was 5 all in the way of Bhoga; and no one ever contended that it could 6 produce Moksha. As such, the Jnana-Kanda, the Aranyakas, the 7 Shrutis par excellence which teach the way to spirituality, the 8 Moksha-Marga, have always ruled and will always rule in India.

9 Lost in the mazes and divisions of the "Religion Eternal", by 10 prepossession and prejudice unable to grasp the meaning of the 11 only religion whose universal adaptation is the exact shadow of the 12 {Sanskrit}.¹² God it preaches, groping in the dark with a standard 13 of spiritual truth borrowed second-hand from nations who never 14 knew anything but rank materialism, the modern young Hindu 15 struggles in vain to understand the religion of his forefathers, and 16 gives up the quest altogether, and becomes a hopeless wreck of an 17 agnostic, or else, unable to vegetate on account of the promptings 18 of his innate religious nature, drinks carelessly of some of those 19 different decoctions of Western materialism with an Eastern flavour, 20 and thus fulfils the prophecy of the Shruti:

21 {Sanskrit}

22 --"Fools go staggering to and fro, like blind men led by the 23 blind." They alone escape whose spiritual nature has been touched 24 and vivified by the life-giving touch of the "Sad-Guru".¹³

25 Well has it been said by Bhagavan Bhashyakara:

26 {Sanskrit}

27 --"These three are difficult to obtain in this world, and 28 depend on the mercy of the gods--the human birth, the desire for 29 salvation, and the company of the great-souled ones."

30 Either in the sharp analysis of the Vaisheshikas, resulting in 31 the wonderful theories about the Paramanus, Dvyanus, and 32 Trasarenu,¹⁴ or the still more wonderful analysis displayed in the 33 discussions of the Jati, Dravya, Guna, Samavaya,¹⁵ and to the 34 various categories of the Naiyayikas, rising to the solemn march of 35 the thought of the Sankhyas, the fathers of the theories of 36 evolution, ending with the ripe fruit, the result of all these 37 researches, the Sutras of Vyasa--the one background to all these 38 different analyses and syntheses of the human mind is still the 39 Shrutis. Even in the philosophical writings of the Buddhists or Jains, 40 the help of Shrutis is never rejected, and at least in some of the 41 Buddhistic schools and in the majority of the Jain writings, the 42 authority of the Shrutis is fully admitted, excepting what they call

1 ¹² ?Smaller than the smallest, greater than the greatest (Katha, II.20).

2
3 ¹³ ?The good teacher.

4
5 ¹⁴ ?Atoms, Entities composed of two atoms, Entities composed of three atoms.

6
7 ¹⁵ ?Genus, Substance, Quality, Inhesion or Inseparability.

1 the Himsaka Shrutis, which they hold to be interpolations of the 2 Brahmins. In recent times, such a view has been held by the late 3 great Swami Dayananda Saraswati.

4 If one be asked to point out the system of thought towards 5 which as a centre all the ancient and modern Indian thoughts have 6 converged, if one wants to see the real backbone of Hinduism in all 7 its various manifestations, the Sutras of Vyasa will unquestionably 8 be pointed out as constituting all that.

9 Either one hears the Advaita-Keshari roaring in peals of 10 thunder--the Asti, Bhati, and Priya¹⁶--amidst the heart-stopping 11 solemnities of the Himalayan forests, mixing with the solemn 12 cadence of the river of heaven, or listens to the cooing of the Piya, 13 Pitam in the beautiful bowers of the grove of Vrinda: whether one 14 mingles with the sedate meditations of the monasteries of Varanasi 15 or the ecstatic dances of the followers of the Prophet of Nadia; 16 whether one sits at the feet of the teacher of the Vishishtadvaita 17 system with its Vadakale, Tenkale,¹⁷ and all the other sub-divisions, 18 or listens with reverence to the Acharyas of the Madhva school;
19 whether one hears the martial "Wa Guruki Fateh"¹⁸ of the secular 20 Sikhs or the sermons on the Grantha Sahib of the Udasis and 21 Nirmalas; whether he salutes the Sannyasin disciples of Kabir with 22 "Sat Sahib" and listens with joy to the Sakhis (Bhajans); whether he 23 pores upon the wonderful lore of that reformer of Rajputana, Dadu, 24 or the works of his royal disciple, Sundaradasa, down to the great 25 Nishchaladasa, the celebrated author of Vichara sagara, which 26 book has more influence in India than any that has been written in 27 any language within the last three centuries; if even one asks the 28 Bhangi Mehtar of Northern India to sit down and give an account of 29 the teachings of his Lalguru--one will find that all these various 30 teachers and schools have as their basis that system whose 31 authority is the Shruti, Gita its divine commentary, the Shariraka-
32 Sutras its organised system, and all the different sects in India, 33 from the Paramahansa Parivrajakacharyas to the poor despised 34 Mehtar disciples of Lalguru, are different manifestations.

35 The three Prasthanas,¹⁹ then, in their different explanations
36 as Dvaita, Vishishtadvaita, or Advaita, with a few minor recensions, 37 form the "authorities" of the Hindu religion. The Puranas, the 38 modern representations of the ancient Narasamsi (anecdote portion 39 of the Vedas), supply the mythology, and the Tantras, the modern 40 representations of the Brahmanas (ritual and explanatory portion of 41 the Vedas), supply the ritual. Thus the three Prasthanas, as 42 authorities, are common to all the sects; but as to the Puranas and 43 Tantras, each sect has its own.

1 ¹⁶ ?Exists (Sat), Shines (Chit), Is beloved (Ananda)--the three indicatives of 2 Brahman.

3
4 ¹⁷ ?The two divisions of the Ramanuja sect.

5
6 ¹⁸ ?Victory to the Guru.

7
8 ¹⁹ ?"Courses", viz, the Upanishad (Shruti), the Gita, and the Shariraka-Sutras.
9

1 The Tantras, as we have said, represent the Vedic rituals in a 2 modified form; and before any one jumps into the most absurd 3 conclusions about them, I will advise him to read the Tantras in 4 conjunction with the Brahmanas, especially the Adhvaryu portion.
5 And most of the Mantras, used in the Tantras, will be found taken 6 verbatim from their Brahmanas. As to their influence, apart from 7 the Shrouta and Smarta rituals, all the forms of the rituals in vogue 8 from the Himalayas to the Comorin have been taken from the 9 Tantras, and they direct the worship of the Shakta, or Shaiva, or 10 Vaishnava, and all the others alike.

11 Of course, I do not pretend that all the Hindus are 12 thoroughly acquainted with these sources of their religion. Many, 13 especially in lower Bengal, have not heard of the names of these 14 sects and these great systems; but consciously or unconsciously, it 15 is the plan laid down in the three Prasthanas that they are all 16 working out.,

17 Wherever, on the other hand, the Hindi language is spoken, 18 even the lowest classes have more knowledge of the Vedantic
19 religion than many of the highest in lower Bengal.

20 And why so?

21 Transported from the soil of Mithila to Navadvipa, nurtured
22 and developed by the fostering genius of Shiromani, Gadadhara, 23 Jagadisha, and a host of other great names, an analysis of the laws 24 of reasoning, in some points superior to every other system in the 25 whole world, expressed in a wonderful and precise mosaic of 26 language, stands the Nyaya of Bengal, respected and studied 27 throughout the length and breadth of Hindusthan. But, alas, the 28 Vedic study was sadly neglected, and until within the last few years, 29 scarcely anyone could be found in 30 Bengal to teach the Mahabhashya of Patanjali. Once only a 31 mighty genius rose above the never-ending Avachchhinnas and 32 Avachchhedakas²⁰--Bhagavan Shri Krishna Chaitanya. For once the 33 religious lethargy of Bengal was shaken, and for a time it entered 34 into a communion with the religious life of other parts of India.

35 It is curious to note that though Shri Chaitanya obtained his 36 Sannyasa from a Bharati, and as such was a Bharati himself, it was 37 through Madhavendra Puri that his religious genius was first 38 awakened.

39 The Puris seem to have a peculiar mission in rousing the 40 spirituality of Bengal. Bhagavan Shri Ramakrishna got his 41 Sannyasahrama from Tota Puri.

1 ²⁰ 'In Nyaya, 'Determined', and 'determining attribute'.
2

1 The commentary that Shri Chaitanya wrote on the Vyasa-
2 Sutras has either been lost or not found yet. His disciples joined 3 themselves to the Madhvas of the South, and gradually the mantles 4 of such giants as Rupa and Sanatana and Jiva Goswami fell on the 5 shoulders of Babajis, and the great movement of Shri Chaitanya
6 was decaying fast, till of late years there is a sign of revival. Hope 7 that it will regain its lost splendour.

8 The influence of Shri Chaitanya is all over India. Wherever 9 the Bhakti-Marga is known, there he is appreciated, studied, and 10 worshipped. I have every reason to believe that the whole of the 11 Vallabhacharya recension is only a branch of the sect founded by 12 Shri Chaitanya. But most of his so-called disciples in Bengal do not 13 know how his power is still working all over India; and how can 14 they? The disciples have become Gadians (Heads of monasteries), 15 while he was preaching barefooted from door to door in India, 16 begging Achandalas (all down to the lowest) to love God.

17 The curious and unorthodox custom of hereditary Gurus that 18 prevails in Bengal, and for the most part in Bengal alone, is another 19 cause of its being cut off from the religious life of the rest of India.

20 The greatest cause of all is that the life of Bengal never 21 received an influx from that of the great brotherhood of Sannyasins 22 who are the representatives and repositories of the highest Indian 23 spiritual culture even at the present day.

24 Tyaga (renunciation) is never liked by the higher classes of 25 Bengal. Their tendency is for Bhoga (enjoyment). How can they get 26 a deep insight into spiritual things? {Sanskrit}--"By renunciation 27 alone immortality was reached." How can it be otherwise?

28 On the other hand, throughout the Hindi-speaking world, a 29 succession of brilliant Tyagi teachers of far-reaching influence has 30 brought the doctrines of the Vedanta to every door. Especially the 31 impetus given to Tyaga during the reign of Ranjit Singh of the 32 Punjab has made the highest teachings of the Vedantic philosophy 33 available for the very lowest of the low. With true pride, the Punjabi 34 peasant girl says that even her spinning wheel repeats: "Soham", 35 "Soham". And I have seen Mehtar Tyagis in the forest of Hrishikesh 36 wearing the garb of the Sannyasin, studying the Vedanta. And many 37 a proud high-class man would be glad to sit at their feet and learn.
38 And why not? {Sanskrit}--"Supreme knowledge (can be learnt) 39 even from the man of low birth."

40 Thus it is that the North-West and the Punjab have a 41 religious education which is far ahead of that of Bengal, Bombay, or 42 Madras. The ever-travelling Tyagis of the various orders, 43 Dasanamis or Vairagis or Panthis bring religion to everybody's door, 44 and the cost is only a bit of bread. And how noble and disinterested 45 most of them are! There is one Sannyasin belonging to the Kachu 46 Panthis or independents (who do not identify themselves with any 47 sect), who has been instrumental in the establishing of hundreds of 48 schools and charitable asylums all over Rajputana. He has opened 49 hospitals in forests, and thrown iron bridges over the gorges in the 50 Himalayas, and this man never touches a coin with his hands, has 51 no earthly possession except a blanket, which has given him the

1 nickname of the "Blanket Swami", and begs his bread from door to 2 door. I have never known him taking a whole dinner from one
3 house, lest it should be a tax on the householder. And he is only one 4 amongst many. Do you think that so long as these Gods on earth live
5 in India and protect the "Religion Eternal" with the impenetrable 6 rampart of such godly characters, the old religion will die?

7 In this country,²¹ the clergymen sometimes receive as high 8 salaries as rupees thirty thousand, forty thousand, fifty thousand, 9 even ninety thousand a year, for preaching two hours on Sunday 10 only, and that only six months in a year. Look at the millions upon 11 millions they spend for the support of their religion, and Young 12 Bengal has been taught that these Godlike, absolutely unselfish 13 men like Kambli-Swami are idle vagabonds. {Sanskrit}--"Those who 14 are devoted to My worshippers are regarded as the best of 15 devotees."

16 Take even an extreme case, that of an extremely ignorant
17 Vairagi. Even he, when he goes into a village tries his best to impart 18 to the villagers whatever he knows, from Tulasidasa, or Chaitanya-
19 Charitamrita or the Alwars in Southern India. Is that not doing 20 some good? And all this for only a bit of bread and a rag of cloth.
21 Before unmercifully criticising them, think how much you do, my 22 brother, for your poor fellow-countrymen, at whose expense you 23 have got your education, and by grinding whose face you maintain 24 your position and pay your teachers for teaching you that the 25 Babajis are only vagabonds.

26 A few of your fellow-countrymen in Bengal have criticised 27 what they call a new development of Hinduism. And well they may.
28 For Hinduism is only just now penetrating into Bengal, where so 29 long the whole idea of religion was a bundle of Deshacharas (local 30 customs) as to eating and drinking and marriage.

31 This short paper has not space for the discussion of such a 32 big subject as to whether the view of Hinduism, which the disciples 33 of Ramakrishna have been preaching all over India, was according 34 to the "Sad-Shastras" or not. But I will give a few hints to our 35 critics, which may help them in understanding our position better.

36 In the first place, I never contended that a correct idea of 37 Hinduism can be gathered from the writings of Kashidasa or 38 Krittivasa, though their words are "Amrita Samana" (like nectar), 39 and those that hear them are "Punyavans" (virtuous). But we must 40 go to Vedic and Darshanika authorities, and to the great Acharyas 41 and their disciples all over India.

42 If, brethren, you begin with the Sutras of Gautama, and read 43 his theories about the Aptas (inspired) in the light of the 44 commentaries of Vatsyayana, and go up to the Mimamsakas with 45 Shabara and other commentators, and find out what they say about 46 the {Sanskrit} (super-sensuous realisation), and who are Aptas, 47 and whether every being can become an Apta or not, and that the 48 proof of the Vedas is in their being the words of such Aptas if you

²¹ ?United States of America.

1 have time to look into the introduction of Mahidhara to the Yajur-
2 Veda, you will find a still more lucid discussion as to the Vedas 3 being laws of the inner life of man, and as such they are eternal.

4 As to the eternity of creation--this doctrine is the corner-
5 stone not only of the Hindu religion, but of the Buddhists and Jains 6 also.

7 Now all the sects in India can be grouped roughly as 8 following the Jnana-Marga or the Bhakti-Marga. If you will kindly 9 look into the introduction to the Shariraka-Bhashya of Shri 10 Shankaracharya, you will find there the Nirapekshata 11 (transcendence) of Jnana is thoroughly discussed, and the 12 conclusion is that realisation of Brahman or the attainment of 13 Moksha do not depend upon ceremonial, creed, caste, colour, or 14 doctrine. It will come to any being who has the four Sadhanas, 15 which are the most perfect moral culture.

16 As to the Bhaktas, even Bengali critics know very well that 17 some of their authorities even declared that caste or nationality or 18 sex, or, as to that, even the human birth, was never necessary to 19 Moksha. Bhakti is the one and only thing necessary.

20 Both Jnana and Bhakti are everywhere preached to be 21 unconditioned, and as such there is not one authority who lays 22 down the conditions of caste or creed or nationality in attaining 23 Moksha. See the discussion on the Sutra of Vyasa--{Sanskrit}²² by 24 Shankara, Ramanuja, and Madhva.

25 Go through all the Upanishads, and even in the Samhitas, 26 nowhere you will find the limited ideas of Moksha which every 27 other religion has. As to toleration, it is everywhere, even in the 28 Samhita of the Adhvarya Veda, in the third or fourth verse of the 29 fortieth chapter, if my memory does not fail; it begins with 30 {Sanskrit}.²³ This is running through every where. Was anybody 31 persecuted in India for choosing his Ishta Devata, or becoming an 32 atheist or agnostic even, so long as he obeyed the social 33 regulations? Society may punish anybody by its disapprobation for 34 breaking any of its regulations, but no man, the lowest Patita 35 (fallen), is ever shut out from Moksha. You must not mix up the two 36 together. As to that, in Malabar a Chandala is not allowed to pass 37 through the same street as a high-caste man, but let him become a 38 Mohammedan or Christian, he will be immediately allowed to go 39 anywhere; and this rule has prevailed in the dominion of a Hindu 40 sovereign for centuries. It may be queer, but it shows the idea of 41 toleration for other religions even in the most untoward

22 ?"But also (persons standing) between (are qualified for knowledge); for that is seen (in scripture)." III.iv.36. A person even if he does not belong to an Ashrama (possessing not the means to entitle him to one or other of the Ashramas, stages of life) and thus stands between, as it were, is qualified for the knowledge of Brahman; for we meet scriptural passages declaring that persons of such a class possessed the knowledge of Brahman. Vide Chhand. Upa. IV. i.; Bri. Upa. III. vi. & viii.

23 ?"(The wise one) should not unsettle the understanding of the ignorant, attached to action." The line also occurs in the Gita (III.26).

1 circumstances.

2 The one idea the Hindu religions differ in from every other 3 in the world, the one idea to express which the sages almost 4 exhaust the vocabulary of the Sanskrit language, is that man must 5 realise God even in this life. And the Advaita texts very logically 6 add, "To know God is to become God."

7 And here comes as a necessary consequence the broadest 8 and most glorious idea of inspiration--not only as asserted and 9 declared by the Rishis of the Vedas, not only by Vidura and 10 Dharmavyadha and a number of others, but even the other day 11 Nischaladasa, a Tyagi of the Dadu panthi sect, boldly declared in 12 his Vichara-Sagara: "He who has known Brahman has become 13 Brahman. His words are Vedas, and they will dispel the darkness of 14 ignorance, either expressed in Sanskrit or any popular dialect."

15 Thus to realise God, the Brahman, as the Dvaitins say, or to 16 become Brahman, as the Advaitins say--is the aim and end of the 17 whole teaching of the Vedas; and every other teaching, therein 18 contained, represents a stage in the course of our progress thereto.
19 And the great glory of Bhagavan Bhashyakara Shankaracharya is 20 that it was his genius that gave the most wonderful expression to 21 the ideas of Vyasa.

22 As absolute, Brahman alone is true; as relative truth, all the 23 different sects, standing upon different manifestations of the same 24 Brahman, either in India or elsewhere, are true. Only some are 25 higher than others. Suppose a man starts straight towards the sun.
26 At every step of his journey he will see newer and newer visions of 27 the sun--the size, the view, and light will every moment be new, until 28 he reaches the real sun. He saw the sun at first like a big ball, and 29 then it began to increase in size. The sun was never small like the 30 ball he saw; nor was it ever like all the succession of suns he saw in 31 his journey. Still is it not true that our traveller always saw the sun, 32 and nothing but the sun? Similarly, all these various sects are true-- 33 some nearer, some farther off from the real sun which is our 34 {Sanskrit}--"One without a second".

35 And as the Vedas are the only scriptures which teach this 36 real absolute God, of which all other ideas of God are but minimised 37 and limited visions; as the {Sanskrit}²⁴ Shruti takes the devotee 38 gently by the hand, and leads him from one stage to another, 39 through all the stages that are necessary for him to travel to reach 40 the Absolute; and as all other religions represent one or other of 41 these stages in an unprogressive and crystallised form, all the other 42 religions of the world are included in the nameless, limitless, 43 eternal Vedic religion.

44 Work hundreds of lives out, search every corner of your 45 mind for ages--and still you will not find one noble religious idea 46 that is not already imbedded in that infinite mine of spirituality.

47 As to the so-called Hindu idolatry--first go and learn the 48 forms they are going through, and where it is that the worshippers

1 ²⁴ The well-wisher to all the world.

1 are really worshipping, whether in the temple, in the image, or in 2 the temple of their own bodies. First know for certain what they are 3 doing--which more than ninety per cent of the revilers are 4 thoroughly ignorant of--and then it will explain itself in the light of 5 the Vedantic philosophy.

6 Still these Karmas are not compulsory. On the other hand,
7 open your Manu and see where it orders every old man to embrace 8 the fourth Ashrama, and whether he embraces it or not, he must 9 give up all Karma. It is reiterated everywhere that all these Karmas 10 {Sanskrit}--"finally end in Jnana".

11 As to the matter of that, a Hindu peasant has more religious 12 education than many a gentleman in other countries. A friend 13 criticised the use of European terms of philosophy and religion in 14 my addresses. I would have been very glad to use Sanskrit terms; it 15 would have been much more easy, as being the only perfect vehicle 16 of religious thought. But the friend forgot that I was addressing an 17 audience of Western people; and although a certain Indian 18 missionary declared that the Hindus had forgotten the meaning of 19 their Sanskrit books, and that it was the missionaries who 20 unearthed the meaning, I could not find one in that large concourse 21 of missionaries who could understand a line in Sanskrit--and yet 22 some of them read learned papers criticising the Vedas, and all the 23 sacred sources of the Hindu religion!

24 It is not true that I am against any religion. It is equally 25 untrue that I am hostile to the Christian missionaries in India. But I 26 protest against certain of their methods of raising money in 27 America. What is meant by those pictures in the school-books for 28 children where the Hindu mother is painted as throwing her 29 children to the crocodiles in the Ganga? The mother is black, but 30 the baby is painted white, to arouse more sympathy and get more 31 money. What is meant by those pictures which paint a man burning 32 his wife at a stake with his own hands, so that she may become a 33 ghost and torment the husband's enemy? What is meant by the 34 pictures of huge cars crushing over human beings? The other day a 35 book was published for children in this country, where one of these 36 gentlemen tells a narrative of his visit to Calcutta. He says he saw a 37 car running over fanatics in the streets of Calcutta. I have heard 38 one of these gentlemen preach in Memphis that in every village of 39 India there is a pond full of the bones of little babies.

40 What have the Hindus done to these disciples of Christ that 41 every Christian child is taught to call the Hindus "vile", and 42 "wretches", and the most horrible devils on earth? Part of the 43 Sunday School education for children here consists in teaching 44 them to hate everybody who is not a Christian, and the Hindus
45 especially, so that, from their very childhood they may subscribe 46 their pennies to the missions. If not for truth's sake, for the sake of 47 the morality of their own children, the Christian missionaries ought 48 not to allow such things going on. Is it any wonder that such 49 children grow up to be ruthless and cruel men and women? The 50 greater a preacher can paint the tortures of eternal hell--the fire 51 that is burning there, the brimstone--the higher is his position 52 among the orthodox. A servant-girl in the employ of a friend of mine

1 had to be sent to a lunatic asylum as a result of her attending what 2 they call here the revivalist-preaching. The dose of hell-fire and 3 brimstone was too much for her. Look again at the books published 4 in Madras against the Hindu religion. If a Hindu writes one such 5 line against the Christian religion, the missionaries will cry fire and 6 vengeance.

7 My countrymen, I have been more than a year in this 8 country. I have seen almost every corner of the society, and, after 9 comparing notes, let me tell you that neither are we devils, as the 10 missionaries tell the world we are, nor are they angels, as they 11 claim to be. The less the missionaries talk of immorality, infanticide, 12 and the evils of the Hindu marriage system, the better for them.
13 There may be actual pictures of some countries before which all the 14 imaginary missionary pictures of the Hindu society will fade away 15 into light. But my mission in life is not to be a paid reviler. I will be 16 the last man to claim perfection for the Hindu society. No man is 17 more conscious of the defects that are therein, or the evils that 18 have grown up under centuries of misfortunes. If, foreign friends, 19 you come with genuine sympathy to help and not to destroy, 20 Godspeed to you. But if by abuses, incessantly hurled against the 21 head of a prostrate race in season and out of season, you mean only 22 the triumphant assertion of the moral superiority of your own 23 nation, let me tell you plainly, if such a comparison be instituted 24 with any amount of justice, the Hindu will be found head and 25 shoulders above all other nations in the world as a moral race.

26 In India religion was never shackled. No man was ever 27 challenged in the selection of his Ishta Devata, or his sect, or his 28 preceptor, and religion grew, as it grew nowhere else. On the other 29 hand, a fixed point was necessary to allow this infinite variation to 30 religion, and society was chosen as that point in India. As a result, 31 society became rigid and almost immovable. For liberty is the only 32 condition of growth.

33 On the other hand, in the West, the field of variation was 34 society, and the constant point was religion. Conformity was the 35 watchword, and even now is the watchword of European religion, 36 and each new departure had to gain the least advantage only by 37 wading through a river of blood. The result is a splendid social 38 organisation, with a religion that never rose beyond the grossest 39 materialistic conceptions.

40 Today the West is awakening to its wants; and the "true self 41 of man and spirit" is the watchword of the advanced school of 42 Western theologians. The student of Sanskrit philosophy knows 43 where the wind is blowing from, but it matters not whence the 44 power comes so long as it brings new life.

45 In India, new circumstances at the same time are 46 persistently demanding a new adjustment of social organisations.
47 For the last three-quarters of a century, India has been bubbling 48 over with reform societies and reformers. But, alas, every one of 49 them has proved a failure. They did not know the secret. They had 50 not learnt the great lesson to be learnt. In their haste, they laid all 51 the evils in our society at the door of religion; and like the man in

1 the story, wanting to kill the mosquito that sat on a friend's 2 forehead, they were trying to deal such heavy blows as would have 3 killed man and mosquito together. But in this case, fortunately, they 4 only dashed themselves against immovable rocks and were crushed 5 out of existence in the shock of recoil. Glory unto those noble and 6 unselfish souls who have struggled and failed in their misdirected 7 attempts. Those galvanic shocks of reformatory zeal were 8 necessary to rouse the sleeping leviathan. But they were entirely 9 destructive, and not constructive, and as such they were mortal, 10 and therefore died.

11 Let us bless them and profit by their experience. They had 12 not learnt the lesson that all is a growth from inside out, that all 13 evolution is only a manifestation of a preceding involution. They did 14 not know that the seed can only assimilate the surrounding 15 elements, but grows a tree in its own nature. Until all the Hindu 16 race becomes extinct, and a new race takes possession of the land, 17 such a thing can never be--try East or West, India can never be 18 Europe until she dies.

19 And will she die--this old Mother of all that is noble or moral 20 or spiritual, the land which the sages trod, the land in which 21 Godlike men still live and breathe? I will borrow the lantern of the 22 Athenian sage and follow you, my brother, through the cities and 23 villages, plains and forests, of this broad world--show me such men 24 in other lands if you can. Truly have they said, the tree is known by 25 its fruits. Go under every mango tree in India; pick up bushels of 26 the worm-eaten, unripe, fallen ones from the ground, and write 27 hundreds of the most learned volumes on each one of them--still 28 you have not described a single mango. Pluck a luscious, full-grown, 29 juicy one from the tree, and now you have known all that the mango 30 is.

31 Similarly, these Man-Gods show what the Hindu religion is.
32 They show the character, the power, and the possibilities of that 33 racial tree which counts culture by centuries, and has borne the 34 buffets of a thousand years of hurricane, and still stands with the 35 unimpaired vigour of eternal youth.

36 Shall India die? Then from the world all spirituality will be 37 extinct, all moral perfection will be extinct, all sweet-souled 38 sympathy for religion will be extinct, all ideality will be extinct; and 39 in its place will reign the duality of lust and luxury as the male and 40 female deities, with money as its priest, fraud, force, and 41 competition its ceremonies, and the human soul its sacrifice. Such a 42 thing can never be. The power of suffering is infinitely greater than 43 the power of doing; the power of love is infinitely of greater potency 44 than the power of hatred. Those that think that the present revival 45 of Hinduism is only a manifestation of patriotic impulse are 46 deluded.

47 First, let us study the quaint phenomenon.

48 Is it not curious that, whilst under the terrific onset of 49 modern scientific research, all the old forts of Western dogmatic 50 religions are crumbling into dust; whilst the sledge-hammer blows 51 of modern science are pulverising the porcelain mass of systems

1 whose foundation is either in faith or in belief or in the majority of 2 votes of church synods; whilst Western theology is at its wit's end to 3 accommodate itself to the ever-rising tide of aggressive modern 4 thought; whilst in all other sacred books the texts have been 5 stretched to their utmost tension under the ever-increasing 6 pressure of modern thought, and the majority of them are broken 7 and have been stored away in lumber rooms; whilst the vast 8 majority of thoughtful Western humanity have broken asunder all 9 their ties with the church and are drifting about in a sea of unrest, 10 the religions which have drunk the water of life at that fountain of 11 light, the Vedas--Hinduism and Buddhism--alone are reviving?

12 The restless Western atheist or agnostic finds in the Gita or 13 in the Dhammapada the only place where his soul can anchor.

14 The tables have been turned, and the Hindu, who saw 15 through tears of despair his ancient homestead covered with 16 incendiary fire, ignited by unfriendly hands, now sees, when the 17 searchlight of modern thought has dispersed the smoke, that his 18 home is the one that is standing in all its strength, and all the rest 19 have either vanished or are building their houses anew after the 20 Hindu plan. He has wiped away his tears, and has found that the 21 axe that tried to cut down to the roots the {Sanskrit} (Gita, XV.1) 22 has proved the merciful knife of the surgeon.

23 He has found that he has neither to torture texts nor commit 24 any other form of intellectual dishonesty to save his religion. Nay, 25 he may call all that is weak in his scriptures, weak, because they 26 were meant to be so by the ancient sages, to help the weak, under 27 the theory of {Sanskrit}.²⁵ Thanks to the ancient sages who have 28 discovered such an all-pervading, ever-expanding system of religion 29 that can accommodate all that has been discovered in the realm of 30 matter, and all that is to be known; he has begun to appreciate 31 them anew, and discover anew, that those discoveries which have 32 proved so disastrous to every limited little scheme of religion are 33 but rediscoveries, in the plane of intellect and sense-consciousness, 34 of truths which his ancestors discovered ages ago in the higher 35 plane of intuition and superconsciousness.

36 He has not, therefore, to give up anything, nor go about 37 seeking for anything anywhere, but it will be enough for him if he 38 can utilise only a little from the infinite store he has inherited and 39 apply it to his needs. And that he has begun to do and will do more 40 and more. Is this not the real cause of this revival?

41 Young men of Bengal, to you I especially appeal. Brethren, 42 we know to our shame that most of the real evils for which the 43 foreign races abuse the Hindu nation are only owing to us. We have

1 ²⁵ ?When a bride is brought to the house of her husband for the first time he 2 shows her a very tiny star, called Arundhati. To do this, he has to direct her gaze 3 the right way, which he does by asking her to look at something near and 4 something big in the direction of the star, e.g., a branch of a tree. Next he draws 5 her attention to a large bright star observed beyond this branch and so on, till by 6 several steps, he succeeds in leading her eyes to the right thing. This method of 7 leading to a subtle object through easy and gradual steps is called Arundhati 8 Nyaya.
9

1 been the cause of bringing many undeserved calumnies on the head 2 of the other races in India. But glory unto God, we have been fully 3 awakened to it, and with His blessings, we will not only cleanse 4 ourselves, but help the whole of India to attain the ideals preached 5 in the religion eternal.

6 Let us wipe off first that mark which nature always puts on 7 the forehead of a slave--the stain of jealousy. Be jealous of none. Be 8 ready to lend a hand to every worker of good. Send a good thought 9 for every being in the three worlds.

10 Let us take our stand on the one central truth in our 11 religion--the common heritage of the Hindus, the Buddhists, and 12 Jains alike--the spirit of man, the Atman of man, the immortal, 13 birthless, all-pervading, eternal soul of man whose glories the 14 Vedas cannot themselves express, before whose majesty the 15 universe with its galaxy upon galaxy of suns and stars and nebulae 16 is as a drop. Every man or woman, nay, from the highest Devas to 17 the worm that crawls under our feet, is such a spirit evolved or 18 involuted. The difference is not in kind, but in degree.

19 This infinite power of the spirit, brought to bear upon matter 20 evolves material development, made to act upon thought evolves
21 intellectuality, and made to act upon itself makes of man a God.

22 First, let us be Gods, and then help others to be Gods. "Be 23 and make." Let this be our motto. Say not man is a sinner. Tell him 24 that he is a God. Even if there were a devil, it would be our duty to 25 remember God always, and not the devil.

26 If the room is dark, the constant feeling and repeating of 27 darkness will not take it away, but bring in the light. Let us know 28 that all that is negative, all that is destructive, all that is mere 29 criticism, is bound to pass away; it is the positive, the affirmative, 30 the constructive that is immortal, that will remain for ever. Let us 31 say, "We are" and "God is" and "We are God", "Shivoham, 32 Shivoham", and march on. Not matter but spirit. All that has name 33 and form is subject to all that has none. This is the eternal truth the 34 Shrutis preach. Bring in the light; the darkness will vanish of itself.
35 Let the lion of Vedanta roar; the foxes will fly to their holes. Throw 36 the ideas broadcast, and let the result take care of itself. Let us put 37 the chemicals together; the crystallisation will take its own course.
38 Bring forth the power of the spirit, and pour it over the length and 39 breadth of India; and all that is necessary will come by itself.

40 Manifest the divinity within you, and everything will be 41 harmoniously arranged around it. Remember the illustration of 42 Indra and Virochana in the Vedas; both were taught their divinity.
43 But the Asura, Virochana, took his body for his God. Indra, being a 44 Deva, understood that the Atman was meant. You are the children 45 of India. You are the descendants of the Devas. Matter can never be 46 your God; body can never be your God.

47 India will be raised, not with the power of the flesh, but with 48 the power of the spirit; not with the flag of destruction, but with the 49 flag of peace and love, the garb of the Sannyasin; not by the power 50 of wealth, but by the power of the begging bowl. Say not that you

1 are weak. The spirit is omnipotent. Look at that handful of young 2 men called into existence by the divine touch of Ramakrishna's feet.
3 They have preached the message from Assam to Sindh, from the 4 Himalayas to Cape Comorin. They have crossed the Himalayas at a 5 height of twenty thousand feet, over snow and ice on foot, and 6 penetrated into the mysteries of Tibet. They have begged their 7 bread, covered themselves with rags; they have been persecuted, 8 followed by the police, kept in prison, and at last set free when the 9 Government was convinced of their innocence.

10 They are now twenty. Make them two thousand tomorrow.
11 Young men of Bengal, your country requires it. The world requires 12 it. Call up the divinity within you, which will enable you to bear 13 hunger and thirst, heat and cold. Sitting in luxurious homes, 14 surrounded with all the comforts of life, and doling out a little 15 amateur religion may be good for other lands, but India has a truer 16 instinct. It intuitively detects the mask. You must give up. Be great.
17 No great work can be done without sacrifice. The Purusha Himself 18 sacrificed Himself to create this world. Lay down your comforts, 19 your pleasures, your names, fame or position, nay even your lives, 20 and make a bridge of human chains over which millions will cross 21 this ocean of life. Bring all the forces of good together. Do not care 22 under what banner you march. Do not care what be your colour-- 23 green, blue, or red--but mix up all the colours and produce that 24 intense glow of white, the colour of love. Ours is to work. The 25 results will take care of themselves. If any social institution stands 26 in your way of becoming God, it will give way before the power of 27 Spirit. I do not see into the future; nor do I care to see. But one 28 vision I see clear as life before me: that the ancient Mother has 29 awakened once more, sitting on Her throne rejuvenated, more 30 glorious than ever. Proclaim Her to all the world with the voice of 31 peace and benediction.

32 Yours ever in love and 33 labour,

34 Vivekananda.

A MESSAGE OF SYMPATHY TO A FRIEND

"Naked came I out of my mother's womb, and naked shall I return thither; the Lord gave and the Lord hath taken away; blessed be the name of the Lord." Thus said the old Jewish saint when suffering the greatest calamities that could befall man, and he erred not. Herein lies the whole secret of Existence. Waves may roll over the surface and tempest rage, but deep down there is the stratum of infinite calmness, infinite peace, and infinite bliss. "Blessed are they that mourn, for they shall be comforted." And why? Because it is during these moments of visitations when the heart is wrung by hands which never stop for the father's cries or the mother's wail, when under the load of sorrow, dejection, and despair, the world seems to be cut off from under our feet, and when the whole horizon seems to be nothing but an impenetrable sheet of misery and utter despair--that the internal eyes open, light flashes all of a sudden, the dream vanishes, and intuitively we come face to face with the grandest mystery in nature--Existence. Yes, then it is--when the load would be sufficient to sink a lot of frail vessels--that the man of genius, of strength, the hero, sees that infinite, absolute, ever-blissful Existence per se, that infinite being who is called and worshipped under different names in different climes. Then it is, the shackles that bind the soul down to this hole of misery break, as it were, for a time, and unfettered it rises and rises until it reaches the throne of the Lord, "Where the wicked cease from troubling and the weary are at rest". Cease not, brother, to send up petitions day and night, cease not to say day and night--THY WILL BE DONE.

"Ours is not to question why,

Ours but to do and die."

Blessed be Thy name, O Lord! And Thy will be done. Lord, we know that we are to submit; Lord, we know that it is the Mother's hand that is striking, and "The spirit is willing but the flesh is weak." There is, Father of Love, an agony at the heart which is fighting against that calm resignation which Thou teachest. Give us strength, O Thou who sawest Thy whole family destroyed before Thine eyes, with Thine hands crossed on Thy breast. Come, Lord, Thou Great Teacher, who has taught us that the soldier is only to obey and speak not. Come, Lord, come Arjuna's Charioteer, and teach me as Thou once taughtest him, that resignation in Thyself is the highest end and aim of this life, so that with those great ones of old, I may also firmly and resignedly cry, Om Shri Krishnarpanamastu.

May the Lord send you peace is the prayer day and night of--

Vivekananda

WHAT WE BELIEVE IN

I agree with you so far that faith is a wonderful insight and that it alone can save; but there is the danger in it of breeding fanaticism and barring further progress.

Jnana is all right; but there is the danger of its becoming dry intellectualism. Love is great and noble; but it may die away in meaningless sentimentalism.

A harmony of all these is the thing required. Ramakrishna was such a harmony. Such beings are few and far between; but keeping him and his teachings as the ideal, we can move on. And if amongst us, each one may not individually attain to that perfection, still we may get it collectively by counteracting, equipoising, adjusting, and fulfilling one another. This would be harmony by a number of persons and a decided advance on all other forms and creeds.

For a religion to be effective, enthusiasm is necessary. At the same time we must try to avoid the danger of multiplying creeds. We avoid that by being a non-sectarian sect, having all the advantages of a sect and the broadness of a universal religion.

God, though everywhere, can be known to us in and through human character. No character was ever so perfect as Ramakrishna's, and that should be the centre round which we ought to rally, at the same time allowing everybody to regard him in his own light, either as God, saviour, teacher, model, or great man, just as he pleases. We preach neither social equality nor inequality, but that every being has the same rights, and insist upon freedom of thought and action in every way.

We reject none, neither theist, nor pantheist, monist, polytheist, agnostic, nor atheist; the only condition of being a disciple is modelling a character at once the broadest and the most intense. Nor do we insist upon particular codes of morality as to conduct, or character, or eating and drinking, except so far as it injures others.

Whatever retards the onward progress or helps the downward fall is vice; whatever helps in coming up and becoming harmonised is virtue.

1 We leave everybody free to know, select, and follow
2 whatever suits and helps him. Thus, for example, eating meat may 3 help one, eating fruit another. Each is welcome to his own 4 peculiarity, but he has no right to criticise the conduct of others, 5 because that would, if followed by him, injure him, much less to 6 insist that others should follow his way. A wife may help some 7 people in this progress, to others she may be a positive injury. But 8 the unmarried man has no right to say that the married disciple is 9 wrong, much less to force his own ideal of morality upon his 10 brother.

11 We believe that every being is divine, is God. Every soul is a 12 sun covered over with clouds of ignorance, the difference between 13 soul and soul is owing to the difference in density of these layers of 14 clouds. We believe that this is the conscious or unconscious basis of 15 all religions, and that this is the explanation of the whole history of 16 human progress either in the material, intellectual, or spiritual 17 plane--the same Spirit is manifesting through different planes.

18 We believe that this is the very essence of the Vedas.

19 We believe that it is the duty of every soul to treat, think of, 20 and behave to other souls as such, i.e. as Gods, and not hate or 21 despise, or vilify, or try to injure them by any manner or means.
22 This is the duty not only of the Sannyasin, but of all men and 23 women.

24 The soul has neither sex, nor caste, nor imperfection.

25 We believe that nowhere throughout the Vedas, Darshanas, 26 or Puranas, or Tantras, is it ever said that the soul has any sex, 27 creed, or caste. Therefore we agree with those who say, "What has 28 religion to do with social reforms?" But they must also agree with 29 us when we tell them that religion has no business to formulate 30 social laws and insist on the difference between beings, because its 31 aim and end is to obliterate all such fictions and monstrosities.

32 If it be pleaded that through this difference we would reach 33 the final equality and unity, we answer that the same religion has 34 said over and over again that mud cannot be washed with mud. As 35 if a man can be moral by being immoral!

36 Social laws were created by economic conditions under the 37 sanction of religion. The terrible mistake of religion was to interfere 38 in social matters. But how hypocritically it says and thereby 39 contradicts itself, "Social reform is not the business of religion"! True, 40 what we want is that religion should not be a social reformer, 41 but we insist at the same time that society has no right to become a 42 religious law-giver. Hands off! Keep yourself to your own bounds 43 and everything would come right.

44 Education is the manifestation of the perfection already in 45 man.

46 Religion is the manifestation of the Divinity already in man.

47 Therefore the only duty of the teacher in both cases is to 48 remove all obstructions from the way. Hands off! as I always say, 49 and everything will be right. That is, our duty is to clear the way.

1 The Lord does the rest.

2 Especially, therefore, you must bear in mind that religion has 3 to do only with the soul and has no business to interfere in social 4 matters; you must also bear in mind that this applies completely to 5 the mischief which has already been done. It is as if a man after 6 forcibly taking possession of another's property cries through the 7 nose when that man tries to regain it--and preaches the doctrine of 8 the sanctity of human right!

9 What business had the priests to interfere (to the misery of 10 millions of human beings) in every social matter?

11 You speak of the meat-eating Kshatriya. Meat or no meat, it 12 is they who are the fathers of all that is noble and beautiful in 13 Hinduism. Who wrote the Upanishads? Who was Rama? Who was 14 Krishna? Who was Buddha? Who were the Tirthankaras of the 15 Jains? Whenever the Kshatriyas have preached religion, they have 16 given it to everybody; and whenever the Brahmins wrote anything, 17 they would deny all right to others. Read the Gita and the Sutras of 18 Vyasa, or get someone to read them to you. In the Gita the way is 19 laid open to all men and women, to all caste and colour, but Vyasa 20 tries to put meanings upon the Vedas to cheat the poor Shudras. Is 21 God a nervous fool like you that the flow of His river of mercy would 22 be dammed up by a piece of meat? If such be He, His value is not a 23 pie!

24 Hope nothing from me, but I am convinced as I have written 25 to you, and spoken to you, that India is to be saved by the Indians 26 themselves. So you, young men of the motherland, can dozens of 27 you become almost fanatics over this new ideal? Take thought, 28 collect materials, write a sketch of the life of Ramakrishna, 29 studiously avoiding all miracles. The life should be written as an 30 illustration of the doctrines he preached. Only his--do not bring me 31 or any living persons into that. The main aim should be to give to 32 the world what he taught, and the life as illustrating that. I, 33 unworthy though I am, had one commission--to bring out the casket 34 of jewels that was placed in my charge and make it over to you.
35 Why to you? Because the hypocrites, the jealous, the slavish, and 36 the cowardly, those who believe in matter only, can never do 37 anything. Jealousy is the bane of our national character, natural to 38 slaves. Even the Lord with all His power could do nothing on 39 account of this jealousy. Think of me as one who has done all his 40 duty and is now dead and gone. Think that the whole work is upon 41 your shoulders. Think that you, young men of our motherland, are 42 destined to do this. Put yourselves to the task. Lord bless you.
43 Leave me, throw me quite out of sight. Preach the new ideal, the 44 new doctrine, the new life. Preach against nobody, against no 45 custom. Preach neither for nor against caste or any other social 46 evil. Preach to let "hands off", and everything will come right.

47 My blessings on you all, my brave, steadfast, and loving 48 souls.

3 OUR DUTY TO THE MASSES
4

5 Shri Narayana bless you and yours. Through your Highness'
6 kind help it has been possible for me to come to this country. Since 7 then I have become well known here, and the hospitable people of 8 this country have supplied all my wants. It is a wonderful country, 9 and this is a wonderful nation in many respects. No other nation 10 applies so much machinery in their everyday work as do the people 11 of this country. Everything is machine. Then again, they are only 12 one-twentieth of the whole population of the world. Yet they have 13 fully one-sixth of all the wealth in the world. There is no limit to 14 their wealth and luxuries. Yet everything here is so dear. The wages 15 of labour are the highest in the world; yet the fight between labour 16 and capital is constant.

17 Nowhere on earth have women so many privileges as in 18 America. They are slowly taking everything into their hands; and, 19 strange to say, the number of cultured women is much greater than 20 that of cultured men. Of course, the higher geniuses are mostly 21 from the ranks of males. With all the criticism of the Westerners 22 against our caste, they have a worse one--that of money. The 23 almighty dollar, as the Americans say, can do anything here.

24 No country on earth has so many laws, and in no country are 25 they so little regarded. On the whole our poor Hindu people are 26 infinitely more moral than any of the Westerners. In religion they 27 practise here either hypocrisy or fanaticism. Sober-minded men 28 have become disgusted with their superstitious religions and are 29 looking forward to India for new light. Your Highness cannot realise 30 without seeing how eagerly they take in any little bit of the grand 31 thoughts of the holy Vedas, which resist and are unharmed by the 32 terrible onslaughts of modern science. The theories of creation out 33 of nothing, of a created soul, and of the big tyrant of a God sitting 34 on a throne in a place called heaven, and of the eternal hell-fires 35 have disgusted all the educated; and the noble thoughts of the 36 Vedas about the eternity of creation and of the soul, and about the 37 God in our own soul, they are imbibing fast in one shape or other.
38 Within fifty years the educated of the world will come to believe in 39 the eternity of both soul and creation, and in God as our highest 40 and perfect nature, as taught in our holy Vedas. Even now their 41 learned priests are interpreting the Bible in that way. My 42 conclusion is that they require more spiritual civilisation, and we, 43 more material.

44 The one thing that is at the root of all evils in India is the 45 condition of the poor. The poor in the West are devils; compared to 46 them ours are angels, and it is therefore so much the easier to raise 47 our poor. The only service to be done for our lower classes is to give 48 them education, to develop their lost individuality. That is the great 49 task between our people and princes. Up to now nothing has been 50 done in that direction. Priest-power and foreign conquest have

1 trodden them down for centuries, and at last the poor of India have 2 forgotten that they are human beings. They are to be given ideas; 3 their eyes are to be opened to what is going on in the world around 4 them; and then they will work out their own salvation. Every nation, 5 every man, and every woman must work out their own salvation.
6 Give them ideas--that is the only help they require, and then the 7 rest must follow as the effect. Ours is to put the chemicals together, 8 the crystallisation comes in the law of nature. Our duty is to put 9 ideas into their heads, they will do the rest. This is what is to be 10 done in India. It is this idea that has been in my mind for a long 11 time. I could not accomplish it in India, and that was the reason of 12 my coming to this country. The great difficulty in the way of 13 educating the poor is this. Supposing even your Highness opens a 14 free school in every village, still it would do no good, for the poverty 15 in India is such, that the poor boys would rather go to help their 16 fathers in the fields, or otherwise try to make a living, than come to 17 the school. Now if the mountain does not come to Mohammed, 18 Mohammed must go to the mountain. If the poor boy cannot come 19 to education, education must go to him. There are thousands of 20 single-minded, self-sacrificing Sannyasins in our own country, going 21 from village to village, teaching religion. If some of them can be 22 organised as teachers of secular things also, they will go from place 23 to place, from door to door, not only preaching, but teaching also.
24 Suppose two of these men go to a village in the evening with a 25 camera, a globe, some maps, etc. They can teach a great deal of 26 astronomy and geography to the ignorant. By telling stories about 27 different nations, they can give the poor a hundred times more 28 information through the ear than they can get in a lifetime through 29 books. This requires an organisation, which again means money.
30 Men enough there are in India to work out this plan, but alas! they 31 have no money. It is very difficult to set a wheel in motion; but when 32 once set, it goes on with increasing velocity. After seeking help in 33 my own country and failing to get any sympathy from the rich, I 34 came over to this country through your Highness' aid. The 35 Americans do not care a bit whether the poor of India die or live.
36 And why should they, when our own people never think of anything 37 but their own selfish ends?

38 My noble Prince, this life is short, the vanities of the world 39 are transient, but they alone live who live for others, the rest are 40 more dead than alive. One such high, noble-minded, and royal son 41 of India as your Highness can do much towards raising India on her 42 feet again and thus leave a name to posterity which shall be 43 worshipped.

44 That the Lord may make your noble heart feel intensely for 45 the suffering millions of India, sunk in ignorance, is the prayer of--

46 Vivekananda.

REPLY TO THE CALCUTTA ADDRESS

I am in receipt of the resolutions that were passed at the recent Town Hall meeting in Calcutta and the kind words my fellow-citizens sent over to me.

Accept, sir, my most heartfelt gratitude for your appreciation of my insignificant services.

I am thoroughly convinced that no individual or nation can live by holding itself apart from the community of others, and whenever such an attempt has been made under the false ideas of greatness, policy, or holiness--the result has always been disastrous to the secluding one.

To my mind, the one great cause of the downfall and the degeneration of India was the building of a wall of custom--whose foundation was hatred of others--round the nation, and the real aim of which in ancient times was to prevent the Hindus from coming in contact with the surrounding Buddhistic nations.

Whatever cloak ancient or modern sophistry may try to throw over it, the inevitable result--the vindication of the moral law, that none can hate others without degenerating himself--is that the race that was foremost amongst the ancient races is now a byword, and a scorn among nations. We are object-lessons of the violation of that law which our ancestors were the first to discover and disseminate.

Give and take is the law; and if India wants to raise herself once more, it is absolutely necessary that she brings out her treasures and throws them broadcast among the nations of the earth, and in return be ready to receive what others have to give her. Expansion is life, contraction is death. Love is life, and hatred is death. We commenced to die the day we began to hate other races; and nothing can prevent our death unless we come back to expansion, which is life.

We must mix, therefore, with all the races of the earth. And every Hindu that goes out to travel in foreign parts renders more benefit to his country than hundreds of men who are bundles of superstitions and selfishness, and whose one aim in life seems to be like that of the dog in the manger. The wonderful structures of national life which the Western nations have raised, are supported by the strong pillars of character, and until we can produce numbers of such, it is useless to fret and fume against this or that power.

Do any deserve liberty who are not ready to give it to others? Let us calmly and in a manly fashion go to work, instead of dissipating our energy in unnecessary frettings and fumings. I, for one, thoroughly believe that no power in the universe can withhold from anyone anything he really deserves. The past was great no

1 doubt, but I sincerely believe that the future will be more glorious 2 still.
3 May Shankara keep us steady in purity, patience, and 4 perseverance!

TO MY BRAVE BOYS

Push on with the organisation. Nothing else is necessary but these--love, sincerity, and patience. What is life but growth, i.e. expansion, i.e. love? Therefore all love is life, it is the only law of life; all selfishness is death, and this is true here or hereafter. It is life to do good, it is death not to do good to others. Ninety per cent of human brutes you see are dead, are ghosts--for none lives, my boys, but he who loves. Feel, my children, feel; feel for the poor, the ignorant, the downtrodden; feel till the heart stops and the brain reels and you think you will go mad--then pour the soul out at the feet of the Lord, and then will come power, help, and indomitable energy. Struggle, struggle, was my motto for the last ten years. Struggle, still say I. When it was all dark, I used to say, struggle; when light is breaking in, I still say, struggle. Be not afraid, my children. Look not up in that attitude of fear towards that infinite starry vault as if it would crush you. Wait! In a few hours more, the whole of it will be under your feet. Wait, money does not pay, nor name; fame does not pay, nor learning. It is love that pays; it is character that cleaves its way through adamant walls of difficulties.

Now the question before us is this. There cannot be any growth without liberty. Our ancestors freed religious thought, and we have a wonderful religion. But they put a heavy chain on the feet of society, and our society is, in a word, horrid, diabolical. In the West, society always had freedom, and look at them. On the other hand, look at their religion.

Liberty is the first condition of growth. Just as man must have liberty to think and speak, so he must have liberty in food, dress, and marriage, and in every other thing, so long as he does not injure others.

We talk foolishly against material civilisation. The grapes are sour. Even taking all that foolishness for granted, in all India there are, say, a hundred thousand really spiritual men and women. Now, for the spiritualisation of these, must three hundred millions be sunk in savagery and starvation? Why should any starve? How was it possible for the Hindus to have been conquered by the Mohammedans? It was due to the Hindus' ignorance of material civilisation. Even the Mohammedans taught them to wear tailor-made clothes. Would the Hindus had learnt from the Mohammedans how to eat in a cleanly way without mixing their food with the dust of the streets! Material civilisation, nay, even luxury, is necessary to create work for the poor. Bread! Bread! I do not believe in a God, who cannot give me bread here, giving me eternal bliss in heaven! Pooh! India is to be raised, the poor are to be fed, education is to be spread, and the evil of priestcraft is to be removed. No priestcraft, no social tyranny! More bread, more opportunity for everybody!

1 Our young fools organise meetings to get more power from the 2 English. They only laugh. None deserves liberty who is not ready to 3 give liberty. Suppose the English give over to you all the power.
4 Why, the powers that be then, will hold the people down, and let 5 them not have it. Slaves want power to make slaves.

6 Now, this is to be brought about slowly, and by only insisting 7 on our religion and giving liberty to society. Root up priestcraft
8 from the old religion, and you get the best religion in the world. Do 9 you understand me? Can you make a European society with India's 10 religion? I believe it is possible, and must be.

11 The grand plan is to start a colony in Central India, where 12 you can follow your own ideas independently, and then a little 13 leaven will leaven all. In the meanwhile form a Central Association 14 and go on branching off all over India. Start only on religious 15 grounds now, and do not preach any violent social reform at 16 present; only do not countenance foolish superstitions. Try to revive 17 society on the old grounds of universal salvation and equality as laid 18 down by the old Masters, such as Shankaracharya, Ramanuja, and 19 Chaitanya.

20 Have fire and spread all over. Work, work. Be the servant 21 while leading. Be unselfish, and never listen to one friend in private 22 accusing another. Have infinite patience, and success is yours.

23 Now take care of this: Do not try to "boss" others, as the 24 Yankees say. Because I always direct my letters to you, you need 25 not try to show your consequence over my other friends. I know you 26 never can be such a fool, but still I think it is my duty to warn you.
27 This is what kills all organisations. Work, work, for, to work only for 28 the good of others is life.

29 I want that there should be no hypocrisy, no Jesuitism, no
30 roguery. I have depended always on the Lord, always on Truth 31 broad as the light of day. Let me not die with stains on my 32 conscience for having played Jesuitism to get up name or fame, or 33 even to do good. There should not be a breath of immorality, nor a 34 stain of policy which is bad.

35 No shilly-shally, no esoteric blackguardism, no secret 36 humbug, nothing should be done in a corner. No special favouritism 37 of the Master, no Master at that, even. Onward, my brave boys-- 38 money or no money--men or no men! Have you love? Have you God?
39 Onward and forward to the breach, you are irresistible.

40 How absurd! The Theosophical magazines are saying that 41 they, the Theosophists, prepared the way to my success! Indeed!
42 Pure nonsense! Theosophists prepared the way!

43 Take care! Beware of everything that is untrue; stick to truth
44 and we shall succeed, maybe slowly, but surely. Work on as if I 45 never existed. Work as if on each of you depended the whole work.
46 Fifty centuries are looking on you, the future of India depends on 47 you. Work on. I do not know when I shall be able to come. This is a 48 great field for work. They can at best praise in India, but they will 49 not give a cent for anything; and where shall they get it, beggars
50 themselves? Then, they have lost the faculty of doing public good

1 for the last two thousand years or more. They are just learning the 2 ideas of nation, public, etc. So I need not blame them.
3 Blessings to you all!

3 A PLAN OF WORK FOR INDIA
4

5 It is with a heart full of love, gratitude, and trust that I take 6 up my pen to write to you. Let me tell you first, that you are one of 7 the few men that I have met in my life who are thorough in their 8 convictions. You have a whole-souled possession of a wonderful 9 combination of feeling and knowledge, and withal a practical ability 10 to bring ideas into realised forms. Above all, you are sincere, and as 11 such I confide to you some of my ideas.

12 The work has begun well in India, and it should not only be 13 kept up, but pushed on with the greatest vigour. Now or never is 14 the time. After taking a far and wide view of things, my mind has 15 now been concentrated on the following plan. First, it would be well 16 to open a Theological College in Madras, and then gradually extend 17 its scope, to give a thorough education to young men in the Vedas
18 and the different Bhashyas and philosophies, including a knowledge 19 of the other religions of the world. At the same time a paper in 20 English and the vernacular should be started as an organ of the 21 College.

22 This is the first step to be taken, and huge things grow out of 23 small undertakings. Madras just now is following the golden mean 24 by appreciating both the ancient and modern phases of life.

25 I fully agree with the educated classes in India that a 26 thorough overhauling of society is necessary. But how to do it? The 27 destructive plans of reformers have failed. My plan is this. We have 28 not done badly in the past, certainly not. Our society is not bad but 29 good, only I want it to be better still. Not from error to truth, nor 30 from bad to good, but from truth to higher truth, from good to 31 better, best. I tell my countrymen that so far they have done well-- 32 now is the time to do better.

33 Now, take the case of caste--in Sanskrit, Jati, i.e. species.
34 Now, this is the first idea of creation. Variation (Vichitrata), that is 35 to say Jati, means creation. "I am One, I become many" (various 36 Vedas). Unity is before creation, diversity is creation. Now if this 37 diversity stops, creation will be destroyed. So long as any species is 38 vigorous and active, it must throw out varieties. When it ceases or 39 is stopped from breeding varieties, it dies. Now the original idea of 40 Jati was this freedom of the individual to express his nature, his 41 Prakriti, his Jati, his caste; and so it remained for thousands of 42 years. Not even in the latest books is inter-dining prohibited; nor in 43 any of the older books is inter-marriage forbidden. Then what was 44 the cause of India's downfall?--the giving up of this idea of caste. As 45 Gita says, with the extinction of caste the world will be destroyed.
46 Now does it seem true that with the stoppage of these variations 47 the world will be destroyed? The present caste is not the real Jati, 48 but a hindrance to its progress. It really has prevented the free 49 action of Jati, i.e. caste or variation. Any crystallised custom or 50 privilege or hereditary class in any shape really prevents caste (Jati)

1 from having its full sway; and whenever any nation ceases to 2 produce this immense variety, it must die. Therefore what I have to 3 tell you, my countrymen, is this, that India fell because you 4 prevented and abolished caste. Every frozen aristocracy or 5 privileged class is a blow to caste and is not-caste. Let Jati have its 6 sway; break down every barrier in the way of caste, and we shall 7 rise. Now look at Europe. When it succeeded in giving free scope to 8 caste and took away most of the barriers that stood in the way of 9 individuals, each developing his caste--Europe rose. In America, 10 there is the best scope for caste (real Jati) to develop, and so the 11 people are great. Every Hindu knows that astrologers try to fix the 12 caste of every boy or girl as soon as he or she is born. That is the 13 real caste--the individuality, and Jyotisha (astrology) recognises 14 that. And we can only rise by giving it full sway again. This variety 15 does not mean inequality, nor any special privilege.

16 This is my method--to show the Hindus that they have to give 17 up nothing, but only to move on in the line laid down by the sages 18 and shake off their inertia, the result of centuries of servitude. Of 19 course, we had to stop advancing during the Mohammedan tyranny, 20 for then it was not a question of progress but of life and death. Now 21 that that pressure has gone, we must move forward, not on the 22 lines of destruction directed by renegades and missionaries, but 23 along our own line, our own road. Everything is hideous because 24 the building is unfinished. We had to stop building during centuries 25 of oppression. Now finish the building and everything will look 26 beautiful in its own place. This is all my plan. I am thoroughly 27 convinced of this. Each nation has a main current in life; in India it 28 is religion. Make it strong and the waters on either side must move 29 along with it. This is one phase of my line of thought. In time, I hope 30 to bring them all out, but at present I find I have a mission in this 31 country also. Moreover, I expect help in this country and from here 32 alone. But up to date I could not do anything except spreading my 33 ideas. Now I want that a similar attempt be made in India.

34 I do not know when I shall go over to India. I obey the 35 leading of the Lord. I am in His hands.

36 "In this world in search of wealth, Thou art, O Lord, the 37 greatest jewel I have found. I sacrifice myself unto Thee."

38 "In search of some one to love, Thou art the One Beloved I 39 have found. I sacrifice myself unto Thee." (Yajurveda Samhita).

40 May the Lord bless you for ever and ever!

FUNDAMENTALS OF RELIGIONS

My mind can best grasp the religions of the world, ancient or modern, dead or living, through this fourfold division:

1. Symbology--The employment of various external aids to preserve and develop the religious faculty of man.

2. History--The philosophy of each religion as illustrated in the lives of divine or human teachers acknowledged by each religion. This includes mythology; for what is mythology to one race, or period, is or was history to other races or periods. Even in cases of human teachers, much of their history is taken as mythology by successive generations.

3. Philosophy--The rationale of the whole scope of each religion.

4. Mysticism--The assertion of something superior to sense-knowledge and reason which particular persons, or all persons under certain circumstances, possess; runs through the other divisions also.

All the religions of the world, past or present, embrace one or more of these principles, the highly developed ones having all the four.

Of these highly developed religions again, some had no sacred book or books and they have disappeared; but those which were based on sacred books are living to the present day. As such, all the great religions of the world today are founded on sacred books.

The Vedic on the Vedas (misnamed the Hindu or Brahminic).

The Avestic on the Avesta.

The Mosaic on the Old Testament.

The Buddhistic on the Tripitaka.

The Christian on the New Testament.

The Mohammedan on the Koran.

The Taoists and the Confucianists in China, having also books, are so inextricably mixed up with the Buddhistic form of religion as to be catalogued with Buddhism.

Again, although strictly speaking there are no absolutely

1 racial religions, yet it may be said that, of this group, the Vedic, the 2 Mosaic, and the Avestic religions are confined to the races to which 3 they originally belonged; while the Buddhistic, the Christian, and 4 the Mohammedan religions have been from their very beginning 5 spreading religions.

6 The struggle will be between the Buddhists and Christians
7 and Mohammedans to conquer the world, and the racial religions 8 also will have unavoidably to join in the struggle. Each one of these 9 religions, racial or spreading, has been already split into various 10 branches and has undergone vast changes consciously or 11 unconsciously to adapt itself to varying circumstances. This very 12 fact shows that not one of them is fitted alone to be the religion of 13 the entire human race. Each religion being the effect of certain 14 peculiarities of the race it sprang from, and being in turn the cause 15 of the intensification and preservation of those very peculiarities, 16 not one of them can fit the universal human nature. Not only so, but 17 there is a negative element in each. Each one helps the growth of a 18 certain part of human nature, but represses everything else which 19 the race from which it sprang had not. Thus one religion to become 20 universal would be dangerous and degenerating to man.

21 Now the history of the world shows that these two dreams-- 22 that of a universal political Empire and that of a universal religious 23 Empire--have been long before mankind, but that again and again 24 the plans of the greatest conquerors had been frustrated by the 25 splitting up of his territories before he could conquer only a little 26 part of the earth; and similarly every religion has been split into 27 sects before it was fairly out of its cradle.

28 Yet it seems to be true, that the solidarity of the human race, 29 social as well as religious, with a scope for infinite variation, is the 30 plan of nature; and if the line of least resistance is the true line of 31 action, it seems to me that this splitting up of each religion into 32 sects is the preservation of religion by frustrating the tendency to 33 rigid sameness, as well as the clear indication to us of the line of 34 procedure.

35 The end seems, therefore, to be not destruction but a 36 multiplication of sects until each individual is a sect unto himself.
37 Again a background of unity will come by the fusion of all the 38 existing religions into one grand philosophy. In the mythologies or 39 the ceremonials there never will be unity, because we differ more in 40 the concrete than in the abstract. Even while admitting the same 41 principle, men will differ as to the greatness of each of his ideal 42 teacher.

43 So, by this fusion will be found out a union of philosophy as 44 the basis of union, leaving each at liberty to choose his teacher or 45 his form as illustrations of that unity. This fusion is what is naturally 46 going on for thousands of years; only, by mutual antagonism, it has 47 been woefully held back.

48 Instead of antagonising, therefore, we must help all such 49 interchange of ideas between different races, by sending teachers 50 to each other, so as to educate humanity in all the various religions 51 of the world; but we must insist as the great Buddhist Emperor of 1 India, Ashoka, did, in the second century before Christ, not to abuse 2 others, or to try to make a living out of others' faults; but to help, to 3 sympathise, and to enlighten.

4 There is a great outcry going over the world against 5 metaphysical knowledge as opposed to what is styled physical 6 knowledge. This crusade against the metaphysical and the beyond-7 this-life, to establish the present life and the present world on a 8 firmer basis, is fast becoming a fashion to which even the preachers 9 of religion one after the other are fast succumbing. Of course, the 10 unthinking multitude are always following things which present to 11 them a pleasing surface; but when those who ought to know better, 12 follow unmeaning fashions, pseudo-philosophical though they 13 profess to be, it becomes a mournful fact.

14 Now, no one denies that our senses, as long as they are 15 normal, are the most trustworthy guides we have, and the facts 16 they gather in for us form the very foundation of the structure of 17 human knowledge. But if they mean that all human knowledge is 18 only sense-perception and nothing but that, we deny it. If by 19 physical sciences are meant systems of knowledge which are 20 entirely based and built upon sense-perception, and nothing but 21 that, we contend that such a science never existed nor will ever 22 exist. Nor will any system of knowledge, built upon sense-23 perception alone, ever be a science.

24 Senses no doubt cull the materials of knowledge and find 25 similarities and dissimilarities; but there they have to stop. In the 26 first place the physical gatherings of facts are conditioned by 27 certain metaphysical conceptions, such as space and time.
28 Secondly, grouping facts, or generalisation, is impossible without 29 some abstract notion as the background. The higher the 30 generalisation, the more metaphysical is the abstract background 31 upon which the detached facts are arranged. Now, such ideas as 32 matter, force, mind, law, causation, time, and space are the results 33 of very high abstractions, and nobody has ever sensed any one of 34 them; in other words, they are entirely metaphysical. Yet without 35 these metaphysical conceptions, no physical fact is possible to be 36 understood. Thus a certain motion becomes understood when it is 37 referred to a force; certain sensations, to matter; certain changes 38 outside, to law; certain changes in thought, to mind; certain order 39 singly, to causation--and joined to time, to law. Yet nobody has seen 40 or even imagined matter or force, law or causation, time or space.

41 It may be urged that these, as abstracted concepts, do not 42 exist, and that these abstractions are nothing separate or separable 43 from the groups of which they are, so to say, only qualities.

44 Apart from the question whether abstractions are possible
45 or not, or whether there is something besides the generalised 46 groups or not, it is plain that these notions of matter or force, time 47 or space, causation, law, or mind, are held to be units abstracted 48 and independent (by themselves) of the groups, and that it is only 49 when they are thought of as such, they furnish themselves as 50 explanations of the facts in sense-perception. That is to say, apart 51 from the validity of these notions, we see two facts about them--

1 first, they are metaphysical; second, that only as metaphysical do 2 they explain the physical and not otherwise.

3 Whether the external conforms to the internal, or the 4 internal to the external, whether matter conforms to mind, or mind 5 to matter, whether the surroundings mould the mind, or the mind 6 moulds the circumstances, is old, old question, and is still today as 7 new and vigorous as it ever was. Apart from the question of 8 precedence or causation--without trying to solve the problem as to 9 whether the mind is the cause of matter or matter the cause of 10 mind--it is evident that whether the external was formed by the 11 internal or not, it must conform itself to the internal for us to be 12 able to know it. Supposing that the external world is the cause of 13 the internal, yet we shall have to admit that the external world, as 14 cause of our mind, is unknown and unknowable, because the mind 15 can only know that much or that view of the external or that view 16 which conforms to or is a reflection of its own nature. That which is 17 its own reflection could not have been its cause. Now that view of 18 the whole mass of existence, which is cut off by mind and known, 19 certainly cannot be the cause of mind, as its very existence is 20 known in and through the mind.

21 Thus it is impossible to deduce a mind from matter. Nay, it is 22 absurd. Because on the very face of it that portion of existence 23 which is bereft of the qualities of thought and life and endowed 24 with the quality of externality is called matter, and that portion 25 which is bereft of externality and endowed with the qualities of 26 thought and life is called mind. Now to prove matter from mind, or 27 mind from matter, is to deduce from each the very qualities we have 28 taken away from each; and, therefore, all the fight about the 29 causality of mind or matter is merely a word puzzle and nothing 30 more. Again, throughout all these controversies runs, as a rule, the 31 fallacy of imparting different meanings to the words mind and 32 matter. If sometimes the word mind is used as something opposed 33 and external to matter, at others as something which embraces both 34 the mind and matter, i.e. of which both the external and internal are 35 parts on the materialistic side; the word matter is sometimes used 36 in the restricted sense of something external which we sense, and 37 again it means something which is the cause of all the phenomena 38 both external and internal. The materialist frightens the idealist by 39 claiming to derive his mind from the elements of the laboratory, 40 while all the time he is struggling to express something higher than 41 all elements and atoms, something of which both the external and 42 the internal phenomena are results, and which he terms matter. The 43 idealist, on the other hand, wants to derive all the elements and 44 atoms of the materialist from his own thought, even while catching 45 glimpses of something which is the cause of both mind and matter, 46 and which he oftentimes calls God. That is to say, one party wants to 47 explain the whole universe by a portion of it which is external, the 48 other by another portion which is internal. Both of these attempts 49 are impossible. Mind and matter cannot explain each other. The 50 only explanation is to be sought for in something which will 51 embrace both matter and mind.

52 It may be argued that thought cannot exist without mind, for 1 supposing there was a time when there was no thought, matter, as 2 we know it, certainly could not have existed. On the other hand, it 3 may be said that knowledge being impossible without experience, 4 and experience presupposing the external world, the existence of 5 mind, as we know it, is impossible without the existence of matter.

6 Nor is it possible that either of them had a beginning.
7 Generalisation is the essence of knowledge. Generalisation is 8 impossible without a storage of similarities. Even the fact of 9 comparison is impossible without previous experience. Knowledge 10 thus is impossible without previous knowledge--and knowledge 11 necessitating the existence of both thought and matter, both of 12 them are without beginning.

13 Again generalisation, the essence of sense-knowledge, is 14 impossible without something upon which the detached facts of 15 perception unite. The whole world of external perceptions requires 16 something upon which to unite in order to form a concept of the 17 world, as painting must have its canvas. If thought or mind be this 18 canvas to the external world, it, in its turn requires another. Mind 19 being a series of different feelings and willing—and not a unit, 20 requires something besides itself as its background of unity. Here 21 all analysis is bound to stop, for a real unity has been found. The 22 analysis of a compound cannot stop until an indivisible unit has 23 been reached. The fact that presents us with such a unity for both 24 thought and matter must necessarily be the last indivisible basis of 25 every phenomenon, for we cannot conceive any further analysis; 26 nor is any further analysis necessary, as this includes an analysis of 27 all our external and internal perceptions.

28 So far then, we see that a totality of mental and material 29 phenomena, and something beyond, upon which they are both 30 playing, are the results of our investigation.

31 Now this something beyond is not in sense-perception; it is a 32 logical necessity, and a feeling of its indefinable presence runs 33 through all our sense-perceptions. We see also that to this 34 something we are driven by the sheer necessity of being true to our 35 reason and generalising faculty.

36 It may be urged that there is no necessity whatsoever of 37 postulating any such substance or being beyond the mass of mental 38 and material phenomena. The totality of phenomena is all that we 39 know or can know, and it requires nothing beyond itself to explain 40 itself. An analysis beyond the senses is impossible, and the feeling 41 of a substance in which everything inheres is simply an illusion.

42 We see, that from the most ancient times, there have been 43 these two schools among thinkers. One party claims that the 44 unavoidable necessity of the human mind to form concepts and 45 abstractions is the natural guide to knowledge, and that it can stop 46 nowhere until we have transcended all phenomena and formed a 47 concept which is absolute in all directions, transcending time and 48 space and causality. Now if this ultimate concept is arrived at by 49 analysing the whole phenomena of thought and matter, step by 50 step, taking the cruder first and resolving it into a finer, and still 51 finer, until we arrive at something which stands as the solution of 1 everything else, it is obvious that everything else beyond this final 2 result is a momentary modification of itself, and as such, this final 3 result alone is real and everything else is but its shadow. The 4 reality, therefore, is not in the senses but beyond them.

5 On the other hand, the other party holds that the only reality 6 in the universe is what our senses bring to us, and although a sense 7 of something beyond hangs on to all our sense-perceptions, that is 8 only a trick of the mind, and therefore unreal.

9 Now a changing something can never be understood, 10 without the idea of something unchanging; and if it be said that that 11 unchanging something, to which the changing is referred, is also a 12 changing phenomenon only relatively unchanging, and is therefore 13 to be referred to something else, and so on, we say that however 14 infinitely long this series be, the very fact of our inability to 15 understand a changeable without an unchangeable forces us to 16 postulate one as the background of all the changeable. And no one 17 has the right to take one part of a whole as right and reject the 18 other at will. If one takes the obverse he must take the reverse of 19 the same coin also, however he may dislike it.

20 Again, with every movement, man asserts his freedom. From 21 the highest thinker to the most ignorant man everyone knows that 22 he is free. Now every man at the same time finds out with a little 23 thinking that every action of his had motives and conditions, and 24 given those motives and conditions his particular action can be as 25 rigorously deduced as any other fact in causation.

26 Here, again, the same difficulty occurs. Man's will is as 27 rigorously bound by the law of causation as the growth of any little 28 plant or the falling of a stone, and, yet, through all this bondage 29 runs the indestructible idea of freedom. Here also the totality side 30 will declare that the idea of freedom is an illusion and man is wholly 31 a creature of necessity.

32 Now, on the one hand, this denial of freedom as an illusion is 33 no explanation; on the other hand, why not say that the idea of 34 necessity or bondage or causation is an illusion of the ignorant? Any 35 theory which can fit itself to facts which it wants to explain, by first 36 cutting as many of them as prevents its fitting itself into them, is on 37 the face of it wrong. Therefore the only way left to us is to admit 38 first that the body is not free, neither is the will, but that there must 39 be something beyond both the mind and body which is free and

KALI THE MOTHER

The stars are blotted out,
The clouds are covering clouds,
It is darkness vibrant, sonant.
In the roaring, whirling wind
Are the souls of a million lunatics
Just loose from the prison-house,
Wrenching trees by the roots,
Sweeping all from the path.
The sea has joined the fray,
And swirls up mountain-waves,
To reach the pitchy sky.
The flash of lurid light
Reveals on every side
A thousand, thousand shades
Of Death begrimed and black--
Scattering plagues and sorrows,
Dancing mad with joy,
Come, Mother, come!
For Terror is Thy name,
Death is in Thy breath,
And every shaking step
Destroys a world for e'er.
Thou "Time", the All-Destroyer!
Come, O Mother, come!
Who dares misery love,
And hug the form of Death,
Dance in Destruction's dance,
To him the Mother comes.

ANGELS UNAWARES

I

One bending low with load of life--
That meant no joy, but suffering harsh and hard--
And wending on his way through dark and dismal paths
Without a flash of light from brain or heart
To give a moment's cheer, till the line
That marks out pain from pleasure, death from life,
And good from what is evil was well-nigh wiped from sight,
Saw, one blessed night, a faint but beautiful ray of light
Descend to him. He knew not what or wherefrom,
But called it God and worshipped.
Hope, an utter stranger, came to him and spread
Through all his parts, and life to him meant more
Than he could ever dream and covered all he knew,
Nay, peeped beyond his world. The Sages
Winked, and smiled, and called it "superstition".
But he did feel its power and peace
And gently answered back--
"O Blessed Superstition! "

II

One drunk with wine of wealth and power
And health to enjoy them both, whirled on
His maddening course, till the earth, he thought,
Was made for him, his pleasure-garden, and man,
The crawling worm, was made to find him sport,
Till the thousand lights of joy, with pleasure fed,
That flickered day and night before his eyes,
With constant change of colours, began to blur
His sight, and cloy his senses; till selfishness,
Like a horny growth, had spread all o'er his heart;
And pleasure meant to him no more than pain,
Bereft of feeling; and life in the sense,
So joyful, precious once, a rotting corpse between his arms,

1 Which he forsooth would shun, but more he tried, the more
2 It clung to him; and wished, with frenzied brain, 3 A thousand forms of death, but quailed before the charm,
4 Then sorrow came--and Wealth and Power went-- 5 And made him kinship find with all the human race 6 In groans and tears, and though his friends would laugh,
7 His lips would speak in grateful accents--
8 "O Blessed Misery!"

9
10 III

11 One born with healthy frame--but not of will 12 That can resist emotions deep and strong,
13 Nor impulse throw, surcharged with potent strength-- 14 And just the sort that pass as good and kind, 15 Beheld that he was safe, whilst others long 16 And vain did struggle 'gainst the surging waves.
17 Till, morbid grown, his mind could see, like flies
18 That seek the putrid part, but what was bad.
19 Then Fortune smiled on him, and his foot slipped.
20 That ope'd his eyes for e'er, and made him find 21 That stones and trees ne'er break the law,
22 But stones and trees remain; that man alone
23 Is blest with power to fight and conquer Fate, 24 Transcending bounds and laws.
25 From him his passive nature fell, and life appeared 26 As broad and new, and broader, newer grew, 27 Till light ahead began to break, and glimpse of That 28 Where Peace Eternal dwells--yet one can only reach 29 By wading through the sea of struggles--courage-giving, 30 came.
31 Then looking back on all that made him kin
32 To stocks and stones, and on to what the world
33 Had shunned him for, his fall, he blessed the fall, 34 And with a joyful heart, declared it-- 35 "Blessed Sin!"

1 TO THE AWAKENED INDIA

2
3 Once more awake!

4 For sleep it was, not death, to bring thee life
5 Anew, and rest to lotus-eyes for visions
6 Daring yet. The world in need awaits, O Truth!
7 No death for thee!

8
9 Resume thy march,

10 With gentle feet that would not break the 11 Peaceful rest even of the roadside dust
12 That lies so low. Yet strong and steady,
13 Blissful, bold, and free. Awakener, ever 14 Forward! Speak thy stirring words.

15
16 Thy home is gone,

17 Where loving hearts had brought thee up and 18 Watched with joy thy growth. But Fate is strong-- 19 This is the law--all things come back to the source 20 They sprung, their strength to renew.

21
22 Then start afresh

23 From the land of thy birth, where vast cloud-belted 24 Snows do bless and put their strength in thee, 25 For working wonders new. The heavenly
26 River tune thy voice to her own immortal song;
27 Deodar shades give thee eternal peace.

28
29 And all above,

30 Himala's daughter Uma, gentle, pure,
31 The Mother that resides in all as Power 32 And Life, who works all works and 33 Makes of One the world, whose mercy
34 Open the gate to Truth and shows
35 The One in All, give thee untiring
36 Strength, which is Infinite Love.

37
38 They bless thee all,

1 The seers great, whom age nor dime
2 Can claim their own, the fathers of the 3 Race, who felt the heart of Truth the same,
4 And bravely taught to man ill-voiced or 5 Well. Their servant, thou hast got 6 The secret--'tis but One.

7

8 Then speak, O Love!

9 Before thy gentle voice serene, behold how 10 Visions melt and fold on fold of dreams
11 Departs to void, till Truth and Truth alone
12 In all its glory shines--

13

14 And tell the world--

15 Awake, arise, and dream no more!
16 This is the land of dreams, where Karma
17 Weaves unthreaded garlands with our thoughts
18 Of flowers sweet or noxious, and none
19 Has root or stem, being born in naught, which 20 The softest breath of Truth drives back to 21 Primal nothingness. Be bold, and face
22 The Truth! Be one with it! Let visions cease, 23 Or, if you cannot, dream but truer dreams,
24 Which are Eternal Love and Service Free.

25

26

27

28

29 REQUIESCAT IN PACE

30

31 Speed forth, O Soul! upon thy star-strewn path;
32 Speed, blissful one! where thought is ever free, 33 Where time and space no longer mist the view, 34 Eternal peace and blessings be with thee!

35

36 Thy service true, complete thy sacrifice, 37 Thy home the heart of love transcendent find;
38 Remembrance sweet, that kills all space and time,

1 Like altar roses fill thy place behind!
2
3 Thy bonds are broke, thy quest in bliss is found,
4 And one with That which comes as Death and Life;
5 Thou helpful one! unselfish e'er on earth,
6 Ahead! still help with love this world of strife!

11 HOLD ON YET A WHILE, BRAVE HEART

12
13 If the sun by the cloud is hidden a bit,
14 If the welkin shows but gloom,
15 Still hold on yet a while, brave heart, 16 The victory is sure to come.

17
18 No winter was but summer came behind,
19 Each hollow crests the wave,
20 They push each other in light and shade;
21 Be steady then and brave.

22
23 The duties of life are sore indeed,
24 And its pleasures fleeting, vain,
25 The goal so shadowy seems and dim,
26 Yet plod on through the dark, brave heart,
27 With all thy might and main.

28
29 Not a work will be lost, no struggle vain,
30 Though hopes be blighted, powers gone;
31 Of thy loins shall come the heirs to all,
32 Then hold on yet a while, brave soul,
33 No good is e'er undone.

34
35 Though the good and the wise in life are few, 36 Yet theirs are the reins to lead,
37 The masses know but late the worth;

1 Heed none and gently guide.

2

3 With thee are those who see afar,
4 With thee is the Lord of might,
5 All blessings pour on thee, great soul,
6 To thee may all come right!

10 NIRVANASHATKAM, OR SIX STANZAS ON NIRVANA

11

12 I am neither the mind, nor the intellect, nor the ego, nor the 13 mind-stuff;

14 I am neither the body, nor the changes of the body;

15 I am neither the senses of hearing, taste, smell, or sight,

16 Nor am I the ether, the earth, the fire, the air;

17 I am Existence Absolute, Knowledge Absolute, Bliss
18 Absolute--

19 I am He, I am He. (Shivoham, Shivoham).

20

21 I am neither the Prana, nor the five vital airs;

22 I am neither the materials of the body, nor the five sheaths;

23 Neither am I the organs of action, nor object of the senses;

24 I am Existence Absolute, Knowledge Absolute, Bliss
25 Absolute--

26 I am He, I am He. (Shivoham, Shivoham).

27

28 I have neither aversion nor attachment, neither greed nor 29 delusion;

30 Neither egotism nor envy, neither Dharma nor Moksha;

31 I am neither desire nor objects of desire;

32 I am Existence Absolute, Knowledge Absolute, Bliss
33 Absolute--

34 I am He, I am He. (Shivoham, Shivoham).

35

36 I am neither sin nor virtue, neither pleasure nor pain;

37 Nor temple nor worship, nor pilgrimage nor scriptures,

38 Neither the act of enjoying, the enjoyable nor the enjoyer;

1 I am Existence Absolute, Knowledge Absolute, Bliss
2 Absolute--

3 I am He, I am He. (Shivoham, Shivoham).
4

5 I have neither death nor fear of death, nor caste; 6 Nor was I ever born, nor had I parents, friends, and 7 relations;

8 I have neither Guru, nor disciple;

9 I am Existence Absolute, Knowledge Absolute, Bliss
10 Absolute--

11 I am He, I am He. (Shivoham, Shivoham).
12

13 I am untouched by the senses, I am neither Mukti nor 14 knowable;

15 I am without form, without limit, beyond space, beyond time;

16 I am in everything; I am the basis of the universe;
17 everywhere am I.

18 I am Existence Absolute, Knowledge Absolute, Bliss
19 Absolute--

20 I am He, I am He. (Shivoham, Shivoham).

25 THE SONG OF THE SANNYASIN

26

27 Wake up the note! the song that had its birth 28 Far off, where worldly taint could never reach, 29 In mountain caves and glades of forest deep,
30 Whose calm no sigh for lust or wealth or fame
31 Could ever dare to break; where rolled the stream 32 Of knowledge, truth, and bliss that follows both.
33 Sing high that note, Sannyasin bold! Say--

34 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
35

36 Strike off thy fetters! Bonds that bind thee down, 37 Of shining gold, or darker, baser ore;
38 Love, hate--good, bad--and all the dual throng,
39 Know, slave is slave, caressed or whipped, not free;

1 For fetters, though of gold, are not less strong to bind;
2 Then off with them, Sannyasin bold! Say--
3 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
4
5 Let darkness go; the will-o'-the-wisp that leads 6 With blinking light to pile more gloom on gloom.
7 This thirst for life, for ever quench; it drags
8 From birth to death, and death to birth, the soul.
9 He conquers all who conquers self. Know this 10 And never yield, Sannyasin bold! Say--
11 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
12
13 "Who sows must reap," they say, "and cause must bring 14 The sure effect; good, good; bad, bad; and none
15 Escape the law. But whoso wears a form 16 Must wear the chain." Too true; but far beyond 17 Both name and form is Atman, ever free.
18 Know thou art That, Sannyasin bold! Say--
19 "Om Tat Sat, Om! "
20
21 They know not truth who dream such vacant dreams
22 As father, mother, children, wife, and friend.
23 The sexless Self! whose father He? whose child?
24 Whose friend, whose foe is He who is but One?
25 The Self is all in all, none else exists;
26 And thou art That, Sannyasin bold! Say--
27 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
28
29 There is but One--The Free--The Knower--Self!
30 Without a name, without a form or stain.
31 In Him is Maya dreaming all this dream.
32 The witness, He appears as nature, soul.
33 Know thou art That, Sannyasin bold! Say--
34 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
35
36 Where seekest thou? That freedom, friend, this world 37 Nor that can give. In books and temples vain

1 Thy search. Thine only is the hand that holds
2 The rope that drags thee on. Then cease lament, 3 Let go thy hold, Sannyasin bold! Say--
4 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
5
6 Say, "Peace to all: From me no danger be 7 To aught that lives. In those that dwell on high.
8 In those that lowly creep, I am the Self in all!
9 All life both here and there, do I renounce,
10 All heavens and earths and hells, all hopes and fears."
11 Thus cut thy bonds, Sannyasin bold! Say--
12 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
13
14 Heed then no more how body lives or goes,
15 Its task is done. Let Karma float it down;
16 Let one put garlands on, another kick
17 This frame; say naught. No praise or blame can be 18 Where praiser praised, and blamer blamed are one.
19 Thus be thou calm, Sannyasin bold! Say--
20 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
21
22 Truth never comes where lust and fame and greed
23 Of gain reside. No man who thinks of woman 24 As his wife can ever perfect be;
25 Nor he who owns the least of things, nor he 26 Whom anger chains, can ever pass thro' Maya's gates.
27 So, give these up, Sannyasin bold! Say--
28 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
29
30 Have thou no home. What home can hold thee, friend?
31 The sky thy roof, the grass thy bed; and food 32 What chance may bring, well cooked or ill, judge not.
33 No food or drink can taint that noble Self 34 Which knows Itself. Like rolling river free 35 Thou ever be, Sannyasin bold! Say--
36 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
37

1 Few only know the truth. The rest will hate
2 And laugh at thee, great one; but pay no heed.
3 Go thou, the free, from place to place, and help 4 Them out of darkness, Maya's veil. Without 5 The fear of pain or search for pleasure, go
6 Beyond them both, Sannyasin bold! Say--
7 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
8
9 Thus, day by day, till Karma's powers spent 10 Release the soul for ever. No more is birth, 11 Nor I, nor thou, nor God, nor man. The "I"
12 Has All become, the All is "I" and Bliss.
13 Know thou art That, Sannyasin bold! Say--
14 "Om Tat Sat, Om!"
15
16 PEACE
17
18 Behold, it comes in might,
19 The power that is not power,
20 The light that is in darkness,
21 The shade in dazzling light.

1 It is joy that never spoke,
2 And grief unfelt, profound,
3 Immortal life unlived,
4 Eternal death unmourned.
5
6 It is not joy nor sorrow,
7 But that which is between,
8 It is not night nor morrow,
9 But that which joins them in.
10 11 It is sweet rest in music;
12 And pause in sacred art;
13 The silence between speaking;
14 Between two fits of passion--
15 It is the calm of heart.
16
17 It is beauty never seen,
18 And love that stands alone,
19 It is song that lives un-sung,
20 And knowledge never known.
21
22 It is death between two lives,
23 And lull between two storms,
24 The void whence rose creation,
25 And that where it returns.
26
27 To it the tear-drop goes,
28 To spread the smiling form
29 It is the Goal of Life,
30 And Peace--its only home!

4 The ancient history of India is full of descriptions of the 5 gigantic energies and their multifarious workings, the boundless 6 spirit, the combination of indomitable action and reaction of the 7 various forces, and, above all, the profound thoughtfulness of a 8 godly race. If the word history is understood to mean merely 9 narratives of kings and emperors, and pictures of society-- 10 tyrannised over from time to time by the evil passions, haughtiness, 11 avarice, etc., of the rulers of the time, portraying the acts resulting 12 from their good or evil propensities, and how these reacted upon 13 the society of that time--such a history India perhaps does not 14 possess. But every line of that mass of the religious literature of 15 India, her ocean of poetry, her philosophies and various scientific 16 works reveal to us--a thousand times more clearly than the 17 narratives of the life-incidents and genealogies of particular kings 18 and emperors can ever do--the exact position and every step made 19 in advance by that vast body of men who, even before the dawn of 20 civilisation, impelled by hunger and thirst, lust and greed, etc., 21 attracted by the charm of beauty, endowed with a great and 22 indomitable mental power, and moved by various sentiments, 23 arrived through various ways and means at that stage of eminence.
24 Although the heaps of those triumphal flags which they gathered in 25 their innumerable victories over nature with which they had been 26 waging war for ages, have, of late, been torn and tattered by the 27 violent winds of adverse circumstances and become worn out 28 through age, yet they still proclaim the glory of Ancient India.

29 Whether this race slowly proceeded from Central Asia, 30 Northern Europe, or the Arctic regions, and gradually came down 31 and sanctified India by settling there at last, or whether the holy 32 land of India was their original native place, we have no proper 33 means of knowing now. Or whether a vast race living in or outside 34 India, being displaced from its original abode, in conformity with 35 natural laws, came in the course of time to colonise and settle over 36 Europe and other places--and whether these people were white or 37 black, blue-eyed or dark-eyed, golden-haired or black-haired--all 38 these matters--there is no sufficient ground to prove now, with the 39 one exception of the fact of the kinship of Sanskrit with a few 40 European languages. Similarly, it is not easy to arrive at a final 41 conclusion as to the modern Indians, whether they all are the pure 42 descendants of that race, or how much of the blood of that race is 43 flowing in their veins, or again, what races amongst them have any 44 of that even in them.

45 However, we do not, in fact, lose much by this uncertainty.

46 But there is one fact to remember. Of that ancient Indian 47 race, upon which the rays of civilisation first dawned, where deep 48 thoughtfulness first revealed itself in full glory, there are still found 49 hundreds of thousands of its children, born of its mind--the 50 inheritors of its thoughts and sentiments--ready to claim them.

1 Crossing over mountains, rivers, and oceans, setting at 2 naught, as it were, the obstacles of the distance of space and time, 3 the blood of Indian thought has flowed, and is still flowing into the 4 veins of other nations of the globe, whether in a distinct or in some 5 subtle unknown way.

6 Perhaps to us belongs the major portion of the universal 7 ancient inheritance.

8 In a small country lying in the eastern corner of the 9 Mediterranean Sea, beautiful and adorned by nature, and 10 garlanded by well-formed and beautiful-looking islands, lived a race 11 of men who were few in number, but of a very charming aspect, 12 perfectly formed, and strong in muscles and sinews, light of body, 13 yet possessing steadiness and perseverance, and who were 14 unrivalled for the creation of all earthly beauties, as well as 15 endowed with extraordinary practicality and intellect. The other 16 ancient nations used to call them Yavanas, but they called 17 themselves Greeks. This handful of a vigorous and wonderful race 18 is a unique example in the annals of man. Wherever and in 19 whatever nation there has been , or is, any advance made in earthly 20 science up to the present day--such as social, martial, political, 21 sculptural, etc.--there the shadow of ancient Greece has fallen. Let 22 us leave apart the consideration of ancient times, for even in this 23 modern age, we, the Bengalis, think ourselves proud and 24 enlightened simply by following the footmarks of these Yavana 25 Gurus for these last fifty years, illumining our homes with what 26 light of theirs is reaching us through the European literature.

27 The whole of Europe nowadays is, in every respect, the 28 disciple of ancient Greece, and her proper inheritor; so much so 29 that a wise man of England had said, "Whatever nature has not 30 created, that is the creation of the Greek mind."

31 These two gigantic rivers (Aryans and Yavanas), issuing from 32 far-away and different mountains (India and Greece), occasionally 33 come in contact with each other, and whenever such confluence 34 takes place, a tremendous intellectual or spiritual tide, rising in 35 human societies, greatly expands the range of civilisation and 36 confirms the bond of universal brotherhood among men.

37 Once in far remote antiquity, the Indian philosophy, coming 38 in contact with Greek energy, led to the rise of the Persian, the 39 Roman, and other great nations. After the invasion of Alexander the 40 Great, these two great waterfalls colliding with each other, deluged 41 nearly half of the globe with spiritual tides, such as Christianity.
42 Again, a similar commingling, resulting in the improvement and 43 prosperity of Arabia, laid the foundation of modern European 44 civilisation. And perhaps, in our own day, such a time for the 45 conjunction of these two gigantic forces has presented itself again.
46 This time their centre is India.

47 The air of India pre-eminently conduces to quietness, the 48 nature of the Yavana is the constant expression of power; profound 49 meditation characterises the one, the indomitable spirit of 50 dexterous activity, the other; one's motto is "renunciation", the 51 other's "enjoyment". One's whole energy is directed inwards, the 1 other's, outwards; one's whole learning consists in the knowledge 2 of the Self or the Subject, the other's, in the knowledge of the not-3 Self or the object (perishable creation); one loves Moksha (spiritual 4 freedom), the other loves political independence; one is unmindful 5 of gaining prosperity in this world, the other sets his whole heart on 6 making a heaven of this world; one, aspiring after eternal bliss, is 7 indifferent to all the ephemeral pleasures of this life, and the other, 8 doubting the existence of eternal bliss, or knowing it to be far away, 9 directs his whole energy to the attainment of earthly pleasures as 10 much as possible.

11 In this age, both these types of mankind are extinct, only 12 their physical and mental children, their works and thoughts are 13 existing.

14 Europe and America are the advanced children of the 15 Yavanas, a glory to their forefathers; but the modern inhabitants of 16 the land of Bharata are not the glory of the ancient Aryas. But, as 17 fire remains intact under cover of ashes, so the ancestral fire still 18 remains latent in these modern Indians. Through the grace of the 19 Almighty Power, it is sure to manifest itself in time.

20 What will accrue when that ancestral fire manifests itself?

21 Would the sky of India again appear clouded over by waving 22 masses of smoke springing from the Vedic sacrificial fire? Or is the 23 glory of Rantideva again going to be revived in the blood of the 24 sacrificed animals? Are the old customs of Gomedha, Ashvamedha, 25 or perpetuating the lineage from a husband's brother, and other 26 usages of a like nature to come back again? Or is the deluge of a 27 Buddhistic propaganda again going to turn the whole of India into a 28 big monastery? Are the laws of Manu going to be rehabilitated as of 29 yore? Or is the discrimination of food, prescribed and forbidden, 30 varying in accordance with geographical dimensions, as it is at the 31 present day, alone going to have its all-powerful domination over 32 the length and breadth of the country? Is the caste system to 33 remain, and is it going to depend eternally upon the birthright of a 34 man, or is it going to be determined by his qualification? And again 35 in that caste system, is the discrimination of food, its touchableness 36 or untouchableness, dependent upon the purity or the impurity of 37 the man who touches it, to be observed as it is in Bengal, or will it 38 assume a form more strict as it does in Madras? Or, as in the 39 Punjab, will all such restrictions be obliterated? Are the marriages 40 of different Varnas to take place from the upper to the lower Varna
41 in the successive order, as in Manu's days, and as it is still in vogue 42 in Nepal? Or, as in Bengal and other places, are they to be kept 43 restricted to a very limited number of individuals constituting one 44 of the several communities of a certain class of the Varna? To give a 45 conclusive answer to all these questions is extremely difficult. They 46 become the more difficult of solution, considering the difference in 47 the customs prevailing in different parts of the country--nay, as we 48 find even in the same part of the country such a wide divergence of 49 customs among different castes and families.

50 Then what is to be?

51 What we should have is what we have not, perhaps what our

1 forefathers even had not--that which the Yavanas had; that, 2 impelled by the life-vibration of which, is issuing forth in rapid 3 succession from the great dynamo of Europe, the electric flow of 4 that tremendous power vivifying the whole world. We want that. We 5 want that energy, that love of independence, that spirit of self-6 reliance, that immovable fortitude, that dexterity in action, that 7 bond of unity of purpose, that thirst for improvement. Checking a 8 little the constant looking back to the past, we want that expansive 9 vision infinitely projected forward; and we want--that intense spirit 10 of activity (Rajas) which will flow through our every vein, from head 11 to foot.

12 What can be a greater giver of peace than renunciation? A 13 little ephemeral worldly good is nothing in comparison with eternal 14 good; no doubt of that. What can bring greater strength than Sattva 15 Guna (absolute purity of mind)? It is indeed true that all other kinds 16 of knowledge are but non-knowledge in comparison with Self-17 knowledge. But I ask: How many are there in the world fortunate 18 enough to gain that Sattva Guna? How many in this land of 19 Bharata? How many have that noble heroism which can renounce 20 all, shaking off the idea of "I and mine"? How many are blessed 21 enough to possess that far-sight of wisdom which makes the earthly 22 pleasures appear to be but vanity of vanities? Where is that broad-23 hearted man who is apt to forget even his own body in meditating 24 over the beauty and glory of the Divine? Those who are such are 25 but a handful in comparison to the population of the whole of India; 26 and in order that these men may attain to their salvation, will the 27 millions and millions of men and women of India have to be crushed 28 under the wheel of the present-day society and religion?

29 And what good can come out of such a crushing?

30 Do you not see--taking up this plea of Sattva, the country has 31 been slowly and slowly drowned in the ocean of Tamas or dark 32 ignorance? Where the most dull want to hide their stupidity by 33 covering it with a false desire for the highest knowledge which is 34 beyond all activities, either physical or mental; where one, born and 35 bred in lifelong laziness, wants to throw the veil of renunciation 36 over his own unfitness for work; where the most diabolical try to 37 make their cruelty appear, under the cloak of austerity, as a part of 38 religion; where no one has an eye upon his own incapacity, but 39 everyone is ready to lay the whole blame on others; where 40 knowledge consists only in getting some books by heart, genius 41 consists in chewing the cud of others' thoughts, and the highest 42 glory consists in taking the name of ancestors: do we require any 43 other proof to show that that country is being day by day drowned 44 in utter Tamas?

45 Therefore Sattva or absolute purity is now far away from us.
46 Those amongst us who are not yet fit, but who hope to be fit, to 47 reach to that absolutely pure Paramahansa state--for them the 48 acquirement of Rajas or intense activity is what is most beneficial 49 now. Unless a man passes through Rajas, can he ever attain to that 50 perfect Sattvika state? How can one expect Yoga or union with God, 51 unless one has previously finished with his thirst for Bhoga or 52 enjoyment? How can renunciation come where there is no Vairagya

1 or dispassion for all the charms of enjoyment?

2 On the other hand, the quality of Rajas is apt to die down as 3 soon as it comes up, like a fire of palm leaves. The presence of 4 Sattva and the Nitya or Eternal Reality is almost in a state of 5 juxtaposition--Sattva is nearly Nitya. Whereas the nation in which 6 the quality of Rajas predominates is not so long-lived, but a nation 7 with a preponderance of Sattva is, as it were, immortal. History is a 8 witness to this fact.

9 In India, the quality of Rajas is almost absent; the same is 10 the case with Sattva in the West. It is certain, therefore, that the 11 real life of the Western world depends upon the influx, from India, 12 of the current of Sattva or transcendentalism; and it is also certain 13 that unless we overpower and submerge our Tamas by the opposite 14 tide of Rajas, we shall never gain any worldly good or welfare in 15 this life; and it is also equally certain that we shall meet many 16 formidable obstacles in the path of realisation of those noble 17 aspirations and ideals connected with our after-life.

18 The one end and aim of the Udbodhana is to help the union 19 and intermingling of these two forces, as far as it lies in its power.

20 True, in so doing there is a great danger--lest by this huge 21 wave of Western spirit are washed away all our most precious 22 jewels, earned through ages of hard labour; true, there is fear lest 23 falling into its strong whirlpool, even the land of Bharata forgets 24 itself so far as to be turned into a battlefield in the struggle after 25 earthly enjoyments; ay, there is fear, too, lest going to imitate the 26 impossible and impracticable foreign ways, rooting out as they do 27 our national customs and ideals, we lose all that we hold dear in 28 this life and be undone in the next!

29 To avoid these calamities we must always keep the wealth of 30 our own home before our eyes, so that every one down to the 31 masses may always know and see what his own ancestral property 32 is. We must exert ourselves to do that; and side by side, we should 33 be brave to open our doors to receive all available light from 34 outside. Let rays of light come in, in sharp-driving showers from the 35 four quarters of the earth; let the intense flood of light flow in from 36 the West--what of that? Whatever is weak and corrupt is liable to 37 die--what are we to do with it? If it goes, let it go, what harm does it 38 do to us? What is strong and invigorating is immortal. Who can 39 destroy that?

40 How many gushing springs and roaring cataracts, how many 41 icy rivulets and ever-flowing streamlets, issuing from the eternal 42 snow-capped peaks of the Himalayas, combine and flow together to 43 form the gigantic river of the gods, the Ganga, and rush 44 impetuously towards the ocean! So what a variety of thoughts and 45 ideas, how many currents of forces, issuing from innumerable 46 saintly hearts, and from brains of geniuses of various lands have 47 already enveloped India, the land of Karma, the arena for the 48 display of higher human activities! Look! how under the dominion 49 of the English, in these days of electricity, railroad, and streamboat, 50 various sentiments, manners, customs, and morals are spreading all 51 over the land with lightning speed. Nectar is coming, and along

1 with it, also poison; good is coming, as well as evil. There has been 2 enough of angry opposition and bloodshed; the power of stemming 3 this tide is not in Hindu society. Everything, from water filtered by 4 machinery and drawn from hydrants, down to sugar purified with 5 bone-ash, is being quietly and freely taken by almost every one, in 6 spite of much show of verbal protest. Slowly and slowly, by the 7 strong dint of law, many of our most cherished customs are falling 8 off day by day--we have no power to withstand that. And why is 9 there no power? Is truth really powerless? "Truth alone conquers 10 and not falsehood." --Is this Divine Vedic saying false? Or who 11 knows but that those very customs which are being swept away by 12 the deluge of the power of Western sovereignty or of Western 13 education were not real Acharas, but were Anacharas after all. This 14 also is a matter for serious consideration.

15 {Sanskrit}--"For the good of the many, as well as for the 16 happiness of the many" --in an unselfish manner, with a heart filled 17 with love and reverence the Udbodhana invites all wise and large-18 hearted men who love their motherland to discuss these points and 19 solve these problems; and, being devoid of the feeling of hatred or 20 antagonism, as well as turning itself away from the infliction of 21 abusive language directed towards any individual, or society, or any 22 sect, it offers its whole self for the service of all classes.

23 To work we have the right, the result is in the hands of the 24 Lord. We only pray: "O Thou Eternal Spirit, make us spiritual; O 25 Thou Eternal Strength, make us strong; O Thou Mighty One, make 26 us mighty."

Among the Sanskrit scholars of the West, Professor Max Muller takes the lead. The Rig-Veda Samhita, the whole of which no one could even get at before, is now very neatly printed and made accessible to the public, thanks to the munificent generosity of the East India Company and to the Professor's prodigious labours extending over years. The alphabetical characters of most of the manuscripts, collected from different parts of India, are of various forms, and many words in them are inaccurate. We cannot easily comprehend how difficult it is for a foreigner, however learned he may be, to find out the accuracy or inaccuracy of these Sanskrit characters, and more especially to make out clearly the meaning of an extremely condensed and complicated commentary. In the life of Professor Max Muller, the publication of the Rig-Veda is a great event. Besides this, he has been dwelling, as it were, and spending his whole lifetime amidst ancient Sanskrit literature; but notwithstanding this, it does not imply that in the Professor's imagination India is still echoing as of old with Vedic hymns, with her sky clouded with sacrificial smoke, with many a Vasishtha, Vishvamitra, Janaka, and Yajnavalkya, with her every home blooming with a Gargi or a Maitreyi, and herself guided by the Vedic rules or canons of Grihya-Sutra.

The Professor, with ever-watchful eyes, keeps himself well-informed of what new events are occurring even in the out-of-the-way corners of modern India, half-dead as she is, trodden down by the feet of the foreigner professing an alien religion, and all but bereft of her ancient manners, rites, and customs. As the Professor's feet never touched these shores, many Anglo-Indians here show an unmixed contempt for his opinions on the customs, manners, and codes of morality of the Indian people. But they ought to know that, even after their lifelong stay, or even if they were born and brought up in this country, except any particular information they may obtain about that stratum of society with which they come in direct contact, the Anglo-Indian authorities have to remain quite ignorant in respect of other classes of people; and the more so, when, of this vast society divided into so many castes, it is very hard even among themselves for one caste to properly know the manners and peculiarities of another.

Some time ago, in a book, named, Residence in India, written by a well-known Anglo-Indian officer, I came across such a chapter as "Native Zenana Secrets". Perhaps because of that strong desire in every human heart for knowledge of secrets, I read the chapter, but only to find that this big Anglo-Indian author is fully bent upon satisfying the intense curiosity of his own countrymen regarding the mystery of a native's life by describing an affaire d'amour, said to have transpired between his sweeper, the sweeper's wife, and her paramour! And from the cordial reception given to the book by the Anglo-Indian community, it seems the

1 writer's object has been gained, and he feels himself quite satisfied 2 with his work. "God-speed to you, dear friends!"--What else shall we 3 say? Well has the Lord said in the Gita:

4 {Sanskrit}

5 --"Thinking of objects, attachment to them is formed in a 6 man. From attachment longing, and from longing anger grows."

7 Let such irrelevant things alone. To return to our subject:
8 After all, one wonders at Professor Max Muller's knowledge of the 9 social customs and codes of law, as well as the contemporaneous 10 occurrences in the various provinces of present-day India; this is 11 borne out by our own personal experiences.

12 In particular, the Professor observes with a keen eye what 13 new waves of religion are rising in different parts of India, and 14 spares no pains in letting the Western world not remain in the dark 15 about them. The Brahmo Samaj guided by Debendranath Tagore
16 and Keshab Chandra Sen, the Arya Samaj established by Swami
17 Dayananda Sarasvati, and the Theosophical movement--have all 18 come under the praise or censure of his pen. Struck by the sayings 19 and teachings of Shri Ramakrishna published in the two well-20 established journals, the Brahmavadin and the Prabuddha Bharata, 21 and reading what the Brahmo preacher, Mr. Pratap Chandra 22 Mazumdar, wrote about Shri Ramakrishna, he was attracted by the 23 sage's life. Some time ago, a short sketch of Shri Ramakrishna's life 24 also appeared in the well-known monthly journal of England, The 25 Imperial and Asiatic Quarterly Review, contributed by Mr. C.H.
26 Tawney, M.A., the distinguished librarian of the India House.
27 Gathering a good deal of information from Madras and Calcutta, 28 the Professor discussed Shri Ramakrishna's life and his teachings in 29 a short article in the foremost monthly English journal, The 30 Nineteenth Century. There he expressed himself to the effect that 31 this new sage easily won his heart by the originality of his thoughts, 32 couched in novel language and impregnate with fresh spiritual 33 power which he infused into India when she was merely echoing 34 the thoughts of her ancient sages for several centuries past, or, as 35 in recent times, those of Western scholars. He, the Professor, had 36 read often India's religious literature and thereby well acquainted 37 himself with the life-stories of many of her ancient sages and saints; 38 but is it possible to expect such lives again in this age in this India 39 of modern times? Ramakrishna's life was a reply in the affirmative 40 to such a question. And it brought new life by sprinkling water, as it 41 were, at the root of the creeper of hope regarding India's future 42 greatness and progress, in the heart of this great-souled scholar 43 whose whole life has been dedicated to her.

44 There are certain great souls in the West who sincerely 45 desire the good of India, but we are not aware whether Europe can 46 point out another well-wisher of India who feels more for India's 47 well-being than Professor Max Muller. Not only is Max Muller a 48 well-wisher of India, but he has also a strong faith in Indian 49 philosophy and Indian religion. That Advaitism is the highest 50 discovery in the domain of religion, the Professor has many times 51 publicly admitted. That doctrine of reincarnation, which is a dread

1 to the Christian who has identified the soul with the body, he firmly 2 believes in because of his having found conclusive proof in his own 3 personal experience. And what more, perhaps, his previous birth
4 was in India; and lest by coming to India, the old frame may break 5 down under the violent rush of a suddenly aroused mass of past 6 recollections--is the fear in his mind that now stands foremost in the 7 way of his visit to this country. Still as a worldly man, whoever he 8 may be, he has to look to all sides and conduct himself accordingly.
9 When, after a complete surrender of all worldly interests, even the 10 Sannyasin, when performing any practices which he knows to be 11 purest in themselves, is seen to shiver in fear of public opinion, 12 simply because they are held with disapproval by the people among 13 whom he lives; when the consideration of gaining name and fame
14 and high position, and the fear of losing them, regulate the actions 15 of even the greatest ascetic, though he may verbally denounce such 16 consideration as most filthy and detestable--what wonder then that 17 the man of the world who is universally honoured, and is ever 18 anxious not to incur the displeasure of society, will have to be very 19 cautious in ventilating the views which he personally cherishes. It is 20 not a fact that the Professor is an utter disbeliever in such subtle 21 subjects as the mysterious psychic powers of the Yogis.

22 It is not many years since Professor Max Muller "felt called 23 upon to say a few words on certain religious movements, now going 24 on in India"--"which has often and not unjustly, been called a 25 country of philosophers"--which seemed to him "to have been very 26 much misrepresented and misunderstood at home". In order to 27 remove such misconceptions and to protest against "the wild and 28 overcharged accounts of saints and sages living and scattered 29 broadcast in Indian, American, and English papers"; and "to show 30 at the same time that behind such strange names as Indian 31 Theosophy, and Esoteric Buddhism, and all the rest, there was 32 something real, something worth knowing"--or in other words, to 33 point out to the thoughtful section of Europe that India was not a 34 land inhabited only by "quite a new race of human beings who had 35 gone through a number of the most fearful ascetic exercises", to 36 carry on a lucrative profession by thus acquiring the powers of 37 working such "very silly miracles" as flying through the air like the 38 feathered race, walking on or living fishlike under the water, 39 healing all sorts of maladies by means of incantations, and, by the 40 aid of occult arts fabricating gold, silver, or diamond from baser
41 materials, or by the power of Siddhis bestowing sturdy sons to rich 42 families--but that men, who had actually realised in their life great 43 transcendental truths, who were real knowers of Brahman, true 44 Yogis, real devotees of God, were never found wanting in India; 45 and, above all, to show that the whole Aryan population of India had 46 not as yet come down so low as to be on the same plane as the 47 brute creation, that, rejecting the latter, the living Gods in human 48 shape, they "the high and the low" were, day and night, busy licking 49 the feet of the first-mentioned performers of silly juggleries.-- 50 Professor Max Muller presented Shri Ramakrishna's life to the 51 learned European public, in an article entitled "A Real Mahatman", 52 which appeared in The Nineteenth Century in its August number, 53 1896.

1 The learned people of Europe and America read the article 2 with great interest and many have been attracted towards its 3 subject, Shri Ramakrishna Deva, with the result that the wrong
4 ideas of the civilised West about India as a country full of naked, 5 infanticidal, ignorant, cowardly race of men who were cannibals 6 and little removed from beasts, who forcibly burnt their widows and 7 were steeped in all sorts of sins and darkness--towards the 8 formation of which ideas, the Christian missionaries and, I am as 9 much ashamed as pained to confess, some of my own countrymen
10 also have been chiefly instrumental--began to be corrected. The veil 11 of the gloom of ignorance, which was spread across the eyes of the 12 Western people by the strenuous efforts of these two bodies of men, 13 has been slowly and slowly rending asunder. "Can the country that 14 has produced a great world-teacher like Shri Bhagavan 15 Ramakrishna Deva be really full of such abominations as we have 16 been asked to believe in, or have we been all along duped by 17 interested organised bodies of mischief-makers, and kept in utter 18 obscurity and error about the real India?"--Such a question 19 naturally arises in the Western mind.

20 When Professor Max Muller, who occupies in the West the 21 first rank in the field of Indian religion, philosophy, and literature, 22 published with a devoted heart a short sketch of Shri 23 Ramakrishna's life in The Nineteenth Century for the benefit of 24 Europeans and Americans, it is needless to say that a bitter feeling 25 of burning rancour made its appearance amongst those two classes 26 of people referred to above.

27 By improper representation of the Hindu gods and 28 goddesses, the Christian missionaries were trying with all their 29 heart and soul to prove that really religious men could never be 30 produced from among their worshippers; but like a straw before a 31 tidal wave, that attempt was swept away; while that class of our 32 countrymen alluded to above, which set itself to devise means for 33 quenching the great fire of the rapidly spreading power of Shri 34 Ramakrishna, seeing all its efforts futile, has yielded to despair.
35 What is human will in opposition to the divine?

36 Of course from both sides, unintermittent volleys of fierce 37 attack were opened on the aged Professor's devoted head; the old 38 veteran, however, was not the one to turn his back. He had 39 triumphed many times in similar contests. This time also he has 40 passed the trial with equal ease. And to stop the empty shouts of his 41 inferior opponents, he has published, by way of a warning to them, 42 the book, Ramakrishna: His Life and Sayings, in which he has 43 collected more complete information and given a fuller account of 44 his life and utterances, so that the reading public may get a better 45 knowledge of this great sage and his religious ideas--the sage "who 46 has lately obtained considerable celebrity both in India and America 47 where his disciples have been actively engaged in preaching his 48 gospel and winning converts to his doctrines even among the 49 Christian audiences". The Professor adds, "This may seem very 50 strange, nay, almost incredible to us. . . . Yet every human heart has 51 its religious yearnings; it has a hunger for religion, which sooner or 52 later wants to be satisfied. Now the religion taught by the disciples

1 of Ramakrishna comes to these hungry souls without any untoward 2 authority", and is, therefore, welcomed as the "free elixir of 3 life". . . . "Hence, though there may be some exaggeration in the 4 number of those who are stated to have become converted to the 5 religion of Ramakrishna, . . . there can be no doubt that a religion 6 which can achieve such successes in our time, while it calls itself 7 with perfect truth the oldest religion and philosophy of the world, 8 viz. the Vedanta, the end or highest object of the Vedas, deserves 9 our careful attention."

10 After discussing, in the first part of the book, what is meant 11 by the Mahatman, the Four Stages of Life, Ascetic Exercises or 12 Yoga, and after making some mention about Dayananda Sarasvati, 13 Pavhari Baba, Debendranath Tagore, and Rai Shaligram Saheb
14 Bahadur, the leader of the Radhaswami sect, the Professor enters 15 on Shri Ramakrishna's life.

16 The Professor greatly fears lest the Dialogic Process--the 17 transformation produced in the description of the facts as they 18 really happened by too much favourableness or unfavourableness of 19 the narrator towards them--which is invariably at work in all history 20 as a matter of inevitable course, also influences this present sketch 21 of life. Hence his unusual carefulness about the collection of facts.
22 The present writer is an insignificant servant of Shri Ramakrishna.
23 Though the materials gathered by him for Ramakrishna's life have 24 been well-pounded in the mortar of the Professor's logic and 25 impartial judgment, still he (Max Muller) has not omitted to add 26 that there may be possible "traces of what I call the Dialogic 27 Process and the irrepressible miraculising tendencies of devoted 28 disciples" even in "his unvarnished description of his Master". And, 29 no doubt, those few harsh-sweet words which the Professor has 30 said in the course of his reply to what some people, with the 31 Brahmo-Dharma preacher, the Rev. Pratap Chandra Mazumdar, at 32 their head, wrote to him in their anxiety to make out a "not edifying 33 side" of Ramakrishna's character--demand thoughtful consideration 34 from those amongst us of Bengal who, being full of jealousy, can 35 with difficulty bear the sight of others' weal.

36 Shri Ramakrishna's life is presented in the book in very brief 37 and simple language. In this life, every word of the wary historian is 38 weighed, as it were, before being put on paper; those sparks of fire, 39 which are seen here and there to shoot forth in the article, "A Real
